But back to France, he went to the parties in France. Quite fascinating to see the parties. They had fantastic records in France of the different Americans that were sent over there. But Franklin took the biscuit. I mean, he was given a big mansion and treated like royalty. You always read in history books this common, this common American, this plain American you know, oh, that was a plain American eh, that's how you picture him. That's what they put in the movies. But he lived in a mansion like a king over there, servants, teams of servants, and coachmen.

They had bills there of the cost of keeping it up from there and just the booze alone that was ordered every week, like drums and casks of the stuff for his parties that he laid on. These were all-night parties, eh. Madame Pompadour and all these characters that he met, who would go in with her fashions and her affectations. She had the, literally the famed – was it her? – I think she had the famous, one of them had the famous birdcages woven into the wig that she had about 4 feet above her head, eh. Just to be different, you understand. [Alan laughing.] So it's rather sad to look at humans who want to be seen and adored and to impress people, you know, aren't you impressed at the cash I've blown for this one night, you know. Yep, there you go.

So we're very predictable in a sense. Very, very predictable. And corruptible is the other thing too. I don't think there's ever been a system where you've had an honest system of governance. They say that the best form of governance you can possibly have is when Rome started off, as an example, early Rome. They had copied a lot of the Greek culture. And Greek had fallen into decadence and went down the tubes as well. And Empire, I mean, don't forget that Greece went into Empire, and they had literally a Commonwealth, very much like Britain eventually copied, an idea of this idea of Commonwealth, with hundreds of islands, including you know, the different centers, they would have different capitals at times. But they did have a Commonwealth and would all be equal in the Commonwealth. But of course the corruption was so massive that certain money was flowing into the capitals and folk were absconding with it and spending it on themselves. Corruption, corruption, corruption until it falls apart. Then other countries are so sick being taxed, when all the islands were to pay for the rest of them. Well, that happened with Britain as well, you know. The ordinary folk never get anything out of it at all. They're handed the bill and they've got to clean up the mayhem that's left at the end of it. But that's how it works.

Rome took over from the Etruscans as you know. They talk about having, it was much more honest at the time when they had more of an equal poverty. Because the landowners worked with the people and their slaves. They'd work with them in the fields and sweat it out. They'd also double as the military, that's how they did it then. But once they started getting money and investing and investing in ships' cargoes and in international commerce the corruption just went crazy. Then decadence set in with subsequent generations until they had the same debauchery eventually as Greece had, you see. That's the state of it.

It's quite amazing watching Britain, because they had it so perfected by the time they had the British Empire that they didn't have much debauchery for the average British peasant. [Alan chuckles.] They couldn't share in the debauchery because they didn't have, they kept them pretty poor, you know. But the upper classes, sure, they certainly had it but nothing on the scale as before that they had... Britain was awfully good at hiding its corruption in the upper classes. Very good at it. Even today they're far better at it than America, you know.

Again, they never toss out history when it can teach you so much. Not who's fighting battles and who won battles or lost battles. But the system that runs you during those historical periods, you see, those eras are awfully important. Because it's all to do with managing the people. That's what it's about, how to manage them, how to keep them placated and semi-happy even in terrible circumstances at times too. Under the commercial system, and then industrial system you had the horror really set and mandated from the government departments in Britain until Britain became "the poor man of Europe." The squalor and the disease and the illness amongst the public was... it was deplorable. The whole of Europe talked about it, it was horrible. It was that bad.

As the people who had the money got incredibly rich off the backs of the peasants. They had child labor galore in the factories. People who, until the children were deformed at times too, they were working on these low-ceilinged places in the factories. Everything was excess profit, excess profit. They breathed in the cotton too and there's diseases from that too. And the wool in places had diseases for their lungs as well. You had the different charitable institutions eventually went around the factories looking at the children and putting out their different inquiries into the papers to show you how horrible it was. And different cases there they had listed, making it more human, more personal. They give names to the people. It wasn't just so many children were seen with hunched backs and so on, they give them names and they talk to them, and they would personalize them. Just like you do in hostage taking, first thing you do is to try to, it's not just a hostage anymore, tell the person that's holding them, this is Mary or this is William or whoever it happens to be to personalize them as a human being. It's only then as a human being you start to, well, that's not just another case number type thing, it's a real person and...

That's how they do it. That's how they got like Wilberforce and all the different ones, how they personalized the people who, these children whose life expectancy probably wouldn't have reached 30, you know, that was taken as normal.

So getting back to those huge, massive mansions you'll see in the old Sherlock Holmes I think 1980s series. These are the people who own the factories. Some of them actually were the bankers. [Alan chuckles.] During that period, as I say, people literally were, it was like bring out the dead every day in some of these manufacturing cities. Horrible. Horrible. Absolutely. As I say, it was "the sick man of Europe", Britain, during that whole period. As the people, as those people who owned those buildings got richer than ever before.

It's so disgusting for me today to hear this stuff about white privilege. Because believe you me, hhmph, the folk in Britain were white. And the folk who were dying in crowded buildings living under tables and so on, sometimes in their master houses, that's where they slept in the kitchen, they were white and they were starving and they were malnourished. Again, most of them wouldn't even, even in the better houses wouldn't have lived until they were about 40. Because they had to, they had 16-to-18-hour days' work. One day off, I think one day or half a day off every two weeks. It's quite something.

It's quite something again to look at how we're managed. Businesses, and big businesses don't sit down and have brainstorms about problems, or how to get more out, suck more out of the customer or consumer, like Bernays would have done. They do hire professionals, professional think tanks. Again, some of them are literally the size of small country's bureaucracies, of experts, that's what you hire, who look into the problem, and they get paid for well for it and they'll get to the basic way of managing whatever it is, the problem is. It's always, it's generally human problems, you know. How do we get the public to do more of this without realizing they're doing more of this, or blah blah. Some way to get around things anyway, very effective, very efficiently.

They always talked about time and motions where they try to adapt the worker to suit the machines. In a machine you could certainly tune-up the speed if they're automatic machines, even in woodworking that would do automatic turning for instance. But the person who's got to lift them and feed the things into the machine then has to keep up with the machine. That's not human, you see. That's not human at all. When it comes to making money, most humanity goes out the window on behalf of those who actually own everything. It's rather true, isn't it. Rather true.

What you see as humanitarian efforts is often a con, up to the present day, under the guise of charities. Today, oohhhh, the scandals behind the charities! Don't forget too, that even amongst the rioters and so on in the different streets or the different pseudo-communist groups, eh, you've got other ones that are registered charities that have buses and everything to take them to the different states for their, hhmph, demonstrations, eh. And other big ones, big, huge ones that cater for them, like professional caterers and everything. Charitable organizations. You're looking at completely organized and financed and funded... It's like military convoys, eh, that's what it is.

But we go along with the farce, don't we? Well it's just pro... It's not protest. Protesters don't burn other citizens' places and their homes down. No. The reason you're getting all that happening now at the same time you've got the Covid, and at the same time as [Alan chuckles.] the States, it's comical to watch it. The mayors and the governors of different places in the States are telling the police to stand down and let the rioters burn places. But they're coming down and fining the rest of the public who are not part of the riots for not wearing masks.

These are amazing times, eh. But these are times where the biggest lessons can be learned, if you ever wanted to change anything at all. Because at the same time as they're really telling the cops to stand down, you're seeing that, you're seeing different, part of what you're seeing is, well you need the cops for against the crime, right. But then you're seeing the judges let them go as soon as they're caught, the people who are burning and looting, and in some cases they're stabbing people and they're letting them go right away without fines or anything. You're looking at total insurrection within the nation itself. Which tells you if you ever had to go back to any kind of system that worked, you'd have to eliminate those roles, or these judges, get them out of the chairs and replace them with people, and if you could even find people who would stand up for decency and law and order for the rest of the public. Hm.

It also tells you that there are things wrong with police today, as well. Both sides, you see. Because you certainly, you'll always have an element in the police forces that, that see themselves at war with the public. That's how every day they go out on patrol, they were at war with the public, that's how they see it. And the States has got so many hot zones all over the place anyway that it can't be an easy thing to do. But even so, we've got plenty of YouTube's out there with cops picking on the easy targets, the folk, [Alan chuckles.] it's generally white folk they're picking on who don't wear a mask and things, women as well. Because no one's going to stand up for them, they know that.

Again, that's a telling thing on society, we're not equal at all. Because when the governments say it's okay to beat up these folk, you know, because of their color, no, now you've got real trouble, you see. It also tells you your government departments are so incredibly corrupt themselves to allow all of this to happen, you'd have to change all of them, completely empty them all out, wouldn't you?

Never mind the media. Do you realize that the system inside the US that runs it all, normally now, are the revolutionaries? The newspapers and so on, they're all behind it all. All for it. Telling you not to believe your lying eyes, eh. They're all part of it. The Gramsci thing, they took over the whole system step by step by step. Including the big, BIG corporations, the only ones now pretty well, you're almost there, you'll be able to get food from now, like the Walmart's. They make sure that you're going to get locked down, and you can't, and all the other stores that used to be a supply line, they're out of the game now. No competition. They've eliminated the competition. Isn't that amazing. So you're left with these massive monstrosities, that can then enforce, well if you come in you've got to sign your name and address at the very least in case one person in the store might have Covid... because we want to come and see you, because you were there that day too. You see? Conditions, conditions, compliance, compliance. Or punishment for not complying.

Folk don't know what they're living through in any time of their life. Most of the time. The young think they're living for fun, or they're seeking fun, they're seeking something that's going to make them happy, even temporarily, drugs or whatever too of course.

You also have all the media putting out their own truth versions, you see, checking truth versions of everything that comes out, and hammering anybody who comes, who repeats stuff coming out with places like MIT. They'll call you a conspiracy theorist. No, there's no tattoos involved in these vaccinations. Even though they've tried these things out in MIT and so on, and it worked, and published their stuff about possibly having markers for identifying who's had vaccinations, these vaccinations that they come up with right now. Then the Covid passports and so on, eh. Then you also get it from the big pharmaceutical companies talking about you know, this is a different kind, this is a new type of vaccination that literally will alter the genetic makeup, the DNA type strands in especially epithelial tissue, permanently perhaps. Then you repeat it and they'll immediately come out and say, oh this is a conspiracy theory, you know, it's just a normal vaccine. When you can, it wouldn’t matter the very fact you can give them the information from the vaccine manufacturers themselves, it doesn't make any difference.

Why would you ever give credence EVER to a media that from February onwards just pummeled you with lies and terror and horror, all kinds of media? Hm!? And even when they had to backtrack and backtrack as thousands more doctors and professionals came out with evidence that this is all lies. Why would you start to believe them again as they go for the next push, the so-called next spike as they want to call it, for the total lockdown over the winter into and all through next year, and into the next year. Five years they're talking, as I've said before. Permanently.

But the media? Are you going to allow yourself to be horrified and terrified and petrified by the same media? giving you the same lies? I used to wonder, when do you start trusting liars? Well, if you have any sense, you don't, you can't ever trust them. That's the whole lesson of finding out you've been lied to. On such an incredible scale! This isn’t little white lies here. This is deliberate horrifying the public about something they can't even see, that literally affects so few people. And even then, it probably won't even really affect them, they're dying of other things. They're dying, you see. You can't even get the flu shot numbers anymore, they lumped it all in with the Covid, you see, just to prop up the numbers.

But people are going to start repeating again, once they get locked in, and going back into debating the fake... Why bother even debating it anymore? See, facts, I've said so many times, don't matter. It's a huge agenda. Resolute. They've all sworn to it at the top. Layer upon layer of everything that controls your reality, they're all sworn to it. And all well-paid to stay, and none of them will break ranks. You think you're ruled by independent people. No, no. You're ruled by organizations that are all connected in a pyramid type picture, you might say, levels and layers of them. But they're sworn to it. Not one of them is going to break ranks.

Remember too, I've already gone over my mark, go into cuttingthroughthematrix.com. As always, I say list all my official sites, that's where they are all listed @cutting through the matrix.com. If anyone of those goes down, because now we're in a new stage where they're going to really go after, they actually said this, I gave this talk back in March. I went through the different Event 201 and then the one from the Rockefellers 2010 [Lockstep]. They said that through the different steps they would eventually go into, again with resolute authority they will then go after the people, literally, physically, that speak out against it. So if anything goes down, and they’re already interfering [Alan chuckles.] electronically with the people that are getting information out there. So hopefully you can go into my other sites and get my talks on the Sunday night.

I try to get them up by the Sunday night. That's when even the speed, they slow it down to a crawl because obviously they know I'm doing it. [Alan chuckles.] You know it's not they're spending a fortune on me, everything's algorithms now and everything's timed now too. Most of it's run by artificial intelligence, if you're on the list you just get harassed all the time. So make a list of the sites I have up. Also remember my sites too have the links to my talks with the different topics I mentioned. You'd be surprised how many folk out there have got really impressive sites and lots of money coming in, but I do the work for them for free. Because it's all done, you see, they can just take the topics and here's the links to it all and repeat it.

So you can get the links at least and keep them for future use. Because regardless of how we come through all of this, it's good to have a record. To remind yourself of how the same characters, that will someday all be your friends again after they've brought in the new system of tyranny. And it will, there'll be, you see, you'll adapt to the new form, that was a lesson a little bit, and in 20 years time, and children will grow up thinking, oh this is quite normal. You've got to say, look, this is not natural yet. We're still under tyranny. Here's how they did it. You need the evidence. You really need evidence.

Years ago I gave topics on... I remember too, before I get off the cuttingthroughthematrix.com, donate to me as well and if you want to get the books and discs let me know. You can find out how to do it @cuttingthroughthematrix.com. Donate. You can use Money Gram, PayPal, you can send cash or checks. And anything else you can find out that's innovative, [Alan chuckles.] you can get it to me. Because I certainly need it, naturally, to keep going with all these different sites that I have.

Yeah, you've got to remember what really happens. We, don't go right back into fighting sentences, version of what it is compared to so-and-so's. They’re already falling into that. Because years ago I said, the Internet was meant to overload you with chat rooms and so on. And don't forget, never mind the trolls you get, if you bother to get comments and so on, if you're silly enough to do that I think really, and the sock puppets, etc. that will target you automatically, you know. But you also, you've got to realize that there's thousands of folk suddenly come out of nowhere and they've got all this promotion. And they've got money there. And you get sucked into them. They'll get you going around in circles, and they'll get you fighting with other groups and arguing with different people and so on. Or they'll take you off into...

I used to explain it back in the 90s, when you start to wake up, as an example, just waking up itself, whatever made you wake up, maybe ran into a government official or an office in fact for help or something, for the departments that you say they're there to help me, and that's what you believe. You find out when you get there that they give you advice to do this and that and the whole thing. It's like rubber tools, that's what they give you is rubber tools, and when you really need them, the help from these agencies, that your tax money is funding, right, then you got, then they'll give you these rubber tools. It's like having a rubber pick for the road, you try to make a hole and it just bounces off. Nothing works the way that you thought it would work. They're fake, you see. That's how most things really, really are. They're pretty well fake.

If you're not on the list of categories of people that they must help, which is totally politicized as opposed to need, eh, or equality and need, then you've had it. It's that simple. That's it. When you have that, then the system that runs over you, that's the proper way to say it is runs over you, not rules you, is utterly corrupt. From the top to the bottom, right down to the police forces. When police forces will literally turn a blind eye, including the cities, the officials, turn a blind eye to children getting taken up for prostitution, put on drugs by certain groups, because oh, it's a hot political topic because it involves different groups, you know, oh dear… you're finished! Eh. You're finished. You're already finished. So that's the truth of it.

So you can't give them any credence and you can't give them any applause. If they won't do their job properly at all, you know, then I wouldn't, I wouldn't give them applause for anything that they did. Absolutely not. Np. Because as the police they'll get turned against everybody under tyranny. And they will. They'll happily go out and smash your heads in. If you're the right categories that is, you know. You know, you can't... Uuuugh. Most folk now are pretty disgusting with their cowardice. Disgusting is the word. Especially those who take money for it. They won't risk losing their job by doing the right thing at times.

So the Internet would eventually become Babel, you see. Which it has become Babel. The authorities themselves, I used to read from the authoritative articles from different professors that work for governments, lots of them do, talking about data, how they'd overload everyone with just data. And when it came to emotive topics, that's what they would use to get different groups and forums all arguing with each other. Never mind the fact a lot of the forums were set up by the ones to attract folk in and then they'd attack you. Just like the 77th Brigade of cyber warriors they call them in Britain. They have many other ones too and different categories of them as well, that will hammer you if you want to get involved in taking people on, head on, you know, your point of view versus theirs. It's all a big game to them. It's managed that way.

But when you see all the different people, they always give you your leaders, remember. The dialectical process. I remember one of the characters who, talking about communism, how communism used to – or Marxism, call it what you want – would literally, or even the top bankers which are capitalists, often the same thing, monopoly men, you know. Everything's monopolies, including communism, isn't it, monopolizing nations, monopolizing culture, monopolizing, you know, everything you need. It's monopolized by the same people. That's control. But they talked about how they brought in the Federal Reserve as an example. We know about what happened in Jekyll Island, we also know to that Mandell House boasted he had a big parts in it too. At least in his own book he says that, you know. He liked to take a bit of the credit indeed. You find out that they put propaganda out there. So Bernays... It's beautiful. I'm sure Bernays must've been involved because that was his specialty was propaganda and manipulation of public opinion. Even creating public opinion and manipulating it all. And negating other opinions too. This is an old art, remember. They talked about the banks themselves that wanted, that wanted the Federal Reserve, a centralized system, a cartel, put out by themselves, other bankers, or would get other bankers to say oh this is going to be bad for the people if they do that, you see. And the people would vote for it saying, well we'll vote for it if the bankers don't like it, then it must be good for us, if bankers are complaining about it. And they give the impression too that it was going to be government run and all that, you know. But it's a private system.

They always get you to demand and want what they want you to demand because that's what they want in the first place, you understand? That's the technique.

Just like the vaccination, help us. I was thinking back today on I think 2009 when they had a flu epidemic out then, supposed epidemic. Because then they blew that one up too. They made millions of doses of vaccines that ended up hurting people in different countries. And nobody wanted it anyway. Then the darn flu just frittered away like it always does until it wasn't necessary anyway. So millions of doses had to get ditched. But I remember the PR campaign, the public relations campaign, it was a similar buildup you see for the WHO with the vaccine companies all colluding together. Don't forget, the WHO is heavily funded by the Gates Foundation that's involved in the GAVI and all the rest of it. They're all paid off. They're are all colluding. It's all corrupt, as I say. You can't have honesty where folk are all getting money from the same sources, you know. It's not from the public purse so much, is from the same characters that run the vaccine companies.

So in that one they told the doctors, I did the talks on the radio at the time. The news was that they told the doctors, from the WHO and from their own CDC and so on in the States and the health department in Canada, just to start diagnosing everybody with a sniffle rather than testing them, siting this particular flu strain. So they just massively put all the numbers up. It was just disgusting. The same thing as today. Same thing. No shame at all to lie and deceive and to prop up the numbers to try to get folk to take the shots. They had the folk so terrified then, this is how they did it, you see, this is still nothing new, they've tested all this out, and all your reactions to it, or lack of reactions at times, and they've REALLY vamped it up this time.

But back then in 2009 they actually showed you little clips of people standing in line for the shots who would start fighting each other because they wanted to get it first. Because they believed the propaganda that these, the different pharmacies that were giving the shots and so on and these clinics would run out of the shots. They believed that. That's why they all rushed to get it, oh they're going to run out of shots. Then they started fighting with each other if someone was in front of them, that they were trying to get ahead of them and they start leapfrogging over each other. That's human behavior. It's guaranteed to happen the same way again, eh. Terrify them until they'll be fighting each other to get it. M-hm. Ftt.

We're predictable. Because mainly they've tried it before on other scales, you know, studied us. This is the inhumane parts of so much of everything that happens today, we're looked upon not as people anymore, you're numbers. You're numbers. You already have your personality profile complete in different databanks, governmental agency databanks. Everybody in North America also has a virtual one of themselves in a program in the Pentagon, I remember reading the articles years ago. They admit that on a daily basis they would get, they would add to your profiles, that you volunteered through your chat and through your calls and texts and everything else and they get added to your profiles. Even your dreams and thoughts as you share with friends and stuff. So they have a virtual one of you. Everyone of you. They could set little games on you to put you in situations, in a virtual sense, to see how the virtual you would react, knowing how you would behave basically because they'd studied you and put it all in complete. They said that if they used, they set up a scenario in real life then you're pretty well guaranteed to follow the same pattern as the virtual you, how the virtual you would have dealt with it and so on, you'll do the same. Will you succumb? Will you comply? Will you blah, blah, blah? You're pretty well predictable.

As this happens it gets worse and worse and worse, until you've got this massive superstructure that they showed you in that THX 1138 [movie], where underground, they had an underground scenario where folk didn't even see the light. They had [Robert] Duvall and other ones working in atomic, with isotopes in dangerous occupations. But as he gets off the drugs, again, you're drugged every day. The same Soma idea, eh, they'll keep you drugged all the time to make it feel… to stop you from thinking and being depressed, keep you drugged. Duvall started to cut back on his mandated medication, daily medications, along with his wife, or his partner that they put him in for just for the sexual desires to try to get, make sure that you'd... Every possible... What does an animal need? Well it likes sex, therefore get them sex, gives them blah, blah, blah. That's how they see the people in the movie.

When he himself isn't going along with the formula of how he should be behaving, you actually, it flashes off back to a couple of times, and scenes of these batteries of TV screens, and as the scientific lab that are studying the people, and at the moment they're studying him. They must have implants in him as well because they were pressing different buttons and watching him double up in pain or react in different ways as the implants were stimulated. And talking all matter-of-factly, as though he was just an extension of the machine or computer. And that's where we're going with it all. If not actually here, hm. In some countries as I've mentioned before, they've already, they're celebrating it. Again, it's public relations, it's big advertising campaigns. Oh, why don't you get your digital chip implants and you be so cool and trendy, you know?

It's quite fascinating to me to see, it's like going back to talks I did years ago about Revelation, as an example, of biblical Revelation, how it's always been there, you know. It's very prolific. It doesn't matter. It's so full of imagery of course as well which is picturesque imagery. The scenario. And it appeals to all kinds of faiths as well. They've used it in even atheistic Sci-Fi’s, the same scenarios, because it's so full of imagery. Which again is part of a cult theosophy and theology.

Occult symbolism is so important in so much. Because in ancient times they understood in different ways and different terminology, to explain signs and symptoms of ecstasy, or religious ecstasy coming from a deity or a God. Or demonic activity from an evil being, an entity, they could also give forms of ecstasy at times as well. So they describe these different states of being. It was always this idea, I've mentioned this before that ancient religions, you'll always find the appeasement of a deity, naturally, you know. And we know, yeah, that in the really ancient, the sun god traditions, they would, and the solar traditions, you had solar and lunar mainly, and stellar to an extent with stars. But they had to appease the deities at times and the religious priests of that time or priestesses would often demand sacrifice generally to keep the people in line.

Because they depended, everything's a class system and in ancient times you had royalties that often use the priestly class together with themselves to keep the people in line and to make sure that tribute came in, it was paid all the time. Today we get taxed, we pay taxes, you know. But back then it was mainly tribute and forms of gold tokens or silver tokens and things like that, or whatever they actually needed. Even foodstuffs naturally was a big, big thing, giving food in. But folk don't like that at times. You get fed up giving, giving, giving, especially to people that are living much better than you are from it all. So when it was slacking off they would, they'd have to teach the people a lesson. As I say, the sun wouldn't rise, that was a big one, due to an eclipse and things like that. So they used these things. So anyway, they'd say, well, you know, if you don't give us obeyance and give us tribute then this horrible event is going happen. We don't want to cause the event, mind you, but we could maybe prevent it if you just pay tribute. So they'd, the sun would start to darken, and the folk would start throwing all their goodies at them. Then it would pass over and they'd praise the priests for another little while. That's the kind of things they would do.

But there was always behind all of these things, again, what is sacrifice? What is that? What is punishment? You see, in the human condition there's always a thought perhaps that no matter what kind of culture or group or even village that you live in, in ancient times to the present times, are you really good? What is good, you see?

Today you have rebels against the good, who are just that, they are rebels, they're revolutionaries against the good. But generally you have most folk want to conform to the good of society, this idea of peace, forget wars over yonder, but even peace within yourself or your own little area. It's much, you're more relaxed when you're going, if you walk from one place to another and people are kind of decent, you're not going to get mugged, and you're not going to get bombarded with folk demanding your money, or your life, you know, that kind of thing. It's, you do get this idea of safety and security. It's definitely conducive to a healthier mentality, and a healthy physique too. If you're nervous all the time you're going to be sick. Of course you are.

So there's always the idea of, are you good? Are you not good? That's always been there. But everyone is tempted as well to maybe keep a bit back for yourself if you were collectively paying in for the common good. In the socialistic systems that they used to have before money even came along, you know, were you good or not good, what was the punishment for not being good? What do they mean by good? Well, if you go into the old, old systems in Europe, the bog people that they keep digging up in different parts of Europe. They love to jump in and say, well it's been, oh, they sacrificed people back then, you know, just for the, you know, just to appease the deities.

I don't think they were sacrificed really at all. I think it was punishment. Mainly. Because you're talking about pre-monetary systems. Folk did live in small groups and villages. They all chipped in by putting their work in to get the grain harvested. Food was a BIG, big thing. And it wasn't guaranteed. You had good crops, bad crops in those days. You didn't have herbicides, pesticides and fertilizers like we do today. When you had a bad, you know, even today folk will often say if you get one good harvest out of every four you've done okay. Because you can control, well we can't control the weather, other agencies do that. [Alan chuckles.]

Just look at how it used to be. They used to store up the grain for the winter months. I'm sure there was rationing when they'd had bad harvests and lower yields and so on. What they always find with these bog people, that they had full bellies, hm. And I'm sure this is a time when most folk didn't have full bellies. Well, they'd been stealing the stuff, you see, and they were caught, and they were punished for it and made examples of, ritualistically. Because that was, that's what law used to be, that really was the common good and you'd broken a taboo that put everybody else at risk of starvation. The very, very simple basic true, true thing actually. A true idea as opposed to the fake ones we have today, so many of them are just fake. Back then you were all in it together because if one person started to take more food, say, the daily quota for four people, that meant that about three other people weren't going to get the food, you see, that's what happened to them. That's basic law, and that's essential law, you see. That's how these things used to be done. So I don't think they were getting sacrificed just for, to appease whatever at all. They were punishments.

But again, you go back into the idea of again guilt, what is guilt? Are you good or you bad, etc.? Most folk will try and belong to the group, and at least to some extent you might have individual nonconformity here and there but on the whole you'd conform to the group for what was good for the group. Sure you did. Eccentricities were quite easily managed and no problem at all.

But today we're definitely living in a system of tyranny. Where what I've talked about, they understand that much, much more of group behavior and how you’re into a system where they're using, the gods now are computers of course, and the ethernet and Internet, and hhhh, all the different programs that manage your daily lives. Folk are hooked and addicted to them. They can't imagine a world without them. Even though that many of us grew up in a system where you didn't have all that stuff. Inventories were done very well and very effectively and efficiently with pen and paper, you know, and it was not tough to do it all in fact. And it gave a lot of people work by the way. And work is very important because without work there’s very little self-worth left eventually. Purpose is very, very essential to mental health.

Something the elite also know, they can put you into utter depression collectively and they've done studies on this too and how to do it, how to bring it in. And then how to manage you into apathy. Because it's apathetic behavior that means your conquered, or you’re on the stage of being totally conquered. That's what they want from you. And compliance is easier to get when you're apathetic. It's a stage you get to where you’re desperate for help, and then they'll come out with something with conditions, then you'll jump at it, you see. It's....   Hhhch, the whole system is at war with you in this day and age.

You don't have the religions, that they had to follow themselves at one time, upon the people. You can scoff all you want, and whatever you get about Middle Ages and so on, it comes from entertainment that's always been at war with religion, at least modern entertainment. That's been very effective. They just show you stuff and, oh, just look at that terrible priest in that movie and what they did. But in reality, you know, priests at one time lived amongst the people. Most of them. Often, they would go off to battle with the people too. They'd be in big battles with them. In Scotland that happened, you know. They'd go around with the soldiers and sometimes participate as well. And deal with the aftermath, helped as well.

So but the thing is, there'd always be a middle person to stand up for the people at the bottom, when nobility that always wants more and more for themselves would try and grab more for themselves and dispossess the people even further, or even take more food than was even required by their old, old laws of their tenants, or their serfs actually, their farmers. So they couldn't go too far because literally the church at one time had the power to dispossess all the nobility at times. If you can't get cooperation from the people you'd rule over, while you're going to keep the title of a noble, but that nothing will happen, then you'll fall into despair and decay and so will your house, you see, without the folks compliance to help you. So it certainly helped to an extent. You don't have that anymore.

You've got what they always wanted from the Enlightenment on, which is total, a form of... apart from humanism, secular humanism which is its own religion by the way. Because you can have religions as well where you worship your own intellect, or their own... [Alan chuckles.] I don't know, you'd better worship their intellects because they're telling you how important they are. Now you have problems because like Nietzsche said, you know, he says, when God is dead nothing will be impossible anymore. Things that were unthinkable are now not just thinkable but doable. We've seen lots of that ever since, you know, Nietzsche's time getting worse and worse and worse. We've seen the killing fields of Cambodia as an example, where they stuck to a regiment of theory. Don't forget the CIA was involved in teaching them that in the first place in Cambodia with the Pol Pot regime, the massacre of so many people, slaughter, terrible slaughter of so many people. These are things that are taught now as techniques as opposed to theological reasons. They're all techniques simply of efficiency.

If their psychologists say, well look, the people are in a bad mood and they've got so much resentment that you're taking over, you're not going to get compliance by normal persuasion. It might take you a few years before you start to get compliance. So if you want it done quickly, kill off, and they'll tell you exactly how much to kill off, what age groups to kill off, and genders to kill off, the way to kill them off, in front of the other relatives and that to get maximum horror, and for compliance. These are just called efficient techniques now, eh?

There's no middlemen to step in and say you can't do this horror show, you just can't do it, we won't allow it. Well, there's no one not to allow it anymore. Hhhch. Not only that, the very victims themselves in the supposed advanced culture, you've already had the indoctrination where you might agree with it yourself, if you're standing apart thinking it's for other people that's going to suffer and you can't ever imagine it happening to you. But mentally, you don't realize, no, you're prepared to agree with that if it ever comes your way and it will happen to you. There's nothing that happens today where they don't prepare you mentally for it, even if you're not completely consciously aware of it at the time. But you are prepared for it. Subconsciously. That's the technique of perfection of control and management of the general public. It's very effective, very efficient.

Today you have the terrific methods, as I've said before, with the media. The media that before this Covid 19 came out, was suddenly discredited, it had nothing to tell the public. The folk, they were scrambling to get money and asking for money and donations, subscriptions because no one was following them. All you had was sports and celebrities for years. That's what they called news. They were getting hand outs by the same characters who rule over you, the big corporate, well, we know many of their names who are running, they're there for control purposes, they always were, you see. They’ve come back into their own during this, the wartime scenario of Covid 19. Then they lie their teeth off to you, and deliberately terrify you. Don't forget the SAGE group in Britain that employed this subgroup that was meant to terrorize the public, and gave the orders to the media to increase anxiety by exaggerating the stories. This is published information from the groups that did the jobs. And you're going to go back and listen to the same liars again?

Or you just scour the Internet looking for people that will agree with you, here, there, as you desperately look for little ways out, you know, left and right and up and down. Never realizing that now the Internet is polluted, polluted with characters that belong to many organizations, the CIA, the 77th Brigade and so on that will all come out with, saying the things which you know already, even mirroring your fear, putting it, they mirror your fear, you see. They'll say the right things to make sure that you'll keep, and then they'll bend you off into some other area of… until you're ridiculed, you'll be made, ah, you'll be looking for little green men or something, you know. Or you'll be, but regardless, you will be neutered. You won't be, if you lose your reason through it all you've been neutered, and you've been psy-oped and you don't even know it.

And yes, they do put out LOTS of them out there now. LOTS and LOTS of them. Unfortunately. All kinds too. Whatever flavor again that you're into at the time they've got it ready-made for you. They have the characters out there well-funded. Some are almost professional in their presentations, they just start off that way, just out of the blue. And folk don't perceive their little giveaways, you see, that should inform you as to something bigger behind them. I could go on and on about some of them that I've run into myself. They even paid, PAID not to have me the air in certain places. These are the leaders that they give you, you know.

But anyway, so out there it's nothing but warfare. Sure it's warfare, absolutely. Complete warfare. And yeah, you've got to start thinking for yourself. You don't need to know an awful lot. Just the basics. The elite wanted a global reset, they called it. They had lots of publications before 9/11 came along saying they were disappointed that, the World Economic Forum said themselves at their meetings they were disappointed at how the public and society and small business had rebounded after the last crash, after 2008. Because they wanted to bring in a gradually more controlled system over the planet, in a global system with a globalized structure of management, using 2008. But literally, the States and small businesses and so on and elsewhere across the world had rebounded and taken off, and they're really ticked off about that. They said that in their own reports. They wanted to give you stage 2 of the crash of 2008. The first part was the initial response to 2008, a bit of inflation, etc. and all that kind of stuff, and higher taxation. Up, up in the prices of basic commodities which stayed that way and got higher and higher to the present day. But they want to continue it. And they couldn't do it so quickly if more folk and more folk were just working, they can't get the control over you. Along comes Covid and bingo, there you are. That would fit the bill again, eh?

So you don't really need to know everything, naturally. You can't know everything. Look at the incredible data getting spewed out like a machine just churning it out, you know, every day from all different sources, by the same media that's lied, lied, lied, doing the same lies again naturally. The more testing they do, the more they're going to find fragments of dead viruses and say that, you know, there's more cases. And of course the cases are not sick, and often they're not infected, in fact, active infections. But reality's got nothing to do with it.

From the same lying media that helped destroy our economy. Because that's the big agenda, is destroy the economy and bring you into a new, new, a new world order naturally. And world is the key to it. They want it to be world management. And how do you get that to happen across the planet? Well, you create chaos across the planet. Food shortages. Starvation here and there. Publicize that and say, who would've thought we'd ever see starvation in Americas or in Europe? and yada, yada, ya. Until the folk will literally bless them as they pump you full of vaccinations on an ongoing basis. It isn't going to be just one shot for this. It's going to be ALL vaccinations. Hhhch, if you look up the WHO's agenda, I did this years ago, I'm looking at it right now in fact from years ago. I kept the old ones. They're on their schedules for giving you annual boosters for a whole bunch of vaccines that you've already had, and things you've never heard of yet. So you'll be a pincushion for, you know, for the company. You're a product now, you see. They need you to get profits, so you have to be a pincushion, mandated by law to take their products.

I mean, that's quite the feat, isn't it? Can you imagine if every gardening store... or the government says, you've got to use this particular, this company's shovel or spade or garden fork or we're going to fine you, you know, you've got use theirs. But here you go, isn't that amazing? If you could just stand back and see it for what it really is... true fascism beyond anything you can imagine, eh. And you'll want it… Oh thank God, I want that garden fork, thank goodness I didn't get any other one, eh. [Alan chuckles.] Oh, dear. But that's where it goes.

So all you do is, don't forget the lying media. And that you can NEVER trust it. Especially now. You've been given so much evidence of this and yet they are going full tilt again, on board, in unison with the same agenda. Scream, scream, horror, terror, terror, terror, and comply or else. And you're going to start believing them now? And debate the points they put in their papers about numbers and figures that's not going to, you know, they mean nothing. That's how they manage the public, get you all fighting over even statistics for goodness sake! Folk are fighting over statistics! All churned out again. The doctors that are working with these cases are coming out telling you it's mainly bogus. N-n, doesn't matter, and they get hammered as well. Facts don't matter. This is an amazing, this is a super agenda that's to be above all kind of reason, above all logic. In fact, it's a huge, mandated, must-be agenda. All, they've sworn to it, to change the world. That's the purpose of it, right.

So start looking out for yourselves. Have little groups to get together. Make sure you're going to manage each... Again, like back to the guy the swamp man dug up and all that thousands of years later. If you ever get down to the crisis crunch where you've got to help each other out, and you've got food put by, you'd better make sure that you all follow the rules. Hm? Because you will have to throw people out. Just like the tribes in the Americas did, they'd ban, they didn't generally kill members unless they had done something really awful. But their own tribe, if you had thieves amongst them and things like that, they would simply disown them and push them out of the tribe. They became outsiders and things like that. You've got to consider all these things because you're going to find the occasional person here that's going to, someone's going to cave in and put you a risk, you know.

Because this is, this is going to last for years. This is the agenda for years, for the rest of your lives in fact. This is part of the big agenda, this phase of it now. You're not going to go back to anything where you've got decisions to make for yourselves. This is the planned society, folks. You're on the outer fringes of it, and they'll implement it and implement it as we go along here. Right down to having folk volunteering for euthanasia. I'm not kidding you. [Alan chuckles.] I gave these talks years ago.

So as I say, anyway, don't worry about the rest of the public. The rest of the public are generally gone. They will turn you in, in fact, out of their fear and terror because they want to believe it will go back to normal, you see, what normal was, even though it really wasn't that normal, in many respects, but you had the impression that it was normal because it was there for a long time.

So you have to start thinking for yourselves. And again, start thinking inside your head, this is a dangerous time you're going in now. Some of us will get our heads above the trenches, will definitely get chopped, I'm sure. But for the rest of you, you can start thinking inside your head. I've given this talk so many times before because it's not safe now as people start to panic. And as they ramp, they're going to ramp up the terror worse than you saw last spring. This is how you do it in the five-part stages, you know, they're going to go through. Because they want now to go after people who are speaking out against it. Like physically, not just cutting them off at the bank accounts and so on, they want to physically go after them. So they've got to terrify the people even more that it's for a good reason.

Just like, as I mentioned before, the KGB and the NKVD and the Cheka that they created for the Bolsheviks, that would grab folk in the middle of the night out of their homes. That's the same kind of thing that will happen again as they go through these… They never… They always use the same techniques, tyranny always does. If it worked before for some other group, they'll use it themselves.

So you've got to start thinking for yourselves. But again, start thinking inside your head because folk will turn on you as they get neurotic. And panicky. That always happens. And don't run with the crowd as I say. The crowd always ends up going over the cliff. That's what CS Lewis said, eh? He says, when the whole world is running toward a cliff, he who is running in the opposite direction appears to have lost his mind. That's how it appears to the other people. Ohhhch, look at that crazy person going that, why isn't he going this way? You know, they think you lost your mind. But in reality, they have and they don't know. That's how it happens.

But again, getting back to Revelations, as I say Revelation. This old idea, punishment, eh? Guilt and collective punishment. I mentioned that before when I was on with Neil [Neil Foster, Reality

Bytes Radio] last week there, that in religions, and most religions have an idea, a concept of collective punishment, more so in some than others, where if someone in your group, or even in your faith, or a group of them commit horrendous crimes that affect everybody, then everyone gets blamed for it and you all have to take a collective punishment. And that's something that's almost intrinsic in belonging to any group, more so than others in fact. Some mandate that you must accept the punishment along with the guilty parties, as though you're a collective, as opposed to individuals IN a group, you know, that's very important.

But again, Revelation is important. It's important because so much is a supra type psychology, I think so. I think so much of us as human beings comes from intrinsic factors as opposed to things that you're just taught. Certain things everyone knows, you just know. It's like right and wrong, most folk really know what right and wrong is. Except maybe a psychopath, they don't feel why it should be wrong. They don't feel anything at all towards it in one way or another often.

But when you look at Revelation, you definitely get the idea of imagery. Now, imagery... And again, getting back to Revelation, before I... What I'm trying to say is, there's so much crammed into the visual descriptions, but in such short sentences. It's not like page after page after page, like a whole tome explaining it all. It's very visual, but it's with your eyes closed, you can close your eyes you’ll see it, you’ll picture it all. What you see is the image of different things. They even mentioned the image of the beast, you see.

But image, everything is translated into the English eventually for the King James version as they say, or any other version. But the image is so important because demonology as an example uses these same techniques to get in to your mind. It's through the image. Image, imagination. Image, imagination. That's where it comes from. It's one of the most potent things there is imagination. It's what also helps you to be creative, you can imagine. A lot of designers have imagined the product or stages of the product or whatever they're doing before they create it and invent it, you see. Before they even touch it with paper or put it on paper it's... and it all works out.

I often, if I was fixing engines… I don't like buying vehicles generally but now I'll have to, I don't have time to fix them or get a vehicle. But I always had pride in fixing my own, and some of them are rebuilt engines, totally, you know, every single thing in it. I even re-bored them myself, you know, and fit cylinder by cylinder, pistons per cylinder, for each cylinder, until they're better than the factory specs, you know. Because most of the factory specs in American-made cars are pretty sloppy when it comes to, you know, bores and so on. But anyway, at times I've had a problem, and you actually solve it in your sleep in a dream. It's come to you, hhhch, and you're working on it in your subconscious in your dream and you say, oh my goodness, that's exactly what was wrong. And you come out and you turn something in one particular way, and the engine starts and there you go. And it happens in your sleep, things like that.

So again, imagination is so important. The image within, eh. And don't knock it because it's again, most addictions come, especially in the sexual realm as an example, through visualization, it's image, the image. The person will keep having an image of the thing they crave the most in the sexual realm, you know, and it takes them over. Image, image, imagination.

Pornography of course and those who deal with it, as a weapon, because there are people who understand this very well and use it as a weapon to destroy societies. Of course it does. You had the incredible push in the old communistic system, don't forget communism wasn't called communism until years afterwards, after the Bolshevik revolution. It was The Revolutionary Party, and then the Bolsheviks took it over and then it became communism. But you've got to remember that as they were leading up towards it, and it's freedom and so on, and suffragettes and all the rest, who a lot of them went over to Russia where they went to live. A lot of them actually had more in common with them over there. But they also pushed the free love idea, and HG Wells was one of them, interestingly enough. He did the Fabian style, what we would later call maybe Fabian type socialism/communism of free love, you see. But pornography was flourishing at the time. More so again, it wasn't just drawings and pictures which had been done before. They had the cameras, you see, in the late 1800s they had the cameras and made a big go of it then too. Again, here's the image, and here's the thing that's going to stick in your mind, at a certain age, maybe for the rest of your life by the way, depending. That's how fetishes begin as well, a lot of them.

So it was weaponized, eh. It's a weaponized thing that can enter in to you and dominate you. Addicts of all kinds will often see, I know people who are addicted to gambling and one-arm-bandits, they couldn't take their eyes off them if they were sitting in a club or something. They couldn't take their eyes off, as they'd keep looking at them, and you know they weren't even hearing anything you were saying, you know. I'm sure afterwards they'd be picturing that in their heads, that machine. The same with certain drug addicts to certain types of drugs, they'll picture the drug that they want. Image, image, image over and over.

So again, you give your power to the beast, eh? The beast is the thing that literally controls all the different images within you itself.

You also find the idea of a mark in the hands. It's so old, isn't it? SO old, the mark in the hand. Don't forget too that it wasn't unique to the times whenever Revelation, to the particular groups that wrote about Revelation, or John, you know St. John writing on Patmos what he saw. But in ancient Greece they had ways of branding a slave. I'm sure elsewhere too. And Africa, Africans had slaves too in their histories and they would have their own branding techniques for people who they brand. Same thing in England when they had the serfs, they would burn an 'S' into them if they ran off, eh, at times.

But in ancient Greece they also, if they, for the males, young men for slaves that they'd conquered in battle and so on, they'd cut off their dominant, their thumbs, their dominant thumb especially where they would carry out, where there they would use a sword or use a spear, you see. So that was a simple, it was generally in the hand, that's how you could tell is, okay, that's a slave. And if they didn't get that you could brand them if they ran off. Even in Rome they would have broken tokens, they called them tokens. They were made of a form of fired clay, a kind of hardened clay with a seal on it. They would have a hole, two holes to drill in it and it was broken. The owner would keep one half the and the slave would have to wear the other. So he was out in the markets doing his jobs on his master's businesses, eh, anybody stopped him, and he would show them… Oh, you belong to the house of so-and-so, you're a slave, and continue. If they were caught without that on them they could be executed apparently. Or the owner fined. [Alan chuckles.]

So anyway, this idea of marking is very, very old indeed. But this one in Revelation was always, the mark, you see. A mark, an inscription. A written thing is what it means. It's not just something that conveys something in a literary sense. Now, these little chips certainly do that because they get a print of [Alan chuckles.] everything that's in them and what it's collecting about you, you know. Now they brazenly talk about it. I remember doing the ones years ago when they were testing out, for a club at the time, that was initially how they introduced it. A little chip under the skin and how the cool characters who join the club could show off by just swipe their hand across the machine and the cost of the drinks and that were deducted immediately.

They're doing the same thing again of course, but it's going to go into the stores. There's also one where, you probably saw last week there, it's almost like a phone that's inserted in some kind of holder in the stores, and it's going to take your palm print, without you touching it, for the Covid. Isn't that wonderful, you know, hhhch. And it was, oh here's a beautiful thing now, so you can just swipe your hand there, or read your, identify that IS you. And you know darn well that someone is going to take off, you know – close your ears folks if you're sensitive – they're going to cut off the hand here and there. It's already happened by the way for other, you've even seen that in movies, you know, where they take certain, [Alan chuckles.] even the eye in one of the movies to get in and to secure. But the thing is, yeah, that will happen. That's happened already with thumbprints. They've cut off thumbs for different, to get into security buildings and so on. There's other ways too of duplicating that print once you have it. Especially when you're not touching the machine, right. So they say after a while, well yeah, it's good but you know folk can get around it and steal your identity there, so obviously the next step is just to put the darn chip in there and there you go, that's you. Step-by-step they'll lead you to, oh, for goodness sake, just make me safe, eh! [Alan chuckles.] And then there you go.

These chips by the way aren't just little passive ones that will, that you have to be within about, you know, 6 inches to get scanned or something. With the super sensors now they can actually pick them up quite a distance off, eh. And this is your Brave New World. You're marked. You're owned, you understand that you're owned. Especially when you can't go out, and again, you can't buy or sell. You couldn't even buy food for yourself without your proper Covid passport, eh… which is eventually your immunity passport… which is a permanent lifelong passport, eh. [Alan chuckles.] I mean, who is following...

You've got to say to yourself, now wait a minute here. Either Revelation, I've said this so many times in the past, is a prophecy of something that is to happen, like, whether you like it or not it's going to happen by itself even, you know. Which is a form of destiny, eh, preordained. Or else someone's following Revelation like a blueprint. And maybe it's both.

Because the people who come up with these inventions and try to push them, they're well aware of the religious connotations here. They're well aware, and I'm sure they're smirking about it and probably think you're all silly idiots for believing in the first place, that's what they'll believe. But the fact is, hhhch, they're doing it. Hm? Where you can't buy or sell? Do you realize, this has never been done in history before? Where your governments are going to order you to go along with all this stuff. Or get confined to your home at the very least, hm. But you can’t go out and buy or sell ever again in your life unless you comply here.

Do you understand, you can't comply with this! You cannot comply with ULTIMATE tyranny like this. Because that's what it's meant to be. The Covid is just an excuse for it all. Once you do it, you're then owned, you're literally owned, you have masters who own you. It's all, it's all branding in one form or another, isn't it? A chip is just a brand, it tells them who you are, who owns you. You.....

When you lose the last bit of humanity in you, forget all this efficiency stuff, oh, if you fall ill in the hospital, we'll know who you are and what you've got. Rubbish! They know that anyway, they've just mentioned it.

But the fact is, you cannot go along with this stuff.

You can't.

There's definitely massive evil behind all this.

The people who designed this, the thousands, a system where thousands of folks have already died not from Covid but because of the response to it, and they can't get into hospitals, and they were told to stay at home if they had heart attacks and die. Can you believe? WHAT ARE these creatures...? that look kind of human that have done all this? You'd better...

There's something else involved here.

It's just, oh the state of humans who will do anything to keep their jobs, those in charge, then we're finished anyway, you understand that. Or they're finished, put it that way, as human beings. But there's no lack of them going along with this going to enforce it upon you to keep their jobs.

This is pure evil.

The amount of folk that have been written off, literally written off.. in advance, before they hit you with all this. It was all prewritten, remember, the Lockstep one, it goes back to the 2010 scenario, then Event 201, and other ones by the way leading up to Event 201, what they would do step by step-by-step. And they follow it to the letter. Regardless of the facts. Or lack of them.

People who've already sworn their allegiance to crush any opposition to this, who have sworn allegiance to allow massive deaths already, for folk who can't get in for operations and get treatments for many, many other things… Never mind the fact they've got their bioethics committees out there, under the Rockefeller too, they published all about it, who have written a whole screed of new legal things, where they can actually just euthanize people, you know, just euthanize them, that will save money, won't it. Then you won't have to waste all your precious medications, which you're not giving the folk anyway. You understand, there's a lot of horror show simultaneously going along here with this agenda and you're looking at how, whether you like it or not, absolutely, absolutely, it's just...

These characters exist. Some of them you even vote for, whether it's any good one way or another, who cares, you vote for these critters, you know.

I'll give you an example of the characters out there. Everyone's been prepped over the years into forms of the occultism, and magic, you see, magic. That's what the whole Wiccan thing was about, and little witches on TV, whole series of them, and Buffy the Vampire Slayer, etc. Getting folk all into this idea of the occult. Which again they tell you is really a joke, you know, it's just entertainment, eh.   But well, it's an entertainment where, hhhch, it ties right in by the way with bioethics, believe it or not. Bioethics, who should live and who should die. Who's worth saving, who's worth, you know, who's not worth saving. And oh, precious medications, we can’t give it to all of them, you know. Really? Yeah. Really? Of course they could.

This article here is quite amazing. You'd think it was a joke initially but it's from the Huffington Post. Which might be a joke [Alan chuckles.] these days. But…

The Death Of Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg Pushed Me To Join The Satanic Temple

huffpost.com / 24 Sept 2020

“I am a 40-something attorney and mother who lives in a quiet neighborhood with a yard and a garage full of scooters and soccer balls. I am not the type of person who would normally consider becoming a Satanist, but these are not normal times.”

(Alan: …eh. And there’s a picture there, of course, of the deity…)

The Baphomet statue

(A: …and two children looking up at it, you see, this bronze statute.)

The Baphomet statue in the conversion room at the Satanic Temple in Salem, Massachusetts, on Oct. 8, 2019.

(A: So here she is…)

I am a 40-something attorney and mother…

Like so many other women in the United States, when I learned of Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg's passing, my first reaction was not grief but fear. I fear that American citizens are inching closer to living in a theocracy or dictatorship and that the checks meant to prevent this from happening are close to eroding beyond repair.

(A: Of course, everybody I'm sure is wondering what they're talking about here. Because Ginsburg died, eh. And then you would think that a lot of them have women's issues and the right to abortion and so on. And that she thinks that she, that a theocracy is going to stop this, from having abortions and so on, is that what she's thinking here? Ginsburg is involved in something else, a religion itself that's for abortion. She doesn't even know that. Anyway it says…)

When Justice Ginsburg died, I knew immediately that action was needed on a scale we have not seen before. (A: Hm?) Our democracy has become so fragile that the loss of one of the last guardians of common sense and decency in government less than two months before a pivotal election has put our civil and reproductive rights in danger like never before. And, so, I have turned to Satanism.

(A: Right. This article goes on to talk about the Satanic Temple and…)

Members of the Satanic Temple do not believe in the supernatural or superstition. In the same way that some Unitarians and some Jews do not believe in God, Satanic Temple members do not worship Satan and most are atheists. They are not affiliated in any way with the Church of Satan. Instead, the Satanic Temple uses the devil as a symbol of rebellion.

(A: Now, that’s the standard stuff. It’s the idea of Lucifer too, and rebellion, you see. But Satan as a rebel, a much later idea, the whole idea of Satan actually as a rebel. Because Lucifer was really a rebel. But I won’t go into all that. Anyway it says…)

Just like other faiths, the Satanic Temple has a code that their members believe in deeply and use to guide their lives. These Seven Fundamental Tenets include that “one should strive to act with compassion and empathy toward all creatures in accordance with reason,” that “the struggle for justice is an ongoing and necessary pursuit that should prevail over laws and institutions,” and that “one’s body is inviolable, subject to one’s own will alone.”

(A: You see? Interesting how it’s all politicized, so Satanism now is completely politicized into modern reproductive rights as well, eh? It says…)

Reading through the Seven Tenets, I was struck by how closely they aligned with the unwritten code I had used to try to guide my own life for several years.

(A: It goes on and on and on. It's amazing how Ginsburg is like a god to them. Actually, I really mean that too, in their religion they actually see them as gods, folk around Ginsburg saw her as a God, eh. I won't go into too deeply but… [Alan chuckles.] This is from an actual, someone who's an attorney who deals with marriage counseling. Or not too much counseling, I think divorces and stuff and that kind of stuff supposedly. And says she's an empath, a very empathic person and all the rest of it. But...)

…the American Civil Liberties Union and Americans United for Church and State, my research has shown that the Satanic Temple is truly in line with my beliefs about protecting our First Amendment rights and fighting laws that promote or are based on religious doctrine and that it is willing to use radical, creative and yet legally sound strategies to make its case.

It does go on and on and on. It’s quite amazing to see everything that’s happening today from folk who, [Alan chuckles.] who are actually saying that... It's just like a humanist type thing, you see, it's humanist, humanism. With rights, eh. But it's all politicized whether we like it or not. Well, why would you have to join a Satanic Temple to believe in humanism when it's preached… That the whole, it's a whole variety of politics involved, and layers of politics involved in reproductive rights that you don't have to join the Satanic Temple. Then you go into the history of course of the Satanic Temple and you find out that the founders of it and so on were actually members of American intelligence psyops agencies and all this kind of stuff. It's quite amazing, isn't it really. Ftt.

But folk fall for all this stuff. They go into it and fall for it. They've got the Baphomet with, as above so below, idea. That's what they're on about here. And again, Ruth Bader Ginsburg pushed me to join the Satanic Temple, hm. That was the whole thing with Ginsburg was abortion, mass abortion, up to I think, literally the ninth month. I think that's where they're going with it all, although I have no idea, the whole lot I don't follow that closely. This particular person too also has a bio up there with her picture and all that. But there you go, there's all the things that Ginsburg is important for doing.

I wonder how many other folk had to join the Satanic temple? Do you realize the connotations if you say that my body is my right, myself, my own, like in a religious sense, you can call it the Satanic or whatever? And okay, you'll say okay, that's fine, that's this person's body and they can get rid of a child's life, so that's, so you've got the right to get rid of a child's life.
But you expand that same thinking into even the medical field, eh, and you’re into bioethics. Oh you know, there's costs and all the rest of it, other things to think about here, let's not just keep this person at 25 years old alive then, you know. You understand you can...

Everything IS affecting everything else. It really does. When you break from... The original idea of like a Greek building with pillars holding up the roof, and you start knocking away one here, and the rest of them take the strain, they’re groan a bit, and the next one goes. Eventually the roof is going to fall down. That's what happens.

Under the guise of these kind of rights, you know, where everything is affecting everything else, because when you have people who will quite happily, eventually, and there's a lots of them out there, think nothing of what they're doing, or the consequences of what they're doing and what happens from what they've done, again, there's no responsibility anymore, you see. That's what the idea is behind it all, the state will take care of problems, have no responsibility for your own actions or the consequences.

Because that's where it leads to eventually is now you have a medical profession where a good part of it is to, hhhch, do, starting with abortions and then you end up euthanizing the elderly. Then always further justifying the next step and the next step, oh, it's for economic reasons too or we'd offer medication. If we give everybody the medications for Covid then, it's better to give it to the ones we know are going to survive. Well, perhaps they'd all survive without it, I mean, you know, why not give it to the more frail.

But there's no point in arguing these kind of things, because now you've got death panels, you see. We've had the death panels before Covid. Because you see, private corporations have been getting in the business of hospitals for an awful long time in a lot of the countries like Britain and elsewhere, and Canada. They end up making the rules for highest profit, you see. That's why you, no matter what operation it is now, they'll have you getting out of the hospital before the stitches are even, ah, tucked [Alan chuckles.] in the actual site operation. Before the stitches are actually even finished they're getting you out of there, hobbling out, getting you out of the place, and profit, profit, profit for beds, you see. Never mind the massive profit from subsidizing the empty hospitals during the Covid idea because most of them were actually pretty well empty. We know that too. Don't forget the real facts, as the papers go back into lying overdrive.

But yeah, getting back to the satanic temple, everything affects everything else. Of course it does. Until eventually, and it all works on behalf of the people who own the system. People at the bottom who follow these never figure it out, you know, they never do. They're in it for personal power, you know, all the time. You know. It's just astonishing to see it happening.

But yeah, they worship people, you know. Don't forget that there are religions where people are gods, eh. And God's obviously can do anything they want. And even the ones who say, well we're really just humanists and... Well yeah, even at that, look at the manifesto, the humanist manifesto is the same thing as this woman is claiming is the satanic one here and Church of Satan. The human intellect has the right to decide, and therefore the better people, the people with the most intellect should do the deciding, obviously. There you go, dun-dun-dun, there you go.

So yeah, that thing you're seeing is just a statue, you know. And yeah, we use the term Satan just, just because it's, you know, it gets attention. [Alan chuckles.] It's astonishing to see everything manifest, and even they make excuses, eh. Satan, remember, in Hebrew had the idea of a different character really. A Satan was created by God, right, as a type of, he'd be like a district attorney in an American movie who would set up sting operations, he'd try to tempt you into committing the problem. Or like our own agencies do when they're setting up terrorist stings, they create the sites for the young guys to get into to, get them leaders that they can recognize, and oh they're one of ours, and then they set them up to do a sting. They supply them with explosives, even dummy ones and so on, then they go and arrest them.

Well, that's kind of what Satan does, you see. You want this don't you? Well, why don't you go and get it, I'll help you. Whatever it happens to be. Then he would stand in front of God as the accuser and he'd accuse you in front of God for what you did, if you trespassed, if you broke the, you know, that sin, you made that sin happen. That's how Satan was.

Lucifer was different. Lucifer was a rebel, you see. There's a bit of crossover between the two, Lucifer and Satan, because they say the beginning and the idea of the perfect system that was made in Eden, this idea of perfection, then Satan was there and Satan tempted Eve. It is true enough, that's why they'll say that, see, without Satan Eve wouldn't have broken the laws. And by breaking the laws meant that she was given consciousness to an extent, good and evil, knowledge, you see. And she broke the laws. So she was the first rebel after Satan, you see.

But the real one in deeper theology was that Lucifer was the chief, chief Angel, you know, Chief of different things. An overseer. The connotations too of the arts, music, things like that, the leader of these particular realms. This is the one that fell with, there was 2 million of them supposedly fell, higher angels that became literally the demonic realm. With a myriad of lesser ones, beings of course, alongside that. However, as they say, people often get confused between the two because there's definitely a crossover between the two.

But it's quite interesting that much of what they've put out today as Satanism is different from say the Middle-age type Satanism. Which is well described by people who were caught in ceremonies across Europe at different periods. And you can't really, here's the thing too, you couldn't really be a Satanist unless you believed in Christianity. Otherwise it would be meaningless, you see, this actual concept, that particular actual concepts as opposed to Zoroastrianism.

Anyway, the rebel is what they adhere to. The same thing too if you look at the revolutionaries like Antifa. Break the laws, break the rules, break the system, break, break, break. They never tell you what they're going to create, you see. The idea is to break everything, to destroy, to burn. The destroyer, that's the function at the moment. Everything is wrong, let's destroy it. But they don't know how to replace it or fix it. And above it all you have the higher groups that manage them and fund them. [Alan chuckles.] Of course they know exactly what they're going to bring in.

It's interesting to just stand back and watch it, just watch it all being put together and funded and managed, and professionally managed of course. Giving the impression you'd think, from outside, people would think the whole of America is burning. Which it isn't. It's selective camera shots and so on, and what they portray as, it looks much, much bigger than it actually is. But it's definitely all, it's all geared in with the Covid idea. You don't have Covid breaking out in the same year that they want rid of Trump.

It's interesting even the Trump idea. Because to me it's a family war that's going on, between two factions of the same people. That's what it is. The rest of the public it's going to effect [Alan chuckles.] but they really don't have a say in it. That's what's really going on as far as I can see.

Now I'm going to give a few articles out, which simply just augment what I've been talking about really, to show you the complicity of and deceit that we have perpetuated upon the public in different countries. In Ireland you've got…

Where's the outrage over an open and shut 'case', a 'surge' of lies and an 'outbreak' of further deceit?

theirishsentinel.com / Posted by Helena Handbasket / Sep 29, 2020

(A: That’s from our old friend Helena Handbasket. I guess that’s where we’ll end up eventually.)

Just when you thought the lies couldn’t get any more blatant, the Irish government has announced that ‘rolling lockdowns’ are set to be the norm for at least the next 9 months. My prediction is that 9 months to these liars is a euphemism for ‘forever’ and that this will not stop.

https://www.independent.ie/world-news/coronavirus/rolling-lockdowns-a-way-of-life-for-up-to-nine-months-as-more-counties-suffer-rise-in-covid-19-cases-39571393.html

It’s the same agenda. You see, this is a world agenda. And what you do is regional areas, they’re locking down different provinces, it might be shires in Britain for instance, or counties, so you don’t get the whole place locked down at the same time. This is how they’re doing it now. This is their strategy to try to get us to comply. They’re going to keep it going one way or another… Because if folk are so sick of that, if they just give you a few weeks in a different area, and a few weeks in another area, back and forth like rolling blackouts in a sense, then they think they can actually make you just comply.

It’s imperative, you see, you wear masks. Because without the mask things would go back to normal so quickly. You’d actually see people’s expressions. You’d smile at each other. You would get much closer. That’s what happened in the summer and folk were fine and healthy because of it. And no, you get back to the mask. The mask is a symbol of something, oh, macabre out there, oh it’s scary, and we’re all scary wearing the mask. So it’s always in your mind. Because they’ve got a whole agenda to push through here, nothing to do with the virus obviously.

I'll put these links up remember. The problem too with Ireland, it's like Scotland. It's so compromised. Always was, you know, Scotland. It was compromised with people inside their own countries that would sell them out so quickly, you know, in politics, etc. And once you're into socialism, and then you're up to your eyes in hock to the World Bank and the IMF, which, hhhch, Ireland is as well, then of course they'll make you obedient to do... Because this is all obedience to a higher authority, and the higher authority is the World Bank, the IMF, the Bank for International Settlements. They're all this private conglomerate, and their part of the group that runs the world. That's what they were set up by themselves to do, was to help rule the world, you see. And plundered it at the same time.

So the countries are under the thumb through debt have to go along with it one way or another. And their politicians, their civil servants and their police unfortunately in Ireland and Scotland you know that'ssss...... they… you could almost say they're a different species from the public now altogether. They're total sellouts, you see, they've already sold out their own people. So they're sellouts, they’re a different species, they have nothing in common with you anymore.

It's the same thing when Scotland had the unification of the crown with England, it was never really ratified. [Alan laughing.] And these higher judges, it's like a High Court you might say of Scotland's, met and discussed it and they simply went home afterwards, kind of adjourned, but they didn't come back and sign anything. So for [Alan chuckles.] a couple of centuries everybody was joined at the hip with England and the crown. It wasn't until about, oh, a few years ago in fact that that was admitted to. Because they came out with the original things that were the start, the actual laws that had been not signed but promoted and used for the discussions and they hadn't been signed. It's quite amazing to see how they obviously just paid off the judges big, big bribes and they conned the public into thinking it was all legal. And technically it couldn't be made legal because of the laws of Scotland at that time.

But that's what you get, eh? You get folks selling out all the time. They belong to this organization that either used to be Freemasonry of course but now you have, again, the Royal Institute of International Affairs and a whole bunch of related, very well connected, related organizations that are all really just like sparks of the same fire. And they go along with a whole agenda. And they get well rewarded, these characters for doing it. So I'll put this one up.

Also, Québec in Canada…

Quebec, Ontario in second COVID-19 wave; restrictions return

abcnews.go.com / 28 Sept 2020

Quebec is returning to a stepped-up lockdown in two of its biggest cities and the premier of Canada’s most populous province said he’s looking at all options after Ontario reported a record number of new cases

So again here we've got the same rubbish across the planet, record number of new cases in these... hhhhhhhhhhhh, newspapers are just, churned out this rubbish, eh. They all, they know they're prostitutes. They don't, it doesn't bother them, you know. And the psychopaths that they have working for them. Or even on television, it will be the same, I'm sure. Yet, they know that they're not ill people. And again, these swab tests are rubbish. They're a joke actually. They admit it on the one hand they're a joke [Alan chuckles.], but it makes no difference, they keep going on. Because the agenda is the agenda, you see. M-hm. And the more you test, the more particles of dead viruses you're going to find anyway in society, all kinds of viruses are going to come out, that's particles, and they say, oh that's positive. M-hm. So they know it's particles of DNA, dead cells, and it makes no difference. We've got to flatten the curve again. Oh, my goodness, oh, flatten the curve. Oh, the hospitals will, we don't want to make it overwhelmed, eh. Well, they weren't before. [Alan laughing.] Another thing too is, they know it's getting weaker, whatever it is out there, this Covid idea, it's getting weaker, it's mutated into weaker strains. And folk are getting more resistant to it anyway.

Another one too, it says…

LILLEY: No need for another lockdown in Ontario

thesudburystar.com / 24 Sept 2020

Just last Friday, it was Dr. Maria Van Kerkhove from the World Health Organization saying that COVID-19 could be dealt with without resorting to new lockdowns.

Then on Tuesday, Canada's chief medical officer Theresa Tam said a new lockdown wasn't needed.

Now a group of 38 doctors, mostly from the Toronto area, are calling on Premier Doug Ford to head toward a lockdown again.

(A: [Alan laughing.] It's a great thing, science, isn't it, especially when it's all made up by imagination. Yep. [Alan laughing.] So the WHO said it…) could be dealt with without resorting to new lockdowns.

(A: Even Theresa Tam, that's on the board by the way at the same time of the WHO as well, said it wasn't needed. Then a group of 38 doctors mainly… I wonder who paid them off, eh? I'd like to see who the names of them are. Wouldn't you like to find out who they are, what they belong to, organizations, eh?)

The doctors released a letter calling on the premier to shutter a range of locations, including "dine-in restaurants and bars, nightclubs, gyms, theatres and places of worship."

(A: They want them all, just shut them all down, eh?! M-hm.)

So far, Ford is saying no — but he is feeling the pressure. On a daily basis, reporters are asking Ford why he hasn't locked down the province already.

(A: [Alan chuckles.] Well, why are the reporters, what qualifications do the reporters have here, eh? There you go. I'll put this rubbish up too.)

Then you get another one. It's…

Ontario reports 653 COVID-19 cases as new public health measures take effect

torontosun.com / 3 Oct 2020

(A: Oh, that's from the Toronto Sun. Hhh, my goodness, eh. Hm. So…)

Ontario Chief Medical Officer of Health Dr. David Williams looks on as Ontario Health Minister Christine Elliott speaks during the daily…

(A: It's really like they're talking about Gods, eh? Why not just say, Ontario's Health Minister Christine Elliott spoke, rather than say, this guy looks on, hm? Is this like a worship thing or something? And don't forget the more they, you see, they're putting out hundreds and hundreds of tests every day more. So you're going to get more coming back positive. Just particles, you see, nothing to do with it. And it says…)

…and 41 deaths related to the coronavirus, but Health Minister Christine Elliott says…

653 cases of COVID-19

(A: Well, you're going to funding them. Even if you've got common colds, or even had a cold, even if you've had a shots in the last few years, you'll come out positive. But regardless, 41 deaths, eh.)

but Health Minister Christine Elliott says an ongoing data review at Toronto Public Health is at least partly responsible for the spike.

(A: …eh.)

Elliott says some cases and deaths that occurred in the spring or summer are only being reported today.

(A: [Alan laughing.] Let’s close down the whole economy because suffering is incredible, but let’s just have it so chaotic it makes no sense at all, eh.)

The same thing happened on Friday, when Ontario reported an all-time high of 732 new cases along with 76 deaths.

There are now 53,633 confirmed cases of COVID-19 in Ontario.

The province was able to complete 46,254 tests in the previous 24 hours, but nearly twice that number — 91,322 — are still listed as “under investigation.”

Now, the thing is, we've already been through the con game of putting them all down who die as Covid even if they're not, that's not what kills them. So we're back at the same con and I will not play along with the farce of it all. It's so disgusting what they're doing. And…

Ontario developing ‘last resort’ guidelines on which patients to prioritize if hospitals are overwhelmed by critical COVID-19 cases

thestar.com / 30 Mar 2020

(A: Now, I did this one in March, this article. It's to do with bioethics, last resort guidelines. Here's your, well here's your humanism here, here's your Satanism here, you see. Let's be practical about things and, yeah, decide who lives and dies, eh. That's from March, remember.

It's printed by the Toronto Star.)

The document, dated Saturday and obtained by the Star, suggests the province is taking steps to prepare for worst-case scenarios (A: …this is in March.) already playing out in hard-hit regions such as Italy and New York, where COVID-19 wards are overflowing and doctors are being forced to ration life-saving interventions like ventilators.

(A: More folks get killed on the ventilators, you know.)

I-yi. It’s so sad the lies that are being churned out though. Here they go back to the same ones, eh. And they’re even just now using figures from the spring to put down, to pad the numbers again, that were padded back then. [Alan chuckles.] And…

Canadian judge rules 2 doctors

(A: You see, here’s your humanism, Satanism, right…)

Canadian judge rules 2 doctors can have patient euthanized even if many docs disagree (A: Right.)

lifesitenews.com / 2 Oct 2020

If two doctors or nurse practitioners approve a death by lethal injection (A: That’s what you used to give prisoners who had done something wrong. They’re doing it to just ordinary people now.), it doesn't matter that other doctors' or nurse practitioners' assessments disagree that the person qualifies to be killed under the law.

(A: KILLED under the law. Patients, right. This is where it always ends up, folks. It’s meant to end up this way. Oh it’s just to help folk that are dying a terrible illness. No, it’s not. [Alan chuckles.] They’re killing folk, that started off in Holland remember and then eventually they were killing folk that had a bit of depression. You know, teenagers! How many teenagers don’t get bits of depression occasionally? Hm?! Facts don’t matter, eh?)

October 2, 2020 (Euthanasia Prevention Coalition) — When Canada's parliament passed Bill C-14 legalizing euthanasia (MAiD) the legislation required two doctors or nurse practitioners to agree that a person qualified for death by lethal injection. As long as two euthanasia assessments approve death, it doesn't matter if several euthanasia assessments determine that a person doesn't qualify under the law.

Katherine Sorenson believes that husband of 48 years, who was approved for (MAiD) euthanasia even though he received conflicting assessments, is not dying, has questionable capacity and is delusional about his medical condition.

(A: Right.)

Katherine's lawyer, Hugh Scher, sought an injunction to prevent the euthanasia death based on an assessment by a physician, an affidavit from a physician who has known her husband for years, and Katherine's affidavit. These affidavits state that her husband is not terminally ill, that he has questionable capacity to decide and he has "delusional" beliefs concerning his medical condition.

(A: Meaning, maybe he thinks he’s dying.)

Today, the Nova Scotia Court of Appeal decided that:

there is no role for courts in the review of MAiD eligibility assessments. ... Parliament considered, and rejected a role for judges in the pre-approval or review of MAiD eligibility assessments. Parliament made clear that the role rests with approved healthcare assessors.

So there you go, you see. Oh, we’re not responsible, it’s up to the people in the healthcare if they’re going to kill you or not. Hhhch, don’t get sick is the message, whatever you do. If you do get sick, keep it a secret. Because it’s not safe anymore, folks. I hope you understand this is Brave New World you’re in. It’s not, it really isn’t safe anymore.

It’s a very evil, cruel system we’re in. It’s anti-human. And it's getting worse all the time. It's designed to go here and get less human. So that's one article. One of many actually. I've got lots from other, different countries and different... with the same kind of thing. Canada of course is on that slippery slope as well. Another one too is…

Government accused of delaying assisted dying law breakingnews.ie / 1 Oct 2020

(A: So, here they are accused of delaying it all, right. It says…)

The Government has been accused of delaying a Bill allowing assisted dying in limited circumstances in Ireland.

(A: There ya go, all these British Commonwealth countries all just happen to go along the same route naturally.)

It would decriminalise medical intervention in the case of the terminally ill who have full ability to give consent.

Ministers (A: …that's politicians.) want to give significantly more time for TDs' deliberations and hear a wide range of views.

This Bill is about giving people a choice where it is unbearable pain that they are suffering

(A: And more and more folk, this is, I gave the talks years ago when I saw them taking away all the so-called addictive drugs that they were giving, that can keep you alive for a long-time pain-free. And they started, oh, you could get addicted to these. No, folk could handle it. There's folk on some of these incredibly powerful drugs, they could handle them and didn't go overboard with them and could manage day to day. I've got lots of articles here from people, and some that were sent to me too where the poor souls were suffering because they were taken off all these drugs. Well, they might get addicted to them. This is all intentional, folks.)

(A: You see, they want you to get to, they want the doctors eventually to, oh, diagnose you with this, oh you'd better just die now. They're actually giving that advice now in Canadian hospitals. Rather than wait, I read the articles not long ago in fact, where they advised people to be told in the hospitals what they've got and given the choice there and then if they'd rather just have the euthanasia. It would save the state money. Well it's okay, it's amazing how they can find millions for the wars all the time or stuff like that hey? Or just throw it out to other countries for charitable reasons, eh? But inside the country the folk who pay it [Alan chuckles.] end up getting euthanized when they can't pay anymore. Hhhhhhhhhhmm, there ya go. So there's an organization called People Before Profit and a woman who was in it…)

People Before Profit TD Gino Kenny proposed legalisation in limited circumstances and said sufferers would not be under any duress.

He brought a “Dying with Dignity” Bill before the Dail for debate on Thursday

Listen, once you get these on the table, and I understand all sides of everything, but once they're on the table they're used for purposes you’d never have thought humans would have gone, because that’s where it’s meant to go. It’s to train the public that one day when the state decides your usefulness is over, as a payer, you know a taxpayer because you can’t physically do it, then it’s time for you to just do the right thing, old bean, and die. Hm? That’s true socialism and the managed society. It's more efficient that way. Governments always have lots of things to spend the money on, your money, rather than just spend it on you, even though you paid into it all your whole life.

Ontario politician blasts govt-imposed restrictions: ‘Socialism is neither a cure or remedy for COVID’

lifesitenews.com / 23 Sept 2020

(A: Member of Provincial Parliament.) MPP Randy Hillier decried Premier Doug Ford for his seizure of power: 'Without debate or vote, we have embraced arbitrary rules. We have thrown away the rule of law'

(A: Well, they all know that. They’ll know that of course.)

An Ontario politician blasted Premier Doug Ford and his medical experts for ignoring what he says is the real cost of continuing coronavirus restrictions: loss of freedom, government overreach, loss of the rule of law, loss of ability to earn a living, rising suicides and despair — all for the sake of a “false sense of security.”

(A: But facts don’t matter as we all know, eh.)

And another one, it was back in, oh, it's not that old. It says…

Yelp data (A: I guess that’s surveys. That’s from CNBC.) shows 60% of business closures due to the coronavirus pandemic (A: It’s not, it’s the response to it all.) are now permanent - cnbc.com / 16 Sept 2020

So there you go, gone forever. 60% business closures. M-hm. So there you go, that's your, that was all planned of course. Because the Brave New World is going to come out of this of total restriction and managed society.

Report: 56 Million Americans Depended on Food Banks During the Pandemic

mintpressnews.com / 28 Sept 2020

Once only associated with enemy nations and the Great Depression, bread lines have returned to the US, often in form of miles-long traffic jams or car parks filled with hungry drivers.

It's from the PEW Research Center, different, again, statistics, etc. etc. It doesn't make any difference, eh. Because that's the agenda, is to lay off a good chunk of the population permanently and give you, to start with, universal basic income. Then here comes the restrictions, and here comes all the other rules and regulations.

Bill 195 - An Act to enact the Reopening Ontario (July 2020) - (A Flexible Response to COVID-19) Act, 2020 - ola.org / 2020

It is a good act, isn't it, the whole Covid idea is like an act. Again, it sounds rather, well, I'm not going to read through this darn thing. Lawyers, I mean, who needs lawyers. They can't speak plainly to the public which they're supposed to serve, governments shouldn't be using lawyers to obfuscate everything, obviously. All you can really get out of it is the emergency management and civil management basically and how they can, oh, start to open up a little bit. But if anything happens you can close it down again, for a whole year. And if at the end of the year it hasn't worked out, they can actually make it another year longer and etc. etc. There's nothing there for your benefit, never ever is. Never was in the past either.

Another one…

The Pandemic That Never Was

globalresearch.ca / 1 Oct 2020

On March 11, the World Health Organization (WHO) declared COVID-19 a pandemic. When I think of this scary word it conjures up heartbreaking images of vast numbers of people suffering, precipitated into abysmal poverty. The WHO used to agree with me.

For years the WHO on its “Pandemic Preparedness” homepage defined a pandemic (A: And this is what was taught in medicine too.) as “several simultaneous epidemics worldwide (A: Right.) with enormous numbers of deaths and illness.” In 2009, however, the part about “enormous numbers of death and illness” was removed. (A: You see, they change the whole meaning of it.) Since 2010, the WHO’s “Emergencies preparedness, response” page now has the following definition: “A pandemic is the worldwide spread of a new disease.”

(A: I mean, it could be the hiccups, you know, I mean, that would last you may be a day or two. So there you go, they completely changed the whole meaning of it, of the pandemic. It used to be, right…)

“several simultaneous epidemics worldwide with enormous numbers of deaths and illness.”

In a May 4, 2009 article, David Ozonoff, professor of environmental health at the Boston University School of Public Health told CNN: “The word pandemic refers to how widely dispersed a disease is, not to how severe the disease is…you can have a pandemic without a large number of deaths.” This is exactly what we have in the case of the flu.

According to the WHO:

“Influenza remains one of the world’s greatest public health challenges. Every year across the globe, there are an estimated 1 billion cases, of which 3 to 5 million are severe cases, resulting in 290,000 to 650,000 influenza-related respiratory deaths.”

In the case of COVID-19, officially, worldwide, there are 33,916,696 cases and 1,013,879 deaths. Out of a global population of

(A: …and it tells you here the whole thing.)

Since on average 56 million people worldwide die every year from all causes and on average 2,830,688 in the U.S., the number of deaths attributed to COVID-19 and the flu are small.

Certainly no reason to lock down the global economy and force people to wear masks.

(A: Well, it's got nothing to do with that. Haven't you gotten the message, it's got nothing to do with it.)

All COVID-19 tests are faulty.

(A: That's true.)

May 26 CNN article: "Antibody tests used to determine if people have been infected in the past with COVID-19 might be wrong up to half the time…"

(A: Well, toss a coin in the air, it's the same law of averages. It's a pure guess. If you're wrong half the time, it's a toss.)

They got this from the CDC's own website (A: They've got the links here to all this by the way. This is not conspiracy stuff.) which also states that antibody tests are not accurate enough to determine who should go back to work. Yet, the EEOC (Equal Employment opportunity commission) is allowing employers to force employees to be tested for COVID-19.

May 22 Science Magazine article: "Coronavirus antigen tests: quick and cheap, but too often wrong?" reported:

FDA website on PCR tests, Page 38:

"Detection of viral RNA may not indicate the presence of infectious virus or that 2019-nCoV (A: It doesn’t say CoV 2.) is the causative agent for clinical symptoms… (A: So it may not, it may not indicate the presence of the infectious virus.) The performance of this test has not been established for monitoring treatment of 2019-nCoV infection…This test cannot rule out diseases caused by other bacterial or viral pathogens.”

(A: You see what I’m saying? It’s USELESS. It’s useless, absolutely useless. M-hm. It’s to do with fragments of nucleic acid, that’s really fragments of it. Not the actual things themselves or viruses themselves. It’s easier…)

These tests aren’t discovering new COVID-19 cases—they are creating them.

Because you send them to the lab, you see, and they multiply these things up to try and get a percentage of them, if they can multiply them into percentages, they’ll say they’ve maybe got it. [Alan chuckles.] It’s a complete farce. It’s not meant for diagnosis ACCORDING TO THE INVENTOR. It doesn’t matter, facts don’t matter, folks. You’re under tyranny.

The huge change coming to how you claim government benefits: Aussies will use new

New facial recognition technology will be used to access Centrelink payments

It will also be used to enroll him to vote, (A: …and by the way, in Australia you’ve GOT to vote, by law.) register drones (A: Hhhch.) and declare bankruptcy

PM Scott Morrison wants to make it safer and easier to use government services

The $250 million facial recognition upgrade is part of a $800 million package

(A: How can the countries that are all locked down get this? You're going to be up to your eyes in hock for GENERATIONS. That's the idea, you're slaves. Total slaves.)

Do you know that the US private Federal Reserve group has bought over stacks of all the businesses that have gone under? They're ending up owning the country. [Alan chuckles.] Slave, slave, slaves, eh?

An interesting article is by someone that's quite a character and it's Conrad Black. He was, I don't know if he still was made, he was made Lord Conrad Black I think for a while. He liked that one, he swaggered a lot. But he's an intelligent guy regardless of it all. He used to own, I think, be the head of Hollinger Corporation, massive media group. But he fell into, he did some time for, I don't know, kind of selling off shares or something, I'm not quite sure what it was. But regardless, he's got a good mind, even though he's still wrong on some things here in the article. He says…

Conrad Black: Liberals pledge to further oppress the country

nationalpost.com / 2 Oct 2020

If the government meant what it said in the throne speech, it has lost its collective mind

The Sept. 23 throne speech is, in the irritating modern jargon, a "concerning" document. The speech explicitly stated that today's aberrantly low interest rates create an opportunity for massive deficit spending because "there is a global consensus that governments must do more … while also locking in the low cost of borrowing for decades to come." There is no such consensus and the financial markets won't be bilked like that indefinitely to enable the federal government to finance the farrago of socialist ambitions that it outlined in the speech. If this really were the case, the government would be better advised to increase spending only moderately, and abolish all forms of taxation that inconvenience the lower half of income earners, as they know better what to do with money left in their hands than the legions of busy federal government spenders conjured in the Governor General's speech like a mass of Wagnerian Nibelungen hurling money out of the windows of every …

(A: Anyway, he goes on and on. He's talking about this incredible taxation system to pay off this. And it's going to be the lower classes that end up getting all hammered again as always, eh. But it's also the socialists taking over. Don't forget, socialism is the preferred method of the capitalists – I wish folk would catch on to this, you know – to manage their world more efficiently, for themselves. [Alan chuckles.] But he goes on and on and on and spells it out. He's got a good mind as I say. He's up there in all the right people who know everything and so on that's going on. He also goes into the folk who survived coronavirus and he says this...)

The vast majority of those who contract the coronavirus have no or minimal symptoms; 94.6 percent of Americans who are over 60 years of age survive the coronavirus, 99.997 per cent of Americans beneath the age of 60 survive it and there is no reason to think Canada is materially different. Moreover, because Canada has much lower population density and had a tighter shutdown, and in some cases better management, Canada has only half the U.S. fatality rate.

I think part of it too is because the US literally shuts people right down and told them to stay at home if they were sick. That's a good part of it too. But of course I think with Connor Black in this article, he advocates that it all come to an end, leave it alone and then they'll be fine once you get a vaccine. Well, these vaccines, they've already had horrific results when you really get into the truth that's hidden behind all the glowing reports of it. From folk going sick, I think a good percent, 18% of the folk get instantly sick with the darn thing, fevers and all that. But don't worry, you'll get over it, sure, sure, sure. Well, that's not good enough for me, folks. No. No way.

The World Economic Forum’s Sustainable Development Impact Summit featured two sessions updating on progress of vaccine development and distribution.

Leaders from pharmaceutical companies and bodies involved in the COVAX Facility – to ensure equitable distribution – discussed issues from vaccine nationalism to public trust.

The richest folk on the planet and the biggest corporations are financing ways to attack people who say they don't want it. Another one from Helena Handbasket…

Stephen Donnelly, Minister for Death: "People are peddling things which are simply untrue for whatever reasons." Yes, we know you are!

theirishsentinel.com / Posted by Helena Handbasket / Oct 2, 2020

Stephen Donnelly, the bought off Minister for Anything But Health, is at it again with outrageous fear-mongering and smearing of anyone with an informed opinion, of which he sadly lacks.

To suggest that 'anti-vaxxers', his term not mine, are 'ill-informed and dangerous' …

(A: Again, it's a smear term, anti-VAX, oh, you're ANTI-VAXXER. A lot of folk are anti-THIS vaccine because they don't need it. I think it was one of the bigwigs that said that too recently in some talk, I think it was Elon Musk that said it. He said in an interview that he wasn't going to take the vaccine because it wouldn't affect him, he is not in danger of Covid 19 with his age and all the rest of it. Never mind the fact, I mean, they can't even show the folk that are actually dying OF the thing that's causing them death, that might have it along with it, their actual cause of death is not being exacerbated by Covid. There's a problem for the bigwigs as they try to cover it all up, isn't it? It's amazing. N-n-n. So this article goes on and on and talks about Donnelly…)

Donnelly is of course a pawn of the Bill & Melinda Gates murder factory masquerading as philanthropy and simply doing their bidding as one of many Gates mouthpieces and should be ridiculed for his acting ability buffoonery.

Instead he is held up as a paragon of truth and virtue whilst handing out diktats to the public to stay at home and obey the McMasters of the universe whilst he and his corrupt cronies carry on supping cheap (free) alcohol in the member's bar of the Irish parliament and laugh at the compliance of the majority of Irish sheep staying in their pens whilst the so-called opposition join them in government to create a one party totalitarian entity.

Yep, I tell ya. [Alan chuckles.] I'll put these articles up though. Yeah, Ireland unfortunately is so PC. It's got so many sellouts, prostitutes that are sellouts to the PC jargon and the purveyors of political correctness that... I sorry, you have to clean out everything, a complete housecleaning to get back to any kind of decency in your country. The same in Scotland and other countries too. There's folk in Scotland at least speaking out about the massive corruption of the prostitutes that are, they're all socialists, you see, bought and paid for by higher authorities, many of them outside the country that own it all. [Alan chuckles.] Doesn't surprise me.

Florida Leads The Pack Into “Phase 3” Of Lockdown

bitchute.com / 2 Oct 2020

Florida has taken the U.S. lead on transitioning into ‘Phase 3’ of lockdown, which means they are open for business.

(A: It goes on to say that…)

Citing a dramatic decrease in hospitalizations, (A: …a decrease, right…) low mortality rates, and growing strain on the economy, Florida has taken the U.S. lead on transitioning into ‘Phase 3’ of lockdown, which means they are open for business.

The trailblazing Gov. Ron DeSantis went a step further, cancelling all outstanding covid-based fines. Tennessee has followed suit, and Mississippi is the first to lift mask mandates. Is this the beginning of a cascade of states looking at science and using rational thinking to make decisions on lockdown measures?

Well, we'll see what happens there. Because propaganda and really good lie making machinery can turn it overnight back into, oh, terror, horror, horror. You know. We'll see what happens.

This is an interesting article here. Again, it doesn't make any difference about facts, but the chief science officer for Pfizer, the big, big Pfizer Pharma company…

Chief Science Officer for Pfizer Says “Second Wave” Faked on False-Positive COVID Tests, “Pandemic Is Over” globalresearch.ca / 23 Sept 2020

(A: Well, I've got articles from back in March, at the end of March into April and they said the pandemic... Remember when they were trying to get the one for, I think the company in Oxford in England, vaccine company, and the guys said, the head of it, the CEO said, he says, we're desperate, we're racing against time to try and get a vaccine for Covid before it disappears, he said. [Alan laughing.] That's what he said. That was back then. But here's the Pfizer one saying the pandemic is over.)

In a stunning development, a former Chief Science Officer for the pharmaceutical giant Pfizer says “there is no science to suggest a second wave should happen.” The “Big Pharma” insider asserts that false positive results from inherently unreliable COVID tests are being used to manufacture a “second wave” based on “new cases.”

(A: In other words, it’s completely bogus.)

Dr. Mike Yeadon, a former Vice President and Chief Science Officer for Pfizer for 16 years, says that half or even “almost all” of tests for COVID are false positives. Dr. Yeadon also argues that the threshold for herd immunity may be much lower than previously thought, and may have been reached in many countries already.

(A: By the way, the links are all here.)

In an interview last week Dr. Yeadon was asked:

“we are basing a government policy, an economic policy, a civil liberties policy, in terms of limiting people to six people in a meeting…all based on, what may well be, completely fake data on this coronavirus?”

Dr. Yeadon answered with a simple “yes.”

“Were it not for the test data that you get from the TV all the time, you would rightly conclude that the pandemic was over, as nothing much has happened. Of course people go to the hospital, moving into the autumn flu season…but there is no science to suggest a second wave should happen.”
(A: …with Covid that is.)

In a paper published this month, which was co-authored by Yeadon and two of his colleagues, “How Likely is a Second Wave?”, the scientists write:

“It has widely been observed that in all heavily infected countries in Europe and several of the US states likewise, that the shape of the daily deaths vs. time curves is similar to ours in the UK. Many of these curves are not just similar, but almost super imposable.”

In the data for UK, Sweden, the US, and the world, it can be seen that in all cases, deaths were on the rise in March through mid or late April, then began tapering off in a smooth slope which flattened around the end of June and continues to today. The case rates however, based on testing, rise and swing upwards and downwards wildly.

The survival rate of COVID-19 has been upgraded since May to 99.8% of infections. This comes close to ordinary flu, the survival rate of which is 99.9%. Although COVID can have serious after-effects, so can flu or any respiratory illness. The present survival rate is far higher than initial grim guesses in March and April, cited by Dr. Anthony Fauci.

Dr. Yeadon pointed out that the “novel” COVID-19 contagion is novel only in the sense that it is a new type of coronavirus. But, he said, there are presently four strains which circulate freely throughout the population, most often linked to the common cold.

(A: Anyway, it goes on and on and on. But again, facts don't matter, eh. Hm? It says…)

The scientists argue that much of the population already has, if not antibodies to COVID, some level of “T-cell” immunity from exposure to other related coronaviruses, which have been circulating long before COVID-19.

“A major component our immune systems is the group of white blood cells called T-cells whose job it is to memorise a short piece of whatever virus we were infected with so the right cell types can multiply rapidly and protect us if we get a related infection. Responses to COVID-19 have been shown in dozens of blood samples taken from donors before the new virus arrived.”

(A: [Alan chuckles.])

“It is now established that at least 30% of our population already had immunological recognition of this new virus, before it even arrived…

There ya go. But facts don't matter, eh? Because it's a big agenda. Another article…

Abstract:

Various technologies are emerging to provide enhanced, automated personnel identification capabilities. Techniques for human microchip implants using radio frequency identification are possible, but the implications of this technology remain to be considered.

This thesis provides a survey of current technologies for enhanced user identification, focusing on human implant approaches, and to summarize the set of security, privacy, social and ethical issues that may arise from the use of these technologies in the U.S. Navy.

Technical background is presented to provide the reader with a basic understanding of radio frequency technology. An analysis of human implant technologies currently used in the private sector is provided to show how they might offer capabilities in the military. Applications of information technology and human microchip implants that may improve user identification in the future are presented and analyzed. Finally, a review of the social and ethical implications of human implant-based user identification is provided. It shows that the collateral social issues are complex and far-reaching, and need to be carefully considered by the Navy to avoid becoming entangled in intractable technical, morale and legal issues far into the future.

(A: It's amazing that they get around all the ethical problems with the crisis, eh? Oh, Covid, Covid, oh let's implant everybody and, then you wouldn’t have to touch anything. What about grabbing your food? Oh, we've got robots to do that for you. Will the robot pick up the virus on its outer membrane or whatever? Oh, oh, we'll worry about that when it comes, you know. So, there you go. It's an interesting world we're in now, eh? Another article here is interesting as well. [Alan chuckles.] When you wonder about the, as I've said before, you see, you've woken up and you find out that the communists took your country over a long time ago. And communism is a front for them too, you know that, y'know. But yeah, all the mainstream papers, newspapers, TV, government too was taken over, over a long period of time. That's why they're backing burning streets down and all the rest of it, and the cops getting shot, and businesses, black and white, losing their businesses getting burned into the ground, and applauding it all. So you can't turn to your governments to help you when they're part of it, eh. And the organizations, look at the funding they're getting from the big corporations, even where you're getting your food from. It's all been taken over, you see, it's them, they are, that IS your system. That's what is the hardest part for folk to actually accept.

And you know folk are getting deplatformed, and you don't have to do much at all to get deplatformed now except, especially speaking the truth, that's all you need to do here and there. And it doesn't have to be vindictive truth or anything, just speaking the truth is enough to get you deplatformed. I mean, Twitter, right, everything they've given you to converse with in this day and age is, again, it's power, right, and censorship.

Former Twitter CEO: When capitalists are 'lined up…shot', I'll happily provide commentary

lifesitenews.com / 2 Oct 2020

Dick Costolo was criticizing a CEO for leaving politics and social activism out of the company's mission.

(A: Well, I mean, you know that Twitter is a charitable institution, don't you? I mean, it's not there for money or profit, is it? Y'know? [Alan laughing.] That's why folk can't figure this out, these folk that they want communism, or are they capitalists?)

October 2, 2020 (LifeSiteNews) — Former Twitter CEO Dick Costolo stated in a since deleted tweet on Wednesday that "[m]e-first capitalists who think you can separate society from business are going to be the first people lined up against the wall and shot in the revolution." Costolo added that he'll "happily provide video commentary."

Costolo is known for supporting social media platforms' censorship efforts.

Twitter's policies state, "You may not threaten violence against an individual or a group of people. We also prohibit the glorification of violence."

(A: Really? [Alan chuckles.] It depends who's doing it.)

The social media giant defines "violent threats as statements of an intent to kill or inflict serious physical harm on a specific person or group of people."

The tweet apparently was removed not by Twitter, but by Costolo himself.

Costolo criticized Coinbase CEO Brian Armstrong for his decision to leave politics and social activism out of the company's mission.

"It has become common for Silicon Valley companies to engage in a wide variety of social activism, even those unrelated to what the company does, and there are certainly employees who really want this in the company they work for," Armstrong wrote. "So why have we decided to take a different approach?"

Well, there was one of these companies was wanting them to come in just to do work, not to be judges basically, I guess it was, or social activists, social activists that pretty well said do it in your own spare time. So there you go. You're seeing amazing... You'd better understand, when these folk are saying words like SHOT and all that, they MEAN it, folks, eh. I keep telling you horror is coming down the pike big time, and it's being promoted from the top.

(A: the TIP, T-I-P.)

(A: It's a so-called...) Bipartisan group of 100 current and former senior government and campaign leaders, academics, journalists, polling experts and former federal and state government officials formed out of concern about potential disruptions to 2020 United States presidential election.

...concerns about the legitimacy of the 2020 presidential election. (A: … it says here.)

It's all about Trump again, you know, and what they're going to do, etc. It's all about removing him actually when you look into it. You see all the ones who are there, the Krystals, the ones that the neocons are all members of this higher party, the neocon groups again. So it doesn't surprise me. I think Whitney Web did a good, some good exposes of T.I.P, TIP they call it, Transition Integrity Project. Or you can just look it up on wiki for the short version, but her version is much more in depth as to what I've discussed about, well, you're looking at revolution, ongoing revolution is what it is too. Yep.

Another article here is…

The Secular Turn of Bioethics - cultureoflife.org / 7 Mar 2008

That's 2008, this one here. It talks about what now the new bioethics is. And really when you read this, you're seeing how they're giving themselves permission, under the concern for humanity you understand, to decide ethical values, new ethical, reevaluate what ethical values are, you see. You need professional people to do that. Ordinary folk just don't have the ability to perceive what ethical values are. You see, you're animals at the bottom. So you need these really special ethicists at the top, who've gone through these communist, hhhch, universities to learn how to be, you know, equally, you know, nonjudgmental in their bioethics. You passed your benefit to society, let's just, you know, bump you off, eh. Ftt. It does go into how it really originally, and it originally had Christian values, it said here, they admit that, and that's what they teach that it all came from that and the value of human life. Then they start warping it all off into the scientific form of it now. [Alan chuckles.]

I tell ya, I could go on forever. But these articles, they get boring too. I don't want to bore you stiff, obviously. But there's a lot of articles here that really go on and on about so many different things, all related. You understand where, this isn't just about Covid. Covid is an excuse for the big agenda that the World Economic Forum has talked about, the global reset. Which is a whole new way of living, completely. From even, will you even get born, have the right to be born in the future, for those coming along, do they need you, do they not need you, etc. Euthanasia is to be stepped up, to get voluntary euthanasia. They can make life so bad, if, just withdrawing medications for instance, that's one of them too, they're already doing that. Oh, no, you'll be in pain now. Oh, there's a way out of that, you know. Oh, I was fine before on the medication. Facts don't matter, you know.

This is your planned efficient society... and your betters decide what is efficient, not you. You know. You see, your life only appears to be important to you, [Alan chuckles.] to yourself. You need professionals to decide if you're really worth saving or not. I remember doing the talks years ago when they were, they had the so-called death panels, and they named them death panels. They've been doing it in Britain for years with the National Health Service. There's been some excellent documentaries put out there and from some of the nurses talking about it, where they were getting paid, when these private companies came in and started doing their public-private partnership deals, and they started giving nursing sisters payments, extra if they'd get rid of more patients per week from their wards, eh, from the beds. And they could do it, knowing they'd go home to die fast. But some of them broke down in the documentaries talking about it. But this is, how could you even start doing that for payment? I don't care who you are, you shouldn't get to that stage before you have a little break down, realize what you're doing. You should have known from the beginning what you were doing... for these SHARKS that come in... and get millions, some of them were getting millions of dollars. I put it up a few weeks ago, the same article, I think. I won't do it again.

It's a good example of these crooks that are lauded as some kind of geniuses that come in and get millions given to themselves, you know, for their advice on how to run the new system, as they plunder it personally and leave you broken. Just like the same old ideas with the corporate raiders, eh, that would come in by the back door, buy up shares until they end up having a dominant share and then stripping the company to the bone and then reselling it, what was left of it off. Which, they all fell apart afterwards. The same kind of idea with the hospitals only it's human life at stake now, you see.

Now remember folks again, cuttingthroughthematrix.com. Send me a few bucks. Donate to me. You'll see how to do it there. Payment is fine by cash, by check, PayPal, and Money Gram works as well. You can be resourceful for other means as well. And don't worry about the post, regular post is the way I always suggest. Never register anything. They charge you more money, it actually takes longer if it's registered, more prone to open the darn thing up and get lost. Whereas I've never had anything getting lost I think by regular mail. Just regular mail is fine. Don't, whatever you do, ever send anything by FedEx. They won't deliver to the house. And UPS, they don't do it. UPS subcontracts to another courier company, that doesn't even tell you if a parcel came in. They've done this often. Their headquarters now is in, I think Québec or Montréal, for UPS for the complaint departments, and from another country, it's hard to even understand them. So no, they don't always deliver to you. And if you're in, they call it, an unregistered Township, uh, which is why you've got lower taxes, but yeah, they don't want to go in there at all for some reason. Again, as a punishment thing, I suppose. It's also the fact that they want you to go into the main city, which is 25 miles away, to pick it up yourself. Ha, it saves them gas, eh? The crooks that they are. But yeah, UPS I think subcontracts to Purolator Courier it's called and Purolater is, ah, what a rip off.

So yeah, just regular post is what I always suggest to people. So you can buy the books and discs @cuttingthroughthematrix.com. Make a list of the official sites in case the .com goes down. You'll help me tick along for ...as we go through this incredible war. This is the most amazing time in your life right now. A complete transition. This is the century of change, the great transition, century of transition, century of change they talked about all through the 20th century in academia, and the Council on Foreign Relations and the Royal Institute of International Affairs, the Chatham House groups. The century of change, big changes, and sustainability, and the whole new way of living. And here you go, bingo! Do a crisis to make it happen, because they invented the crisis. So there you go.

Now, the Trilateral Commission, which is a big branch as I've said before, is back on, you know, the charge again. The unelected Trilateral Commission. It says…

Democracies Under Stress

konjunktion.info/wp-content/uploads/2021/02/Democracies-Under-Stress.pdf

The Trilateral Commission

The global order that seemed so invincible at the end of the Cold War is now in doubt. Challenges to it come from within the very societies that honed and championed this order, as well from more traditional geopo-litical opponents of it.

A forty-five year old organization, the Trilateral Commission is recreating itself to be a leader and an indispensable resource in this effort. The Commission has unique advantages in galvanizing those in developed democracies to move from lamenting democratic decline to taking action to remedy it.

So they're actually complaining about populism. People fed up, just like Europe, of being in these conglomerates that they were set up BY the Trilateral Commission/CFR. That's who drafted up the amalgamations. And that people were fed up with it, having no representative government at all, or the government that you had ends up like being a provincial government and a European Union one at the top running the whole show. A nondemocratic system. Because the agenda remember is to be POST democratic. To be, you know, efficient. Nevermind these human needs and so on, human rights, for God sakes, eh.

Now, it's hard for folk to think there are such evil people in the world. Because you've been trained to be naïve, you see. It's the same with 'the big lie' idea. They always blame Hitler for quoting the communists when he talked about 'the big lie'. He said, he was actually referring to the Communists at the time during one of his speeches where the communists, one of the leaders had said, if you're going to tell a lie make sure it's a big lie. Because small lies the people can see through, they might do it themselves, a small lie. But a BIG one it's too big for them to ever do, so they'd never do it. They can't imagine that it is a lie there, it must be true, you see, so make sure it's a big one, it's more effective.

And that's so true, isn't it? It's also true, you see, that the group that run the world, and I've read the articles before from the PNAC group as an example, when they brought you, you know, the war on terror after 9/11. Although they published it in the 90s, all the countries they wanted to attack and get rid of and overthrow the government's and bomb them into the Stone Age. They're still doing it of course; they still have Syria and Iran on their map and a few other ones as well. They published them before 9/11 happened. And they get their wish. They said they needed a Pearl Harbor event to make it happen, to galvanize public support behind them. That's the first thing you must do if you've got a war started or you want a war, is to galvanize public support behind you or it will fall apart.

It's the same thing too with a pandemic, just terrify the public by all means possible, for a good reason. They actually call it 'the noble lie'. The noble lie, it's for a good cause that they're lying to you and terrorizing you. The noble lie. Don't forget it and don't forget where it came from. Because it's in effect today. And the casualty list of the noble lie? Folk who die and can't get into hospital having heart attacks, can get treatment, yada, yada, ya. That's just acceptable. It's a consequence, you've got to accept it.

These are psychopaths. These are demons from hell, folks! And you might even like these demons if you met them face-to-face. Because psychopaths are awfully charming, you know. They'll be all attention. I remember some women who had been in to see, individually in to see Bill Clinton with different things to talk about. They said, when he, when they were facing him, they literally lost sense of time of where they were. It was like he was total concentration, like YOU were the only thing he saw in his life at that moment. You see, that's how psychopaths operate. But as soon as you're out the door you're out of their mind immediately. Poof! And your complaint too, whatever it was, is out of the mind as well.

They have that ability to mesmerize people. They can be very charming at times, you see. It works, it's very effective for getting votes. It's very effective too for standing in front of big crowds of people saying I'm going to lock you down for your own good. And, I love you, that's why I'm locking you down, I don't want to, I don't want you to be suffering, you know. The same face you would see giving you euthanasia... I don't want you to suffer, and they smile at you, it's for your own good. The same characters, you see. The same characters.

I remember watching a movie, it was about The Last Hangman they called it. A portrayal of, actually based on reality and the truth in the diaries of the guy and all the rest of it of the character. It was well done, The Last Hangman. That was his job, and he was very proud of doing a good job, you see. He’d get all the statistics and of his, of the people he used to kill, height, weight and all these kind of things, personality type. Were they liable to crack at the last minute, or needed a bit of a push and help and all that, or restraint, or would they go along willingly? All that kind of stuff was factored in, for a real professional job, you see. He'd weigh the weight, the sandbags as they call it, otherwise it was too much, or the person was too heavy, it maybe could take the head off, [Alan chuckles.] things, just little nuisances like that.

But it was a good, that's the characters you should see. These are the same, he would go home at night and he could sleep well at night, you see. He brought a good paycheck home to his wife, so she stopped nagging him once he got the job and she was quite happy with it too. In fact she was a bit ticked off when he gave it up eventually. And I think they had to give it up at the end, it was towards the end of the hanging times in Britain.

But it's the same characters. You'd probably like the character. If it wasn't talking business, you'd probably like the guy. But it's the same kind of character that would give you euthanasia today, you see. And how could you think bad of a person that's going to put a white coat on and kill you? It's obviously, it's for medical reasons, you understand, nothing to do with economics and saving money since politicians can give themselves fatter paychecks and things like that. And CEOs of corporations hospitals can give themselves big paychecks and better yachts for their holidays and stuff, you know. Shame on you for thinking they're selfish.

But that's what psychopaths are, that's what they do. That's how they operate. That's how they really think of you, folks. They really do think that way of you. Sad but true, isn't it. Disgusting system we're in really. But as it gets more efficient, you know, meaning more atheistically efficient, because you must get ALL old, this vestige of morality, Christian morality that gave you rights and said that life was precious, you must get rid of that to make it efficient, you see. It's interfering with profits and efficiency, so let's not debate it.

But there you go. I mean, what a frightening country to be in where you have two doctors or two nursing, as they call them now for these doctor practitioners, like nursing practitioner doctor type things, that do an extra year or two or whatever it is, can sign your death certificate before your dead really. That's really it, isn't it. It's your execution certificate. Regardless of your mental state. What a horror show this is, eh. And we call ourselves civilized.

But it had to happen. You start killing babies at one end, then you start killing the elderly at the other, then you start bringing it down in between to other cases. Well, you know, you're going to cost... Look at that poor guy in Canada, I remember doing the talk a few years ago, not, well maybe a couple of years ago. He had an illness, but he was completely alert and the whole thing. He liked living. He kept asking them just to have occasional help coming in at home. The government wouldn't do it. They kept advising him, just take euthanasia, eventually they did that, and he was in his 20s. In his 20s.

It's disgusting what's going on. It really is. And if you understand the power, as they take all power away from you having rights and freedoms to decide yourself what you want done, and you want your own medical system where, hhh, you're paying for it all, you paid for it all. [Alan chuckles.] These hospitals didn't appear by themselves in public private partnerships. Your tax money made them, built them and equip them. You are paying through your taxes for it all, and your healthcare that was taken off your paychecks, in Canada here Ontario. Then two nobodies can decide... Because they'll get, you understand they're going to get bonuses for putting you down for euthanasia... to save the hospital, which saves the province money. Your money.

Do you understand where this is all going, what's happening here? [Alan laughing.] Ohhhhhh. Ah dear, dear, dear, eh? This is where you weep for a humane system that's gone, eh, you're watching it wither away... and the last vestiges of decency in society just getting utterly destroyed by the psychopaths at the top that stretch all the way down to the psychopaths at the bottom.

Now I'll put up some links to videos I think tonight as well. So go into cuttingthroughthematrix.com remember. I put these links up there on my site. Sometimes it takes a day for other people to pick up my talks and put it up on their other sites as well. So go into cuttingthroughthematrix.com. Send me a few bucks and I can tick along, hopefully, as we go in through the winter months. It's going to be a very dark winter for all of us as they push this whole agenda through.

You've got to have communications to people. Remember too, I do read all the emails that come in from people. I get a great idea of the headspace of folk, what's happening to them, what, how they feel about things and what they are experiencing as they go through this. It's very important. I said before, you all have to keep in touch with a few people at least. Real people. Make sure they're real people, not the fake ones they have out there with algorithms and bots and so on. And you don't need to, if you see arguments starting, getting you, dealing with some fake, you know either one of the agents, one of the myriads of agencies with thousands of, as they called themselves, cyber warriors out there all getting paid by your tax money to attack you. Hhhch.

So make sure you've got a few people, not many. And swear to help each other out. Because you've got to do it, you've got to help each other out. Because things are going to get really, really tough. I mean really tough. To bring in this new system you've got to get brought to your knees, until you beg them for new system. Anything, anything to help you. That's exactly how they play this game.

They've got all their cards on the table this time. They're not going to stop. It doesn't matter, you know, unless God himself came and stopped them. Ha. But nothing else is going to stop them. Because they are all completely, completely sworn to this agenda of resolution.

The old adage too, you know they said that if they don't stand together, they'll swing separately perhaps. There's the truth there in a sense because they know they're all, all of them should be taken up for crimes against humanity. Absolutely. And tried publicly. And dealt with publicly.

How many folk have died needlessly? How many thousands, because of this total lockdown and folk cannot get into hospital for treatments for even simple things, and more serious things. Completely written off!... for this nonsense, eh. It's just astonishing. And all the healthy folk locked down for the first time in history. With the preplanning that obviously, hhhch... when you stop the economy, chaos ensues. That's intentional. This is all intentional. People sat down and planned this. Event 201. Lockstep as well in the paragraph part with the Rockefeller group in 2010. Planned in advance to get their big agenda through.

Crimes against humanity. Every single one of them.

You've got to take note of this. Absolutely. Absolutely. And that goes afterwards too. It's something, some miracle happened, and it didn't turn out this way, and you start to resume some starting control over the system, you would have to arrest them all. All these characters. Arrest them all. No doubt about it.

In Australia too, you need to also arrest all the cops that are being, going out there with the batons, like an army of sort of drones, like something out of Star Wars. They're not human at all. Definitely not taking human consequences of their actions on humans into account at all. They've got to be dealt with. All these people.

And their chiefs, and their police chiefs, all the way up. Absolutely. These are crimes, this is crimes against humanity. I don't care who they are, when they turn on their own people, that's time to act here. You've got to do it. Absolutely. The politicians above them that push it, they are all on the paychecks here. They know what's going on. The same thing. Absolutely. N-n-n.

The groups that like SAGE employed, hm, to terrorize the public and tell the journalists to heighten, to actually hype up all the terror and fear to create more anxiety to get the folk to comply. The whole lot have to be arrested as well.

And the TV stations that did comply and help terrorize the people. And the different new sites and so on. Absolutely.

That's how you deal with these things. You can't let this go. You can't ever forget this. It's got to be done.

And the corporations that are raking in how many generations of future citizens going to, who are going to pretend to try to pay this off? You can't pay this off. Trillions and trillions and trillions borrowed supposedly. It's all borrowed out of nothing and thin air. We know that. But to the certain few, eh, who own you all, hhhch, crimes against humanity. Preplanned. Every hand that's out there, corporate hand is out there for millions and billions of dollars. Generations to come. Ftt. N-n-n.

Anyway folks, don't give up. And as I say there's always light at the end of the dark, as you know. You've got to always remember that. So keep in touch with me. I enjoy reading and seeing how people are surviving across the world. I noticed too someone even sent me in from South Africa, his car was into get that minor repair. Attached to the bill, he sent me it, they had actually had another part of the bill separate that was for hygienic cleaning. For Covid, you see. [Alan chuckles.] So I don't know if they go in and spray the whole thing inside or whatever they'll do, but they tacked it on to the bill now, eh. It's just astonishing. There you go. [Alan chuckles.]

Anyway, take care of yourselves. Keep in touch with me. Go into cuttingthroughthematrix.com website.

For myself Alan Watt from Ontario, Canada – where it's getting cold already, the snow isn't far off by the way – it's good night and may your God or gods go with you.

Oct. 11, 2020 (#1798)

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix October 11, 2020. And as the weather changes of course we expect… [Alan chuckles.] more Covid to go through the roof as they say, since the particles really are rather prevalent in the world.And that's all these PCR tests do is they detect particles, bits and pieces you might say of viruses, and this particular virus but not even that one, it's a whole range of coronaviruses. It doesn't really matter when there's a big agenda there.

I won't even go through all the statistics. You know that. You're all fed up with them anyway. You've seen it all before. This is a repeat of what you saw in the spring. They told you from then on, I keep mentioning it, that Fauci and the rest of them at the WHO and Bill Gates told you that there'd be a lockdown, they wanted a complete lockdown to see how, if we'd just fall for it and go for it, right up until next year, even the year beyond that.

But they lessened it off a bit for the summer and then started dishing out the test kits again in the last month or so to try to get the numbers up. The more kits put out there the more you're going to find. Because it doesn't mean a person is sick or ill. Because these things are so prevalent in society, always, you know. [Alan chuckles.] It's a joke. And it's an intentional joke. Of course it is. They must have something to try and con you with otherwise you wouldn't believe them at all. Because you just didn't see the evidence there. And oh, they're back out with the graphs again, aren't they? Oh, the graphs are just, go way up yonder like a rocket taking off, whooffff. But no one's ending up really, really sick with it.

Of course the people who again, this is the time of year where, when elderly people, it hits them when the weather changes, very quickly, that they come down with problems. They've already got pre-existing conditions as you know, and you can count on a whole bunch of them getting sick with pneumonias of all kinds. That's why they're always coming out with the flu shots at this time of the year too and pneumonia shots. But it doesn't stop it happening and folk die quite frequently at a certain age. We all get there. We all have our time for it too, nothing's going to stop that.

Of course they use that, under the guise of Covid that's causing it, etc. Because they must get the numbers up once again. And they're having a hard time of it because yeah, you can get more positive tests with these ridiculous PCR kits, that are useless. Including the inventor said they're not meant for diagnosis. But let's not let facts get in the way here of agendas. Because it's an agenda.

It's a global agenda. Much bigger agenda than just to do with Covid. Much bigger agenda than just the general term of the Great Reset from the World Economic Forum. It's much, much bigger than all of that. If you go into the World Economic Forum and the Great Reset, it's not just that it's the Fourth Industrial Revolution which they also have come out about. It's the whole new way of living, a completely different structured system that ties in completely with Agenda 21 for the 21st century.

The whole century remember, the century of change. This is what we're in right now, something they talked about for 50 years in the last century, the coming century of change, the time of transition. And lots of things are transitioning, mind you. And the whole new meaning of almost existence is to be changed. And in with it comes, from the Third Industrial Revolution, what they're claiming, that was the digital era when they came out with the Internet, etc. The next part is the Internet of Things, which they talked about, again, years ago they'd bring this in eventually.

That's what the 5G, the interconnecting system of ALL ubiquitous traveling nomadic devices, etc. Including the things that are on your clothing, and chips in your shoes, and everything that came out years ago as well. It's all coming out now, and that's what it's about. Total tracked and traced for your entire life with all these things communicating to each other all the time. You don't even need to have central bases. This is what I was reading about, the military for instance, they're big into this. They don't even need like central bases to store information. The storage really can be scattered through all your devices and every other device around you. The same with the Covid tracking apps. I've got some articles here where people even in Canada, the apps that they came out there with them, it says on them that it's for employers, hm, who can get access to all their employees' apps' data too.

It's really interesting to see the complete total disregard of privacy. It doesn't even bother me because we've never had privacy for a long time. And certainly not with cell phones. I don't believe, I can't believe people still use them. Because it really is like a manacle. You're carrying your own manacle around with you, you know. Your masters know exactly what you're doing, what you're doing, when you're doing it, how many times you're doing it, and what you've eaten and so on. It's kind of like Lord of the Rings I suppose when you think about these apps, for employers and they somehow can tap into the apps for all their employees. But it says in the apps that everyone's phone is communicating with everyone else's phone, kind of the Windows 10 system, very similar, for its updates and it transmits at the same time the data for that which is around in its environment. Including the distance of the person who has each phone is from everybody else. It's just incredible. And the idiots are going along with this, you know. Isn't it sad?

It's a sad, it's like, you know, the kind of poem that, man goes out with a whimper, not with a bang, you know, the [Hollow] straw men. That's kind of like where we are because it doesn't take much to terrify the public. It really, and it's very poor propaganda with fudged figures and so on that anybody could see through. Then they keep contradicting themselves too. And they LIE an awful lot. I mean, we've never had such a time of blatant lies like this, that’s really, it's in-your-face. Blatant lies. Then they're found out, and it doesn't stop them. They come back next week with the same lies again, even when they're uncovered the previous week. So facts don't matter as I say when it comes down to big agendas.

You have to really wonder about people who fall into it and really believe it all. Because there's some smart characters out there that really are sharp, that can see through so much scams and skullduggery in politics and everything else. But they seem to be towing the line here about the lockdowns. It makes you wonder why. I can’t trust folk like that at all. Because it's so evident. It really is so evident with so many professionals coming out, that work with the patients for goodness sake, and saying it's a scam as well. It's just incredible.

This is a telling time. It's a telling time. I mean, a lot of folk are bought off and paid off in the system. That's the sad part of humanity that's always been with us. They get bought off. They'll turn their own people in even, for the filthy lucre as they say. Nothing new in that at all. But it still shocks you, I think, a lot of people get shocked when they find out that so many people go along, and people they know maybe go along with it too. I've seen it happen personally in workplaces throughout my life, and they know you're right when you stand up and speak out, speak the truth out. They'll tell you that in private they would like to back you up, but they can't because they might lose their jobs. Well, that's what's... Under that kind of system, there's no point in standing up for humanity when they'll sink themselves. And they'll sink you too, you know. If you stand up and fight the battle yourself, they're quite happy to take the benefits of it. But they don't want to be part of the battle when it's actually going on. Sad but true.

We're in a war now. It's a war to change society, and the target of the war are the general population of the planet, you know, the populations of the planet. We're the target of it all. We must change our ways into the proper ways that they've devised for the Fourth Industrial Revolution. Which is literally monitored from birth to death, in a new system, with new types of currencies. And you actually, you yourself, you'll be part of the currency. A new form of slavery actually. Because you'll be able to basically take on loans – and loans, it doesn't have to be tangible goods or even what you think of as money, it can be other things as well – if you can't fulfill them, then guess who's up for grabs to be bought for a little while until it's paid off? Well, that's slavery, you see. That’s usury slavery but it's designed by the highest authorities on the planet. They’re all at the WEF. Or a lot of them are at the WEF, or at least their representatives certainly are. They discuss all this stuff rather openly if you go into the records in their speeches and their talks and so on. They're not hiding it so much, they're just, they're not putting out, hhhch, this other side of it.

I hope you understand, you... What's it's like, it's like a cheap holiday ad, hm, where you see the brochures of, my, look at this sandy beach. There's that sun belting down there. And if you're in a kind of dingy Europe in the wintertime it's awfully appealing when you see that. You say, oh my goodness, look at that, well. And in Canada too, of course the snowbirds go off to these places. But it's like one of those things and you see the hotel and it looks... But the fact is, it's not the hotel you're going to go to. It's a different hotel. They don't tell you that in the brochure and you end up in some shanty place where the bugs might be holding the walls up, you know, if they start moving all at once everything falls down.

So it's like that, that's the kind of system that the WEF put out. The World Economic Forum are literally codifying into a new type of law the real class system, the true system. Very eugenically orientated to do with, uh, better types of people, uh, middle types of people, um, small business types, and then the ones at the bottom that are just labor, you see. They're quite, they're unabashed about all this kind of stuff and how literally it's a race to the bottom for the cheapest labor, so they're going to be in the poverty class. But don't worry about it, they've got this charitable organization set up, which they run themselves mind you, and with money from governments to help them they can take care and keep the poor folk alive, this is what it's about. They discuss this quite openly.

You'll find as well that currency is changing, and the idea of what currency is is changing. You are commodities. We are all human commodities now. We are in the workforce of all kinds. We make things. We produce, in other words we're producers. But we are commodities within ourselves. We consume and produce. You'll get a value score, that's part of your social credit score as well. This is what it all comes down to. It's the next step of the social credit score where there's a whole bunch of ticks you'll have on your page for your masters who own you. They'll be ticked off to do with, are you a good producer, a good consumer? Are you fairly healthy? Do you have prior or possible future health problems according to your DNA and your family history and so on? All these things are taken into account. Are you a good bet, in other words, for an employer?

You'll find too a lot of what's coming down the pike will be insurances. Insurances are going to take over a lot of roles that you presently have. For education as an example. Not just health care and so on, but education and different things as well all coming down to insurances. So insurance companies will literally be the new kind of cash flow systems and credit cards. You'll be given a rating on that insurance rating as good bet for paying off any debts incurred, etc. That will be kind of the way it's going to go.

I know folks think, I can remember... Oohhhhhch. I don't think folks realize that insurance companies are some of the biggest promoters and lenders in the world to the huge public-private partnership deals that go on, and they have been for maybe 15 years, maybe more. Huge projects. It's insurance companies the back them. It's not just the big banks, but the actual insurance companies themselves.

So you are the collateral, as I say. You are the product at the same time, because you're getting remade all the time for new images, and you are getting trained to suit the product. It's so fascinating, for me, to stand back and remember the talks I gave on Bernays many years ago, on Propaganda that he came out with but also his Public Relations ideas, his propaganda for actual, for selling things, you know, PR companies and advertising companies. Because he did say that to governments as well, he worked remember with about five different administrations, maybe more during his lifetime. Including the military, propaganda techniques for wars and all that. And huge corporations as well. He said, eventually why, why try to convince the public to buy this car, because you say it's better or it's a few inches longer than the previous one. This is all on record. They even have old videos of it, of the women going in to buy the new car and she actually says that, oh, this is longer than the last one, or, bigger than the last one. All the sexual innuendos and so on. Because don't forget that Bernays was the nephew of Sigmund Freud. It's much more to all this than you think, believe me. Much more. It wasn't just a couple of people [Alan chuckles.] with a...

Psychiatry was invented to change the world and change all of you in it. It completely interlocks with the idea of their different organization called communism, to restructure and control society, and destroy family units and everything else.

Getting back to Bernays. He says, rather than try to get... Because at one time, you see, manufacturers had to make good products, before the age of disposable items really got going. Built-in-obsolescence as like to call it now. The classic one was the light bulbs. There was a good documentary put out there about the history of light bulbs, how the lifetime got shorter and shorter, with the cartel getting together, all the producers, and agreeing to do the same, make them last the same amount of time, make it a shorter all the time. Anyway, that's an example of that.

Bernays said, rather than make good products every year and tell them why they should buy your lawnmower, he says, alter society, the consumer, to suit your product. Now, that ties exactly right in with the Fourth Industrial Revolution, the new system that you're actually in already, and it's going to accelerate at one heck of a speed with the Covid idea. Covid is part of it, where you're getting retrained to stop thinking for yourselves, to stop being logical, to simply start obeying. At the moment it's through terror and fear which is a good way to do it; that's the technique that's being used.

During this time of course you've got a lot of folk who are still able to work at all working from home. That was one of the steps, you see. New types of medication, or, medical care where you can't get real people anymore, you'll be talking to computers, remote computers, or you might get an occasional doctor coming online somewhere and talking to you. So they're making it absolutely imperative that you have your ubiquitous or nomadic devices, cell phones or tablets or laptops or whatever so that you can participate in this new system. [Alan chuckles.]

And if you don't, they're not really going overboard, are they, to give you any choices in the matter, are they? They're not, because you see, this is a must-be now. You're in their system. And their system is constant retraining of you. But the first training is for you to stop thinking for yourself and to listen to experts and what they tell you. It's a POST-democratic system. That's what comes over really clearly when you read their documentation from the World Economic Forum. It's a completely new way of training the public from birth to death and constant retraining to suit their products, and that which they own, all the different gadgets, apps and all the rest of it which they own, which are going to be mandatory to exist in the system at all, very shortly. It's almost there now by the way.

I've said this for so many years, when you start seeing choices getting taken away from you, you're going into tyranny. And it doesn't matter what it is. Choices in whatever products.

Choices in the food that you're going to eat, as one example. Until you're left with one thing, which is what they've all agreed upon at the top. Which is probably genetically modified and genetically engineered vegetables, etc. That's what they want you all on, in a post meat world. For you. They'll have it at the top of course themselves.

They don't want a really, a mentally agile society. They want people who are rather easy-going and will do what they're told, according to the Club of Rome. The Club of Rome is quite open about the fact, and they have been for many years, this big think tank that works for the big boys and the United Nations as well and so on. The ones who were given and tasked with getting an idea, a PR campaign, an idea to get folks to give up rights and everything. They came up with global warming and climate change and famine and plague and so on and drought would fit the bill. You know. They would say that man was the fault of it. Because depopulation is a part of this as well by the way. Reducing the population big time. They're rather open about that now of course.

Again, we're... as the general population gets used to hearing certain things, they start yawning. They don't even think very far. It's true, I can remember many, many years ago a debate went on in the media in the UK. Many years ago. It was to do with, do they have the right to give you your thoughts? The media, you know? Again, very along the lines of Brzezinski with Between Two Ages, his book from the 1970s when he said, shortly the public will be unable to think for themselves, they'll only be able to repeat the news information, even trivia that are given to them by the previous night's television or news casters and so on. That's all come to pass as they say.

But the thing is too, the debate in the UK was to do with how they can terrify the public, get them all worried about things on behalf of government. Because this isn't the first time governments have tried to use the media to terrify the public into compliance. We already have the admissions here with the SAGE group in Britain that gave out the orders basically, or the recommendations to all media to basically exaggerated stories to do with Covid and to create higher tension, to actually increase the tension and anxiety amongst the public so they comply and conform. That's what they handed out to the British folk recently, you know, back in the spring. Well, again, most folk forget all that and right back to, again as they try to terrify and scare you.

So they had the meeting in Britain years and years ago on other issues as well. It was interesting what they actually said, that the public… [Alan chuckles.] Some of the people who took part in the big thing on it, it was maybe the BBC, I don't know, or STV or ITV. They said that the general public literally wait to be told what to do anyway, in modern times, that they were already trained back then to be told what to do. They expected, like Brzezinski says in Between Two Ages, eventually the public will expect the media to do their reasoning for them. Well, that's all been done, you see.

They really do wait to be told by authority figures. Even though these are private companies [Alan chuckles.] that are called newscasts, owned by big moguls with their own agendas who have shares in other corporations and so on, and the food industry and everything else. They still wait to be told what to do by their masters. It’s, I really mean it, we’re like a plantation, you see, and these are the plantation owners, and we expect them to do our reasoning for us… on any topic… Hm? N-n-n. Ain't that something. Ain't that something.

So anyway, we're here and it doesn't bode well. Because the general public really now a lot of them are tuning in, as I say, for their daily dose of terror once again. They had a little break in the summer, which stopped them, a lot from committing suicide, stopped a lot of illness of course because folk get terribly ill with, through anxiety. If you want to reduce your immune system, just become anxious for a long period of time. It's well understood. But as I say, they're getting back to terror, terror, terror every day. You know, you might miss something that's going to help save your life. That's the idea behind it. So you see the same familiar faces and why would they all be lying to YOU?

Well, it's because they get paid incredible big money to lie to you. And they're psychopathic, they don't mind lying to you. They do that naturally anyway, that's what psychopaths do. They get you to do what they want you to do, that's a gift that a psychopathic has, if you want to call it a gift. They're awfully good at it, you know. They're awfully likable, a lot of them. Once you get a few of them who have managed to get through University and so on, because there's different categories and layers of psychopathy. From the street window smasher who grabs the jewelry and runs for it, to the ones who have got better parents and money to back them up, they get, they float through college, or they’re paid to get through it because a lot of bribery goes on through college too with a lot of these characters and their parents. They have no problem getting their degrees. They're put in front of the camera to con you into doing something which perhaps you shouldn't do. Exactly what Aldous Huxley said in his talks with Mike Wallace.

But it's all here. You're seeing it. This whole new way of living from birth to death with the Internet of Things and the 5G communications, that everything's been completely interconnected, with an utter record, there'll be no privacy of any kind at all. This is what they're after. That was all, that's all... and you buy your chains. You buy these hubs and all the rest of it for your houses and think, oh you know, everybody else's got them and... Uuuugh! [Alan chuckles.] It doesn't matter about all the different articles that have come out about them contacting the police if it hears a raised voice and all this kind of thing. It doesn't make any difference to them, you know. They'll sell their souls for convenience, you know, something that's going to put the lights on and off for them rather than get up and do it themselves.

But there's no privacy, and they're getting used to it now, you see, having no privacy. They don't really mind, I don't think, most folk really don't mind. Slavery is an easy thing to just float into. When it doesn't put a chain around your neck, you know. Physically. Although they're putting manacles around you shortly if you won't take the vaccine, whatever vaccine it might be... untried, experimental, DNA changing vaccines. But a lot of folk won't mind, and they'll go along with it. In fact, a lot will queue up for it.

I remember in 2009, I've mentioned this before, that they had such a hype going with the flu that year. They terrified the public, oh my goodness, oh it's horrible, terrible, oh my. They actually showed you lines on the news; they would show you lines of folk waiting for their vaccine. They were so terrified because they had articles in the paper... Again, the hype they give you to terrify you, to adapt and run off to get it. And folk would run and get it. They said in the articles, oh, they might run out. So folk were fighting in line, some of these older folks were fighting in line, each other, to get ahead in case they ran out. Physically fighting.

That's what they can do. They can do a lot worse than that too with the propaganda and their psychological manipulation that they give you. Run by experts. Your tax money pays for the best con men out there, you know. People who study it, study you, they're behaviorists they're called, and neuroscientists and so on. They can use it against you to get you to do what their masters want you to do. So they can train you very quickly to comply and into anything at all. And you'll do it, you know, most of you will do it and comply. Because you're scared. And how many times have you, well you know, what choice do we have...? What choice do I have, eh? You know where that ends up, you know, what choice do I have? Hm?

I was thinking about what they're taught at the higher levels in the manipulators classes. [Alan chuckles.] The real higher levels, eh, higher than the universities that, you know, and they teach them this kind of stuff. They pick them. Some of them by the way, are apprenticed to people like Kissinger. I don't know if you realize that. Some of the high Trilateral guys, they have young guys apprenticed to them, to be the future leaders. They traveled with them, and they learn this for years, almost grow up with them some of them.

But they also have special classes for the future leaders in different areas. They're taught what I'm telling you now, how to manipulate whole populations of people and into persuading. They're already tested with the usual psychopathy test to see if they're, you're not gonna bother wasting your time with someone who's going to have qualms down the road, you know. So they pick them to have a certain amount of psychopathic tendencies. And narcissistic, they're very often narcissistic, that comes with the territory of psychopathy often. They get taught the kind of things about mass manipulation, and what they want to do in the future. Some of them know what they're taught at, say, today, won't be implemented or fulfilled completely for about 25 years down the road, some parts of it. So they can wait, they're patient enough. They've got plenty of other things to implement along the way. But that's how this is, long term strategies.

They're also taught, by the way, um, they're picked for, because they're very social. They love to socialize. They like to go to parties, the right kind of parties with the right kind of people, you are, you see. Doors open. By the time they're about 25 they know everybody. That's where they can meet all the different people they can use, and who also other ones that will use them to an extent, there's a lot of deals made and so on.

That's how the world is really run by those at the top. Whole layers of the psychopath beneath them that work on their behalf. Well-financed, well rewarded, who are willing to go along with anything, you know. There's no qualms and guilts there. To the bitter end they would tell you that this or that was necessary, that's what a psychopath always does, whatever it happens to be. If they ever have to answer for it, oh that was necessary. They've always got an answer.

So you're living through this agenda right now, and this Internet of Thing's full of them at the top, or the top that you'll see anyway, that's not the real top naturally. But it's full of them. You're presented with experts every day on how you should live, think, what to do, how to eat, how to go to the bathroom, whatever it happens to be, experts, experts, experts. The very thing that Bertrand Russell talked about in the 1940s and 50s. It's all here. We'll train the people they couldn't do anything without the advice of an expert. It's all here.

As I say, they give their brain over to the media and say, okay, you know, whoever their favorite media character is and they say, you know, do my reasoning for me. So for especially the older folks that have, that are touted, made into stars. Do you ever think about it, WHY is a newscaster made into a star? Someone who reads the news. It isn't just paper, is a Teleprompter, whatever it happens to be, they read the news. They've got to be photogenic, you see. They prefer them being a certain age, so you see them as almost an adult or parental figure. The longer they can keep them on that chair without falling off it, the more effective it is. Until you end up with old Dan Rather types they used to have, and Cronkite, etc. Folk grew up with them and they believed everything they were told by them, you know. Everything. Eventually. These daddy figures wouldn't lie to you. They were representative of the parental figure, you see, and...

So anyway as I say, everything out there, especially what you see on television is a complete show. It's a show, for goodness sake. It's what they said in Network, the movie, you know, You are the real people for goodness sake, he says, we're the fake ones behind, you know, and yet you're looking at, you're putting your life through this tube to watch us to see what the fake ones are doing, and then you copy them.

Great technique, isn't it? Television is a very powerful change agent technology. That's what Spielberg said himself, he thought it was wonderful how they could alter society and culture, and have folk emulate the changes portrayed through fiction. Very powerful. And it certainly has been.

Remember too the movie it was called The Looker, about a modeling agency. A plastic surgeon gets involved with models because they start dying. It leads to a place where they're using high-tech equipment. I think it's from the 1970s maybe it was made. Maybe the 80s. But there is a high-tech institution where they use computerized digital systems, way back then, and virtual reality patterning off the models, very minutely, you know, exactly. They started altering their features cosmetically to look like what they thought, said was the perfect thing the computer came up with for them. But it was also to do with using a type of mind control over the general public through the airwaves, again, through imprinting the brain, by using psychologists and neuroscientists and behaviorists and so on, to pattern the brains with what they were showing the public. They had a meeting for all the different share holders where the company, I guess it was participants, and politicians were there too. They said, where else can you get people to voluntarily give up maybe 40 minutes every couple of hours, or hour and a half, 40 minutes of their time to be indoctrinated by you? He's talking about advertising.

It's so true, isn't it. You voluntarily give up your time to be indoctrinated with it, so that you will buy the products or want the products. Don't forget too, if it's not buying, that you want the products. If you want the product and you can't afford to buy, every little bit causes a little bit of annoyance, and maybe even anxiety, that you can't afford that product. Everything affects you. Everything affects you, physically and mentally because the mind is completely interconnected with the body. So you'll see the symptoms of anxiety or even depression kick in, set in. And if every few minutes you're getting presented with something you might want, think how many times the different chemicals that are set loose in your brain when you get anxious about something or say, oh, I'd LOVE one of those things, whatever it happens to be, and you can't quite get it.

You're played with by professionals, and you don't know it. Your behavior emulates the dramas in the soap operas that you see. I remember years ago when they did studies into affairs from women who, it was mainly women who watched soap operas. They correlated them too by the way with those romance books that used to be churned out. A lot of guys wrote them too under women's names and so on. It was like a soft porn, for imagination basically. Rather than the pictures, it was soft porn for women, aimed at them. They did studies to see if the women would act out on it. And a lot of them did actually. It was admitted to as well so… Yeah, you can't say you're not affected by entertainment. You certainly are. Big time.

Look at how many folk have got the tattoos. I was looking into why so many people, of different age groups, all going to get tattoos over the last, what, 10 years or so. They had listed the shows and dramas with the heroes and heroines who would have these things on them, you know. There was a plethora of tattoo parlors just sprung up and folk rush to get it done to them. All because of television, eh, TV series. So everyone's affected by entertainment.

That's why I've said too, even with the Covid idea at We Are For Vax, the group that's for the VAX campaign, you'll actually hear them talking about how they're promoting it to the public and how they would insert naturally, they actually said, I think it's even naturally we'll put a lot of the inserts into the scripts in dramas and things. You'll have the characters in the drama saying, oh yeah, I'm just waiting for this flu shot to come in, things like that. And that's what makes up the public's mind for them. Their minds are made up by, again, people… you see, you identify with the characters in the dramas. M-hm. Their firewall is down, the mind, eh, is down because it's entertainment. So it works, it's very effective.

I can remember too when they launched I think it was the Coronation Street series, the second part whatever happened to be, in Canada, maybe, I don't know how many years ago it was now. It was to reintroduce, a big campaign to try to popularize the new type of Coronation Street, maybe 10, 15, I do know it could maybe be even 15 years ago. But big exposés, big money was spent on it. They said in it how they had so many psychiatrists, psychologists, social workers, doctors, and lawyers all working for them on the scripts, always, because the public followed, it was a trailblazer on the culture changes. [Alan chuckles.] Even before mass migration took place, they were training the public for what to expect, and even interracial marriages and things. It was all done professionally through entertainment through the Coronation Street, as an example, before the real thing happened. They actually said that, that people would follow the same arguments and decisions after watching it when the real things happened. So their opinions were given to them. And also how their opinions would be changed, you see, they would adopt the new opinion. Oh, well, I guess it's okay... And yada, yada, ya, hm. That's how it's done.

So there is no such thing as straight entertainment. I often wonder if there really was. Maybe if there was it was a long, long time ago, in book form a long time ago perhaps. Children's books are prime examples of inserts on the PC stuff. The green agenda is all in there. Sustainability is all there. The vegan society that's to be brought in, all animals are wonderful, and all the furry creatures are your pals, you see, and so on and so on it goes. When the children grow up, they're already recruits, they don't know it, but they're recruits for the green agenda, sustainability. They'll be used as armies, just like they are now in the streets.

But again, using the armies for folk who won't comply with the next step of the lockdowns. Which are going to be perpetual eventually. You see, they want perpetual lockdowns. They've said that at the World Bank, and I put up the articles from the PDFs from them before a few weeks ago. They said that they were looking at, at least five years of lockdowns, and it could be perpetual. Don't forget, this Covid idea is only one thing they've got in the wings, eh, waiting. They can actually come out with future scenarios of BIO warfare... We don't know who did it, but we've got another vaccine waiting in the wings for you there and blah, blah, blah, blah, blah, you see. Then you will comply. That's what they've done already with the Covid thing, you know.

There's no way that all the videos came out of China of folk falling flat on their faces with Covid, it was all staged, that. Have you seen people in the streets fall flat on their faces in America or anywhere else? Hm? Because that’s not the way infections hit you. If you're that sick you wouldn't be walking the streets in the first place, you see, if you were that sick. Hm. And it wouldn't hit so suddenly like, just like that, bomf, down you go. And China is not known for letting much out that it doesn't rubberstamp that's for consumption for the West. Which makes me think that China was in on the big global act, I really do, with the World Health Organization and the Gates Foundation and all the rest of them. I really believe that's the whole idea. Remember, the whole idea for the World Economic Forum is the continuation into a world order, a borderless world order, eh. Are you getting the point of it? The borderless idea. The mass migration.

In the States they were ticked off with Trump trying to, at least talking about keeping a border. He hasn't done it. I mean, in fact when you really look into the migration, Trump let more in, even from India for the tech industry, than anybody had before him. So what he says and what he does are often like tangents. But the thing is, he hasn't gone along with the climate change, to an extent. Because he knows... [Alan chuckles.] Here's the trick of it too. He knows, and I did the talks years ago, where the States of the US are in collusion, they partnered with ones in Canada, provinces in Canada to go along with the green deals regardless, sustainability, regardless of what the Feds do. You see, this is fact folks, you know. You even have your cities all signed onto these things and so on, sustainability.

Everything's been changed already. You keep waiting for the big change. You're already IN the big change. It's been going on for years. Bits and pieces of it. And you adapt and you adapt. Mainly because, again, the media, that will go into overdrive to make sure you get certain messages, will go into absolute silence when they're doing their nasty little things, you know, furtively, they don't want you to know, you see.

Now always remember too in the perfectly controlled society, most folk don't want to be told about things. They want the masters to deal with all the little problems for them. They'll say, well that's what you're paid for, you know, don't bother me with that, you know, get on with it, whatever it is, and do it. A lot of folk are like that. It's quite interesting to see that. So the enemies, you see, that you have, if you're a freethinker and you like this idea called personal freedom and privacy – this word is going to be outlawed shortly, it's almost there now, privacy – most folk gave it up long ago.

But there are still folk who like this idea of privacy. It's your right to privacy. It's your right to have your own thoughts. It's your right to have no intrusion into your mind. You see. And folk just give it away just so easily. People FOUGHT, people fought for centuries to get privacy and rights from feudal systems and overlords. They fought so hard, step by step by step to get, so that the military, and it's generally the military that they used to used, say, in Europe before the police and so on, and then the police now are militarized. But they used the military. The military under the old king and queen and feudal systems would go into people's homes and rampaged through them and do whatever they wanted to do, and you couldn't stand in their way, or you have no rights at all if you got in the way they'd just put a bayonet through you. That's how it used to be, you know.

Again, folk don't really quite get it. And that's not long ago that happened. Blake, yeah, he was Blake in London, the poet, he talked about it too. Where the guards, some guards, [unintelligible] guard or whoever it was, but they came and try to rampage through his garden, everything, and through his house looking for something else or somebody else or whatever it was. That's how it used to be, you see. But the folk today have given up most of their rights. A lot of folk if you listen to them, because they've heard countless little bits and pieces of arguments and data about this, about that privacy idea. They've already been swayed. Well, we don't really need it, we are being taken care of. Is that what you're here, to be taken care of? Do you really, if you believe that you're finished. Hhhch, you're finished, you know. To be taken care of.

Socialism isn't the old socialism that folks thought of. And even when they thought of it wasn't the same way either. Socialism was a scientific system that would be brought in, where everything would be run properly by the proper people, the experts. That's what they believed. They never quite achieved it, naturally, through communism. And the West's socialism, but this is it. It's for those who are already the Masters, socialism, because it's a whole system where you're controlled and run by the state.

Oh, corporations love that when they already own the governments. [Alan laughing.] And they do own the governments. When you've got politicians that need X amount of bucks to get in and to run, and they need the compliance of the media, who are often owned by the biggest money guys on the planet, but they need the compliance of the media to even run or to even get mentioned and get good publicity, then they are bought and paid for. Very simple. Bought and paid for. They're also asked certain questions, if they'll be for this and for that, or even for certain other countries, and they must go along. If they do that than they might be considered. If they don't, if they say no, no, no, you've had it, you know. That's how the world runs.

But most folk as I say will give up every right that they have to be the same as everybody else. If they see their peer group rushing towards the end of the cliff because it's a great experience and it's in 3D or something, they want it as well, you know. Yep. Imagine spending all that money on an iPhone, eh, or any kind of phone, stacks of money, overblown cost of having the service of it... Service, it's not, what service is it? It's going to rip you off so much bucks a month for such a tiny little amount of gigabytes, eh? And at the same time as you're buying it, they've got all these apps that are going to be, that are put in their mandatorily to track and trace you. What's wrong with you?

I said years ago the government should be giving you all the computers for free. It was to track and trace you and to manage your thoughts and find out what you're thinking and doing and all... That's what it was for, to standardize a populations' thoughts, attitudes and behavior, standardization on behalf of those who ruled you. And then the cell phone came out, and big bucks and the whole thing. But yeah, it's going to track, trace, and then they start telling you, you know, yeah, we're taking data and feeding it to this and that and the whole bit. Until folk don't care anymore. Well, they're gone, I'm afraid, you're gone. Because as I say, it took centuries to fight to get the rights to privacy. And with a little flashing screen, the light of Lucifer as they say, eh, [Alan chuckles.] they just give it all away so quickly. Because it's so magically enticing, isn't it? Oh, it's hypnotic. Oh, wow.

I should mention too before I get going here, and before I even mentioned the mention... [Alan chuckles.] I've actually stopped this talk five times already for trains and then resumed them again. I think I had four or five trains in the first 19 minutes. These are at least, aren't little trains going by. These are miles long some of them, and they're going at one heck of a pace as well. Because they're stocking up for the big, long haul in their big bases, what used to be so busily, so busily building and deepening and extending for the last 10, 15, and 20 odd years now. I remember giving talks about this years ago. Because I knew some of the bases and I actually see them expanding and I talked to people who worked in them, plumbers and electricians. Some of them not too far from me actually were about five floors, you might call it, floors deep. Way underground. And they're not little places. These are huge places by the way, for the ones who are going to get into them. Hhhch. That's another thing anyway.

So the thing is I want to mention too, remember you can go into cuttingthroughthematrix.com. Make a list of all my sites, these are my official sites. Because occasionally something will happen to one or the other, and you want to make sure you get my talks. I always try to get them up on the Sunday night if possible. Before midnight. With incredibly low speed, they always hammer me at the weekends because they know I'm uploading then I guess. There's a lot of little dirty tricks going on. And today by the way, this is satellite, right, this is satellites I use. Big bucks for it too. I was timing out just downloading the mail, that's how… hhhch. Of course if you were to waste your time phoning them up, they'll try this and try that as they play with you. This is what happens when they've all been given the nod to interfere with the nuisances, eh, guys like me who are putting out this kind of information.

Because they’re get into the next step, shortly they'll be arresting people. Once they have this lockdown, it's to be stiffer than it was in the spring, they already said that. Nothing to do with reality. They want compliance. But they’re going to go in and go after people who are speaking out and contradicting their official data with factual data. So they’re not going to allow the factual data out there. That goes from doctors and first responders as they say now hey, people who are actually working in hospitals, or anybody else in the profession. Because it's a bigger agenda than, the Covid is the excuse to get you into a new system. Including curfews. This is what tyrants have done down through the ages. They always restrict travel and bring in curfews. I'll put up the articles tonight that that's what they're bringing into Britain. I think they've got a 10 PM curfew starting I think tonight or today or whatever it happens to be.

But anyway, people have to realize that the systems of tyranny can dissolve very quickly if just most of the folk say no, that's it. No more compliance. It's very quick to give up. There's no point trying to enforce and enforce more and more tyranny if the vast amount of the general public are ignoring them. They [Alan chuckles.] can't arrest everybody. It can't be done. And if they can't get a good chunk of the population to go along with every con that they come up with the game is over anyway. They know this. This is taught in management, herd management, hhhch, as I call it. It's taught. And they would just give up, they would just one morning that they get up and have to start disbanding themselves if everybody's ignoring them. That's what happens.

The US is definitely a big target because it's... in the US... forget Trump. Forget Trump. The fact is there's a lot of people still in America in the US that don't want this socialistic type, ah, international communistic system that they want to bring in, on the low level. That's the excuse they're given, it was to be for everybody to be equal. That's what they said at the World Economic Forum, where you have multibillionaires there...? Remember, behind every great fortune there's a great crime. [Alan chuckles.] So these characters at the top are, didn't get rich by being nice to people. And they never will be. They're psychopaths. You can believe all the guff they come out with, like equality. Good for you. Dream on, you know. That's the system you're in right now.

As I say, send me a few bucks @cuttingthroughthematrix.com. Or buy the books and discs if you want to. But straight donations are welcome. PayPal, cash, checks, and you can do money orders and Money Gram. That kind of thing will help me tick along here as we go through the heart of it.

Because really, it's getting to the state very quickly where you won't be able to even hear... The Internet was never honest to begin with. It was set up to do exactly what it's doing now. When they tell you how many, don't forget the star making machinery, if they want to make someone a star, they'll say, oh, millions of hits. You see, but it's got nothing to do with reality. But they know the human nature and they'll say, well, if so-and-so and so-and-so is getting popular, let's just say that they don't get many hits at all, and so they've been fudging the numbers for the last 20 years. They have, yeah. And suddenly they can make stars of somebody overnight if they want to. And they do that kind of thing.

There's nothing honest about the Internet. Don't forget that DARPA, I mean ARPA, hhhch, for the military, and DARPA, run the whole darn thing. They started the whole thing. It's just a complete massive assets of the world controllers, eh. The CIA, NSA, MI6, GCHQ... and a huge bunch of organizations in Israel too. Because all the intelligence agencies are completely and really run on one system now. Including the WEF, the World Economic Forum that's a big front organization itself too. You think some guy just started that up himself to help, to help, what, improve trade or something? Now it's dictating to nations? Well, do you vote for the WEF? Do you vote for the World Health Organization? No, you don't get to vote for any of them. Never mind the fact it's been admitted that a massive chunk of the World Health Organization's money comes from Bill Gates foundation. He owns it. You can't make this stuff up. It's admitted to. They can't, they'll try and hide it as soon as it's published, but it's still there, you know, the information is still there. You see, really, it's not a huge clique that runs the world. Not really. They have lots of front people that are well-paid to be fronts. But it's a small clique really that runs the world.

But if you’re writing a fiction book with a plot in it and you had the gangsterism, the gangster characters, and if they put in a guy like Fauci for instance, as an example, he's got his finger in so many pies. Not just the big lab at Maryland and so on and the say in what goes on there, and laboratories that are, what, II, III, IV level labs, with highly classified experimentation of gain of function, he's got fingers in all of that. He has patents in certain things and joint patents too. He's got his fingers in vaccine companies. The CDC, hhhch, I've heard it called actually, hhhch, like it IS a vaccine company, hhhch, that's what they say, the CDC. But he's got his fingers in that. He's got his fingers in so many pies. And he's pally with Bill Gates, the mastermind here, it would seem to be. He's the big financier of so much of what's going on. And the man is no genius, Bill Gates. He's a businessman. Carried on his daddy's idea of eugenics. He wants to help society but reduce the population at the same time. From his own words, eh. But here they are in bed together to have the whole world vaccinated, with the vaccine companies which they promote and are connected with. If you had that in a, you would expect them all to be tried at the end, wouldn't you, by the highest courts on the planet. But you're living through it and it's not happening.

They're still on TV every day waving their hands about and telling you what you're going to have to do. [Alan chuckles.] You've got all these politicians just obeying them. Don't you find it's a bit scary that? Because there's nothing really hidden here. So much of what I just said is published, about their collusion together and some of them even have patents on some of the inserts on the coronavirus, supposedly, that came out anyway. I think it was the Great Game India came out with the talk about the inserts that they have on this virus. Four of them that are related, related to the AIDS virus, they said. I don't know where it's gone now. They said that couldn't happen in nature, some of the top virologists said that it would have to be inserted by humans in a lab. Where did all that data go? Hm?

But if it's just another, even a softer type of virus made in a lab, which by the way the World Health Organization has admitted they've been up to for years. I did the talks years ago when they said, [Alan chuckles.] they came out, they admitted that every year or so they released certain types of, they called it milder flu, viruses. I'm not kidding about this. Mild flu, you know, they said it's almost like a nothing type, you know. But they could track and trace it through folk who obviously would have to go to doctors, that's the only way how, that's when you track and trace the thing. They have samples taken and they could actually tell where it came from, which was themselves, to see how it would spread in society. They actually said that they released certain things every so often.

So this Covid idea is, I have no doubt at all it was probably made in the lab. It didn't suddenly come out of nowhere by itself. Luckily for us most folk aren't sick with it. Don't even know they've had it. And they end up with antibodies against it. So that's herd, if you had enough people, if we mixed freely and so on, you'll all have herd immunity. That's what's working in Sweden and other places too, is herd immunity. Top specialists have come out and talked about it, we are getting herd immunity. But regardless of that, they want... this... hhhch…

From their Event 201 and so on, they're not going to change their agenda. Are they? They're not going to do it. It's a must-be for them. It's not going to stop with this one vaccine, or even a few jabs for this one particular type of vaccine. They want to have permanent vaccinations and boosters for the rest of your life for everything. You see, there's no point in them having all these products and big businesses there if they can't use them on you. And have government, you know, the true fascist system, and have government mandate that you take it all. That's true fascism. You can't get, hhhch, a better example of fascism than that, big business and government working together, eh.

But as I say, it's rather evident that they're following it to the letter. Fauci said that you're never going to get out of your homes eventually until you get the vaccine. That's again the same mantra. When you see it across the board in different newspapers from different sources, they all came from the same source you'll find. Because they're telling them, this is what to put into your articles, make sure that you say that it's inevitable you've got to get the vaccine, inevitable, to go back to normal, etc., etc. Mantra, mantra. Weapons of mass destruction. You've got to get the vaccine. You've got to get the vaccine. You see, same thing. Same technique. They've pretty well said, whatever Fauci said back in the spring, I said that you can take it to the bank because this is written in stone with these characters.

Unless you say, get stuffed. That's how. M-hm. With all the studies in real time, now you can do studies in real time about how many, they know exactly how many folk at any particular time, pretty accurately too, because they have all your personality profiles there so, and your chitchat, etc., all the data. They know how many folk are going to go along with whatever they push out there, instant vaccination versus noncompliance and so on. Then the ones in the middle are not sure yet, and how to get around them. It's all done with algorithms and forms of persuasion.

As always, they can use half the population to hammer and make the rest comply as well. Remember that old, that saying, it's from the mayor of Tammany Hall in The Gangs of New York. He said that we can always use half the people to kill the other half, you know. If folk were going to start rioting or whatever or wouldn't comply, we can always use half of them to kill the other half. That's what they do, they create sides and divisions to get compliance. They've done it even through school. Isn't it awful the schoolchildren, where you are supposed to go to school and use your... The whole idea of school was to use your mind. Not to conform, hhhch, into one giant mind but to use your own mind. And to expand it. And to even teach at least logic and have the ability to use your own mind, and to its maximum. All gone now. It's all conformity training now. Even in school with the groupthink, there's techniques to ostracize, generally it's boys, eh, who say I'm not going along with that, I won't agree with that idea. Because they want consensus with every topic now. Everything is political now and politicized. And socialized. And if you don't go along with it, you will be ostracized. You don't want to belong to the group? You know. You want the group to turn against you? You know. Because you see, peer pressure is a very, very strong thing to use. Eeeeeeverything is weaponized.

I really think it's maybe, you know, it's a pity you couldn't get another land... I used to always say this, create different countries. Create them, you know. Put people that just are a damn nuisance to society in different countries, just put them there literally. Make one just for psychologists and psychiatrists and put them all there. Because they're not there to help you. The top ones aren't helping you. The top ones are paid by those who rule you and own you to make sure they can keep ruling you and owning you. That's what most of them, the big ones at the top are for. You could always get another one for, when you look at all these different lawyers in the US wanting to change the Constitution and change this and change that, and the High Court, just put all of them too in a different land, a different place as well, again their own country and let them argue their points of law to each other and leave everybody else alone. Hm?

It's just astonishing what's going on. Astonishing times really. But what is good too, is you see the blanket being raised a little bit on the bed of peace, eh, in society, and thinking, well you know, this is what I believe the US is, this is what I believe America is. Folk can live their whole life through, the ups and downs and all the rest of it, but that's still what they think. It isn't until you see it getting turned up at the edges like you're seeing right now, with literally communism being preached from the top, inside American politicians at the Congress and so on, it is COMMUNISM, folks. The abolition of the nation state. The abolition of borders. Karl Marx. Hm? It's also the CFR because that's what they were for too, years ago they'd work towards the abolition. It's just ONE system, folks. M-hm.

But you see, up goes the blanket and you say, my God I didn't realize that was all underneath it. You know? Why, why are these characters that want to abolish the nation state taking massive paychecks from the taxpayers? Most of whom don't want to abolish the nation state. Who does want to have the nation state abolished? Well, we know who they are, and you've got lots of them at the World Economic Forum, the front people who work on behalf of the real masters above them. We know this. Yep.

Quite amazing, isn't it, what we're living through right now. And folk don't quite get it. You’re hearing things come out of the mouths of politicians that are anything but statesmanlike, the abolition of this and the abolition of that, and communism? Communism? Do you want communism? Russia eventually gave up with communism... when utopia did not arrive. You know.

But they want communism. It's because you see China was meant to take over from America as the policeman of the world for a while. They had articles in their foreign policy magazine, Foreign Affairs magazine, the CFR, years ago, that it was time for China to take more responsibility in policing the world, you know. Well, they've taken a bit and that different parts of Africa, you've noticed, eh. No one's complained about that by the way. But again, facts don't matter. But also, they want China to take over to an extent and share the burden with the US, eventually take over from the US. Because the US is supposed to become exhhhhhausted paying for it all. And it's getting, it's pretty well past that, trillions in debt, multiple trillions in debt. The Covid really is going to put the kibosh on it all together. It's intended to.

Although the money is a joke to start with, we know that too. There's special, you know, magicians that deal with the creation of money in these days. Small club, of course, of magicians. That's what you're living under, amazing times, eh, amazing times. Where you're watching horror, terror, fear and the threats, coercion, you know they always use coercion to get you to comply with their laws and all the rest of it, to make you comply with their new rules, regulations and lockdowns. And no travel. And you can't see people. And you can't yada, yada. And curfews. Curfews!

Curfew? Why? Why get a curfew? Well, to stop the Corona. Oh, to stop the coronavirus, eh? Well, we're not all dying of coronavirus, very few folk are, really. And even the fact that they've admitted that they would put down died OF it, didn't die of it, most of them, they died of something else. Like everybody else out there, they've got fragments of coronaviruses, FRAGMENTS, dead fragments, hhhch, because they're very common in their swab tests, you know. Very common. M-hm. There's a whole range of these different coronaviruses and you're going to find so many of them dead in your lungs at any time throughout the year, even before this particular Covid one came along or was released or whatever it came from. But the fact is, no, it's not doing the damage they claimed. It's got nothing to do with reality. Can you believe that, curfews? Curfews, eh? N-n-n.

There's even articles where the children in school are not allowed to sing happy birthday because it might spread the virus if they sing it out. Well, you see, they're training those children not to do anything natural, you see, because their generation is not going to do anything natural for their entire life according to the Fourth Industrial Revolution [Alan chuckles.] from the WEF. You'll never trust your own logic. You'll wait to see the rules, regulations, for everything that's going to happen to you down through your entire life because you can't trust yourself with your thoughts and your decisions. That's the point of it all. Nothing to do... You must eradicate rationality, first point, eradicate rationality.

Land of the Blind, which is a good movie with Donald Sutherland in it. It's a good portrayal of psychopaths and how they rule society. But also you have the characters who surround the king psychopath, or the prince psychopath. They're much the same themselves but they had to obey the higher psychopath. They're well rewarded for doing it. They’ll do anything that they're told and give any order that they're told to give out. That's how systems really are. You'll find that in all, in democratic systems or republican systems, that the coterie around the top honcho are generally psychopathic in nature or they wouldn't be there in the first place. You see, they're well vetted. Of course in the States and every other country you do have a dark, hhhch, a dark state beneath it all too, a dark system sitting there running the show. There's no doubt about it, you have psychopaths are everywhere unfortunately. To our detriment. It's probably always really been like that to some extent or another. So anyway, we're going through this awful change. But again, look at that movie with Donald Sutherland and you'll see how a psychopath operates and how those around the top psychopaths operate to enforce the rules that the top one wants.

You'll also see how logic is destroyed under tyranny. Especially with prisoners, where the first… What you have to realize is what's happening now is a prison system. The lockdowns are prison systems. Curfews, prison system, same kind of thing again. Like a prison camp. What you can say, what you can't say, it's all across the Internet as well. It's all part of the whole idea of tyranny in a prison, when you're conquered, or a country when you're conquered, same kind of thing too. When people are so terrified of what you might say, then whatever you're going to say probably is going to touch on some truth, maybe an awful lot of truth and that's the reasons that you can't say anything. That's part of it. That's why you can't have any lack of freedom of speech. It doesn't matter what's nasty, what isn't nasty, people could be awfully nasty and that's part of human nature at times too. But the fact is, you cannot have safety when you can have no freedom of speech. There's always terror lurking along the way.

So again, back to that movie. You find in the movie the main character is Donald Sutherland. He's in prison. He befriends a prison guard who knows the system is wrong. This young prince is really a little psychopath and nasty, and it's maybe a good idea if they topple him. So they topple him and put Sutherland in place. He comes in with his system which is just maybe even worse than the previous one, it's hard to tell, hhhch. But he's also obviously a psychopath who knows how to manipulate people, wants to manipulate them. First thing he does to show his power is to change all rationality. The children must wear the school ties backwards, you know, on the back of their neck or whatever, things like that.

This is how they do things. If you're in a prison, they must break your will by changing rationality again. It isn't just a matter of being a loudmouth, that's what you get called if you scream back at the guards, you're a loudmouth and a nuisance. So they'll teach you a lesson. They'll teach you that what they tell you is right, will be right. It doesn't matter if they make you eat you know what, and you'll have to comply and agree that it’s the best thing you've ever eaten. In the movie, they had, what's better than a nice juicy steak? And it was, a good stale piece of bread. That's how you had to reply or else you were put back in solitary confinement, until your spirit was broken and so on.

So logic has to be destroyed, again, in this totalitarian tyranny, hm. Children can’t sing happy birthday. Um, they've already... [Alan chuckles.] closed down churches so they can't sing hymns, you know. Which again is part of their mandate, no doubt about it. Because that's been an awful enemy, especially in the US, an enemy of those that want an atheistic world for them to control. And you do have rulers and controllers, believe you me. And those at the very top do have their own religion. But they want to eradicate yours, y'know. Don't forget, even secular humanism is a religion. It's a belief system. And there's ones above that, obviously. Even some people, people who believe they have the right to rule, that's another religion in itself, just believing that. Hm.? Etc.

So anyway, you can't have a loss of freedom of speech. You've got to have it. You can't have people getting locked down and curfews, that's what you use during wartime. But again, that's what they said they would use, psychological warfare. They said they would use that technique of warfare, which works under warfare compliance, eh, and you've got to be on curfew at night in case bombers come overhead. Well, there's no bombers coming overhead at the moment. And since Covid would spread just the same during the day as it will at the night, what's your problem? Hm?

It's nonsensical. It's not meant to be logical. It's getting behavior change, and compliance, and behavior change, that's what it's about. Don't think, you're too dumb to understand these things, just comply, leave it to the experts. Then they'll come along with new regulations every week, you see, keep adding to them, until you'll be unable, you'll be a quivering wreck, you can't come to any conclusion on your own because you know you're going to be wrong. Because the experts always give you orders that you'd never have dreamed up in your life if let yourself. [Alan laughing.]

So that's how you do it. It's mind control. Massive campaign on mind control. They hope to eventually, 20 years down the road, have a generation raised who literally will go into paroxysms of anger and rage if they hear someone in school singing happy birthday. They'll turn on them and probably rip them to pieces, as a major threat to society, you know. That's where were going with all this stuff. Nothing to do with, as I say, logic, reality. It's a huge campaign for a complete change where you will be bought and sold in this new system. And I really mean that. Because you are a commodity.

D'you understand how they work it out at the top to do with corporations? And don't forget what Rockefeller said too, when he, it comes back to corporations and banks and so on. Rockefeller himself belonged to the same organization that ruled the British Empire, you know, that didn't believe in competition. He says, competition is a sin. He was NOT making a joke. They believe they have the right to take over the world's resources, run society properly, by experts, themselves naturally, and profit from it. And that's a natural way. They have no problem at all believing in that, they were quite open about it. So you're in that kind of system with the globalists of today.

But Rockefeller also thanked, remember, at one of his top meetings, the MEDIA. Openly. He praised them at the end of one of his big talks and so on. He says, I have to thank the media for going along with it and not disclosing to the general public the intentions of our meetings, etc. etc. And he thanked them profusely, he says, we could never have got this far without you basically complying and not telling the public what our plans are. Hm. He said, it's far better than they're leaving the future to the machinations of just the ordinary people and so on to direct the course of the planet, it's much better if we do it through ourselves and banks, he says, the banking institutions that WE run the world and plan the future. That's what he said.

Well, that's the WEF is the same thing, same organization, folks, run by the same folks. They have a plan for the future and they're going to make, they're going to train the product. Like Bernays said, don't change the product, to improve it to suit the public; alter the public to suit your product. That's exactly what they're doing with all of this Covid idea. Behavior modification par excellence, hhhch, with the massive campaigns through education at school, through the Internet, it's through every possible means possible, electronics... behavior modification, behavior change. And of course your social credit score. It's all part of this Fourth Industrial Revolution to make sure that you all comply, or else you'll be locked out from even getting enough cash to feed yourself.

But you are the products in this new system. You're at least one whole segment of the products, put it that way. You're a consumer of products, their products. And don't, so if you have a corporation at the top that makes whatever it happens to be, they work it out to see how many folk, that the constant data, constant data, they keep telling you data is everything, and constant data on the segments of society that will use their product, etc, hm, and how to get more folks to use their products and all the rest of it. So they're divvying up the world into segments to make sure their products are sold to you, by mandates, hm, and you're going to have to buy.

What's the greatest products today that doesn't cost them pretty well anything to make? It's called APPS! A few years ago I did talks on how disposable income was going to be pushed over real material goods and the app industry was part of it. And sure enough, these intangible nothing, nothingness, hhhch, apps, are costing them money, people are buying them and buying them. And they're going to make sure that you need more of them to go along with even the Covid idea to do with, well you know if I pay extra I could get a better app, and it might give me more, it will be more accurate and I won't get locked down with all these people, or, they might not say that I was near that person that maybe was infected, y'know, so I don't have to go quarantine if I pay more, extra for this more accurate app. Etc. You can see the cons already, you know.

It's going to go on and on as they go through the whole agenda here. But the more that you accept, just like the stale piece of bread is better than a nice juicy steak, you're going to get lost in it. And the more you comply, the more your mind is going to get lost in it. And the more you see other people doing the same kind of things as you, the more society is going to get lost in it. Because it's not based on rationale and logic. It's based on pure behaviorist training. That's what it is. You're coerced into a route. Well, if I go on that route, you see, it will be easier on me. So you go along that route like a big road, and you're all on the same road going the same direction, saying it's going to be easier if we comply along this. But eventually get to a stage where you've got to do extra to get passed, you jump certain hoops and so on or do more, and that's what you end up doing. There's no easy way out of this, you see. And they're not giving you a way out. They're manipulating you like children, very small children.

The Covid idea was dreamed up at least, you know, at least 2010, hhhch, the whole Lockstep idea, the Rockefellers again Foundation. Johns Hopkins University working with the Bill Gates Foundation, Event 201. All done beforehand, you see. They literally had it all worked out. We’ll tell the public they can't ever get out again to do anything unless they have a passport, like an immunization passport, electronic, the right apps and all the rest of it. It's all done, folks.
The corporations that were going to get the money, and eventually did get the money when it broke out for the Covid, it was all decided before you heard of Covid who was going to get what. [Alan chuckles.] They were already working on all these things, eh. Because you see, that's the new industry. Hm? And they're going to make sure that YOU must buy their products and you must use their products, you see, you must do it.

There's never been such incredible easy profits already from not just the vaccine companies, they don't even have to come up with any viable vaccine by the way. Hhhch. Any of them. They don't have to. And yet they're getting millions and billions thrown at them across the planet here. And all the other organizations getting money thrown at them like you wouldn't believe. I've got government articles from magazines who cater to civil servants talking about the money they're raking in, [Alan chuckles.] promoting different things to make it more easy to manage the Covid, you know, manage the herd. Because all the money comes from us. And if we don't have the labor to work for the money, at the moment, you have to borrow it in the meantime to pay for things and so on. But regardless, everything comes from the labor of you. One way or another you're going to work it off, one way or another, eh?

What an amazing system, really, when you stand back and look at it. Hm? And where do you think the money that they... [Alan chuckles.] Where d'you think governments are getting money right now? There's a.... You couldn't even… even if they printed, the money couldn't, they don't have enough trees to cut down for the billions and trillions of bucks right now, you know. It's all a magic act. Run by the sharpest con men on the planet. The ones who are given the right to, you know, manage the money, it's all so highly, hush-hush secretive, because you wouldn't understand it, you're too simple. That's what they tell you, you know. Your arithmetic is different from their arithmetic, yeah, you know. They've got very creative accounting. And we accept that as normal too.

Do you realize that you're now in REAL, I'm talking about maybe hundreds, a 100 generations, maybe 200 generations, but in perpetual slavery to pay off what's been borrowed already from the conmen. That really gives nothing to governments, they just punch in blips in your computer machine, [Alan chuckles.] in your central bank, okay we just put the money in there for you, you know. That's it. Can we see it? Well, there you are, it's right on the screen there, you know, you borrowed that. We borrowed all that money? So how many trillions is that, you know? M-hm. Can I see it in tangible...? Well no, that's their way, we put it into your screen there, that's it. And that's it. Backed by nothing, eh. Except the governments assurance they'll keep the folk as slaves to pay it off. M-hm-hm. Ftt.

With the 5G, which they've been unrolling by the way, you know, and quietly working out the bugs, and testing it across the whole of North America in cities and so on. They've been monitoring people and following them and working out everything that you're up to. This is like perpetual, for the rest of your life. Including where you will be allowed to go and not go by the way. If you take any of these ridiculous things with you then they're going to know immediately that you're outside your little quadrant area, hm, your lockdown area. They'll know immediately and they'll come and get you, or pull you in. It's all tested out. There's nothing that's happening here that China hasn't tested already by the way, you know. They all work together. Don't think for a second they're all enemies. It's a joke.

China was in on this big joke to start with. They're on their feet again, aren't they? How come they're on their feet but we're all locked down? Well, logic doesn't apply, for goodness sake, eh. Hm? [Alan chuckles.] So, China has to supply the world with all of its goods because the West and all of your politicians and your high courts gave them all the businesses, and through the free trade agreements that they drafted up for them we financed them to get up to this stage of power, because they're supposed to take over, you see. That's what your masters decided a long time ago. But yeah, they're on their feet again, and producing, and people are working, yep. But you're all to get locked down, maybe for another year, maybe up to five years. Are you starting to get the picture here? Compliance is just going to make it worse.

The whole thing, as I say, would be just like magic and disappear if enough folk just said that's it, you know, that's it. It would be so sudden too, by the way, they would just have to give up. M-hm.

But then you'd have to go, and by the way I said it before too, they're more vicious, you see, the characters at the top when they can't get their way. Because they know that if they did give up, the unthinkable, eh, which won't happen, they're not going to give up. But if they did have to give up, they know the next step is that the public would demand, figuratively speaking, their heads, all those involved in causing this in the first place. Crashing the economies. Putting everybody into the most debt the planet's ever seen.

Never mind the folk who've died because of the reaction to this Covid idea. Oh, stay at home if you've got a heart attack, don't come into the hospital, just die quietly. Or the elderly getting these stupid ventilators rammed down their tracheas, hm. That's the treatment for it? When all the other things would have put them out, just forget that? And then they bring in all their bioethicists and, oh well, just, you know, they're old anyway for goodness sakes, you should die quietly like we've been trying to tell you for years. We could use that money on other things, like paychecks for ourselves and stuff like that, you know.

The system is so CORRUPT. It's SO corrupt. And it's lost humanity, the natural humanity that folk had towards each other and you lose that if you go into a more materialistic society. You've been given the psychopath’s materialistic culture by the way. You've all emulated. That's all you've been fed for years. Until you lose your natural humanity, and you're done for.

I remember reading the articles years and years ago by the psychologists and psychiatrists who worked on the Soviet bloc countries, that quietly did a survey, very quietly because it's a dangerous thing to do. They noticed that traits the leaders in the West had were similar to the traits that the leaders in the East had, in the Soviet bloc countries. Meaning psychopathic. But they also realized that even civil servants, the higher civil servants also had psychopathic qualities too, just like the West. They were looking at the similarities of governance, regardless of what they called the system, and they found it was pretty much the same. They worked out the psychopathic traits which were obvious and so on and in all the countries, it's all exactly the same. They also mentioned that psychopaths will give you their culture. And since they are materialistic, very, hyper materialistic, then eventually they would give you their culture and you would adopt it, and you would lose your humanity along the way. You wouldn't become totally psychopathic, but you would start to adopt a lot of the tendencies and traits of the psychopath along the way. M-hm. That's where we are.

Because of that you see, we lost our natural number one instinct to be free. And along with that instinct to be free, your natural decision to help others. That's your humanity, natural humanity. Whereas the socialistic governments, which is just different, socialism is a front for Technocracy. Expert rule, you see, that's all it is. Under the guise of equality they just take all the pennies off you, then they decide, they talk about, yeah, it used to only cost, you know, so much money to feed a person for a day, but when government does it, we do it better, and it is quite costly, a few thousand bucks per person, per day. [Alan chuckles.] You see? They scam everything. They're crooks. That's the psychopathic system that we live in.

But they're dangerous when they're cornered, that's what I'm saying. Very dangerous because they've got so much to lose. Because this incredible hoax that we've been pushed through, and the damage, I mean, crashing the world economies. This is planned, let's crash the world economy to bring in a new system of utter dependency for most folk. Hm? Are you getting the picture here? …the scale of this hoax? …what's happened here?

Only psychopaths would dream this up and implement it. And it's only the psychopaths who will enforce it, you see. When I see that little Fauci's face there, nevermind all the doctors who've lost their jobs and so on coming out and saying this is a complete farce, it makes no difference, you see, to this little character. Because he's got so much to lose. He's got more to lose than you can imagine by the way. I'm not just talking about Covid either, there's other things on him. Because they're all compromised in different ways, these characters, hm. That's when they're dangerous because they are psychopaths and they will, WILL do drastic things to save their own skins. Absolutely.

I remember watching a documentary of the American nuclear submarines in the Holy Loch I think was in Scotland. They had them there and another couple of places actually. It was a big submarine base for during the Cold War. The camera team were allowed, I don't know if it was the BBC or whoever was, maybe ITV, they were allowed into the base and the commanding officer gave them a tour of some parts of the base and so on. They were allowed to ask questions about certain things. They were shown around a couple of the submarines. You've probably seen it in the movies since then where there's generally two guys per shift who are assigned, in the crew of the submarine, they're given keys. If anything happens, they get the key out and they've got the codes there, they must punch them in to insert the keys, and they must go through the different fail safes, levels and stages. Then when it's time to fire, they both must do it in unison, they turn their key.

The people who were interviewing them asked the relevant question like, how do you, knowing what's going to happen when those keys are turned, which is going to be retaliation anyway, you know, if you're a first strike or whatever, but even during a war regardless of who's firing at whom, the thoughts of the incredible destruction you would cause on civilian populations, in any country, are you sure they're going to do what they're told and continue with it? And by the way, if one fails, the other one is supposed to shoot them, you know. They're actually armed, those guys.

But he says, there's very little chance… He said, they'll do what they're told, they'll follow orders to the letter. Because they're given the test, and it was a psychopathic test to see, and they are, they're psychopaths, that's who they hired to turn the keys, eh. Because they have no problems doing what they're told. They're well-paid to do it. They don't think too far in the future that way. And they don't feel guilt doing anything to anybody else, you know. So that's why they picked them, on purpose. They put them through the psychopathic examinations to make sure that they were, and they would follow orders, that's how they did it, you know. And I'm sure Russia was the same, you know. And China. And everybody else that's involved these days. But that's how you do it.

So you see, governments employ psychopaths. As well as having psychopaths at the top running the people, they employee psychopaths to do that kind of stuff to general populations. And their traits are unmistakable of them, really, when you really studied them. When you look at the British system during World War II to do with the Air Force and Dowding, the guy who was in charge of the Air Force. Because Britain did start bombing parts of Germany, civilian areas, before the Germans ever did. Dowding, and it was terrible, the mass fire bombings they did in some cities, burned everybody to a crisp pretty well in Germany. Only psychopaths could decide to do that, you know. And rationalize it, well you know, it brings war to an end quicker. The same thing was done with the atomic bomb of course Japan, well, it brought the war to an end quicker. And so on.

When you have societies run by psychopaths, though, it certainly is not a giant leap to imagine them using the same psychopathic types in biowarfare, as an example, or bioengineering, to cause sterilization amongst the population. Because that's what they've been talking about. That's what Bill Gates talks about. He wants to help the people AND reduce the population at the same time. Folk can't quite get ahold of this, what do you mean, and reduce it? Well, it's going to sterilize you, obviously, that's what he's talking about. They had so many lawsuits against them already, the foundation, for certain vaccines they've put out already.

So yes, you have psychopaths and they're employed to take care of problems. They have no problem implementing terrible things to the general population. You also had that in the movie 12 Monkeys, an example of the psychopaths who are involved. Again, it was interesting, 12 Monkeys, because the guy at the very, very end who goes into the airport, he's got vials and vials of particular viruses which his lab had been working on. It was legitimate laboratory work for the government and well-recognized in its field. But this guy himself wanted, he just decided that society and humanity wasn't worth saving, just kill them. So HE had decided to kill them, stealing stuff out of the lab and then going around the world to different countries on a quick tour dropping off vials along the way, opening vials up. Psychopath, you see. He'd rationalize what he was doing in some way, you know.

But also you had the guy who owned the bio lab, very wealthy guy and involved in politics and all the rest of it. Very wealthy. That new darn well what his lab was up to and the things they were working on and why they were working on them. Because all these labs are dual-purpose. Regardless of them saying it's to, well, it's gain of function, we're doing in case it ever evolved this way in nature, like billions to one in this particular direction, they'd be ready for it. No, these are bioweapons or bio labs depending on dual function at the time what it was getting used for.

And there's lots of crazy folk, [Alan chuckles.] psychopathic types go into that field to begin with anyway. Who know what it's about. Of course they know what it's about. If something, if the chances of a particular virus mutating along the particular lines of pure lethality to the general population, if the chances of it going along the path as being altered by humans with gain of function technique in laboratories, are millions, maybe even billions to one, WHY do you think they're really doing it? Because it's not going to evolve that way by itself. But it's going to be, it's going to get pushed to change into an incredibly lethal virus. That isn't just a general interest, folks.

You do have psychopaths running you. Of course you do. You've listened, you've seen the meeting, the Bill Gates and the bunch, Oprah and the rest of them, they were nicknamed The Lucky Gene Club for a while, who were getting together talking about depopulation and there's too many people. Well, how come they are the ones to decide that they're going to live but the other folk have to get sterilized or die? Hm?

Now you see, here's another big part of this Great Reset and the Fourth Industrial Revolution. There's to be whole swaths of the population are to live in poverty. That is the agenda, folks. They don't need them anymore, they don't need the labor anymore, you see, they've already said this. So their own philanthropies, these charitable institutions like the Gates Foundation and all the other ones, and Bloomberg, they will take care of the poor, hm. They'll take care of the poor? There's two ways you could actually say that, get a meaning from that. Because you see, this is an agenda for depopulation.

I gave these talks many years ago when I says, they're getting to the stage where they decided they don't need you anymore, I says, do you think they're going to keep you around as pets or something? No. They're not going to. They don't need you. They don't want to. They don't like you being around when you don't have a prime function to serve them. They don't need you. You're eating their resources, THEIR resources for their offspring down through the future. They have no problem saying it because you see, they're psychopaths. But yeah, this Great Reset, it's got all these just, all the philanthropies coming into their own now you see, and you'll all be depending on them to feed you and take care of you. If they decide eventually that they can't do it, well, it's sad but that's the way it will have to be. So there you have it. You'll have to rely on these big philanthropies, these wonderful people that just, you know, it goes with earning lots of money, they just want to suddenly help you, and you know, and so on.

Here's what Plato said, eh. You see, there's nothing new under the sun. Really. The technique, you know, the systems of technology are perhaps, but the same thing is getting delivered. This is what Plato said. He says, This and no other is the root from which a tyrant springs; when he first appears he is a protector. Hm. Right. We're going to help you. Right. We're here to protect you. Hm. That's your tyrant. Hm.

I always think to Alexander Solzhenitsyn, and he said when you think about all these riots in the streets, which were all managed by, and you've got politicians backing it for goodness sake, your POLITICIANS in America backing it, it tells you all you need to know. Never mind the fact even the Antifa group has even come out proudly and admitted they're, who created them back in the 30s and what they belonged to, and it's been in the media recently in fact as to, proclaiming their origin and who still runs them in fact.

It says here from Solzhenitsyn, and he certainly suffered, believe you me, Solzhenitsyn, by the Antifa types they were pushing in his country, and they took over long ago. He says, Anyone who has proclaimed violence his method inexorably must choose lying as his principle. So whatever they tell you it's for it's always a lie, you see. And he should certainly know, he was put up in the Gulag's. In some ways he was lucky that he survived compared to most folk who didn't, actually. A horror show. The whole Soviet system was a horror show. So anyone who proclaims how wonderful it was, you should be really, really scared of, or definitely wary of, VERY wary of, you know.

I remember looking at a documentary a while ago and it was some, an old guy. It must've been done, I don't know when it was done but it was an old fella who was a train driver who talked about taking the different prisoners daily back-and-forth, you know, to these different camps. For his whole working life. He says, there was thousands of these camps right up the lines, all the way up through Siberia. Thousands of them. They went through the people so quickly on different projects, and the terrible conditions, that they were dying like flies. He just kept filling them up. That's the kind of place that Solzhenitsyn ended up in. So you should be awfully, awfully, awfully wary of the present time by the way of what's going on. Because the Soviet system is not what they tell you it was. And there definitely was a ruling class in Russia, again, that's rather open about who's ruling Russia, some of them. This is stuff that's coming out, it's astonishing, from their own sources.

But yeah, horror is on its way, there's no doubt about it. Again, we’ll get a sanitary horror, you see, more sanitary, more humane, to let the people just go sterile and die off with a little bit of nudging and helping maybe through malnutrition or something, you see. HG Wells said it too in A Modern Utopia and other writings he went into. He said we used to think that we'd have to physically sterilize the people, meaning physically kill them, the people we didn't need. And you've got to remember, they really mean that, they don't need you. Socialism is not what you think it is. Hhhch. It never was. It's an elite organization, and if they don't need you, then they don't want you around. You're another mouth to feed. Why would they feed you if you have no function for them, you know, nothing to serve, you see, they don't need you. And he says, but we found it more humane, in this kind of fictitious journey of the future he was bringing, more humane he says to sterilize them and let those ones just die off, he says, that they're all gone, you see, and only the important folk, the necessary ones were left. What's happening today is an old idea. It's not new at all. Believe you me.

Now, I'd like to mention too that I have advised folk to at least try and have a few people they can, that will help each other out when times get really bad. Very shortly by the way. Because you're going to have to, you must rely on each other. So you have to really trust each other. The weak link in the chain can be disastrous for everybody involved. Because folk will crack when pressure is applied, even psychological pressure from a distance, some folk will tend to crack and comply and chop the rest of them. But the fact is, you're going to have to depend on each other. You've already had the governments in the States, I call it governments because it seems like you don't know which government they're talking about sometimes. It's like a variety of them. According to even their own legislators [Alan chuckles.] that they're all arguing about what it is to be American.

But you're going to have to forget politics. Forget your politicians. That's going to happen regardless, it's planned that way, regardless of the election. Who wins or loses, it makes no difference. You've already had Pelosi and other ones and Harris come out and say, this is going to continue, including the riots in the streets and so on, regardless of who wins and loses in politics, the burnings in the cities and all the rest of it, or at least the appearance of them is to continue. It's a planned take down, you see, gradual. It's a planned shock and awe idea upon the general population. It's to bring in a whole new system through the end of it. Oh, look at the chaos, we can't live like this, we've got to go into a new system, maybe temporary martial law or something like that. Whatever they come up with, it makes no difference, it's going to be the same anyway.

You got to look after each other. Don't expect any president to do it for you. I hope you've all grown away from the idea regardless of presidents and so on being the answer to everything. You're always on your own. At the end of the day you're on your own, folks. If you have even a few friends to help each other out and swear to each other, and you will help each other out, you know, you've got to, and through thick and thin, that's how you get through terrible times. That's how humanity has always done it through terrible times. Be prepared for it because it's coming. There's no doubt about it. They've told us it's coming. [Alan chuckles.] The folk in the US government have said it's coming.

You've watched the streets getting burned for weeks and weeks and weeks in different cities, and then again being lauded by different politicians and mayors. And outside funding, and inside funding too. Go into the folk that are doing it, which is just, it's all paid by governments funds as well as philanthropies as they call it. So you're under attack and it's planned that way, or it wouldn't have happened. It wouldn't be allowed to happen unless it was planned that way by the deep state as they like to call it now.

So you've got to help each other out. Take care of each other as you go through the bad times which are definitely going to come. Then you got the added lock down… Unless you're rioting, you have a lock down on the rest of the population. You can't go shopping or whatever and blah blah blah blah blah. So you've got to start helping. The ones who can travel, and different age groups too, the ones who can travel who can go out to the stores get food for others have got to start doing it, you know. All these kind of things you've got to think of because you don't want to end up in hospital with... with [Alan chuckles.] oh, you might be a Covid, we'll stick this down your trachea and watch you, you know, go down the tubes. You don't want that, with their bioethics squads, how old are you, oh just die quietly, like, we can help you, you know.

You know, this is something that would be satire at one time, but this is what they've got now. They’ve had articles in the paper, oh the bioethics committee, who should live, who should get the medication, who shouldn't, you know, we can't give it to everybody. Why not?! Why couldn't they give it to everybody? If they could afford to, if the US can afford to give out vaccinations across the planet, hm, I'm sure they could certainly spend the cash for the treatment for its own citizens, eh? Of course they could. But they're not gonna. The same with Canada. They've already said it too, oh we've got to, we've got sparse medications you know, we might have to decide who's going to live and die.

Well, it's time to scrap the hospitals, folks, because you can't trust them now. That's a scary thought when you realize that, yeah, they will automatically just sit and suss you up to see if they should give you euthanasia or not. This is what's coming here. I hope you understand it. As I say, humanity's gone out the window, when we lose our humanity, our natural humaneness and humanity towards each other, we're finished. We're finished.

This is a horror show, this new scientific system, eh. It's a horror show. On behalf of those who already have decided they own the planet. And you're of no use to them if you can't buy their products, which they want to mandate, because you can't afford them, you can't work or whatever, then you’re irrelevant, you're scratched off. This is the real sci-fi movie, you're in it. The future is here, eh.

As soon as the first bit of cold weather came in, I knew, I was waiting for it. Because you always, and every year the older folk get their viruses right off the bat, the pneumonias set in right away, you know. As soon as the weather starts to get a bit chilly, cold and damp, that's it, bang. It's guaranteed every year. Everybody who works in medicine is well aware of that. But they use it for a different purposes now, oh, it must be Covid, you know, what else could it be? [Alan chuckles.] After all these centuries of studying, suddenly, oh, it must be, what else could it be? Aaahh, let's think, what else could it be? Maybe the same thing you get every year, you know.

That will increase too by the way. If they could lock you down and folk can't get the proper food nourishment, never mind the social interaction, which they need, we're social creatures, right, they're going to get sicker and sicker with it. No doubt about it. And if you get malnourished, oh, there could be a food shortage down the road, well, that's going to spike and get worse and worse and worse, isn't it? Oh, it must be Covid. [Alan laughing.] Yep.

Here's Helena Handbasket. I guess that’s where we all end up, eh? It says…

Health At The End Of A Needle

"Those who would give up essential liberty, to purchase a little temporary safety, deserve neither liberty nor safety." Benjamin Franklin (1706-1790)

(Alan: These characters actually, you often wonder if they actually said these things. Or, did they have help, you know? They say, Oppenheimer is reported to have said, and the bomb, you know, now I've become Shiva, destroyer of worlds. Did he really say that? No, he didn't. Somebody said that afterward. They like to make them sound more important than they really were. [Alan laughing.] But anyway…. Benjamin Franklin, hm, is supposed to have said that…)

"Those who would give up essential liberty, to purchase a little temporary safety, deserve neither liberty nor safety." Benjamin Franklin (1706-1790)

(A: It says…)

I feel like Dorothy in the Wizard of Oz, when she finds herself in a whole new world to the one she fell asleep in. The speed of the changes that Dorothy experienced from a cyclone have been matched by the speed at which society has found themselves immersed in a government induced reality that may never recover.

(A: Hm. There ya go.)

These rocket speed changes have created a society on the brink of an emotional meltdown. With the fever pitch of our pandemic-induced hysteria, we hurry to surrender our freedom for protection from a virus, one of the hundreds of thousands we have evolved with since the dawn of man, without having honest facts on the numbers affected, the accuracy of the tests used, the risks from masks, the damage of social isolation on the elderly, the effects on domestic violence, the impacts on children living in fear of touch or the certain increase of suicides caused by mass unemployment.

If all the hype and fear mongering by government seems vaguely familiar, that is because we have been fear mongered to on many occasions. Remember the Swine flu pandemic that never arrived (A: And that's true, eh.) or the threatened SARs virus (A: Was it 2003 I think it was.), or Ebola, or Bird-flu? Each was used to panic the herd into giving over more and more freedoms in the name of security by a PR (A: Public relations.) created villain.

After each supposed pandemic it turned out that this was another drive by big pharma to push untested vaccines that made them rich while hiding behind industry driven legislation that absolves them from prosecution over the millions of deaths and injuries caused over the years in our increasingly over medicated society.

(A: And it's true, isn't it? I put the PDFs up there from the governments, they were giving blanket immunity to everybody who was giving the vaccines. Even pharmacies, it doesn't matter who is going to give it to them, or the military, they'll have blanket immunity. No matter if they kill you or paralyze you or whatever.)

Like Dorothy we all woke up to find that a medical coup had taken place by an unaccountable technocratic overlord – Bill Gates. I don’t know who died and made him king, but why is he suddenly telling the world what to do? Did we have an election that I missed? Why are elected officials listening to a rich unaccountable self-appointed non-medical person on a health issue?

(A: And it's true enough. The real true deep state, believe you me, put Bill Gates and his ilk forward. None of these characters are what they seem to be. They're well-paid to be front people, because that's what they are. The very fact that the authorities, the higher authorities are not against him being the boss of healthcare tells you they put him there. They're allowing it to happen, because they want it all to happen. This is the big agenda.)

Under this tyrant’s leadership the situation is heading toward microchipping,

(A: And that's true. People say that's conspiracy. No, it's not conspiracy theory. You got MIT working on it and that was all part of the idea of using the different so-called fluorescent tattooing, it would tell you if you had your vaccines or not.)

body metric technology, forced 5G and mandatory vaccinations all without our approval…is this the world that you want for yourself and your loved ones?

Bill Gates intends to vaccinate the global population against COVID-19, and then track and monitor each one through digital surveillance.

Check out these patents to get a better idea where this guy is heading the world:

The TRACE congressional bill no. 6666 (A: Hhhch.)

https://www.congress.gov/bill/116th-congress/house-bill/6666/text

(A: So if it’s conspiracy, then here it is from the government. You can look up for yourselves. I’ll put the links up. And…)

UPDATED: Bill Gates Explains that the Covid Vaccine will Likely Use Experimental Technology

This is the world that a group of Cardinals, Bishops and Pastors of the Catholic Church and other Signatories to their Appeal of the 7th May 2020 are warning us is coming if we fail to act. What follows are excerpts from their longer carefully worded letter to be found in full at:

https://remnantnewspaper.com/web/index.php/articles/item/4881-worse-than-death-a-pandemic-warning-from-cardinals-sarah-mueller-zen-abp-vigano

“The facts have shown that, under the pretext of the Covid-19 epidemic, the inalienable rights of citizens have in many cases been violated and their fundamental freedoms, including the exercise of freedom of worship, expression and movement, have been disproportionately and unjustifiably restricted. Public health must not, and cannot, become an alibi for infringing on the rights of millions of people around the world, let alone for depriving the civil authority of its duty to act wisely for the common good. This is particularly true as growing doubts emerge from several quarters about the actual contagiousness, danger and resistance of the virus. Many authoritative voices in the world of science and medicine confirm that the media’s alarmism about Covid-19 appears to be absolutely unjustified.”

It goes on and on, talking about “odious technological tyranny” and so on. It's quite a good article. I'll put this one up for those that want to read it all and go through the links as well. Because if it's going to be, oh it's conspiracy theory, well there's your government links and the patent links and the names of the characters who own these different patents and so on. All there. But facts don't matter, eh. They don't matter.

Eco-Fascism rears its Totalitarian Head in the form of Green TD, Eamon Ryan (When it’s not asleep at the wheel)

theirishsentinel.com / Posted by Helena Handbasket / Oct 7, 2020

(A: This is Ireland here.)

When an eco-fascist talks like an eco-fascist, walks like an eco-fascist and acts like an eco-fascist… That’s exactly what it is, with the caveat that it is also seriously mentally ill. Such is the case with Green Eco-Fascist TD and Minister, Eamon Ryan, who is determined to curtail the free movement of Irish people whilst in full support of mass immigration from all regions of the world, regardless of any underlying medical issues such people may carry with them.

(A: That’s obvious too with all the socialist countries, mass migration is to continue, right. Canada’s doing the same too, from Nigeria it said. They’ve even put millions of dollars up to bring people in, and train them into higher businesses, when folk here are losing all their businesses. Quite amazing what’s going on here. Back to Ireland, it gives you links as well, but it says…)

https://www.independent.ie/irish-news/it-is-not-working-transport-minister-eamon-ryan-admits-green-list-is-flawed-39597429.html

No doubt, these useful idiot immigrants will be tested for Covid-19 with a PCR test that is as useful as testing a concrete block on the position of the stars and planets in our solar system. You get the same result… Zero effectiveness.

Perhaps Ryan and his eco-fascist cohort should be tested on their intelligence and qualifications as they seek to lock up perfectly healthy people on a lie thinly disguised as Covid-19 as ‘cases’ of perfectly healthy apparently rise.

(A: I mean, the more they test with these ridiculous tests, the more you’re going to say they’re positive, just for fragments. It’s not for the disease, folks, it doesn’t test for the disease. It’s fragments of all dead viruses, ANY fragments at all, that’s what they use to test. It’s just a joke. What a scam though, eh?)

Since there is no effect seen of all these ‘cases’ (A: …meaning illnesses, right…), one can assume these people to be immune to a large degree, which would therefore suggest that the much touted ‘herd immunity’ has already occurred.

(A: By the way, some scientists have been saying that for the last couple months now.)

That should be obvious to anyone who could drag themselves away from the horror show called television for a day or two.

There are no overwhelmed hospitals and minimal reported deaths, which must be given some very close scrutiny as to their cause as it is already widely known that at least 94 percent of previous reported deaths were from other causes,

(A: ...and it goes on and on. They've got the links here too to different newspapers. But d'you realize how many folk are paid off, bought and paid for? Again, the psychopathic politicians, eh. Hm? And the big agendas. It goes on about the lockdowns too for Ireland...)

But now this creature of eugenics has decided that Irish people will no longer be allowed to travel, because he says so, to certain locations around the world as they might be infected with a bogus disease, whilst him and his unelected lunatic fringe sickeningly green party members can go wherever they want at the taxpayer’s expense.

And yeah, it's... well, it's all here, eh. And why you bringing more and more migrants in when everything's closed down? You can't support yourselves! You understand, this is war upon the peoples, eh, the Western peoples, it's war upon them, complete. Absolutely. Yep.

I'll put an article up too, it's to do with the Great Barrington [Massachusetts] in the US and how this American Institute for Economic Research, it's called, and it was a guy who was in the military about the 1920s I think it was. He founded an Institute to promote individual sovereignty, limited government, and a society based on property rights and open markets. It was founded in 1933 by Edward C. Harwood, an economist and investment advisor with the intention of protecting individual rights. That's something that's got so far away from now, isn't it? And it gives a history of Edward C. Harwood. Believe you me, there's folk who went through the military too realized that individual liberty is awfully important. Even though in the Army you're trained to be one of the general troops, troopers, and that's about it. But he learned a lesson obviously and realized the danger of losing it all, individual rights and freedoms, during what he saw happening in the communist countries no doubt too.

The Constitutional Reckoning of State Lockdown Orders

aier.org / 7 Oct 2020

(A: This is another one I'll put up too. It says…)

On October 3rd NPR reported that the Michigan Supreme Court struck down Governor Gretchen Whitmer's state of emergency and the powers it granted. NPR writes

In a 4-3 majority opinion, the state's high court said she did not have that authority. "We conclude that the Governor lacked the authority to declare a 'state of emergency' or a 'state of disaster' under the EMA after April 30, 2020, on the basis of the COVID-19 pandemic. Furthermore, we conclude that the EPGA is in violation of the Constitution of our state because it purports to delegate to the executive branch the legislative powers of state government– including its plenary police powers– and to allow the exercise of such powers indefinitely," wrote Justice Stephen J. Markman on behalf of the majority.

Governor Whitmer has been one of the more heavy-handed executive figures during the pandemic. One of her policies went as far as to ban the selling of gardening supplies in stores that were still permitted to stay open.

More importantly, however, this court ruling was not the first of its kind but the third in a series of legal victories against lockdown orders. The first was a Wisconsin Supreme Court ruling that declared parts of Governor Tony Evers' stay at home order unconstitutional and the second was by a federal court that struck down Governor Tom Wolf's policies in Pennsylvania.

(A: Then it goes on to other ones too, Michigan and so on. It's quite a good article. The Case of Wisconsin is in there too. Pennsylvania. M-hm. Fttt. So I'll put that up too.)

You understand that your laws are being run over under the guise of saving you, once again, you know. That's tyranny, you see, we're here to save you. Another article here is…

aier.org / 6 Oct 2020

Carl Sagan famously said, “the cure for a fallacious argument is a better argument, not the suppression of ideas.” This wisdom has been sadly forsaken during the COVID19 pandemic, when one powerful narrative has taken not only the public, but the scientific community, by storm. The story is that societies cannot survive the pandemic without society-wide lockdowns until we have a vaccine, despite the fact that we have never had a vaccine for a coronavirus, vaccines usually take many years to develop, and many of them are not all that effective once made. Penetrating this narrative has been incredibly difficult even for impeccably credentialed scientists. One might even say that this pandemic killed scientific debate.

(A: It goes through all the propaganda that you’ve been hearing of how Sweden, that literally has come through this pretty well since they didn’t lock everybody down, you know, and it’s been hammered by the other authorities who are trying to say, oh, more died there. No, they didn’t. [Alan chuckles.] But it goes through how Sweden, how they’re lambasting Sweden because they didn’t lock down like they did everywhere else, eh.)

…accused of “leading Sweden to catastrophe” and of “experimenting” on the Swedish people.

(A: No, I would say locking them down would be experimenting on them, wouldn’t it? Like us, eh? And the Swedes have not lost their economy because of it. Hm.)

Nobel Laureate Michael Levitt’s careful studies and models were labeled “lethal nonsense” as he weathered attacks left, right and center. John Ioannidis, one of the world’s most productive scientists, found his studies smeared and ignored.

(A: All the links to all these different reports, and the scientists’ reports I’ve got here too. I’ll put them up tonight.)

Sunetra Gupta, one of the world’s foremost epidemiologists at The University of Oxford, found that expressing her wide-ranging infectious disease knowledge suddenly made her “unethical and dangerous.” (A: …they called her in the media.)

You see, it's a must-be. Facts have got nothing to do with it, folks, you know. That's the dangerous part because this is, right now they're smearing folk and just cutting them off of all media attention at all. The next step is going to be violence against them. And the general public that don't go along with things too. Then it goes into Fauci too, who states, we can never return to normal, etc. and yada, yada, ya. It's a good article. Quite a, it's not a short one either, you know. It's quite short actually but I don't have time to read all of it. It's got good links in it like most of these articles do. For those that really want to know. And it's good to keep a list of these things because eventually all these articles will disappear from the net, once all the riots and the destruction is over and we’re then into the new system, the new normal world order.

Let me see now... Oh yeah, here's another governmental one I've got here during all of this. This again is a magazine, you might call it a magazine, a news site for federal employees in the US. I remember giving the talks many years ago when the Rockefeller group brought in experts to find out how many main newspapers they'd have to control to standardize all information and news. But they also brought in, created a whole bunch of new newspapers to deal with it. It was 30 odd newspapers, including magazines, even for ones that would specialize and be written for government employees, civil servants. Well, this is where this is from. [Alan chuckles.] This is for civil servants. It says…

Federal Pay is Way Off Track

govexec.com / 22 July 2020

The General Schedule system is unresponsive to labor market dynamics and agency staffing needs.

It's about the paycheck. They want money. The country’s collapsing with closures, mandatory closures by government policies, but the civil servants and the federal servants are complaining about their paychecks that are not enough, they want pay raises. There's too many parasites living on us now. That's what socialism ends up being, you see, expanding governments. The governments work with the corporations, and you've got fascism. Socialism is fascism, m-hm, with governments working with them. So this is an article here to do with them wanting massive paychecks and how they're not getting enough, you know, they should be getting the same equivalent kind of paychecks in certain functions within government civil service as outside forces do and so on. And you know, all that same old argument. Well, they should have gone into private business rather than work for the government, shouldn't they? You know? But again, facts don't matter. But can you imagine the gall for wanting pay raises when thousands upon thousands upon thousands of small businesses, that pay for their wages, are finished for good because of government policies.

This other article too says…

Top Epidemiologists Say Pandemic Is Over and It's Time to Go Back to Normal

blogs.mercola.com / 9 Oct 2020

Top scientists, epidemiologists, professors and medical professionals from around the world say the pandemic is over and are calling for an end to lockdowns.

"Schools and universities should be open for in-person teaching. Extracurricular activities, such as sports, should be resumed. Young low-risk adults should work normally, rather than from home. Restaurants and other businesses should open. Arts, music, sport and other cultural activities should resume," they say, as the costs of continuing the lockdowns are "astonishing" and creating a "global emergency."

(A: Well, that's what it's intended TO DO.)

The group made their declaration in a formal, written document drawn up at a meeting hosted by the American Institute for Economic Research. Dubbed "The Great Barrington Declaration," it's signed by dozens of professionals, but the public is invited to join in and sign, too. In fact, more than 161,000 members of the public have already signed.

"Keeping these measures in place until a vaccine is available will cause irreparable damage, with the underprivileged disproportionately harmed," the document says. "Fortunately, our understanding of the virus is growing. We know that vulnerability to death from COVID-19 is more than a thousand-fold higher in the old and infirm than the young. Indeed, for children, COVID-19 is less dangerous than many other harms, including influenza."

I'll put these ones up for those that want to come and participate perhaps, you know. But it's going to take more than just, you know, the... aacchhhh, [Alan chuckles.] this is, complaining is not going to work. This is a BIG AGENDA for a whole new world. Eh?!? A WORLD. Run by, again, characters like the WEF. Our whole life's to be monitored from birth to death with all their gadgetry. Absolutely. I'm telling ya, folks.

Special session on the COVID-19 response WHO who.ont / 5-6 Oct 2020

The Director-General, following consultation with the Board Chair, has called for an Executive Board special session on the coronavirus disease (COVID-19) response to follow up on the WHA73.1 resolution approved by Member States earlier in May.

So they're supposedly having the WHO having an executive board meeting, or they've just had it actually, 5 to 6 October. I never heard what they said about it. But the WHO is like so much of the UN, it should have been dismantled long ago, folks. Long ago. We don't vote for these organizations. They should have no say over our lives at all.

This is interesting too, but you've probably read about it already. This article here is from The Sun, I've got other news articles too.

911 lines go down across the US sparking panic as callers can’t get through to emergency services

the-sun.com / 29 Sept 2020

POLICE departments across the country Monday night reported their 911 systems nonoperational - and it's reportedly due to a Microsoft Office 360 outage.

(A: That’s what they claimed, eh, something to do with the cloud part of it.)

"ATTENTION: The 911 lines are not operational nationwide. This is for phone calls and text messaging," tweeted the Minneapolis Police Department. "If you need police, fire or emergency medical assistance in Minneapolis, please call" a local number.

Similar problems continued for other police departments in the state of Minnesota.

(A: And Delaware State police were dealing with calls and so on. So I’ll put this one up.)

I’ve also got this one too, it’s by Robert Wheeler. 911 System Goes Down Across The Country: Was This A Test? It talks about 9/11 going down across the US and blaming the outage of Microsoft 365 for the disruption, and that, it says asks the question, if this is a test run for more widespread chaos around election time. I think it was also put in a Zero Hedge article as well. I'll put these links up for those that want to read it.

911 System Goes Down Across The Country: Was This A Test? - zerohedge.com / 29 Sept 2020

There's a lot of strange things going on in preparation for what's to come I'm sure, you know. I think Whitney Webb also had a couple of articles to do with the same thing, disruption of the 2020 elections. There's going to be an awful lot of trouble, it's planned that way, folks. They let us all know too, the whole world knows there's going to be trouble, regardless of how it goes, you know. Because the point of it all is to change everything into the new system. And more chaos is... is... It will sound realistic to the public. Well, I guess we have to go into a new system altogether because the old one is completely finished now. Ha, ha. You see how it works, eh? That's how they'll play it.

The Police Are Requesting Data from People’s Smart Speakers at an Alarming Rate

theorganicprepper.com / 3 Oct 2020

Remember all those conspiracy theorists and Luddites who told you they didn’t want Echo or Alexa devices in their home because those gadgets were spying on them? Well, they were right. That’s not even up for debate.

If you were one of those friends who mocked them and called them crazy, you were wrong. Just admit it.

If you are bewildered by what you just read, please, read on.

(A: It mentions...)

… “smart technology” and the “internet of things” (A: …that they were talking about 10 years ago…) were being developed for surveillance and manipulation purposes. (Despite the companies’ claims of greater convenience.) We’ve been in a virtual dragnet for years.

(A: I remember too I think it was Samsung's televisions came out and they had to admit eventually they were spying [Alan chuckles.] on the folk watching them, to see what they're watching and the expressions and everything. And the folks kept buying them even after the mainstream published it all. So there ya go, eh. This article, it goes on about…)

…the Nest, your phone's location tracker, and other "smart" technology. We've even talked about how we all have "surveillance scores."

(A: …surveillance scores now, you see. We don't, truly we, you all have scores in it.)

Take a look at WIRED's article by Sidney Fussell, "Meet the Star Witness: Your Smart Speaker." In this article, Fussell details a murder case in which an Amazon Echo device was presented as evidence.

He writes,

In July 2019, police rushed to the home of 32-year-old Silvia Galva. Galva's friend, also in the home, called 911, claiming she overheard a violent argument between Galva and her boyfriend, 43-year-old Adam Crespo. The two lived together in Hallandale Beach, Florida, about 20 miles from Miami.

When officers arrived, Galva was dead, impaled through her chest by the 12-inch blade at the sharp end of a bedpost. Police believe Crespo tried to drag Galva from their bed. She held onto the bedpost to resist, but the sharp end snapped, somehow killing her. Police charged Crespo with second-degree murder. He pleaded not guilty and was released on $65,000 bail, awaiting trial. In the months since the arrest, Crespo's lawyer has presented a surprising piece of evidence in his defense: recordings from a pair of Amazon Echo speakers.

"I had a lot of interviews where people said, 'Oh, are you aware that this could be the first time Alexa recordings are going to be used to convict somebody of murder?'" says Christopher O'Toole, Crespo's lawyer. "And I actually thought of it the opposite way, that this could be the first time an Amazon Alexa recording is used to exonerate somebody and show that they're innocent."

When police and prosecutors collect smart home or speaker data, it's typically used as evidence against suspects. The Hallandale Beach Police Department filed a subpoena for Crespo's speakers, as they may have picked up audio of the argument Galva's friend overheard.

The incident shows the growing role of smart home devices and wearables in police investigations.

(A: It goes into the requests that the police make now to Amazon and Echo to use them and so on.)

Amazon initially tried to block the request,

but later handed over the data.

(A: They always go through the same formality, oh, we pretend to say no, for the public, because it’s bad PR, isn’t it?)

A murder charge against the defendant was later dropped, but the speaker, smart home, and wearable data has figured into multiple cases since then.

Amazon said it had received more than 3,000 requests from police for user data in the first half of this year, and complied almost 2,000 times. That was a 72 percent increase in requests …

(A: You see how this, you’re buying… You see, this is all part of the Fourth Industrial Revolution, the system with all these gadgets that are all connected and all communicating with each other and so on, and monitoring everything you do, say, almost what you think. It says there that…)

By amending a search warrant, police can “keep going to keep collecting data,” Orr says. “That usually leads to an Echo or at least some other device.”

As Orr explains, officers are getting more savvy about smart home devices, creating templates that simplify requesting data. Police departments often share these templates, he says, tailoring requests for the specifics of the case they’re investigating.

Google’s Nest unit reported increasing police demands for data from its smart speakers through 2018. Google then stopped reporting Nest data separately, including such requests in its broader corporate transparency report, which shows increased requests for Google user data.

This is literally, this is really what they are on about with the Fourth Industrial Revolution and the Great Reset. It's all one system, where you will have no privacy whatsoever. But you always buy your chains. I keep telling folk that, and they do, eh. Well, it's a convenient, you know, it's the latest thing. [Alan laughing.]

I always think of what the Communists used to say about the capitalists in their rhetoric, eh. Even though they had lots of capitalists in their own country, lots and lots of them, in a captive slave population for workers really at the time. But they used to say to the West, you know, that we'll, the capitalists, they says, they'll sell us the rope which we'll use to hang them. That's what they said about the capitalists. And here it is, folks, I mean, you're all buying these gadgets into to a, hhhch, a prison, a virtual prison.

Of course nothing's going to happen to you, eh, ever, right? Like I'm sure all these folk we're reading about here in these articles that they had no idea anything was going to happen to them either. But it certainly did, hm? Nevermind the fact, as I say, who's got the right to be inside your home? The one thing about Pierre Trudeau, one thing he said that was right, you know, the father of the present Prime Minister in Canada. He did say that, the state had no right in the bedrooms of the people. Well, they don't need the state to do it, you get the folk to buy these gadgets themselves, and then the state can then use the folk or the companies that own the gadgetry, or have the patents on it, eh, and services that manage them all.

childrenshealthdefense.org / 1 Oct 2020

U.S. military personnel will be the first subjects in nanotechnology trials in the pursuit of optimizing health and early detection of disease outbreaks. (A: Isn’t that just a coincidence.) Profusa has research contracts for bio-integrated sensors (A: Again, this is a whole agenda, the Internet of things.) with the U.S. Department of Defense and Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency (DARPA), pending U.S. Food and Drug Administration approval in early 2021.

(A: It’s also to do with the Internet of Things and the 5G, which connects it all, right.)

Health technology undermines freedom and privacy

Profusa's promotional video (A: The link is here for it too.) shows how the bio-integrated sensor enables a soldier to be tracked by remote computers using GPS in addition to monitoring real-time biomarkers, such as oxygen levels and heart rate. While this biotechnology is portrayed as potentially lifesaving (A: …of course it is, eh.) to a soldier on the battlefield, the implications of GPS tracking individuals is a terrifying step towards a surveillance state in the general population.

Furthermore, tracking people in stages of sickness can only result in medical tyranny in the hands of any government. The Profusa influenza study requires patients to wear the wearable version of the reader 24 hours a day, with continuous biomarker information collection into a database. These unreliable detection stages could become the criteria for different levels of individual participation in society as experienced in the unsustainable COVID-19 state-level lockdowns for the masses.

(A: It goes into the different stages of this nanotechnology Profusa has here.)

This Profusa nanotechnology has three components: an inserted sensor called hydrogel, a light-emitting fluorescent sensor reader on the surface of the skin and an electronic software component that transmits to an online database.

(A: That's the stuff that DARPA had been working on, eh. They'll call you a conspiracy theory if you put up these links, with DARPA's own website and so on about it. [Alan laughing.] It's so simple now, isn't it? They just have to call you conspiracy theory, most folk won't check on anything, you see. Oh, the government says it's a conspiracy theory. [Alan chuckles.] So that's so simple, by smearing a person with a word or a slogan or a term, and that's the end of the conversation, eh. M-hm. I tell ya. It says…)

What you can do? Become more empowered to advocate for your health by registering for the Protecting Health and Autonomy in the 21st Century online conference Oct. 16-18 with 40 speakers, including Robert F. Kennedy, Jr.

govexec.com / 9 Oct 2020

The “at-scale” tests could change defense networks, training, and logistics — and how Americans use the Internet.

(A: This is the largest 5G experiment yet, it says, the US military.)

After months of expectation, planning, and consulting with the services and with industry, the Pentagon is finally ready to start testing new concepts for 5G communications at five bases across the country (A: The US). The contracts to the various companies taking part in the tests, which defense officials announced on Thursday, are worth a total of $600 million.

(A: $600 million, folks, eh. [Alan chuckles.])

By Pentagon standards, that sum isn’t enormous. But the experiments offer companies a chance to refine 5G offerings that will be key to their businesses in the future, and will reveal how industry and the military will manage and share spectrum. That has huge implications for the future of the telecommunications industry and the way consumers use the Internet.

(A: We all exist for these businesses now, eh, you understand that. And the Pentagon takes money from you to pay for it all too, eh.)

“These are really at-scale experiments. They aren’t just little demonstrations in a small area, like a science experiment,” Joseph Evans, the director for 5G in the Office of the Director of Research and Engineering, told reporters on Thursday. “These are at-scale deployments of 5G technology and an evaluation of DOD (A: Department of Defense.) and industry dual-use” applications.

(A: Interesting. You see, there’s your fascism again. There’s your military [Alan chuckles.] working with industry, eh. There ya go.)

The test sites include:

Joint Base Lewis-McChord in Washington, focusing on augmented and virtual reality training.

Naval Base San Diego in California, focusing on smart warehousing.

Marine Corps Logistics Base in Albany, Georgia, focusing 5G smart warehousing but for vehicles.

Nellis Air Force Base in Nevada, focusing on distributed command and control.

Hill Air Force Base in Utah, focusing on dynamic spectrum sharing.

The list adds Nellis to the group the Defense Department announced back in February, when it began asking for industry participants and seeing a “very enthusiastic” response, Evans said.

(A: Well, there's always enthusiastic responses when you've got big bucks at play with the corporations and stuff, eh. [Alan chuckles.] Yep. So, dynamic spectrum sharing is one of the terms they use here too. It says…)

The Department reserves key areas of the mid-band spectrum for radar and other uses. Part of the reason China has more 5G users than the United States is that the Chinese government has allowed select industry players to use certain parts of the spectrum inside the country. This helped Huawei, for example, evolve into a key player in the 5G equipment market.

(A: So they’re trying to pretend…)

The United States is playing catch-up.

(A: Like I’m sure the US is way, probably even ahead of Huawei.)

The experiments to take place at Hill Air Force Base, involving high-powered radars, will help the Defense Department figure out how to open up portions of that highly lucrative mid-band spectrum to industry.

That’s also part of the reason too that they really demanded, some years back remember, that the TV sets all go digital really. That’s because they wanted the bands, ultrahigh frequency and VHF frequency bands, but they’re going into a whole bunch of different bands, even into medium bands too with some of the things as well. So I’ll put these things up as well for those that care about what’s going on with the 5G.

Stop scaring us into an economic abyss: From chairman of Ocado Stuart Rose tells Ministers to cease pumping out propaganda, end the farcical 10pm curfew and give us all the confidence to get on with our lives - dailymail.co.uk / 11 Oct 2020

That's from The Mail on Sunday. This article by David Rose talks about the fact that business is getting destroyed, and the government is an absolute disarray with its ridiculous legislations and its contradictions and everything else. And the very fact that government is just a kind of screwup, like a cacophony of propaganda and public display. A show. Government reminds me of a chicken coop and the farmer puts the chickens in the coop and they squawked at each other. That's what Parliament is. They're not the bosses by any means at all. The big corporations way above them are the bosses. They financed them in. The government is ridiculous [Alan chuckles.] in the way it's handling it. It isn't handling anything. It's a disaster. Of course it is. But folk are, you know, everything is getting destroyed under the farce of it all.

Another article too is called…

The Covid Deception

paulcraigroberts.org / 28 Sept 2020

We have been deceived by public health authorities about Covid, partly from public authorities' ignorance of the virus, its spread and treatment, but mainly on purpose.

One reason we were intentionally deceived by public health authorities, and continue to be deceived by them, is to create a market for a Covid vaccination. (A: That's Paul Craig Roberts who says this too. I don't believe that's just the purpose at all. But that's definitely a part of it, is a Covid vaccination.) There are billions of dollars of profits in this, and Big Pharma wants them. The financial connections between public health authorities and Big Pharma means that WHO, NIH, and CDC also desire mass vaccinations. If there are not enough people scared out of their wits to voluntarily seek vaccination, the chances are vaccinations will be made mandatory or your ability to travel, and so forth, will be made dependent on being vaccinated.

(A: He also goes into the voting at home, that's what is frightening folk into voting by mail…)

…the Covid threat justifies voting by mail from the safety of one's home. Voting by mail means that no winner can be declared on election night. The mail-in votes will have to be counted as they come in. The delay in declaring an election winner allows time for more propaganda that Trump has (1) fraudently rigged his reelection or (2) has lost and won’t step down. As the presstitutes speak with one orchestrated voice, whether Trump wins or not will be buried in reports that he lost and refuses to step down or that he won by fraud.

Even if Trump survives the color revolution planned for him, he will be under attack as an illegitimate president just as he was during his first term when he was allegedly elected by “Russian interference.”

(A: Which has really fallen through, that one. [Alan chuckles.] Actually if you read the report by Mueller eh, most folk haven’t read it. It’s quite fascinating. Because it wasn’t Russian interference. They do mention a country over and over, which I won’t. There was definitely interference, but it was not Russian, you know, that was in the Mueller report.)

This will suffice to prevent a renewal of his attack on the Globalist Establishment—listen to his first inaugural address—and again sideline his desire to serve peace by reducing the dangerous tensions with Russia, a policy that deprives the military/security complex of its valuable enemy.

It goes on and on talking about color revolutions too, and how again this whole postal, the idea of posting in the vote is open to an awful lot of fraud as well, etc., etc. I'll put that up as well.

Trump’s Refusal to Commit to a Peaceful Transition Is a Wake Up Call for Civil Servants

govexec.com / 8 Oct 2020

Whistleblowers can play a critical role in the integrity of the election and its aftermath.

(A: Again this is from the site for civil servants, eh. Like you think they’re impartial? Phew! [Alan laughing.] Quite something. I tell ya, I’ve never seen so much audacious commentary by folks that are supposed to serve the Constitution, you know.)

Donald Trump’s recent refusal to commit to a peaceful transition of power

if he loses the election should cast away all doubt that a free and fair election is in peril and that our democracy (A: It's a republic for goodness sake.) is on the edge.

For months President Trump has sown fear about the integrity of the November 3 elections, baselessly claiming that millions of fraudulent votes will be cast to defeat him. Trump protégés have busily purged state registration rolls, sharply limited polling places in blue districts, and attempted to hinder the U.S. Postal Service's capacity to process historic levels of mail-in ballots due to the pandemic.

None of this is surprising. Trump has told more than 20,000 lies since assuming the presidency, according to the Washington Post fact-checker. He was impeached for freezing security aid to Ukraine in order to pressure its president to falsely state that Joe Biden was under investigation. We learned about Trump's "perfect call" first from an anonymous Intelligence Community whistleblower, and then from former Army Lt. Colonel Alexander Vindman. Both suffered a campaign of bullying, intimidation, and retaliation by President Trump … (A: …blah, blah, blah.)

(A: This is supposed to be impartial civil servants, eh? This is the stuff that they're reading here. [Alan laughing.])

We need more courageous whistleblowers given the wanton lawbreaking of the administration.

N-n-n. It goes on and on, it's quite a long article. I'll put it up anyway for those that care to see what the civil servants are reading. [Alan laughing.]

The World Health Organization…

WHO (Accidentally) Confirms Covid is No More Dangerous Than Flu

off-guardian.org / 8 Oct 2020

Head of Health Emergencies Program "best estimates" put IFR at 0.14%

(A: Now, for those who love to play little, if you still get a pencil and paper out for mathematics and so on…)

The World Health Organization has finally confirmed what we (and many experts and studies) have been saying for months – the coronavirus is no more deadly or dangerous than seasonal flu.

The WHO’s top brass made this announcement during a special session of the WHO’s 34-member executive board on Monday October 5th, it’s just nobody seemed to really understand it.

In fact, they didn’t seem to completely understand it themselves.

At the session, Dr Michael Ryan, the WHO’s Head of Emergencies revealed that they believe roughly 10% of the world has been infected with Sars-Cov-2.

(A: Amazing they can even come up with the statistics, eh, 10%. How would you know? Hm? How would you know? You have to test everybody on the planet to come out with any percentage at all. But they love to throw these figures out there. So “they believe”, I guess it’s a religion, eh…)

….that they believe roughly 10% of the world has been infected with Sars-Cov-2. This is their “best estimate”, and a huge increase over the number of officially recognised cases (around 35 million). (A: Right.)

Dr. Margaret Harris, a WHO spokeswoman, later confirmed the figure, stating it was based on the average results of all the broad seroprevalence studies done around the world.

As much as the WHO were attempting to spin this as a bad thing – Dr Ryan even said it means “the vast majority of the world remains at risk.” – it’s actually good news. And confirms, once more, that the virus is nothing like as deadly as everyone predicted.

The global population is roughly 7.8 billion people (A: Right.), if 10% have been infected that is 780 million cases. The global death toll currently attributed to Sars-Cov-2 infections is 1,061,539.

That’s an infection fatality rate of roughly or 0.14%. Right in line with seasonal flu and the predictions of many experts from all around the world.

0.14% is over 24 times LOWER than the WHO's "provisional figure" of 3.4% back in March. This figure was used in the models which were used to justify lockdowns and other draconian policies.

(A: Remember they were using it too in that Neil Ferguson's, [Alan chuckles.] in England, using his different computer modeling programs to come out with these amazing figures. So it says…)

…24 times LOWER than the WHO's "provisional figure"

In fact, given the over-reporting of alleged Covid deaths, the IFR is likely even lower than 0.14%, and could show Covid to be much less dangerous than flu.

None of the mainstream press picked up on this. Though many outlets reported Dr Ryan's words, they all attempted to make it a scary headline and spread more panic.

Apparently neither they, nor the WHO, were capable of doing the simple maths that shows us this is good news. And that the Covid sceptics have been right all along.

[Alan laughing.] So there ya go. [Alan laughing.] Aahhhh.

childrenshealthdefense.org / 1 Oct 2020

(A: I mentioned this one already about the...)

U.S. military personnel will be the first subjects in nanotechnology trials in the pursuit of optimizing health and early detection of disease outbreaks.

(A: That's the Profusa one I mentioned earlier. So I'll definitely put this one up. M-hm. And how they're undermining freedom and privacy. And...)

Vaccines: the trojan horse for worldwide adoption of nanotechnology?

The Institute for Soldiers Nanotechnologies at MIT and the U.S. Army Medical Research Institute of Infectious Diseases are researching the use of nanotechnology based adjuvants in new vaccines for the military against malaria, tuberculosis, HIV and Ebola.

(A: I tell ya, they're really putting in some amazing adjuvants now though and this article mentions some of them.)

…coated metal nanoparticles.

Anyway, there ya go.

Remember too, folks, again, I've got to always mention it every hour at least that you can get the books and discs @cuttingthroughthematrix.com. It tells you how to pay for them. Make a list of all my sites listed on the .com site in case the .com site goes down. You can use PayPal to pay for them, Cash, checks, and Money Gram works as well. So does I think you can get a little check from your bank if you don't have ones yourself and get little orders and you can send them. Or some cash even, cash is fine. The mail gets through without a problem here. Don't ever register mail, it will definitely hold it up. [Alan chuckles.] Regular mail gets through no problem at all. So it's up to you. Donations are fine and are really welcome. Because it costs a lot of money to do what I'm doing. Believe you me it does. And all the sites I'll have to pay for too. Nevermind even replacing bits and pieces of equipment that bust all the time as you well know. The gadgetry of computers and so on is not so robust as they make it out to be. Again, everything is so disposable, isn't it? Not made to last.

I was reading an article by a guy in Russia who was, he put forth the premise, he says, well who would survive better for a big crisis, like Covid or whatever, if they shut everything down? …just out of, you know, interest sake, the US with all its massive industries, that it had anyway at one time, or the Soviet Union? He said that it would probably be the Soviet Union, or Soviet countries, the ex-Soviet countries because they didn't have competition in whatever they made. Even in the cars or anything else, he said, or home utensils and things like that, he says, they were made to last because there was not, there was no built-in obsolescence in them or limited lifespan. They were built to last because there is no competition. You didn't have to keep buying stuff, so make them cheaper and cheaper and cheaper to produce. But he says, so these things in Russia were meant to be repaired and to last for years and years, including your refrigerators and everything.

And it's so true, isn't it? All the junk that we have today, if you really had something that closed you down big time, um, and you didn't have the cash to buy anything new, and you couldn't get anything new, you try repairing them, the junk that we are living with, on every possible level, because it is junk, it really is junk. Everything is such darn junk, isn't it? It doesn't last long at all. It's not meant to. The same with the computers, they'll come up with the next version, the next version, the next version, or upgrades to the version you've got, and eventually you get to keep buying and buying and buying. It's all conology again.

Let me see now, here is…

Cineworld 'to close all cinemas in the UK and Ireland this week'

news.sky.com / 5 Oct 2020

The industry has been struggling during the pandemic and has taken another knock after the latest Bond film was pushed back.

(A: Well, that’s a disaster Bond films are getting pushed back, eh.)

Cineworld is considering closing all of its cinemas in the UK and US this week because of the impact of coronavirus. (A: Oooooooo.)

(A: So there ya go. It says Cineworld is one of the world’s biggest cinema operators. I think it’s 39 of, I don’t know if it’s 39 operators, or they’re the 39th, or they have 39. But anyway, it’s one of the biggest ones.)

The decision may be announced as early as Monday with the chain's bosses preparing to write to Boris Johnson and culture secretary Oliver Dowden to say the industry has become "unviable".

(A: No kidding.)

I think, was it Disney, Walt Disney, or Disneyland or [whatever] you call it, had just laid off thousands of their workers as well, you know, backup workers that they had working.

Sweden Spared Surge as SARS-CoV-2 Infections Stay Low articles.mercola.com / 1 Oct 2020

While health experts in the U.S. and many other countries are warning of a second wave of COVID-19 as we move into fall and winter, Sweden does not expect the reemergence of widespread contagion, as herd immunity appears to have been established.

(A: Well, that’s what happens when you don’t lock folk down. You all end up being exposed to it and you get immune to it, you see. That’s what happens normally with all these illnesses, viral illnesses. That’s what happened with Sweden.)

Rather than locking down the whole country, Sweden only temporarily closed high schools and colleges, banned gatherings of more than 50 people and asked seniors over the age of 70 to self-isolate.

(A: Their economy kept going. Nothing was shut down.)

…the primary goal has been to slow the spread to avoid overwhelming medical services.

(A: They still were not overwhelmed anyway.)

As of mid-September 2020 Sweden’s infection rate had reached an all-time low. Covid 19 related deaths were at zero. 22 of 31 European countries, most of which enacted strict lockdown, had higher infection rates.

(A: It’s true, for the countries that shut them down, had higher infection rates.)

As a result to their sensible approach to the pandemic, Sweden is also largely escaped the financial ruin and skyrocketing mental health problems experienced in other areas including the US.

There’s a war to destroy the West. There really is. So they're not worrying about it in Sweden, a resurgence. And lots and lots of testing doesn't mean you're ill. [Alan chuckles.] If you get fragments of long dead viruses, little particle bits of them by these tests, the PCR tests, it doesn't mean you are ill with it. You're going to have them anyway, you know.

Interestingly enough I read early on, I think it was last February or March, they were finding that folk that were getting tested in some of the places where they were testing them, like clinics, the PCR tests, they were actually contaminating the swabs when they pulled them out of the tubes, because the particles were all over the places where the folk were coming into get tested. The rooms were contaminated. There's more folk getting the thing in the hospital. I've got articles too that I'll put up as well, they're getting it in the hospital. Wherever you've had people who have been ill, who have had it, who have shed it, you end up with the particles on the walls, the floors and everywhere. And they don't just stick there, a bit of a breeze comes in, there's doors open, and they float up and out in the air again. And you breathe it in. And you, oh, you’re positive. No, you're not, you've got particles of long dead viruses. It really is, don't forget the inventor of the PCR test, a guy who got all kinds of world awards for it and so on, said it's not for diagnosing, it's useless for diagnosing disease, it's not meant for that. But facts don't matter, right.

Last orders before curfew! Boris Johnson calls in the Covid vigilantes as millions in North and Midlands face travel bans (A: I mean, we have travel bans, eh.)

and pub closures (A: They're closing them, so you've got to be out, and I think they want no one in the streets by about 10 PM or something.)

as No.10 (A: That’s the Prime Minister’s residence.)

offers local leaders 'cash for crackdowns' – (A: I guess they’re paying them off to crackdown.)

while daily infection rate hits 15,166 (A: Now that's not disease, folks, that's not ill.)

with 81 deaths (A: Now, at this time of year you're going to find a lot of folk just dying when, with the weather changing. It happens every year. 81 deaths. It doesn't mean they've died of Covid. We're back to the same con again, right, where they're putting everybody down as Covid if you happen to test positive for having particles in your nostrils. [Alan chuckles.] Mmmmm. What an incredible con this is, you know. It's criminal, it's Criminal what they've been doing, that's the term for it. And knowingly too, they know what they're doing at the top. So anyway it says...)

Last orders before curfew! Boris Johnson calls in the Covid vigilantes as millions in North and Midlands face travel bans and pub closures as No.10 offers local leaders 'cash for crackdowns' - while daily infection rate hits 15,166 with 81 deaths

dailymail.co.uk / 11 Oct 2020

The deployment of the 'Covid vigilantes' is an effective admission from Downing Street that the national programme has failed.

Millions of people in the Midlands and the North are facing travel bans and the shutting of pubs, with local communities tasked with enforcing the Test and Trace programme.

(A: Don't even bother testing and tracing, it's a joke. It's meant to increase the hype and fear, that's what it's meant to do.)

People could face fines if they travel between high and lower risk areas or breach orders to self-isolate.

The deployment of the 'Covid vigilantes' is an effective admission from Downing Street that the national programme has failed.

Thousands of pubs across northern England could be closed on the basis of what critics claim is a 'dodgy dossier' (A: Meaning nonsensical.) of evidence presented by Chief Medical Officer Chris Whitty.

(A: They're trying to say, you see...)

...Professor Whitty showed MPs data which purported to show that 33 per cent of infections may be occurring in pubs, bars, cafes and restaurants.

He proceeded to tell them that a 'significant proportion' of exposure to the virus was taking place in such establishments.

But the conclusions were drawn from a very small sample which has since been criticised as being 'incredibly thin' data and a 'dodgy dossier'.

You see, facts don't matter though, they'll stick to it, you see. In fact as I’ve said before, there's more folk catching it in the hospitals when they come in for other things, then they catch it in the hospitals. Facts don't matter. They want the people locked down like a wartime scenario, you see. Emergency powers, lock down, ooohhhhhh.

Also this one here. You always think, people don't think too far, and it's explained it to them, or they're told to think about it. Again, this is the control the media has over you, eh. It all works together to make sure you have the impressions about topics that they want you to have. But you think of folk, think of organizations, we've heard of the USAID, eh? USAID is the US agency for international development. Again, it's part of the military establishment for getting funds to different groups and so on, or White Helmets, you name it, the groups that can don, you know, battle helmets one minute and put white ones on the second, for the photographs and stuff like that. It's all a con. But they also are famous for getting money to the different terrorist organizations in areas where they're supposed to go to help folk, you know, we're here to help. There's nothing IS what it says it is anymore.

How USAID Global Health Improves Data Sharing, Helps People in Need and Saves lives

govexec.com / 25 Aug 2020

(A: But if you listen to this article and think about what it's saying here, right...)

The US Agency for International Development (USAID) integrates US foreign policy with the financial support needs of developing countries.

(A: Right. So is that saying that the US is there to help develop developing countries? Is it, you know, do you think that’s what it’s for?)

The agency's mission is to expand democracy and free markets while improving the lives of individuals in undeveloped and crisis-ridden parts of the world.

(A: That mostly includes, I think, or they give them prominence, are nations that the US went into wipeout into the Stone Age. Hm. So is that why the agency is there? It’s there to expand democracy? Remember Operation Iraqi Freedom under Bush Junior. He had that trooper, famous little shot they had of this guy standing there in front of these angry residents [Alan chuckles.] of Iraq, and he shouts, we’re help to you help you, you stupid, and he says, effers, you know and bring you democracy. And they’re all looking at him like, well, who needs democracy, is that what you’ve got, hm, back home? Mmmmmm. So here they are, the USAID is there to expand democracy. I guess that's after you bomb the places. And in free markets where you've destroyed all developments and factories and so on like they did in Iraq by the way.)

while improving the lives of individuals in undeveloped and crisis-ridden parts of the world.

Within USAID, the Bureau for Global Health (A: There’s a Bureau for Global Health, you know that.) allocates over $5 billion annually to support programs that combat infectious diseases, help prevent child and maternal deaths, and control the spread of HIV/AIDS.

USAID Global Health wanted a more effective way of aggregating and disseminating the program data it had been collecting from health systems worldwide for over 60 years, in areas such as food security, child health, and pandemic threats. Due to unique data collection challenges in each of the 80 countries it served, the bureau struggled in its mission to empower front-line workers to improve health systems and outcomes through data-driven decision making and analysis.

(A: Now, when you see this terminology over and over, data-driven decisions, you go into the Great Reset, it’s data-driven, right, that’s what you’re saying, the same term, data-driven. And it means it’s all connected, right.)

Not enough of the data was reaching the people who needed it, and when it did, the scattered nature of how it was collected resulted in a low level of trust in the data sets. USAID Global Health needed a way to collect more data and use it to its fullest potential.

(A: And it's going to get to the point eventually, I think. This again is by this particular news site that caters to US federal employees, this one. It mentions the company that's kind of again pushing for the contract to collect this data for USAID and other organizations. It's like an ad in a sense, like most of these articles of news are. They're really ads, aren't they. But you've got to realize that this one organization, never mind the whole cost of it, they actually used $5 million to support programs to combat infectious diseases. That's just one part of their budget obviously. Now they've got...)

Tableau's dashboards to turn that goal (A: ...of data collection and so on...) into a reality.

(A: So this is what they're pushing, this company, Tableau.)

Tableau's dashboards to turn that goal into a reality.

(A: So it's quite interesting. It says...)

This content is made possible by our sponsor Tableau; it is not written by and does not necessarily reflect the views of GovExec’s [Government Executive] editorial staff.

You've got to understand, a lot of the data testing has been done though the military, the US military across these countries. I've mentioned before, the military have been, they go around with little tablets, there are special tablets and so on. They take iris scans of the people in these countries, Iraq and different countries, and Afghanistan. They take fingerprints of them. Men, women and children. Their names. Complete data. All this experimentation has been done in these countries by the military so that it can be used back home now. You getting the point? For the Great Reset and for the Fourth Industrial Revolution.

It's all been done elsewhere under the guise of warfare scenarios and emergency powers and necessity. They've got all the data, all tried and tested for the gadgetry. Hhhch. And again, once again everybody's a product including the defeated nations, for big high-tech sales pitches and so on and for their products. Because they say we are, we are part of the, we are the business, we humans are the business, folks, we are THE business. Without us these companies would have nothing to sell anything to, or to make excuses to why they must sell us these things, hm, to track and trace and etc. etc. etc. This is the big business of the future, total track and tracing of everything you do from birth to death. That's what it's about, folks.

This article here now is by Craig Murray. Craig Murray was the Former Ambassador to I think some countries for Britain, you know, for England anyway. Human rights activist, eventually he became a human rights activist anyway. He's been following the Julian Assange's report for a while. He says…

Craig Murray: Where Is My Final Assange Report?

craigmurray.org.uk / 9 Oct 2020

Numerous people have contacted me in various ways to ask where is my promised report on the final day of the Assange hearing, to complete the account?

It is difficult to explain this to you. When I was in London it was extremely intense. This was my daily routine. I would attend court at 10am, take 25 to 30 pages of handwritten notes, and leave around 5. In court I was always with Julian’s dad John, and usually for lunch too. After court I would thank supporters outside the courtroom, occasionally do some media and often meet with the Wikileaks crew to discuss developments and tactics. I would then get back to my hotel room, have a bite to eat and go to bed around 6.30pm to 7pm. I would awake between 11pm and midnight, shower and shave, read my notes and do any research needed. About 3am I would start to write. I would finish writing around 8.30am and proofread. Then I would get dressed. About 9.30am I would make any last changes and press publish. Then I would walk to the Old Bailey and start again.

Apart from being exhausting, I was totally immersed in a bubble, and buoyed by the support of others close to Julian, who were also inside that bubble.

But in that courtroom, you were in the presence of evil.

(A: Now really listen to this and put yourself in that position. Again what you think about with all the propaganda and old movies of Britain and the court systems, and you know. And again, Britain would say, oh they were the first ones to develop the justice system to a higher level than any other countries and so on and so on.)

But in that courtroom, you were in the presence of evil.

(A: He’s talking about what happened to him and why he hasn’t been keeping up with it all.)

With a civilised veneer, a pretence at process, (A: …a PRETENSE, right, at process…) and even displays of bonhommie, the entire destruction of a human being was in process. Julian was being destroyed as a person before my eyes. For the crime of publishing the truth. He had to sit there listening to days of calm discussion as to the incredible torture that would await him in a US supermax prison, deprived of all meaningful human contact for years on end, in solitary in a cell just fifty square feet.

Fifty square feet. Mark that out yourself now. Three paces by two. Of all the terrible things I heard, Warden Baird explaining that the single hour a day allowed out of the cell is alone in another, absolutely identical cell called the “recreation cell” was perhaps the most chilling.

(A: So they get out of your little, tiny cell, right, for an hour a day into the recreation cell, which is just the same as the one he just got out of, right.)

That and the foul government “expert” Dr Blackwood describing how Julian might be sufficiently medicated and physically deprived of the means of suicide to keep him alive for years of this.

I encountered evil in Uzbekistan (A: This is the guy that worked for the British government.) when the mother brought me the photos of her son tortured to death by immersion in boiling liquid. The US government was also implicated in that, through the CIA cooperation with the Uzbek Security Services; it happened just outside the US military base at Karshi-Khanabad. Here was that same evil paraded in the centre of London, under the panoply of Crown justice.

(A: So it was through them, you know, using them.)

(A: I’ll say that last bit again for the hard of thinking. Because it’s awfully important. He’s talking about the military, the US military, right, and the CIA, this strange organization the CIA, which is also a foreign entity I would say, you know.)

I encountered evil in Uzbekistan when the mother brought me the photos of her son tortured to death by immersion in boiling liquid. The US government was also implicated in that, through the CIA cooperation with the Uzbek Security Services; it happened just outside the US military base at Karshi-Khanabad. Here was that same evil paraded in the centre of London, under the panoply of Crown justice.

(A: Remember, those troops are coming home too. I always said that the eating machine would come back to America, and when that happens horror can face you. They’ve already put an awful lot into the police forces over the years and expanded the forces inside America under the guise of fighting drugs and doing the home invasions or the night invasions I call them you know, no-knock things and so on. It’s just horrible. There was just another case over the weekend there where they’d go into the wrong house again, and some kid was shot by the forces, eh. Like an eight-year-old or something. Hhhhh.)

Having left the bubble, my courage keeps failing me to return to the evil and write up the last day. (A: …on the trial.) I know that sounds either pathetic or precious. I know the mainstream journalists who revel in portraying me as mentally unstable will delight to mock. But this last few days I can't even bring myself to look at my notes. I feel physically ill when I try. Of course I will complete the series, but I may need a little time.

So you understand too, when you're seeing things kind of, and he does write about the judge that they placed there, and it's not really a judge as such, you know. It's a long article. He goes on to different dates, October 8 and further back and so on. But it's amazing, it's a show trial, that's what it is, a show trial with Assange being hung out to dry. Because the big military-industrial complex will never forgive him for showing US forces literally executing a bunch of journalists… remotely from a helicopter, far, far away from where they were walking unarmed. Never forgive that. And young guys in the background shouting, yeah, yeah, and laughing and joking about it, as they slaughtered people. Never forgive that. No.

So he's seeing a show trial taking place, which is, nevermind just being exhausted but actually seeing it happen, being in the presence of evil will certainly drain you. Because you know it's a show trial, you know the judge is evil too. I don't think it's a proper judge, the woman. It's maybe a justice of the peace perhaps. But he said that she sneers at Assange, just SNEERS at him with that haughty... It's like something out of the 17, the 18th century, what you'd see in a movie with the sneering upper-class type idiot, you know, looking at someone down below them with no mercy. Because it is a show trial. So anyway he does go into it in this particular one I'll put up there with, hhhch, with what's happening in Scotland as well.

Either Nicola Sturgeon or Geoff Aberdein is Lying on Oath – and Proving Which Will Be Easy 210

craigmurray.org.uk / 8 Oct 2020

It is impossible that both Nicola Sturgeon and Geoff Aberdein are tellng the truth about their meeting on 29 March 2018, which both now say discussed allegations against Alex Salmond.

Because I think Salmond has been under investigation for behavior, I don't know if it's sexual or what it is when he was in office as well. And there's folk maybe covering up for him, who knows what it's about too.

Coronavirus Gives A Dangerous Boost To DARPA's Darkest Agenda

thelastamericanvagabond.com / 4 May 2020 / Whitney Webb

(A: That's by Whitney Webb. This goes back, you know, I think it was May 4 initially. It's a good article about now, you see. You see, people are getting trained to look at daily, daily updates on everything. Oh, I want the latest news. It's like what they buy, it's the newest whatever, the same thing. They don't realize that news is important for its content, which it will be relevant right down through time. Hm?)

In January, well before the coronavirus (Covid-19) crisis would result in lockdowns, quarantines and economic devastation in the United States and beyond, the U.S. intelligence community and the Pentagon were working with the National Security Council to create still-classified plans to respond to an imminent pandemic. (A: It’s got the links here too, right.) It has since been alleged that the intelligence and military intelligence communities knew about a likely pandemic in the United States as early as last November, and potentially even before then.

Given this foreknowledge and the numerous simulations conducted in the United States last year regarding global viral pandemic outbreaks, at least six of varying scope and size, it has often been asked – Why did the government not act or prepare if an imminent global pandemic and the shortcomings of any response to such an event were known? Though the answer to this question has frequently been written off as mere “incompetence” (A: …that’s what they always say, eh.) in mainstream media circles, it is worth entertaining the possibility that a crisis was allowed to unfold.

Why would the intelligence community or another faction of the U.S. government knowingly allow a crisis such as this to occur? The answer is clear if one looks at history, as times of crisis have often been used by the U.S. government to implement policies that would normally be rejected by the American public, ranging from censorship of the press to mass surveillance networks. (A: That’s what 9/11 was for, you know.) Though the government response to the September 11 attacks, like the Patriot Act, may be the most accessible example to many Americans, U.S. government efforts to limit the flow of “dangerous” journalism and surveil the population go back to as early as the First World War.

…the Patriot Act after 9/11 or WWI-era civilian “spy” networks…

Using this history as a lens, it is possible to look at the current coronavirus crisis to see how the long-standing agendas of ever-expanding mass surveillance and media censorship are again getting a dramatic boost thanks to the chaos unleashed by the coronavirus pandemic. Yet, this crisis is unique because it also has given a boost to a newer yet complimentary agenda that — if fulfilled – would render most, if not all, other government efforts at controlling and subduing their populations obsolete.

(A: Isn't that the truth of it. M-hm.)

DARPA Dystopia

For years, the Pentagon's Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency (DARPA) has remained largely out of sight and out of mind for most Americans, as their research projects are rarely covered by the mainstream media and, when they are, their projects are often praised as "bringing science fiction movies to life." However, there have been recent events that have marred DARPA's often positive portrayal by media outlets, which paint the agency as a beacon of scientific "progress" that has "changed the world" for the better.

For instance, in 2018, a group of European scientists accused the DARPA's "Insect Allies" program (A: Hhhch, and they do have an Insect Allies program, that's what they called it.) of actually being a dystopian bioweapons program that would see insects introduce genetically modified viruses into plants to attack and devastate a targeted nation's food supply.

(A: Now, don't laugh at that because Canada's Deadly Allies, the book, about World War II and Canada had the lead role at that time in biowarfare, including programs to create various means of destroying crops in enemy nations, and destroying their meat supply as well by way. They'd create something which, really, hhhch, pretty well put holes through the brains of cattle. Which, and it's so coincidental that the one eventually broke out in what, the 80s or 90s, in the 90s, they called it Creutzfeldt-Jakob syndrome. It would bore holes through your brain pretty well, just like the cattle. They killed the whole nation's livestock off over it in Britain. Pyramids of burning animals. The government THEN, if you want to see governments in action using the military, they flew helicopters with death squads in to all the farms. They'd just land and kill all the animals and take off and leave you with the problem. A HORROR show. The whole food supply in Britain was pretty well wiped out with them. And they used the modeling, computer modeling by guess who? Neil Ferguson did it all. I can't… I don't think they found any mad cow disease in any of the animals. But again, facts don't matter. I-yi-yi. But anyway, getting back to this one here.   Insect Allies, that's about, that could be often the Canadian version of it too. It says…)

Regardless of DARPA's assertions that it is merely a "defensive" program, it should be clear to readers that such a technology could easily be used either way (A: It's always that way, it's dual purpose, eh.), depending on the wielder.

Though DARPA's futuristic weapons of war often get the most attention from media, the agency has long standing interests in tinkering with, not just the biology of plants, but of humans. DARPA, which is funded to the tune of approximately $3 billion a year, has various avenues through which it pursues these ambitions, with many of those now under the purview of the agency's "Biological Technologies Office" (BTO), created in 2014. As of late, some of DARPA's human biology and biotech projects at its BTO have been getting a massive PR boost thanks to the current coronavirus crisis, with recent reports even claiming that the agency "might have created the best hopes for stopping Covid-19."

Most of these technologies garnering positive media coverage thanks to Covid-19 were developed several years ago. They include the DARPA-funded platforms used to produce DNA and RNA vaccines, classes of vaccine that has never been approved for human use in the U.S. and involve injecting foreign genetic material into the human body. Notably, it is this very class of vaccine, now being produced by DARPA-partnered companies, that billionaire and global health "philanthropist" Bill Gates recently asserted has him "most excited" relative to other Covid-19 vaccine candidates. Yet, key aspects regarding these vaccines and other DARPA "healthcare" initiatives have been left out of these recent positive reports, likely because they provide a window into what is arguably the agency's darkest agenda.

"In Vivo Nanoplatforms"

In 2006, DARPA announced its Predicting Health and Disease (PHD) program, which sought to determine "whether an individual will develop an infectious disease prior to the onset of symptoms." The PHD program planned to accomplish this by "identifying changes in the baseline state of human health through frequent surveillance" with a specific focus on "viral, upper respiratory pathogens."

Three years later, in 2010, DARPA-funded researchers at Duke University created the foundation for this tool, which would use the genetic analysis of blood samples to determine if someone is infected with a virus before they show symptoms. Reports at the time claimed that these "preemptive diagnoses" would be transmitted to "a national, web-based influenza map" available via smartphone.

Following the creation of DARPA's BTO in 2014, this particular program gave rise to the "In Vivo Nanoplatforms (IVN)" program. The diagnostics branch of that program, abbreviated as IVN:Dx, "investigates technologies that incorporate implantable nanoplatforms composed of bio-compatible, nontoxic materials; in vivo sensing of small and large molecules of biological interest; multiplexed detection of analytes at clinically relevant concentrations; and external interrogation of the nanoplatforms without using implanted electronics for communication." Past reports on the program describe it as developing "classes of nanoparticles to sense and treat illness, disease, and infection on the inside. The tech involves implantable nanoparticles which sense specific molecules of biological interest."

DARPA's IVN program has since helped to finance and produce "soft, flexible hydrogels that are injected just beneath the skin to perform [health] monitoring and that sync to a smartphone app to give the use immediate health insights," (A: …that means the user, I guess. Now, the links are all here to all this stuff, so they can't say it's conspiracy stuff, because you've got DARPA, putting up their own links here.) a product currently marketed and created by the DARPA-funded and National Institutes of Health (NIH)-funded company Profusa. Profusa, which has received millions upon millions from DARPA in recent years, asserts that the information generated by their injectable biosensor would be "securely shared" and accessible to "individuals, physicians and public health practitioners." However, the current push for a national "contact tracing" system based on citizens' private health data is likely to expand that data sharing, conveniently fitting with DARPA's years-old goal of creating a national, web-based database of preemptive diagnoses.

Profusa is also backed by Google, which is intimately involved in these new mass surveillance "contact tracing" initiatives, and counts former Senate majority leader William Frist among its board members. They are also partnered with the National Institutes of Health (NIH) (A: It's got links to all these sentences; each sentence has a link to it.)   The company also has considerable overlap with the diagnostic company Cepheid, which recently won FDA approval for its rapid coronavirus test and was previously awarded lucrative government contracts to detect anthrax in the U.S. postal system. As of this past March, Profusa again won DARPA funding to determine if their injectable biosensors can predict future pandemics, including the now widely predicted "second wave" of Covid-19, and detect those infected up to three weeks before they would otherwise show symptoms. The company expects to have its biosensors FDA licensed for this purpose by early next year.

(A: It's just massive business, all of this, eh. I remember reading years ago, they said at the end of the Cold War, what would all the military-industrial complex corporations do? They said, well the future will have to be in surveillance, a surveillance society where the public are basically spied on all the time, and that would be their income.)

Another long-standing DARPA program, now overseen by BTO, is known as "Living Foundries." According to DARPA's website, Living Foundries "aims to enable adaptable, scalable, and on-demand production of [synthetic] molecules by programming the fundamental metabolic processes of biological systems to generate a vast number of complex molecules that are not otherwise accessible. Through Living Foundries, DARPA is transforming synthetic biomanufacturing into a predictable engineering practice supportive of a broad range of national security objectives."

(A: Now, this is military industrial complex, they're not here to help you, folks. [Alan chuckles.] I hope you understand this.)

The types of research this "Living Foundries" program supports involves the creation of "artificial life" including the creation of artificial genetic material, including artificial chromosomes, the creation of "entirely new organisms," and using artificial genetic material to "add new capacities" to human beings (i.e. genetically modifying humans through the insertion of synthetically-created genetic material).

The latter is of particular concern (though all are honestly concerning), as DARPA also has a project called “Advanced Tools for Mammalian Genome Engineering,” which – despite having “mammalian” in the name – is focused specifically on improving “the utility of Human Artificial Chromosomes (HACs),” which DARPA describes as a “fundamental tool in the development of advanced therapeutics, vaccines, and cellular diagnostics.”

…they are also frequently promoted as a means of “enhancing” humans by imbuing them with non-natural characteristics, including halting aging or improving cognition.

DARPA is known to be involved in research where these methods are used to create “super soldiers” (A: I mean, they’ve been at that for years trying to get that.) that no longer require sleep or regular meals, among other augmented “features,” and has another program about creating “metabolically dominant” fighters. Reports on these programs also discuss the other, very disconcerting use of these same technologies, “genetic weapons” that would “subvert DNA” and “undermine people’s minds and bodies.”

(A: So there you go, these are the guys that want to, will be working with your vaccines as well and stuff like that, hm. Ftt. It's a long article actually, very well done. Lots and lots of links involved in it. I'll put it up for those that want to go through it. Just to show you how everything's connected. Nothing's spontaneous, including the coronavirus. [Alan chuckles.] It comes out at the right…)

(A: It's like 9/11, you know, the PNAC, the Project for New American Century published a list of countries they wanted to be taken down, get taken out by the US military, in the 90s, mid 90s, they said, but they would need a Pearl Harbor event to get the public support behind them to do these wars. Well, 9/11 happened and they got what they wanted. The same thing here, you see, it's the same idea. All the things that they wanted to do with the modification of your human body, etc., and to use the experimental vaccines, well, bingo! They've already got the things ready and to try to test on the people, all they need now is the right disease and bingo they get what they want. Just coincidental. These, if you want to win money get these guys to pick the lotto numbers for you because they'll always win. It's just like a.... luck, it's amazing luck they've got. The public will be behind them, just like a war, you see. Oh yeah, give us the vaccine, yeah, yeah. I tell ya. It's interesting too...)

“Next-Generation Nonsurgical Neurotechnology”

Next-Generation Nonsurgical Neurotechnology (N3) program involves using “noninvasive or minimally invasive brain-computer interfaces” to “read and write” directly onto the brain.

(A: N-n-n. Fttt. The links are here for that too.)

According to one recent report on DARPA's N3 program (A: Right.), one example of "minimally invasive" technologies would involve:

"an injection of a virus carrying light-sensitive sensors, or other chemical, biotech, or self-assembled nanobots that can reach individual neurons and control their activity independently without damaging sensitive tissue. The proposed use for these technologies isn't yet well-specified, but as animal experiments have shown, controlling the activity of single neurons at multiple points is sufficient to program artificial memories of fear, desire, and experiences directly into the brain."

(A: Hm-n-n. They talk about…)

… creating "thought-controlled" weapons …

(A:M-ftt. And so on.)

[Alan chuckles.] So there you go. The military-industrial complex just like they said the Fourth Industrial Revolution, it's all here to help you, you understand. All these rich sods at the very, very top just, they can't sleep at night because they're dreaming up new ways to help you, you see, they're just so worried about you all the time. That's how they got so rich is through worry, you see. M-hm. Also...

'Expose Warp Speed' With Whitney Webb, Chips Gels And Sensors On The Way and The Trump COVID Psyop - thelastamericanvagabond.com / 6 Oct 2020

It's quite a good little article too. I'll put that one up for anyone who wants to go into that there. Now what else have I got here? Oh yeah, I've got a whole bunch of things actually. This again is about data, data, it's all part of the same Global Reset, Fourth Industrial Revolution, etc. etc. This one here, it says…

Time for Transparency: Government Leaders Increase Public Trust with Data govexec.com / 14 Sept 2020

Today, government leaders must be able to clearly communicate trusted COVID-19 data to constituents. Data visualization and analysis capabilities can assist government leaders as they help citizens navigate the crisis.

(A: What it really is, when you look at this article, is that they should all be on board saying the same things. [Alan chuckles.] Really. Just parroting what they're told to parrot. As far as I can see that's what comes out of this article. And how those who are meant to communicate to the public or that's their job, should be communicating to the public. But also tells you about creating a Covid 19 data hub.)

…the COVID-19 Data Hub, a one-stop shop for the most relevant COVID-19-related data.

What it is, is literally just that, it's a hub to create all the things which they will be telling you across the countries. They've got all the same data from the same hub pretty well to standardize information. To make sure we don't get any truth about the Covid, ttt, I guess, that's what it really is. Everything's doublespeak, isn't it? It really is. I'll put this one up as well. Because that's where we are with all of this. We're living in amazing times, you know, AMAZING times. Where the folk haven't got a clue that most of what they're getting is fiction. Who would be so audacious as to lie to that extent!?... And bring whole nations to a halt by closing down everything that works to sustain them!?

Well, guess who?

There is such a thing as utter evil.

Like Craig Murray mentioned about the court system, you SENSE evil, it's there. When you see what appeared to be sane adult people, who are not backward in any way intellectually, put it that way, lying their faces to the detriment of other people…. dangerous, dangerous precedents.

I'm going to put up three links to the same YouTuber, a guy who went around these HUGE facilities in cities in England, three major cities and one after the other and photographed from the outside, you're not allowed on really. The head of the security guards that were there, hardly any of them could speak deep [?] [Alan chuckles.] English, and many of them were probably more recent arrivals. He actually had some altercations with one group of them. But he shows you that the places, these massive, there were acres and acres in each one of them with these huge tents everywhere and so on, completely empty except for the security guards. These are the testing centers supposedly. There was nobody in them except security guards. Literally, you know.

And yet... [Alan laughing.] He said when he walks up, I wonder how many thousands of positives they'll have for tomorrow's papers, or for tomorrow? Because no one's getting tested that he could see there at all. M-hm. These are massive facilities really that they put up, these temporary facilities. They looked almost like prisons, like the British Boar prison... I mean Britain invented the prison camp idea during the Boer War, the Boer war, and they actually called them concentration camps in the Boer War where they put the Dutch Boer farmers in them. That's what it looked like with these huge fences getting put up around these sites with all the huge tents inside, these white kind of preconstructed kind of tents. Big money too to all the contractors that get the millions thrown at them for nothing really, eh. It's astonishing. You think you're living in a just, rational, free society. What a joke. He goes around to them all and you'll see him having confrontations with security guards who wouldn't even let him in. They also try to get him off of the sidewalk even though it's public property. Again, facts don't matter.

A lot of these ones that come into the country, they put them into outfits and call them security guards, are from countries where they have no idea what democracy has been anyway. So they literally start swaggering and they think that they're working for the commandant basically. Dangerous times when they can recruit them too for contact tracing as well. Terrible things are going to happen. There's no doubt about it. You can smell it all coming. But this is the agenda.

I'll put these three YouTubes up and you can watch them and have a chuckle as they debate why he can't stand on the public sidewalk outside of it and film from the outside through the gates and so on, these massive facilities that are completely empty except for the very bored looking security guards. [Alan laughing.]

The World Bank Covid-19 Strategic Preparedness and Response Program and Proposed 25 Projects Under

Phase 1 - documents1.worldbank.org / 2 Apr 2020

Documents marked for official use only, identify the Bank’s Covid 19 program as Ending in March 2025. So the Start Date of the program is April 2020, and so five years hence, you see. I'll put the PDF up again for those who want it from the World Bank itself. It just shows you how long they want to keep this whole thing going. And by the way, it says in it that if they need to, they can put it for another few years, they can extend it after that. So there ya go, you know. This is supposed to be a changed world. The longer they can keep it locked down and terrified and so on, the better for them to bring in the new system. This is what it's about.

The World Bank remember is completely tied in with the globalists. It's part of the globalist agenda. It was set up as a private bank by very hush-hush characters that run the central banking systems as well. They finance them. They were set up remember initially by the group that became the Royal Institute of International Affairs. Before that it was the Lord Alfred Milner group. They set up the League of Nations that became the United Nations. They set up the World Bank, the IMF. They own them all. And the Bank for International Settlements. I'll put this one up to show you this isn't going to go away anytime soon. Obviously. For those who don't know.

Are you getting the picture of what's really happening here? It's not a matter of panicking people. I've always said, most folk can't handle the truth so don't try to persuade folk to come to your point of view understanding. A lot of folk can't come to it, you see, they just can't do it.

So make sure you've got a few friends, as I say, where they can sit and don't worry each other into the grave by discussing things ad nauseam. Just quietly prepare, and to help each other out and get through as best you can however the long haul.

Regardless of that, the governments are going to, hhhch, your own congresspeople are behind rioting in the streets and possibly a complete change of system. They want a post-democratic society. That also fits in with the globalist agenda. Technocracy. I've said it, through the Club of Rome, they said that democracy doesn't work, it's too cumbersome having to please the people all the time, they can't get things done, much more efficient to get rid of democracy and let experts run the show. You know. That's what it's all about.

At the beginning of the Covid scare when it started, I've got articles here where the same organizations came out and said the same things, that we need technocrats to take charge of everything to override all politicians and politics to get things done. The same mantra. Which the Global Reset is all about, and the Fourth the Industrial Revolution ...is a post-democratic society, folks. A post free-choice society where you can choose what you maybe want to work at, or how much money you do or don't want to earn, you know. All that going by the wayside. It's a planned society.

A much smaller population too, as the population will drop.

And they will bring in smart cities. The smart cities remember, the withering away... Remember I gave talks years ago from the Department of Defense, the DOD, when they said that the future is smart cities and nations might just wither away and leave big cities, you see. They named which ones would probably be running the world. They would be, it would be a kind of going back to the old cities, walled cities, there's even articles out now about walled cities, by Kissinger by the way, talking about going back to that kind of premise because of Cooooooooooooooooooviid, eh. [Alan using Kissinger's accident.] That ties in exactly with the withering away of the state, ala Karl Marx, ala globalists, ala CFR. Again, going right into what the DOD said back in 2008 or so, where they'd have these smart cities, they would be super cities and that there would be nothing outside them except rural areas. The people would be off the land, etc. Agenda 21, off the land. We're just happening to go along the same agenda right now, eh? It's just coincidence. Just like we need Pearl Harbor events for 9/11, eh, to happen [Alan chuckles.] and they get what they want on 9/11. The same kind of thing, folks.

We're living through a script and the elite always get what they want. They're using terror to do it obviously. The shattering destruction of anything which is necessary for survival to the general population, their ability to even work and support themselves being utterly destroyed. Locking down healthy. Not the sick but the healthy. [Alan chuckles.] The whole population. This is war. Planned war. For a virus which really if you get it, you generally won't know you've got it. Testing positive, even if they test positive with their terrible ridiculous tests they've got, test positive for having particles of dead viruses there, doesn't mean you're sick with it. But they keep saying cases, oh, new cases. Well, the more they test the more new cases they're always going to find. [Alan chuckles.] Because these things are always around, these types of viruses are always there in particles, folks. That's the truth of it. That's why they picked something so ambiguous as particle testing and so on. N-n. All by design.

And yet folks still go and vote thinking they're going to change it all by voting the same corrupt people back in again, dynasties of them, dynasties. [Alan chuckles.] It's just astonishing.

Alexander Hamilton was right, you know, when he and Jefferson used to argue about the systems, and the best system. Hamilton said that he preferred tyrants in the past and conquerors like Alexander the Great, folk who got things done again, you know, hhhch. He said isn't it better to have a royalty and the royal family, a king, rather than this idea of Congress, based in Rome. Rome was based on a Congress, you see, and the Senate as well. But isn't it better, he said, to have, because after all if you’ve got a royal family, you've only got the royal family and a few members to support in a life of luxury. But if you get a parliamentary Congress, he said, now you might have hundreds, maybe even thousands of people all demanding to be kept on a higher level, bigger than the population that's supporting them, a higher standard of living. And that's the truth of it. They're all like royalty, aren't they? That's… They're all, really, come on, they really are. And with the psychopathic system, it's mainly the psychopaths who go into politics anyway.

So you've got to start taking care of yourselves and each other for the long haul. It's so important. And you'll get through it all right as long as you do keep your head, as they say, keep the heed they say in Scotland, keep your heed… and don't lose it, and you'll get through. Step-by-step, that's how you get through things, step-by-step. You can work towards it, and hope, hope, we can all live in hope or even pray that the evil will fall apart.

But evil won't fall apart if the society itself is evil. You tolerate more evil the more evil society is, the more corrupt society is. That's what they say about corruption in politics and so on, what was your level of tolerance? And they say the level of tolerance in society of corruption is, depends on how corrupt the people down below are too themselves. Unfortunately the corruption is exacerbated right down to the bottom levels because of the humanistic society we've been brought into, the materialistic humanistic society. Plus the brainwashing where everybody's had to be scientific as opposed to human. That's the truth of it.

"Cutting Through the Matrix" with Alan Watt

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on October 18, 2020. I hope you're all hanging in there as we go through, well, we're actually down the throat, not just into the mouth of madness but down the throat of it too, and we're somewhere way down low where we'd rather not be obviously. Mind you, we might get expelled on the other end and then you have freedom again.

Because we're going through incredible times, preplanned agendas that took years and years to plan all this, you know. It's interesting even to come across writers who are catching on now, who weren't in part of the game you might say. Now they've caught on that this is, hhhch, this was designed years ago this whole agenda. Governments don't come out with unified agreements in such detail for implementation just like that. Governments take years to implement anything. Except taxing you, you know, they can always adjust your taxes and rob you as they always have done.

We're going through an amazing agenda. It goes way back, way back, many, many, many, many years. In fact, they came out rather openly, more openly in the 1970s. I've mentioned this before with the Club of Rome and The First Global Revolution, a book they came out with, the big, big massive think tank that works on behalf of the true globalists and the United Nations as well. You've got to understand, the world is not run by your politicians. It really isn't. They can hire these politicians a dime a dozen because they're psychopaths. They have histories, not pleasant histories generally too, they're all blackmailable, and they'll all do anything they're told to appease their masters, and their paymasters ultimately. And it's not the public that they serve. That's the truth of it. That is the truth of it.

When you realize, and it's not just recently either, it's been this way for an awful, awful long time, you know, you can't go through history without shaking your head, until it's ready to fall off, you know. (That must be Covid.) But the thing is, you keep stumbling across these incredible admissions that are in records, governmental records, from different countries, that really… I mean, you understand, you're going through a whole lockdown of the whole planet pretty well. All unified. As they say, lockstep, from the Rockefeller plan in 2010, they mentioned that term. But it was much older than that. You've seen it before, you don't realize you seen these things before. Because you weren't alive then. [Alan chuckles.] Maybe. [Alan laughing.] Maybe some of you are lucky enough to be well over 100.

But when you look at the huge agendas of change on the world, in power plays, and treaties that bound countries together so that they go to work collectively against other potential enemies... They might've been the friends yesterday, but they might have discovered gold on their land or something, so the Allied nations would go and invade them to make sure they didn't squander the gold, you know, inappropriately. That's the kind of things that history is really made up of, you know. The history of England is interesting, like most countries, it’s interesting. When you look at the machinations that went on in history, they call it the Dark Ages at one point. A bad name indeed. What they tried to say is that not much happened for a long time. Well, lots of things happened for over many, many centuries in England in Britain. It wasn’t dark at all, you know.

You’ll find that the monasteries at one point had a big, big say across the whole of Europe. They brought some kind of order in. Because people were pretty barbaric at times. They didn’t have a unified code of ethics on anything. Never mind thou shalt not. You have definitely a kind of beginnings of a commercial structure. Again, using money. I’m not all for that either mind you but that’s the technique that came in with really the Normans big time, was more so this use of money. Taxation came along with it. There was always feuding that went on between the nobility and the religious orders. The religious orders did stand up for the people, you know, believe it or not they actually did. That became a nuisance at times for nobility and kings.

So you never had a perfect peace on the planet. A big story to that too, that’s a completely different thing. It’s a spiritual story. I’ve mentioned it before, and I won’t go into it in too much detail. But the fact is, this is the ‘middle plane’ as they used to call it. The earth, you see. The earth. Above you have spirit. But which also combines on the earth. Then you have matter itself, which is the world of matter. The two are always in conflict, you see. It’s the same with you as a person. You’re composed of two different elements. Maybe most of you anyway, I don’t know, hhhch, about all of you. But the fact is you always have this thing inside you that you know there’s something bigger than just all this. And you hope there is. Because look around you. Look around you, eh.

All you get dished out by the system are professors and doctors of this and doctors of that to guide you, etc. As time goes on they use more tax money to train more of these professors and doctors of all kinds and put up their commercial system of universities, that serves an elite. That’s well established over many centuries. Then, are you really surprised about the mess you’re in? Because every mess that’s created by their sciences, you are the product too, you would make money for the solutions to the problem that they claim is there. They make money off of you like a giant herd, eh. That’s how they talk about you, for goodness sake, you know. That’s the world of money and matter, you see. Even the word mother partly derives from the same root, moter, mother, is matter. You’re born from matter in a sense.

So that’s always your battle. In the world of pure matter, survival of the fittest as the Darwinians like to call it, has always been paramount, even before Darwin came along to reiterate the same phrase. [Alan chuckles.] Because the nobility always talked about bluebloods, and the rest of you, and there were villains and vermin, etc. And peasants. You were slaves, you know, serf was just another word for slave, a form of slavery.

The world of matter, you’re trained in the world of matter. More so through the 20th century and really speeding up to the 21st century we’re in now, of, they teach you to worshiped those with the most coinage you might say. That’s all you’ll see about celebrities, you know, of all kinds. They have a massive machine that creates stars from musicians to whatever, actor, actresses, and also stars of science now. They give you these front people and say, oh these are geniuses. Like the Carl Sagan thing, it was meant to influence a lot of folk’s minds. They present them and really produce their shows for them, and they make them stars. And you will follow the stars. So their opinions become yours because you’re just a silly little surf, and they’re obviously a genius according to all the newspapers.

You never catch on. You really never catch on. Most folk never catch on to the system that they’re living in. It’s sad. That’s terribly, terribly sad. They want, there’s a truism that a lot of people want to grovel towards what they think are their betters. They’ll make themselves subservient to them. I’ve mentioned it before with the book that was put out on the Rockefellers, as an example. It’s an interesting book, it’s factual, and the history of the family. How old man Rockefeller, they don’t go in too deeply about all the scams that they did to get their money because they were monopolists. The system you live under, the Rockefeller family is one part of a collection of families, or monopoly. They don’t believe in sharing wealth. They don’t believe, either, that you should have too much of it. They want to control the means of survival for everybody on the planet. That’s food, all energy systems, and food comes into energy of course, and transportation. Everything it is to be under their domain. That hasn’t changed.

It’s the same group by the way, this massive monopoly of certain families, that run what’s called this new world order, you know. The plan has never changed. I’ve talked about the British side of it with the Lord Alfred Milner group that really helped set up the latter part of the British Empire and they ran it, and their members ran it. They talked about creating wars to advance their agenda. Of course they already had, once they had wars going they sent their own members in to take over the resources of the countries which they vanquished. Again, they had their false flag systems. They literally created the Boer War and blamed the Boers for it. It was all set up, the Jamison raid. It's explained by Carol Quigley who did a lot of the, he got access to the historical records of the CFR/RIIA that was the next stage of the Milner group and the kindergarten.

However, it hasn't changed. They don't believe, old Rockefeller believed that competition was a sin. He was literally annihilating everybody else that was trying to enter the energy business of oil and gas. Even kerosene for instance. Everything that you needed for light or heat and so on, he was taking over. It was a religious, he really meant it, that competition is a sin. You've got to understand they have a certain particular religion, these characters, eh. They're put on the planet to dominate everybody else that doesn't have the common sense to wisen up and see it for what it all is. You really don't have much of a chance under this system.

What you're living through today is the next part of the agenda. They've been hammering you for years when they hit upon the climate scam, remember. I've gone through these talks. I noticed there's a Dr Coleman, he's one of the guys who in the last few years, or recently, hhhch, has caught up to the old talks I and others have done years and years ago on this agenda. I think he's using some of it too from my archives. But he's seeing some of it. It took years and years to set up, as I say. But it's not just this part of the system. I'm saying, this is a continuation of a long-term agenda.

He did talk about the talks I gave years ago on the Club of Rome and what they said they were tasked to do as a think tank, a massive think tank. Now, don't forget who the members of the Club of Rome are. It's the same members that gave you The Population Bomb, Paul Ehrlich and so on. His wife was also a founding member on the board of the Club of Rome. It's a small world when you get down to it, you see who manages so many different think tanks and aspects of the same big agenda. They also had the coming Ice Age years ago before that too, then the global warming scam. It's all a continuation of how to terrify the public to give up your rights. That's what the Club of Rome said they were tasked with, to find something, some excuse where the folk would see it as almost reasonable to give up all their rights to be guided by the elites into basically, which is really a depopulation agenda now under the guise of sustainability. Because they said that man would be the enemy and that would fit the bill, plagues, famines and droughts and so on. Meaning, man-made, anthropogenic, right, that would fit the bill. So, man would be the enemy. And that's what you've been hammered with for years and years, from all…

...and this conglomeration, this conglomerate media associations that own all the different information, that are all on board with the same agenda, hammering you for years and years and years, it's all your fault, yada, yada, ya. They couldn't get us to just stop eating and stop purchasing things and so on. So bang, you get the Covid. That was planned, obviously plan B that was set up years and years ago to fulfill the big task of bringing in sustainability and austerity, you see. Austerity. When you go into the global reset and the fourth global revolution, it's spelled out for you in black-and-white what I'm talking about. For sustainability, and you've got to go into less consuming. Eventually of course they want to, as I've said for years, eliminate high-protein diets, like any kind of meat eventually. For the general masses, not for the elite.

So you're living through a huge agenda. Remembering too that there's a generation out, a lot of them in the streets actually, who are so skinny, but they literally are, they're activists for Extinction Rebellion, been trained through their college, even from the early schooling, to be radicals for this, you see. They don't know that, they don't know they were trained deliberately with their minds poisoned so they can never, there'll be no debate EVER with them on anything. Because they're indoctrinated. This is what you get when you get indoctrinate children, they become indoctrinated adults. And they become terribly dangerous because they can become homicidal, and that's what you use for revolutions. And all revolutions as far as I'm concerned are run by the same select group at the top across the world.

Now, I've said too that you couldn't have this sudden, the BLM protest at the same time with Antifa, going around threatening folk in the streets. And no one is coming to the rescue of the ordinary citizenry at all. You've got mayors calling them off. They're well-paid and funded and they're put in their place by the same characters who are bringing you the world austerity you're going into, and the world lockdowns by the way. A small group runs the world really.

The answer is not just to keep fighting the facts. Because facts don't matter. I gave these talks, I gave the new normal talks back in the 90s, that they would give you new normals. Everybody has picked up on that one. I explained to them that they always give you new normals. It was on a show that I was on, and I came out with it. I was on international radio at the time. I talked about new normals, how it had been used before, but I used the term, and I wrote a poem about it as well. That's how they do it, they give you new normals, which are new realities, you see, and any reality becomes normal after a little while.

I was thinking about that, and I thought about all these folks that are, yeah, you've got all the paid protesters, the leaders who get pension plans and the whole thing by the way for doing what they're doing because they work for big foundations and intelligence agencies. The followers don't know. But you definitely do have a written off generation. Again, we've been through the generations, Ys all the way to Z and so on, written off in a post-, uh, hhhch, working society. They have to be given universal basic credits, for little while mind you, a basic income for little while. But not forever. Because you're supposed to go down the tube. And you're supposed to eventually, I'm not kidding you, this is like Logan's Run, but you're supposed to eventually start, and you'll see it, you're going to see people volunteering within the next 15 to 20 years, youngsters, for euthanasia, to save the world. We've already had, I remember giving the talk many years ago, I says you'll shortly see youngsters coming out and saying they'd like to be sterilized. I said, we've already had that happen. But now it's the next step of that, you see that happening. No doubt about it.

Because you can indoctrinate the youth. By incredible techniques today, they're so well understood and well perfected, the techniques of indoctrination, they can literally wrap your emotions around in like a spiral until you'll be delighted to help the world. And get your photographs, maybe even interviews in the newspaper before your sacrifice in some way or another. You see, everything that's happened has happened in eons gone by with sacrifices, king for a day. King for a day is awfully important, folks, because those who rule the world have much more inside of them then you'd imagine. You certainly wouldn't like what's in them if you really understood it.

It isn't just psychopathy. It's the symptoms of psychopathy, I've mentioned this before. I've also mentioned, if you go into psychopathy and you line up the signs and symptoms, you could also get the similar signs and symptoms of someone who's possessed, to a certain extent, into different kinds of possession, you understand, and harassment. But when you get real possession, and when you get perfect possession, they won't act out as though they're just going to scream and do crazy things and so on. That can happen too. They can be very calm in fact and very powerful. At the same time they can stand back and help not just plan wars but order wars and slaughters across the world. They will validate what they're doing in almost scientific terms of necessity, you see.

They are very believable, and that's the technique of the psychopath, their believability. Great manipulators. Often, they're likable too. It can be hard to hate a psychopath. Even one who has decided to have wars, which you will do the fighting for and the dying for, and the folk on the other end of it will be dying too. But they're quite calm about it. The Kissinger type jumps to my mind and others of his ilk as well. The late Brzezinski too. They're definitely, these characters are definitely... There's something beyond just simple psychopathy there. As far as I'm concerned. That's my opinion.

But when you're close to some of these people, you sense it. It is, you know, you'll sense something other, otherworldly about them. It's, to me it's physically tangible. And I can't even live in cities because of the neurotic energy that I sense in the cities, you know. The only time I can get peace in a city is in the middle of the night when most folk are sleeping. You feel that it's more of a calmness that sets in, a different brainwave or something. But me, I personally can't live in the city because, and I won't live in the city because of the madness in it.

Cities really have a long history in the occult as to why they're there in fact and what they serve. Even the folk who don't, hhhch, who live in them often don't know it themselves. When you're caught in something like a whirlpool you don't realize it at times until it's too late. That's what cities are, they're magnets. They're, again, neon lights that attract the moths, you know. You're the moth and you get attracted to the light. For a while you'll be hypnotized by it and think it's wonderful and so on. Until you realize now you're caught and trapped. Because your rent will be atrociously high and you've got to work at some awful job, or maybe a few jobs to try and get the money to pay it. And you can't even save up to get out of it eventually. So it's a big trap.

I was thinking about that too, as a whole other side of the occult too, this city idea goes back thousands of years. I've mentioned this years ago too when I did the old talks about Cain, you know. Cain. Again, a rebel. And what Cain symbolized. There's a lot of characters in the Bible symbolize not just people but, really, um, techniques, states of being, that will repeat itself over and over. But Cain, you have Cain literally was condemned for killing his brother. You have this odd conversation in the Bible where God asks Cain, where's your brother? And he says, am I my brother's keeper? There's so much more to that little statement too, of what it really signifies.

Because the system we're in is an evil system. I have no doubt about it. This system of the pure, the material world [Alan chuckles.] that you're sunk into, and you're taught to worship though the richest on the planet, they make them stars and celebrities, and folk will grovel in front of them. Just like I mentioned before, Rockefeller, after he had the militias turn on the strikers in their tents and machine-gunned them, families, when the miners were striking he had them… He got a bad name and so he employed early public relations experts, that knew, by the way, Bernays. They knew each other, and one of them became Prime Minister of Canada eventually, that was his reward. They really made Rockefeller out to be a benevolent character, who went around the miners to help. He went around, with publicity campaigns, to some of the miners houses, to the shacks they lived in, and sympathized with them. The author said, it's so sad to see the ordinary people, who had been abused and a lot of them killed, with the relatives and so on, groveling. They kowtow, like they doff-the-hat type thing, they feel humble in front of this powerful wealthy guy that already… That's the power of the personalities that they give to oversee the world.

They're demons, these characters. That's what they are.

There's no doubt about it, the public relations campaigns that they do can convince the people of anything. But people will, a lot of folk will kowtow to the, you should look them in the eye for goodness sake. You don't doff... It's like kneeling, all this kneeling stuff that they're trying to train you to do... You don't kneel for any human being. It took us centuries to fight that, CENTURIES to get off our knees. And so slickly you've been through it, the old guilt complex, that's got nothing to do with reality, that try to train you to get on the knees, you know.

Don't get on your knees for any human being. Hm.

Ach. It's so... Folk have no idea of the psychological warfare that's played on them. By teams and teams, like panels of experts. Huge think tanks dedicated to each part of this agenda. Not just the Covid idea with the SAGE group in Britain and their psy-op warriors that work with them. That's all been published by the groups in the SAGE group [Alan chuckles.] where they were taught, they were telling the media to intensify the fear, in their stories writing about Covid, to try to create, exacerbate anxiety in the public so they'll comply with orders. Can you believe that? And you've got to do it all again, back on your knees, okay massa, okay.

Folk have to redeem some dignity. At least some of them. Most won't. I gave these talks many, many years ago, that most folk literally will give up everything for security. Not just me, other people, Bill Cooper did it too, where they would give up freedom for security, and a lot of folk, he said, would love socialism. Because you don't have to think about anything. No big decisions to make because they're all made for you.

That of course is what the new world order, the whole world, for the global reset idea and the Fourth Industrial Revolution, it's a cradle-to-grave monitoring system. You won't have a thought of your own pretty well. Maybe the most you'll have is what movie to watch, that's about it. Everything else will be made for you, where you can go, that day, how to get there, from your home to that place, will you be allowed to go out at all? Because you understand, the Covid is not supposed to ever go away. Bill Gates has already said, and others to follow. What d’you think he means by that?

This is your whole life under a form, and an excuse, by medical tyranny, that's the tyranny. It's a beautiful tyranny, really, isn't it? Anything else, you know, the guns in the streets and the black uniforms, and the jackboots of Orwell's 1984, they don't even need that totally, at the moment. Because they've already got most of the folk complying. Just bring in people with white coats on. What a cheap way to do it, eh. At least it costs more money for the uniforms and the black outfits and the armaments. But people with cheap white uniforms, [Alan chuckles.] white coats on are going to tell you what you must do and how you must live? Hm? Then they've got the psych experts too, and how to cope with it. And even then, they'll give them white, what's a white coat got to do with your brain? [Alan laughing.] Unless they're opening it up, eh.

But this is the nonsense we're going through. Medical tyranny. It's really pretty beautiful. Again, I said before, it follows right along the agenda of Bertrand Russell when he talked about, if there's to be a tyranny, which he wanted, he wanted to eradicate the old system where folk could decide for themselves what they want to do, what they want to work at, etc. He belonged to the same groups that HG Wells belonged to. That they said there's too many folk, you know, trying to start small businesses up and doing the same kind of work and compete. Well, that's what free enterprise really is about. They don't believe in that, you see. So Bertrand Russell said, you know, a tyranny is what we need, and if there's to be a tyranny, to make it all happen, he would much prefer it to be a scientific tyranny. So here you have it, eh. You're all going to die. You're all going to die, by something you can't see. Not only that, they can't see it either, the people who said you might have it. It's all, they've given you nice pictures of things, drawings, you know. They're awfully good at drawings. [Alan chuckles.]

I can remember when they were getting the AIDS pandemic going, the big scare many years ago. They showed you ambulance workers stopping at road accidents and things, or folk collapsing in the streets for other reasons or whatever. But mainly road accidents. You'd see the ambulance attendants back in, who are getting the same propaganda you're getting now with Covid, eh. They were terrified to go near the people lying on the ground in road accidents. You'd see them almost [Alan laughing.] crawling [Alan laughing.] along the ground towards the person who was knocked down with cars, and they've got the gloves on and all the rest of it. Because at that time it was played up to be the most deadly disease ever, EVER - I was going to say invented, or created - but EVER developed by, hhhm, nature, and it really terrified everybody, eh.

You saw wards at one time, very quickly, and folk who were dying. They were the early victims, were nothing like you seeing today. They were, from diagnosis to death it was generally about a year. It was like all the symptoms you would get with cancers, that's what it was like, so quick and awful. So many folks said it's a different thing that they had initially, you know. It was all kinds of accusations, well they were giving us all these free hepatitis shots and so on, experimental and that's what they claimed, to certain groups that came down with HIV. That battle still goes on yet today but most folk have accepted now the official version. But back then the ambulance drivers and helpers were terrified of it. Because they didn't know if it was airborne, and someone, if the blood evaporating on the ground, they might breathe it in for goodness sake and get the disease. You know, that's how terror works on the mind until you're basically almost immobilized from helping other people, even if it's your job. We saw that with the Covid with the old folks homes in Montréal and different places. The staff fled eventually and left the patients.

So that's what terror does. It's well understood by the medical authorities and those who run everything how effective it can be. An unseen disease. I don't think they've given us a drawing yet though for Covid. Oh, they have! All you see is like these old sea lines used to get, and yes, they still use them, balls that would float in the sea, steel balls basically filled with it, packed with explosives. And they had spikes all over the place sticking out of them. These spikes were the detonators really, they would get driven in by the impact hitting a ship and they would ignite and boom, up goes the mine and the explosive and the ship. That's really where I think they got the idea for the Covid from, that same kind of idea.

But they haven't, and they've given lots of, the same pictures, it's always the same kind of pictures that they've drawn about it. They haven't shown you a real thing, but they've shown you the pictures that they've drawn about them. They have all these theories of how it works and so on. But with the HIV one, they literally said, oh, and they had top experts out, eh, and they says, oh yeah, we really suspect that this virus has the head of the bacterium and the body of a virus, or might have been vice versa. But they showed you this picture, it was like something out of a horror movie, with eyes and everything. [Alan laughing.] That's what terrified the public into compliance, into the so-called safe sex things and so on that were going on. But that's what they do, they give you nice drawings.

It's the same with all the different moon landings they showed you. I can remember watching one of them and one part of the craft was left going around the moon supposedly, and the rest of them went down in the little capsule part of it. Then that would blastoff, a segment, and go back up and reunite with the guy that was circling the moon and they would join together and go back to the earth and so on, that's how it was supposed to be. So they explained all this. Never mind the flag waving in the window, which shouldn't be there because there's no atmosphere on the moon. But, facts don't matter when there's big agendas.

But you also saw the ship going in towards them and after it separated. And I thought, well, if that guy is still in orbit in the moon there in part of the craft, who's following them down with the camera? Because you saw they were following them right down, eh. It was years later before they admitted it was a simulation. Well, why would you present it as real? [Alan laughing.] if you're giving us drawings and simulations? [Alan laughing.] It's the greatest way to calm the public though, well, you know, it's to make them...

Make you what? You know? Why not just say, we can't follow it in because there is no one to follow it in. Why lie to the public? You understand, once they start lying you've got to start questioning everything. The same with the AIDS one, you know, with half virus and half bacteria. They gave you I think half the page in one of the daily tabloid papers in Britain. [Alan chuckles.] So there's, you open the page and there's this big monster staring at you. This was the AIDS thing, you know, the thing that was going to devour the world.

The World Health Organization, they had all these statistics, again, even then, eh. I think that was before Neil Ferguson came out with his computer systems and that. Maybe not. Maybe it was on the go then too. But they had it worked out, the percentages of folk who would get it by the year, until literally about half the planet, maybe three quarters of the planet would get it and maybe even perish from it by the year 2000, eh. But yeah, so there's nothing new under the sun. The techniques to terrify you are awfully good.

So they studied that. They did all these, for years and years they kept putting out circular little studies and, would you fill this in? Are you terrified of ever catching this or that? What do you think about it? What's your opinion of it? Or yada, yada, ya, you know. So they can actually judge your stress level. It's much better now with computers. They get instant feedback from people all the time, who are quite happy to fill in and check off boxes for every possible reason. They don't even know who it's from most of the time, they just do it. I guess they're trained already. So they can get an idea of how well something is working in any terror campaign.

When you understand psychological warfare, you've got to understand that's how you really are ruled. That's how you've always been ruled. You've got to understand too there's other things, hhhch, forget the people in the streets who are furious and some of them are unhinged, yeah. But there's also a generation getting written off here… because the factories were given off to China by the politicians that are bringing in the Covid lockdowns. It's the same groups and same descendants of the same families by the way that are still in charge of everything, like 40 year periods, 50 year periods.

So they're going to give you a lockdown. They've written off a generation. They're going to give them a universal basic income. There's no mobility allowed anymore anyway, for them. Once you're on that income, that's you, finished, you know. Certain minorities will get certain benefits or can climb the ladder or get priorities in universities and stuff like that. But for the rest, you're written off already. So you've got to understand there's definitely more to this unhappiness than just BLM or Antifa. And the Antifa groups too, the fronts, as you well know, are the great-grandchildren and the great-great-grandchildren of revolutionaries. But the rest of the folk who follow are really discontented people, the ordinary folk, you know, they're just full of rage and fury because they have been written off.

I was thinking about that too, this right-wing/left-wing nonsense that they give you in most countries. That was always meant to stop revolutions because all sides are corrupt. You vote, you're not voting in new people because you like them. It's because you're so sick of the last lot you voted for, that obviously proved their corruption. That's why the folk, that's a great way to stop revolutions from happening every five years or so, just vote somebody else in.

And yet for years now, years and years and years it's been like, they give them two terms. That's Britain and here and everywhere else, it's almost like it's customary now. It saves a lot of time and money to go through the predictable elections. And it doesn't really matter so much when they're putting the same folk in for two terms. It saves them retraining another coterie around them that work with them. It's much more efficient for them. Everything's about efficiency on behalf of those that rule and own you. And they talk quite openly about owning you, all the big rich folk on the planet. That again, are presented as somehow stars that have the right to decide how you're going to live… because they're rich, you see, that's it.

I mean, do you think Bezos and all these characters, do you get a chance to vote for them on anything? Hm? Any of them? No. Of course you don't. So why are you accepting all of this? Why are you accepting that United Nations that you can't vote for either? Your parents didn't get to vote for them to get them in. You grandparents didn't get to vote for the United Nations or the League of Nations, you know. So don't even, why even go along with something that's got nothing, no democracy of any kind involved in it? Hm? Why on earth would you go along with something like this?

Forget these massive publicity campaigns and public relations as they tell you how wonderful it is and all the wonderful things that they're doing. Don't kid yourself, they've... Hhhch, you can get the greatest tyrants in history nowadays, that you've ever seen before in history, dressed up in suits and ties or women's business outfits and so on, managing your lives at the United Nations. They are evil corrupt stods – I'm being awfully polite here – but terribly, terribly corrupt. And they know what they're doing. They know their whole job is to con the public of the whole planet into a global system of sustainability, on behalf of those who really put their money in their pockets at the top. The WHO as well, I mean, a good chunk of the WHO is owned by Bill Gates. Small coterie really when you look around you.

Again, back to the moon, you know, there's the moon and that's what they pulled off then. And as a child, lots of the children saw that coming out, and said well for goodness sake, they're supposed to jump around like kangaroos on the moon. They could jump over each other because you'd be 1/6th of the weight they said on planet Earth. They showed you the few pounds that the suits weighed. They were maybe bulky but they were awfully light so you wouldn't get hampered with the suit. Well, no, these folk were not jumping high at all, you know. They said if you were to hit a golf ball on the moon it would just go sailing away out of sight, you know, it would be miles away maybe before it landed. That didn't happen either.

But facts don't matter when there's big agendas. But look at the money and... The whole world sat and, you know, sat up to watch the moon landing. And the preparation for it took months and months. I think in Britain they had the head of the observatory for the Royal Observatory there too. Was is Moore I think his name was, was is Patrick Moore, even he asked pertinent questions when eventually Britain, it was a few years before they got to see the guys that went to the moon. He asked them pertinent questions, and they couldn't answer them either. Like, why wasn't there any stars and things, you know? Ftt. Just little things that... [Alan laughing.]

But anyway, this is what you're ruled with, eh, this is what you're ruled with. At the same time too as they're lauding this moon thing, they're teaching children to go under desks in schools, so that they'll grow up in this sort of fear, but their governments are taking care of them. If those bad guys want to blow you away to smithereens, your guys are going to tax your parents, big time, to get better missiles to blow them out of the planet, and then you'd all go up in smoke. But at least you have the satisfaction that the whole planet was gone, you know, that made a lot of sense.

But that's what they kept folk going with for years. Generations grew up with that too. Psychiatrist made a fortune, and therapist, you know, come in and tell us your problems. All these folk would come in there. They even had little groups, grief groups, before anything happened, in case everybody got blown up. I was wondering what would happen if we all got blown up tonight. I had the same thought. And they would share their experiences. They don't pass information, they share things, you know, very communistic. But that's the world that you're brought up in. And you're taught that this is normal.

I mentioned before the movie called Threads in Britain. It was a documentary came along with it where they interviewed the guys that were in charge of not just the military but the police for the whole of Britain, and what they would do during... And they said, we'll follow this to the letter, just like the movie, and shoot folk in the streets if you were out there looking for food.

And this after a nuclear war, if it ever happened, eh. Again, you're taught that that's normal. Are you getting the picture here?

Government in a sense exists to supposedly stabilize into a system the chaos around that you have without government. Long, long ago it lost any pretense of that when they went into overlords, you see. Once you have overlords, then the greatest way to do it, or not just bring peace and security inside the nation, is to, oh, look, there's folk over there, they're going to slaughter you unless we're here to defend you and save you. So off comes the tax money again, you've got whole tiers of bureaucrats in uniform and outside of uniform all working for military organizations and so on.

Then they have psychologists because you've got to have the mind control guys in and behaviorists and neuroscientists, and how can you use them to keep the public being more efficiently working towards you, the system that you are designing, and the changes you are bringing in too, without it falling apart. So they do their best to make sure they can manipulate the minds of the public, without the public being aware that they're being brainwashed and manipulated. We've had that our whole lives long and so did your parents before you too and then grandparents.

It's so amazing when you go in, as I say, to Bernays. This guy that they wrote, they made HIM a star, you know, Edward Bernays, the nephew of Sigmund Freud. Who supposedly used his uncle's techniques of understanding the subconscious, almost the unconscious, the subconscious drives, the things that drive you that you're not really aware of and all that, and harness them into advertising and techniques to make you... Remember, what you're getting, wellness, you know, how is your wellness today? Oh I don't know. That all comes from the same techniques that Bernays was into as well, and Freud, etc. where they would replace real happiness or contentment... Contentment is a more realistic term that you should strive for. You'll never get fully content, but the thing is, you have contentment is better than being manically happy all the time and on pills. Because they try to say that if you're not laughing and out playing and having lots of sex then there's something wrong with you.

They've trained a whole generation, actually two generations that that was the normal. All from Freud's nonsense. Even though Freud said he was there to destroy the system and destroy society, coming in on the boat to New York. Folk don't even know the story behind that. But anyway, he really meant it. Bernays, there's Bernays, the nephew, and Freud again had the Oedipus complex, but it wasn't so much his mommy he was into, it was, it was Bernays' wife. [Alan chuckles.] Hhhhh, but anyway it's all in the family with these characters.

You'll find that Bernays used, he became an advisor to governments. Not just one, maybe a few different presidents. He actually used governments to his own advantage. The even set up a company, a film company, like Pathe News that was shown in the cinemas warning about the terrible dangers of communism taking over in one of the Latin American countries. I don't know if it was Venezuela or where it was. It was with the Great American Fruit company that was stationed, a big US or New York company. The company had voted in a president, and Bernays and all the shareholders were worried, you see, oh my goodness, they might, nationalized the company and start, starting to keep money for themselves for the country, for goodness sake. You can't have that. So they used the US, they got the US military to go in and overthrow the president that had been elected. That was years ago. That's what he did. The public didn't mind because they had seen on the different newscasts that he had made, preparing their minds for it, well, yeah, they've got guys over there overthrowing communism. It wasn't communists. It was just that the people wanted more of a share in keeping some of the money from their produce in their own country. [Alan laughing.]

Anyway, that was Bernays. He was so effective at it that President Wilson that said he got elected when he said he'd never bring America into the world war, the first, the great war that was on the go. Because he lied naturally because that's why they pick these guys. But Bernays was appointed to find ways to gradually persuade Americans to be all for the war. It took them a few years, but he came out with a book and different things and massive propaganda campaign about the terrible Huns. The same old stuff they used in Britain. The same kind of stuff actually with them bayonetting children and all that stuff, that they used for Serbia years and years later, and Bosnia.

So it's the same stuff. Like Wag the Dog. Always the same techniques, you see, to get the public, oh my, that's terrible, they can't get away with that and it must... It was all to make sure that America would go into the war about 1917. After three years of the American banks basically, mainly in New York [Alan chuckles.] financing all the war to make sure they'd all get their money back for the loans regardless of who apparently won. But America was to be the arbitrator of it, so they sent the American troops. This is all history, folks. This really happened this way. So much so that Bernays put a book out under Propaganda and ‘Public Relations’, that he renamed it public relations, it sounds better than propaganda, boasting about how he and teams of folk that were employed under him got America into World War I. That's how cocky they are, you know, the psychopaths. They love to boast, don't they? But that's what you're living under.

People have grandparents that fought in World War I, you know, they're all dying off now. But yeah, these guys went off thinking they were going off to fight for the good of nations. Britain still doesn't know why it went really. At least the British folk don't know and so on. There was definitely some stirring powers, you could see France on the border of Germany, sure. We know that Britain, or London, it's better to call it London, the City of London that ran the whole empire like a private business, really, knew that Germany was waaay ahead with the industrial, hhhch, their Industrial Revolution that was surpassing Britain. And that their workers were happier, they got paid more. They actually had pension plans then too for Germans, can you believe that, before World War I broke out even. Then brought in a social credit systems too for welfare and all that. Britain was still called ‘the poor man of Europe’. There was nothing for the peasants in Britain. It showed in the work and so on, it went down the hill. Germany was out producing them. So they wanted to rectify that problem. That's what they did, they got a war going with Germany. There's no doubt about it, that was a big part of it.

I've mentioned it too that there was a good musical, believe it or not, a musical kind of parody on World War I to show you that it was, a satire to show you the farce of the wars that you’re taught to honor, eh? Like World War I. One was called Oh What A Lovely War. It shows you in singsong form the outbreak of war, and it's hitting England, and then people are at the beach, it's all... it's around Brighton or somewhere. They open up these recruitment offices, and they're all happy, singing these recruitment songs which literally were churned out by the propaganda machine from government. You always get this kind of stuff.

Today it's Hollywood in the States and no one left behind sort of movies and that kind of thing, getting youngsters all keen to go in. But back then it was all songs, they churned out the songs and stage plays like you wouldn't believe. Little ditty things, little hooks in them, little chorus type hooks so you'd start singing along with them. Right down to the kinds of shells that you would meet in the trenches that would go above your head, sounds of whizzing, like circular, almost like fireworks going up, and these ones were, had names like whizbang, things like that, and they named the songs after them. It was all jolly good fun, don't you know? Everybody initially in the movie I think was called Smith and things like that. Because they were showing you that the ordinary folk were the folk mainly who are going in to get slaughtered.

It was, and you have to see satire and really, it gets, it meshes across much better than so-called poignant movies really that show you the emotions involved of the people involved and so on, but they never turn around to how ridiculous the whole thing is in the first place. In Oh What A Lovely War they actually had little scenes in it where you'll see the producers and the folk who have international investments in armaments and so on talking about some of their factories getting blown up in France. Next thing when Germany, or Belgium and so on, and how they were putting lodges out, complaints in by their lawyers to the British government for blowing up their factories. And they would get recompensed for it. This is what wars are. It's a massive business for goodness sake. Massive business.

I can remember after, but I think it was in the 80s maybe, they finally, or maybe the late 70s, but they finally agreed to recompense I think it was maybe a Ford or GM plant in Germany that got bombed by the British and the American air forces during the war, World War II. The company eventually put in a lawsuit and they got recompensed for the loss of their factories, and the loss of the work that they would have produced if they had been still standing. It's just astonishing what really goes on, folks. This is reality here.

You're run by evil tyrants that employ the best minds. As far as IQ levels go, it's nothing to do with intelligence really. There's a difference, I shouldn't say IQ. I have met people, like con people at the bottom level who are as sharp as razors. They can see through any scam before you open your mouth. They can read YOU; a good con man will read you like a book. Because they're psychopaths. They don't have to work at it, it just comes to them. Like a gift. But if you’re, if there's nothing from you that they want they'll chat quite openly about what they do and how they do it. If any topic comes up to do with politics, they can see right through scams and how to get more welfare money. They can reel off laws and regulations that you've never even heard of. But when it comes to any academia, no. No. So they wouldn't, you wouldn't say they... It's a kind of strange parallel intelligence. It's a different type of intelligence you might say. It's almost got an intellect of a predator... of a snake that's going around looking for mice or rats to swallow or something like that. It's got that kind of intelligence. That's what it's like, because they are predators, you see.

They do awfully well for themselves. But then when you meet the ones at the top that sit and do the planning for these wars... I mean, look at the PNAC group that gave you a list of countries that they wanted to be taken out, and in the 1990s, before they had their Pearl Harbor event which they said they would need to get the American support behind them. Then bingo, 9/11 comes along. You can't make this stuff up. You're taught to believe in coincidence theories. Oh, it's just a coincidence that they made up these lists, and published it twice, and had sworn an oath to do it and all that. Then they got their wish and got American public support behind them. It's just a coincidence.

It's the same thing with your Covid 19, you know. They said at the meeting, it was like the final switch to turn on Covid at last year's summit Conference of Parties for the climate change groups. It's the same groups behind that too, the richest folk on the planet. The same folk at the World Economic Forum. It's all the same people. They said, the people aren't listening to us and they're not going to cut back on everything and they're not going to reduce their populations voluntarily, etc., so we've got to do something more drastic, they said. Well bingo. Before the year is actually out, out comes Covid 19, eh. They called it the Wuhan virus initially, you know, and you had about four different name changes before they settled on Covid 19, coronavirus 19. And some of them say Covid/SARS virus, Covid SARS virus, mmm. Astonishing, eh?

But anyway, they give you nice drawings, nice drawings of these mines, these floating mines of the air rather than the sea, and pretty colors on them too. You'd swear they're made of wool, wouldn't you, eh. I’m surprised, I wonder if they're making them like wool balls like that now and selling them for the children to make sure they grow up terrified of them as well? But this is what runs you, this is what runs your lives. You don't know it. You don't know your whole life is, you're in a movie. You really are, it's like you're in a movie and you'll all get faced or presented with challenges that you think, and you will all come to the conclusion, or most of you will, I think it's 97% of the folk all go along with the agendas, regardless, you know. But they'll come to conclusions that it just happens by coincidence. Oh, another crash came in 2008, oh my goodness it just, uhhhhh, you know.

I was giving the talks long before that, the bankers always crash you and loot you at least twice a century, you know, on a big scale and minor ones in between. But there's a big one, 2007/8. And like everything else, hhhch, nevermind the stuff around 9/11, I won't even go into that to do with insurance with the buildings and for the company... Remember all stocks in the airplane companies literally drastically changed the day before the bombings and stuff, eh. Never mind the folk that didn't turn up for work that day. Nevermind all these inconvenient facts, you know, facts don't matter. Same kind of thing.

That's a reality with the Covid thing as well, you see, facts don't matter. So it doesn't matter that the elite already said, they're not, the peasants aren't listening to us, you know, they're still breeding, and they're still wanting to consume and have new cars and things and have decent transportation and cheap gasoline. And they're still driving those terrible gasoline cars for goodness sake, that won't take Mr. so-and-so's electric ones, which are twice the price and don't last that long, because the batteries cost half the price of your car, a new car. But inconvenient facts, eh?

So bingo, Covid breaks out, eh? Then after it all, it comes out from official sources where it came from. We find out where a coronavirus was given to that lab over yonder to continue with gain of function to make it more virulent and deadly. Hhhch. By the same characters that are telling you now to wear facemasks and you're not going to get out of your houses without an immunity passport. You can't make this stuff up, folks.

Obedience to authority, eh. M-m-m. Isn't it astonishing? Isn't it astonishing, eh? You could shoot holes through all the excuses you've been given, that even contradict themselves from the same sources. Don't wear masks, you don't need them. And then the same characters are telling you you'd better wear a mask or you can get fined. Hm? Then the same sources again with, well it doesn't make any difference, it tells you on the package it won't stop Covid. [Alan laughing.]

Facts don't matter. Big agenda. They've told us, the world is never to be the same. And now they're telling you they really mean it. Well, Gates said it, well, it's not just this one, he says, it's the next one. Oooohh, yeah. It's to be their whole, forever... Again, the coincidence, the big 5G, massive drive for that. It didn't happen by itself, and their smart cities and Bloomberg and all the rest of these characters involved in them. The rich men in the world, eh, conspiring against their own people, that's from the Bible. [Alan laughing.]

Yeah, smart cities and the Internet of Things. Now you have the excuse for it all. Well, you see, you've got to have total lockdown, all these apps to monitor you, to make sure you're where you're supposed to be, in your own house locked up. And you're 6 feet apart from the person that you're married... well, I don't know if you're married or not but, you're with in the home, eh. In the home. I guess now you've got to get beds that are going to be, maybe even bunkbeds that will be, so one will be 6 feet higher than the other, eh. Mind you, breath might rise or just... oh! Ftt, all these technical details to work out.

But the fact is, you're all getting brainwashed into a whole new way of living using terror, once again. The terror of war. The terror of total bankruptcy. Starvation. All the things that come out of real wars are being folded up into Covid 19. And food is going to run out because, ha, they want to bring you to your knees, folks. Like any major world war, because it's to bring a global system in.

The globalists were unhappy with the countries wanting to break away from these conglomerates like the European Union. Terribly unhappy about it. They didn't get their completely unified Americas yet. The same CFR group that drafted up and boasted about it, we drafted up the plans for America and Canada, you know, the US, Canada and Mexico and other countries to join into. They haven't got it all. They haven't got their Parliament like they got for the European Union. They haven't got one officially set up for the Americas yet.

Because there's resistance again. So bingo, the same globalists that want to run the world and everybody in it, it's their right you understand, they're taught, their children are taught, this is their right to rule the world. They don't get brought up reading the same newspapers you do. Or news sites. Listen son, this is how the world really works, you know, we've been running the world for an awful long time and these folks don't know it yet. They're children, you know, that's how they talk about us, we're children, you see, because we're ignorant. And it's their right to rule the world, you know.

I think once there was a documentary out, a documentary called The 1%. I think it was made by the heir of Johnson & Johnson. It was a good documentary, about 2006 or so. He went into some of the families, rich families there, touched on Warren Buffett and others as well. It's interesting to go through, hhhch, see things from their point of view and from their perspective. It was interesting because they were talking about, he wasn't for all the things that his family, and the family's wealth are into. What was interesting, they showed you all these money investment managers that goes around these big families. They are more powerful than the families because they get the investment money from all the different, they advised these people to sign on to them, they decide where the investments go. There can be billions of dollars and billions of dollars per week literally from the stacks of families and they decide where that money is going. Into countries, out of countries. They can collapse countries; they can build countries up. That was, there was a side effect of the documentary, it wasn't really meant to be about that but that's what came across. Quite fascinating. I don't know if it's still up there or not, I might try and find it.

It shows you how there's no… And they kept knocking down the son as he's trying to bring up some valid questions about the damage they might be doing to societies and peoples. It doesn't go well with your game of croquet, you know, and hhhhh, your drinky-poohs in the afternoon. It doesn't go well, you know, with your butlers and your maids, you know, hovering around and everything is spotlessly clean. This is the system that runs the world. This is worldwide, and they want a world government. They want to eradicate individuality. That's what they said over and over. The United Nations, I've read their documents on the air when I was on the radio for years. I read their documents where they kept saying over and over, the greatest enemy, the greatest enemy to world peace is individuality and individualism. Hm?

And they're just a front for the elite. So you won't be individuals anymore. You'll be all standardized peas in a pod with the same opinions on every darn topic! And if you don't have the same opinions that's authorized, you'll be penalized, your social credit system, and you won't in a digital economy, you'll be literally cut off until you get, until you will get on your knees to your masters and beg to be brought back in. That's what, I really mean this is where they're going with it all.

Look at the newspaper articles or the news sites articles, they used to be called newspapers, they're all on board with this agenda. Oh yes, and they are all praising YouTube for banning folk who had any contrary opinion on the Covid. Including virologists, epidemiologists and doctors and everybody that's working with it talking about it being a scam. They're all getting banned. If you print their stuff you get banned as well. There's democracy in action!

This is the future that you're looking at here, dictatorial tyranny here. No other opinions allowed. This is, hhhch... ho, this is whooooah folks, you'd better get active very quickly here and start using that NO word that I talked about in the late 90s. The smallest word in the English language, I said, that’s so omitted all the time. I gave a whole talk on it. I see someone else reiterated it and took it all recently. But you've got to relearn that word and say NO. I gave the reasons why. I says, you know, you've been trained to be compliant, to be nice, to everything. Oh yeah, okay, okay, yes. Y'know? Start to say NO.

You'll see them getting thrown off guard when you start saying no. I'm talking about officials of authority. They're not used to people saying no to them. Because we're so nice now, we're so, I don't want to cause a fuss, you know. You've got to start saying NO. Because then they have to start thinking, because they're not used to being, I might have to look in the rulebook here to see if you're allowed to say no then, you know. [Alan laughing.]

Well go ahead and do it. You've got to start asserting your authority and your own, and it's true that old idea of sovereignty, you are technically sovereign unless you give your sovereignty away to somebody else. You are responsible for yourself. Governments job is not there to save you from anything or do anything to you for that matter.

I've got one article here, I think… It’s an article, it's so amazing to watch, and I don't, I don't have any time for any of the politicians. I think that the whole thing is a stage play. And there's no politician there for Americans, the average Americans. There's not. There's no such thing as a lesser of two evils, that's been playing it too. Because even Donald Trump, yeah, I haven't seen him talk against this tyranny, medical tyranny that wants to put untried vaccinations that alter the DNA of your epithelial lining permanently, I haven't heard him speaking out against it. To the contrary. He was all for backing Pharma and experimental medications and drugs and vaccines before he got into office the last time. That was in his speeches if you bother to listen to them. He got backed by big Pharma.

There are no good sides here. For the average person, there's no good sides at all. One article they put in there was, well, can the military doctor that's really in charge of Trump dictate to the president like, you know...? And they came to the conclusion, he says, well you know the president’s got the right, like any... And here's the... I'll read it later when I find it because I don't prepare these talks at all really. But he said something like, to paraphrase, he says, well the president like any other citizen has the right to decide what goes in or doesn't go into his own body. Well, remember that phrase! SO DO YOU. Like any other citizen. Hm?! Are you getting the point here?

Remember, it's like firing a bullet. If you fire a bullet at something, once it's fired you can’t call it back. Are you getting the picture? Once they fire the shots into you, and wait to see what happens in a year or two years time or whatever, you can't call it back. You've done it. It's a permanent thing. A permanent change in your tissue. It's a genetic alteration, this is a different kind of vaccine. Which they admit to.

Do you realize they've given immunity to all these characters that are going to pump it into you? I gave the big PDFs from the governments, from Canada and the States and Britain – all pretty well identical too, [Alan chuckles.] obviously the same source – giving blanket immunity to any side effects including death, to any age group and anybody. M-hm. That's something.

No, you can't go along with this kind of stuff that's absolutely... It's so... Nevermind the fact that... Hhhch. I won't, you see there's no point anymore discussing and trying to argue the points of fact, because they don't care. They don't care. This is an agenda for permanent lifelong lockdown and the control. Because they've already got a whole bunch of other vaccines you're going to have to take. You see? And they don't want you just having the right to say, no I don't want that. Including the flu shots. And a whole bunch of boosters for it. And all kinds of different vaccines, vaccines you've never heard of before they want to put into you, for your whole life long.

They don't want you ever to go back to a life where... Don't forget, the smart cities are designed that you won't have to travel outside the city, folks. You won't have the cars to travel outside the city. Its main transportation is public transportation for all you fools. Agenda for the 21st century. I noticed that Dr Coleman came out with it too, I've been pushing that for years and years. It's the whole century that all the different 2030, these are all parts of it. But the whole century is spelled out, no private vehicles will be allowed, nonessential vehicles. Eventually there's to be no private property. It will be owned by massive conglomerates, a conglomerate of selected property owners, landlords, massive ones though, ones who own big chunks of cities, you understand.

I remember looking too over the years during the big depression we've had leading up to 2008 and afterwards, and I know people in construction in the big cities in Chicago and different places. They're building big high-rise buildings all over the place. Again, where's the money coming from? I mean, it's not like business is booming or anything. These are, this is to accommodate all the folks that are going to come in from the rural areas. Because Agenda 21 is not going to have nonessential people outside the big cities. Only selective corporate farms only, the big corporate groups. And that's how...

Why do you think the agenda for the 21st century, do you think that's just some sort of wish list for Santa Claus? These characters are waay beyond, whenever they have massive teams working on things it's to, and they all sign onto it, they MEAN it, they MAKE it happen. You think the world's just stumbling down through time. No. They say it themselves, the future is always planned by them. Regardless of what you care to think about [Alan chuckles.] or believe.

Just to finish off a thought, to do with all of the generations getting written off. All the factories, and all the related industries that went with the factories and supplied factories with all kinds of things, all gone, by design, under free trade to Mexico and China. I gave the talk on it, countless talks on it years ago. They knew they would turn you into a service economy where you would only import things and middlemen would pass them around until it would eventually get to the stores. Now you don't even need stores so much, most folk are ordering things online. It's all planned that way. So a whole generation would have its workforce just written off. We'll give them stay at home money, you know. Play money. Basic income. It's just basic, basic. What do you think basic means? BASIC, you know. Technically basic income is invalid income. Basic, you see.

In this system you either… It's like a... [Alan chuckles.] It's like an able seaman, hm? Again, back to Cain and Abel in a sense. But an able seaman has got all his limbs, that's like a Mason, same kind of thing, and he's fit and healthy and so on. He's passed as 'able' to perform the duties that he's tasked with, you see. If you're passed, then you're passed as 'valid'. If anything goes wrong with you, you are now an 'in-valid', you're invalid you see. This is where all these words come from. You're written off. You're not a good producer for them. That's exactly what the United Nations said years ago, and I read that from their own writings and their own websites years ago when they declared that a good universal global citizen, and you can look this up, is someone who's a good producer and consumer. Once you're simply consuming, you see, as a pensioner, you're not producer, you're not a good citizen anymore. Are you getting the picture? Then in comes obviously what we're getting now is euthanasia. [Alan chuckles.] The planned society. You've had your good life now, do the decent thing and take this pill.

Everything I talk about is just repetition to me because a lot of the things, I've said it all before in great detail. Lots of folk now are using my articles from years and years ago. I wasn't guessing about it because I use their own information. Just like now, I use the information from the authorities themselves on their own vaccines and so on. It doesn't make any difference. You'll get banned just for repeating what they say, because you're not authorized to repeat what they said. [Alan chuckles.] You're under tyranny, folks. And if you don't stand up to tyranny now, it's done for.

But that generation, getting back to it before I just finish this little bit I'm going to talk about. Think about it. I was thinking about that this week. Some Christian groups are falling into the trap of right wing, left-wing. And American Christianity is... a spectacle to outsiders at times. Again, it's so immersed in the materiel world of wealth often, or at least it portrays wealth, and so it's very difficult to distinguish from the general population of middle-class wealth in America. But for an outsider that really stands out, you know. But they fall into politics as well. They really fall into it. They'll see that which they themselves naturally have been trained to see, which is a communist type of thing. They want to riot in the streets on behalf of communists that are the richest folk on the planet. These are the guys who run and own the media companies and so on, that's the real communists, folks.

They are the globalists. Communism is a more practical way to get efficiency in a system where you can eliminate, again, individual will, you see, individuality. Do what you're told. Obey. And that's what they do. You see, that's... In communism they'll do it voluntarily at times too, for a better tomorrow... [Alan chuckles.] That's what the Soviet system kept, it's all for tomorrow and the children, you know. It never arrives but you know, that's how they presented it to the people.

So a really efficient system was Technocracy. But a generation's got written off here. That had to happen. You know the first one really, this has been going on since free trade was really pushed big time and the factories were literally shipped physically off to China, by our tax money, by the corporations that signed on to it. We paid for their continuity over in China. We built dams in China to power a lot of the factories. We, Canada was involved in building all of them, and nuclear reactors and things. It's astonishing, but folk don't know where your tax money's been going.

They could keep classing China as an emerging nation, even though it's a dominant nation now. And you're still paying for different things, even for the schooling at one point, and hospitals. [Alan chuckles.] But it's so called developed countries, that's us, that are dropping backward, you see. I gave the talks on this years ago, how there would be a happy medium as we drop down and they rose up, all the third world countries. India is the same, we're funding India with free trade now, eh, and giving all the tax breaks. Hhhhh. We pay for the tax breaks. We pay the taxes that they would have paid if it was the other way around. Folk don't even know what they're living in. But they're paying for it. They have no idea. That's a really efficient system where your masters have worked it out so well you just don't think to ask the right questions. Isn't that something, eh? You're so well-managed, it doesn't dawn on you to ask any questions. That's perfect brainwashing.

So yeah, when you see these folk rioting, and more rioting to come because even if some of them could get into university, what's the, if they can even go back to university, unless they do Bill Gates new re-, what's it called, reimagining education they call it. Everything's getting reimagined by the big boys, you see. You see, the imagination has already been done. However, I mean, what kind of work is there going to be for them? All the traditional stuff's gone pretty well. And there's masses of competition coming in from China, India and elsewhere. They've had their educations there and they continue it and they stay in the West a lot of them. And they're wealthy families too so...

How can you compete? It's not meant you compete. It's for a global society, a different society where nations might exist in name only, but they're not the same entities that they used to be. It's just like place names now, that's the idea. Because the Marxist ideas were looked upon by the richest folk on the planet long ago, the elimination of the nation-state, they'll wither away step-by-step, and then eventually you'll get a global system. You're in it.

I listened to some of the Christian groups, and I thought, and I was reading some of their articles and I thought, look how easily they themselves, these people who are doing pretty well for themselves some of them, I'm not putting them down by the way, I'm just stating the facts as things are. Look at how easily they themselves have adapted into the post 9/11 idea and have forgotten now how it used to be before the crisis of 9/11. That was the first part of the crisis to take away all your rights and freedoms. And everybody's complied. Now it's normal to have no rights. Well, I know that everything I do is getting looked at and monitored, and they've got lifelong databases on just me and everything I think and do.

Where's the indignation and all of that gone? Huh?! Where is it? Or have the wealthier ones themselves all accepted their preclearance special and paid their extra cash and given all their data and gone through their biometric stuff and their biometric cards so they're preferred customers for travel. Now, all they have to do now, which they will, you wait and see, they will, these same families, they'll get their special Covid or immunity passport and they'll take the vaccinations and they'll accept...

I can remember when the arguments years ago, back in the 90s, and this is awfully important, I might just touch on it now that my mind's even gone on to it. Was when they talked about one of the marks of the beast. It didn't have to be IN your, it's whatever you held in your hand. It was your ID, anything which IDed you in a purchase was evil. Folk held on to the end before they would use debit cards and so on, that your masters want. Because now, oh, all the stores are bought over, eh, for selling all your data and supplying government and agencies of all kinds with what you purchase, and what you eat, what you... etc, etc, etc.

All, by the way, under your smart plans, you see, your smart cities I should say. All the data is going to start to be used openly against you. Do you know what your weight is today? And all these, everywhere you go you're getting monitored, watched and I'm not kidding, even wearable stuff. I'll get into that. They're actually banning folk for, oh, how ridiculous talking about chips inserted into the skin and so on. I'll touch on that tonight. I've got articles even from the Guardian pooh-poohing it, oh. They're just standardized handouts that they're giving to pooh-pooh folk that say the facts. Even when the facts come from DARPA. [Alan chuckles.] Because facts don't matter with these prostitutes, eh.

Remember, add them all to the lists for trial, public trials, to all these media characters, add them to the lists for crimes against humanity. Massive crimes. They're all complicit. They know what they're doing, and they know they're complicit, with their branding professional people with all the same credentials, even higher credentials than some of the characters that are on TV all the time telling you what to do. They're pooh-poohing these characters because they've got a different opinion. Including the doctors that work with the patient's. Facts don't matter. So add them all to your lists, folks, because they should be. You've got to start dealing with, justice has to be seen to be done eventually. Has to be.

Because the horror that's been inflicted upon humanity already, destroying by design, by design the world economy for most folk, that's by design, bring you crashing into their plan for austerity. Which they said they're going to bring in for years. Everybody would say, how would they do that? Well, bingo, they've done it, folks. [Alan chuckles.] You're here. Absolutely here.

Yeah, getting back to the middle classes that are back into the left wing, they've all adapted from 9/11. And because they've adapted from 9/11 into a no privacy and holding their belts, you know, their pants up at airports, and getting x-rayed for goodness sake, you know, bathed with x-rays for goodness sake, radiation. Hhhch. And you know, their shoes, all that kind of stuff. But they can pay the extra money to show that they're more privileged, you know, they can afford to pay the extra money and get the bio cards for better travel passengers and so on, precleared, etc. And they'll do exactly the same as I said with the vaccination passports. They will. You wait and see. You wait and see.

You can't live as though like nothing had happened. You've already adapted. And you're wondering why the folk that are, the generation that's getting written off here are angry? They can see it. They can see the effects of it. They might not understand it or even be able to verbalize a lot of it, but they can see there's someting highly dysfunctional here in society, something incredibly corrupt and crooked, while everybody else has been adapting and adapting, oh well, you know. Adapting.

So, from a debit card to preferred customers, and preferential cardholder. Oh, they give you a nice little title, so I'm an awfully, I'm a valued customer, yep. And I get little discount. No, you don't get a discount. The people who don't get the card get punished by paying a higher price. You're getting a normal price. That's the con of it, you see. Along with that as I say they know everything about you, what you eat. But with the smart cities, what did they say? They're eventually going to be forbidden, we know in real time bing, bing, bing, you know, so-and-so and so-and-so you've gone over your quota for carbohydrates for this week, you're not allowed that much, you know that, you're so much overweight, blah blah blah. You'll get shamed into compliance. That's on the cards. I had the articles years ago on this and I talked about them. Here it all comes.

You won't be able to go 10 feet in any direction without all their sensors picking you up and monitoring you. Right down to what you purchase. Absolutely. And with the elimination of what you're all so happy to do, I don't want to use cash anymore. [Alan chuckles.] It's so convenient, eh. Oh, it's convenient but they know everything you're eating and buying. Oh well, they know everything about me anyway. No, they know nothing about you until you GIVE IT ALL TO THEM. So it's your own darn fault.

I gave a talk back in 1998 on this. I said, my problem personally is the elites who come up with these plans of how they want to manage the whole planet, and everybody and everything on it, like God, you see. And the academia they employee, you know, to help work it all into our heads of how to comply with all the behaviors and so on. I says, but the rest, and then the other group that's my enemy are the general population. Because in this kind of system – you can call it democracy if you want, it doesn't matter what you call it, or a republic, it makes no difference at all – you get an elite running the country. Intergenerational by the way. Some of them are even inter-transnational because they can go from different countries, some of these families, and run them all. It often goes through the female, then you forget who they are at times, you spend half your life digging things up. That's how you're run. And these families are not billionaires. They're multi-trillionaire's.

But I said that the rest is the general population. Because they count on the general population who will always, most of whom will always go along, always go along with whatever is given to them. Then once they get to a certain magic number they'll say, okay, well now it's mandatory. You see, 60%, 70% have accepted this so it's now mandatory on you. That's what they like to call democracy. It's the same in all systems. Everything starts off voluntarily, you see. Driving licenses were voluntary. Insurance for vehicles was voluntary. I mean, everything that was voluntary, until there is a certain magic number. Oh well, you know... And then they can count on the ones who've already fallen for it to be on the side of government. Well, I did it, so what's wrong, why don't you do it? You know, we all did it. So they use the bulk of the population against the few [Alan chuckles.] that have got a mind of their own. [Alan chuckles.] That's what they did with Covid too of course. They use them. Sure enough, the people will generally turn on you. That's what they do, they'll turn on folk. Quite easily. It's standard. It's been so well observed for thousands of years, this technique. It works very well.

I'm just going to say here too now, remember you can go into cuttingthroughthematrix.com. List all my sites which are there on the .com site, all my official sites in case the .com goes down. We're in a war now and they’re into the next phase of going after anybody who's speaking with a mind of their own. They have to stop it, completely suppress all speech. That's democracy in action.

You're under an incredible evil tyranny, folks. There's no debate about that. It's right in your face. It's up to you all to stand up and do the right thing now. Because you'll be in hell for your entire, and your children after you in hell in a monitored cradle-to-grave system of authoritarianism.

I used to say that's what the elect trick, the trick of the elect, that's electric, that's what's you're in now. This is their power. Many years ago I said it's very demonic.

I even mentioned too an old preacher who's dead now, he mentioned… Because it was Christians at one time that at least were up on these kind of things, you know. Some of them stayed out that wouldn't adapt into the post 9/11 thing, like most have gone into so's they can keep their standard of living up. No, you've got to stand up against evil at times and you don't participate in it. And you've got to speak out about. And it is evil. And stop being, stop going goo-goo, gaa-gaa, you know, with the latest gadgetry that's there. Because that old preacher said something, he was a rogue in many ways, but he did say something. He says that Satan could never take over the world without the computerized system. This is his time.

Complete standardization of thought, news, opinions now, you have standardizing opinions. Banning opinions that are not authorized until you all have the same opinion. And there's nobody standing up against it in power of politics. No, they're not. Nobody. That again is another little clue you really don't have [Alan chuckles.] any independent politicians. You're run by tyrants who set up fronts like Facebook and Google, etc., massive spy agencies and intelligence gathering agencies on behalf of those who own the planet. And you don't unfortunately have any internal spy agencies working for you [Alan chuckles.] to make sure that you're kept safe and free from all the evil that's going on and the corruption. You don't have that. Do you? You've got agencies that obviously don't work for the American people. Never mind the scandals that have come out even from the FBI recently, and the stuff that they're still spewing out in their own publications. You're supposed to be apolitical. No. Phew, they're anything but. They're all bought and paid for, that's what it tells me.

Corruption has never been so incredibly evident as it is today. So yeah, you think about it, you think about all these youngsters who are willing to join any kind of ridiculous organization that's presented to them, and they are used like useful idiots that they always call them, for purposes. Because they are so discontent, because they've been written off a lot of them. The leaders as I say are all Trojan horses in a sense. They're in there leading them all but they work for the big agencies themselves that want a new system, their own new system, the totalitarian system.

But there's a lot of legitimate people out there getting written off. Who don't want to be given a welfare check for the rest of their lives, under any name that they want to give it. Because it's as much a chain as anything else. Because along with it comes conditions. And your behavior. And now you can, and now you will have less chance of saying or doing what you want because then YOU will have it cut off. That's what Bertrand Russell said in the 1940s that they would bring in. Here it is. Long-term planning, eh.

But yeah, my parents were fooled. My grandparents too. For the systems they came up in. Some of them, the grandparents lived through two world wars. Some of the were IN, actively in the two world wars. Never knowing the stuff we know today. And it's sad. Millions of people used and abused, and used and abused while corporations grow and prosper. And out of it they can also tie other nations together in conglomerates so's they can get plundered as well by the same people. Now you want a whole world of efficiency and technocracy running the whole show, and thousands and thousands and thousands of psychopathic professors and academics all working to bring it into being on behalf of the Masters. Quite an amazing system.

So cuttingthroughthematrix.com, send a few bucks my way or buy the books and discs. Hopefully I can tick along a bit longer. Luckily, I did get all the discs out that were backordered. Discs in Canada have always been, CDs, even though they’re apparently more than a DVD, you know, never mind the difference in gigabytes and so on. It's much bigger than a DVD. The CDs have always been like twice the price, at least twice the price of the DVDs, blanks. We're really ripped off in Canada. It's the same with laptops and things. They're always about twice the price at least of what they are in America for the same brands and things. Never mind the difference in the purchasing value. When you really work it all out, we're still twice the price, and a bit more at that. And with taxes on top for everything, value added taxes, they call it GST taxes now I think, or harmonized sales taxes. I was thinking you're supposed to hear angels when you pay taxes, you know, harmonized; it's a thing I have.

So anyway you can buy the books and the discs and send a few bucks my way. PayPal. Send cash if you want. Personal checks. Some countries can still send to Canada postal money orders. That's from the post office, international postal money orders that is, to Canada. You can't use them anymore or get them from the States to Canada, but you can get them elsewhere and send them. Money Gram is okay too. But as I say, cash is fine as well, at the moment, until they ban everything. That will help me tick along.

Because as I say, you'd be surprised, don't go by what they give you as fake news. You understand how polls work? Polls work that were set up, polls, polling systems were set up by the Bernays type characters that were into public relations being propaganda and alteration of opinions and ideas. They did studies and found out that most folk will go with what they think is the majority. If you put across a propaganda campaign and lie, they'll still go along with it, oh, the majority think that so maybe they're right. That's what they use for these polls, it was all designed that way to sway public opinion. Rather than get public opinion, it's to sway the rest of them.

It's the same with Google, all the same techniques are used. Oh, so-and-so only gets so many thousands of hits a week or whatever. That's nonsense. Don't you believe it at all. I've been shadow banned for long before you heard the term shadow banned, before the rest of them. Because I was the only person coming out with the whole agenda, years and years ago, not just bits of it. And sure, you know, but I know for a fact there's lots and lots, I've got way more people than they'll ever tell you look at my stuff. And certainly a lot more use it, absolutely, often verbatim in fact. There's even some people, I noticed it recently, I think I mentioned it a few months ago. Someone had tipped me off, a fellow was using my shows without mentioning me at all, and having... I get transcriptions done for some of them, transcribed, talks into the written word, and the guy was reading them off, without reading my name off at all and presenting the shows as HIS. And without changing anything, just reading it all off, you know.

Then when I changed to the four hour talks, I even, hhhch, I still checked in and sure enough, he even said, you know it's going to take a bit longer now, it's a four hour talk so... But he never once mentioned it was free he was getting it for, it was all my work. [Alan laughing.] It was just astonishing. Other folks now are using it and a lot of the terminology I came out with years ago with the 'new normals' and all that. That's good, at least they're using the work. It's a pity that most of them won't say where they get it from. I don't know why they don't. Is it just… I don't know, you wonder about that too.

But I don't really expect decency to come out of what used to be called the alternative patriot movement. That's what they used to call it at one time. I really don't think so because there's too many hacks in it now, too many people who are in it for other reasons. There's stacks of folk put out there by the agencies themselves and they've been doing that for a long time, some of them, by the way, you know. How do you take something over? Well, you make sure that you lead it, or take it over, and say lots of the same stuff but then you have your little spin on it, of who to vote for, when to vote, or what countries to stand up for, or why you should be at war, and all that kind of stuff. It eventually becomes self-evident.

It can be awfully addictive and entertaining for a lot of people who will still go into it. I've heard people who say that, that they'll still go along with certain people, and they know exactly what they're there for and who is backing them or whatever. So in other words, they know they're getting used and abused and lied too to an extent, or used, for donations, getting used or deceived to an extent, but they like the personalities. Isn't that amazing, eh? Isn't that really an amazing kind of thing for folk to say. So you like them. Well, that means you like psychopaths, so don't ever complain about whatever psychopaths do to you.

You have to, there's an old saying, you have to test the spirits, you know. And often you get incredible glaring examples of what the spirit happens to be. Glaring examples of it. And the people right at the moment are not catching on. As I say, they're all adapting into post-9/11. Oh well, you know, no privacy, I guess, well, it's to keep us safe. Then this massive monstrosity called Homeland Security they came out with. Well, it's to keep us safe, you know. M-hm. It's the same thing as wearing masks, people. It's to continue to remind you, continually remind you that there's terrorism everywhere. Under the bed. It's around the corner, it's in the dark, it's in the daylight. It's everywhere, terrorism, terrorism.

No privacy. They have to validate having no privacy, that's why they created an internal Army they can use now. Massive army. People have forgotten too of the 90s, the US was the hope of a lot of countries for a while. It really was. And through the 80s remember a good part of the planet was under the Soviet bloc nations you know. They had this cold war idea that, well yeah, nothing’s perfect in our system but at least we're not as bad as them. They always need an enemy to point to, you know. Personally I think they all work together. I really do. Because there was nobody really going to press the buttons. It was all for the public. It kept their public, you know, cringing. They kept the public in the West cringing. That's what it did.

It made a fortune for the military-industrial complex. MASSIVE money. Masses. No one questioned it. Well, we'll have to pay all this tax to keep us safe, you know, missiles and... I heard that Russia got a new super missile out last week and we need an antimissile to catch it, so we need a faster one, it's 5 miles an hour faster than our best, so we need a new, so many billions or whatever, millions. And away it goes, you see. It's never-ending. They made a fortune off it, for stuff that was never to be used. So you didn't have to prove it even worked. [Alan laughing.] It's good money, eh, a good scam that one.

And I remember [Alan laughing.] I remember too [Alan laughing.] that again the same characters that give you Covid, you know, and did the work with folk falling in the streets. That never happened, eh. But they showed you on camera, oh, look at that, they're even falling. Just to terrify you, eh. The same characters that showed you these fogging machines going up and down the streets in Wuhan and blasting stuff hundreds of feet in the air, to terrify the blazes out of you. And they make sure that we got it. Even though China literally doesn't let a bird out to poop in the garden outside its own country unless they want it to be shown. [Alan chuckles.] But we saw all this stuff, eh, and to get us all terrified.

The same characters during the Cold War, I don't know if you can get the documentaries anymore but at one time you used to be able to buy them on VHS and so on. They showed you the propaganda that both countries used during the Cold War. But they showed you the CIA's stuff. It was really good, you know. They showed you these mosques with the minarets in different countries, and says, the CIA for years kept telling, they'd have meetings you see for Defense Department's and with the politicians when they come for budget time for getting more money for themselves and that, and they showed you these big minarets and said, inside that is one of the super Soviets missiles, you know, atomic missiles. And the way they presented it too was ominous music in the background, they used all these techniques, eh, and dooon-dooon, dooon-dooon, dooon-dooon, and, [Alan with a very deep voice] inside there is something that could annihilate a good part of Florida if it ever landed, and stuff like that. That's what they gave you, you see. That was all they had to do was show you that. Didn't have to x-ray it or anything, they just came out with this, backing evidence that we have witnessed materials being taken in over the last few years and we know it's the blah blah blah, [?] or whatever it's called, you know, and that was good enough, automatic renewal for research and development for ARPA, and then DARPA. [Alan laughing.] I thought it was a good one though. Yep.

But yeah, nothing's low enough to deceive the public, eh? To keep you on tender hooks, as they say, there's nothing low enough. Believe you me, evil has many helpers, many, many helpers. And you have to check yourself at times too and don't fall into the traps of saying, wait a minute here, you can’t just write off a whole generation because they're angry. Think, why are they angry? They've been written off. Yeah, you know it's all been manipulated by the leaders. But a lot of the followers literally haven't got a clue what they're going to do for their future. They have no idea at all.

They pump drugs out into society hoping to just keep stoned like Maggie Thatcher's said when she was in. She said that, she was giving her policies of economics, you know, she says, well you know, the balance, you've got to have a balance of unemployment and employment. You can't have full employment, it's a bad thing, she says, because then wages will be high. Whereas if there's a lot of unemployment, they'll take less money for the work. But if there's not enough employees going around, like an abundance, then the wages go up and it's a bad thing. She says, it's far better to keep the pubs open all day. And she did, she ended the lock... I think they're all back in with the same pub laws, eh? But for years and years from Thatcher's time up to the present the pubs suddenly go open all day long and well into the night too. Before that they used to open at, I can't remember if it was 10 o'clock or 11 o'clock and closed at 2-2:30 and open again at 5:30 or something, close at 10:30. At least that's how it used to be for years, something like that. But she did away with that and said it was far better keeping the unemployed youth spending their welfare money, unemployment money and welfare money in the pubs than having them out in the streets organized and rioting. That's what she said. That was in the newspapers at the time. Then she came on national television and said there's a generation growing up now who will never see work in their lifetime. Because she thought that was sound economic policy, keeping a lot, a good chunk of the population unemployed.

Plus Britain at that time was also getting rid of its, hhhch, businesses and they kept it quiet from the public what they were doing with free trade agreements. And the idea then to close down all the mines, eh. Big industry in Britain it was, the mines. It wasn't just industry, it was communities, it was everything. It was a whole way of life for people at one time. It was to be abolished. It was planned years before you ever heard about it, it was all decided years before. They lied constantly to the public as they were drafting a plans to eliminate whole segments of industry.

Interestingly too there was a good entertaining movie put out, I don't know if it was for TV or whatever, maybe Thames Television or something. But it was called Brasses Off about mining in Britain as it was planned to get phased out. Of course they kept lying to the miners for years and years and years. At the very end of the movie... It was a kind of part comedy too but a realistic movie in many ways using social events as it happened. At the end of the movie they actually have the top mine negotiators, or guys from the government there who were phasing the mines out admitting that it was planned years and years before the miners even heard about it and that coal was going to get phased out.

Margaret Thatcher during her time I think it was, but Maggie Thatcher, she did, she feared, or at least they feared the power of the labor unions, especially coal miners. It's true enough, the unions in Britain were very Marxist to an extent, you know, at least the leaders were, [Alan chuckles.] or appeared to be. But they did fight for the miners, no doubt about it. Until towards the end when they were literally closing them down, they were getting a decent wage. Don't forget that for years and years before that they were the backbone of industry, everything was powered by coal. The big electric turbines were powered by coal too, most of the places. It kept factories going. You had, coal literally was the main heat for all the houses across Britain at one time. It also produced all the gas for lighting and the cooking for a long time. Coal gas, they had big, big tanks in every town. Massive things they were to see. All gone now.

Then they were going to bring in North Sea Gas and that's part of what Thatcher did. She, it wasn't even going to help the country so much, interestingly enough. They definitely put a base of building rigs in Scotland, but they were pumping, when it pumped, they put [Alan chuckles.] actually built oil pipelines down through Scotland into England for the refining of it. So that literally ticked a lot of people off for refining. And also, she gave it licensing for all different countries in the EU and in Scandinavia to take oil out of the North Sea. So Scotland didn't get much out of it at all. They never do, eh? [Alan chuckles.] I tell ya. And then they want their independence and then end up inside the EU. Just like Ireland. What a joke. So you wake up under a bigger monster than the one you already were under. And they're so socialistic now they can't get out from it, out from anything actually, it socialistic policies. It's, again, on behalf of those that run the world. More efficient because folk obey it for some strange reason if they think it's their own system.

So I think that movie, it was called Brassed Off I think. They had a brass band in the movie, a lot of working areas in coal mines did have their own brass bands. It was a tradition for, oh, going way back into the eighteen hundreds. A lot of them were good, mind you, and they would do little parades here and there on weekends. It was nice to hear the brass bands on the go. They'd have competitions eventually between each other, different towns and all that. So that's what the movie is about and the escapades that they get up to. But in it as I say, at the end they actually admitted it, when they were closing down this particular mine. Or pits as they called them. A pit is straight down, you see, that's what the wheels are for, they lower an elevator all the way down. Whereas a mine is something you can drive down slowly, it's a sloped system through a cave type opening.

So as they were closing it, the bosses came out and say, well we couldn't tell the people that this was on the cards for years, that coal is scheduled to be totally phased out, you see. And Thatcher did that, the so-called right-wing Thatcher during, and don't forget it’s still during what was called the Cold War, gave the contracts for the coal that was necessary, she closed down the ones in Britain, the mines and the pits, and then she imported cold from communist Poland. [Alan laughing.] She was bringing it in from communists. So don't ever think that everything is as clean-cut as they say things are. It's not at all, you know. Everybody plays their part. And if Thatcher, or the rest of them, could have had the people working for the same standard of living in some of the communist countries, and working hard towards it too, they would've done the same thing if they could. But I think the British folk were so jaded with years of feudalism [Alan chuckles.] and centuries of creating an empire and being cannon fodder, and paying the bills for it all, that you couldn't really get them enthusiastic too much about much after World War II. And that's the truth of it.

Getting back to America being the hope at one point. The US at least had lots of shortwave stations at one time. Many of them had been started up by the CIA in the 1960s to counter communist propaganda, because the Communists used Radio Moscow and was international shortwave radio. They even had the occasional blocking, you know, stations set up in different countries. Because if you listened in Britain, and I used to make little radios for myself when I was young, when I was wee, you know, before I was 10 even. Because my dad was kind of into that as a hobby and he could never really fix them properly or get them assembled so I used to do it instead and listen to the different international stations.

It was interesting to me because I realized right off the bat that radio Moscow was exactly like the BBC radio. I mean exactly, the way the format presentation, the voices they would use, because a lot of them had been trained actually for, in the English language, had been trained in England. Some of them had even worked in the BBC. This has to make you think when you're a child, you know, okay they BBC is training folk for radio Moscow, the Communists. [Alan laughing.] It was quite interesting.

But anyway, same format, and, the ministry of so-and-so has decided, and that's exactly the sort of thing that would get presented in the BBC radio. It was all reading off what the ministries of this, name the political agencies, the ministry of so-and-so has decided, the ministry of agriculture has decided blah blah blah. It was all declarations, that's how it's presented on radio Moscow. Same thing. They'd have little human interest stories in between it about a woman who did something for her neighbors and blah blah blah, and they'll say oh that's nice. Exactly the same as Britain. Many years later of course when I listen to post-Soviet system, it was, they still follow the BBC. And many of them actually admitted at the time that they had been trained in the BBC, even the ones that took over after the Cold War. [Alan chuckles.]

Anyway getting back to what I was talking about in the US. Big things were happening through the 80s and 90s in the US. As soon as the Soviet Union supposedly went down, just like that, the US is off right into the, you know, Afghanistan and the Middle East and so on. But really was also, there was wanting to invade Afghanistan, I should say, then. They did some skirmishing with it. They were supplying, they had already been supplying, before the collapse of the Soviet Union the US had operatives inside Afghanistan to get the Soviets out, they were policing it at the time, the Soviet army. It's so incredible that the US takes the same job over and gets bogged down in the same problem. Another Vietnam, you know. Which is obviously deliberate to me.

But getting back to the 90s, they went and attacked Saddam Hussein who had gone into Kuwait because Kuwait was literally stealing with the horizontal drilling rigs oil out of the territory of Iraq. That's a fact. It was all in the newspapers at the time. They even had articles in I think Popular Mechanics where they showed you these drill rigs and how they did the horizontal drilling. They would go under the ground and turn at an angle and then go horizontally under the ground. They go hundreds of miles at times into someone else's… and they suck the oil out, and that's what they'd been doing.

It's interesting that the Kuwaiti oil fields had been set up by the Bush family. It was Poppa Bush you know who was in charge of it at one time. Then the young Bush was put in charge of it eventually for a little while to get the feel of things and that. They always put them in charge of the oil fields. Interesting. The same with Maurice Strong, you know, picked up by the Rockefellers, given a fake history and then put in charge of oil fields, to get the feel of how the world's run, you know.

Since Saddam had gone into Kuwait, and he had made overtures to the ambassadors I guess, from the US to Iraq at the time, if it would be okay to go in there? because they were taking his oil, you know. He was given a kind of noncommittal kind of nod, you know, eeeeeeeeehhh, eehhhhhh, and away he went and did it. As soon as he did that the US turned on him, you see. It was like a set up. A big set up.

So it was literally, I mean, within a year of the Soviet Union collapsing, America's off to wars. Preplanned wars, eh. Then after it all they had the cordoning off of Iraq, for years. Then they put young Bush in, rather than old Bush but they put young Bush in, and he was sent to finish off the job, eh, and gets the other PNAC list of countries taken out. They're still fighting the rest of them, Syria and so on. [Alan chuckles.] That was your American… Here's the thing, if you don't care, the big eating machine comes back and eats you, I gave these talks years ago, and you're seeing it happening now.

When you're watching your own system causing incredible mayhem and injustice and plundering the planet, it's going to come back to you, when you've served your purpose, and paid for it all, and said NOTHING. If you stand and watch war being inflicted upon other people then is going to come back on you. Cause and effect. And the people who are benefiting from it don't give a darn about the folk that are getting slaughtered on any side of any conflict. Or the people that are fighting it, meaning you. They don't care about you. So it's very, very true, if you're in, the silent majority end up carrying the can eventually for their own silence down the road. Because it's not a human thing to do, or a humane thing to do, to watch other folk getting plundered and bombed and slaughtered, and dispossessed of their own lands. And your money is paying for it all and your own soldiers are getting paid to do it.

What was it Bush Junior said? Well, yeah, we have to go and get Saddam Hussein, he's just a bad man, he had nothing to do with 9/11, he says, but he's just a bad man. Look at the mayhem as they bombed it into the Stone Age. Never to recover. That was the intention, never to recover. Brzezinski said that, so did Kissinger, the long-term goal was to put all these countries into the Stone Age where they could never get back to nationhood. And they'd even fund conflicting parties inside, opposing parties inside each little place, ex-nation, to keep the skirmishes going so they could never get a government going again. These were official publications from Kissinger and Brzezinski, and the CFR and Trilateral's at times.

And everybody at home sits and w… And during that whole time remember in the 90s the buildup to all that, you know, as the US was going across the world doing that, you had the sudden appearance of a new type of internal policing inside America. It started off with Randy Weaver, and everybody will say, oh my God, there's a white supremacist. No, he wasn't. [Alan chuckles.] And they say, oh he belongs to some religious group too. So what! So what? So what. Oh, they're getting investigated by the FBI, you know. The FBI, that means, that gives it, that's really, that makes it really credulous with the FBI. The same FBI that said Russia had interfered with elections and so on [Alan chuckles.] etc. etc., the same FBI that literally pretends to be impartial as they demand that Trump gets out, hm? No, it's all corrupt. Again, nothing is what it appears to be.

Getting back to Weaver, they set up Randy Weaver through the Bureau of Tobacco and Firearms. They set him up, got him to cut I think it was a shotgun, the part of the barrel of a shotgun to shorten it into an illegal size. So they had infiltrated this, and so he did it and all that, then they set him up. The next thing you know, they want to make an example of him. It was to be an execution. That's what really got big things changed in the US. The general public that are watching this said, wait a minute, what's going on here? What's going on here?

So Weaver and his wife and his children lived in a kind of hut or a shack somewhere, a house, it wasn't a big thing, on a hill. They had a standoff there. First of all they sent sheriffs in who shot his sons in the back, they snuck up, the sons were out somewhere in the back playing and they shot them, they shot them in the back. Executed them. Then of course I think they shot the family dogs, they always do that, you know. To create, that creates further terror as well by the way, you know. They even got Horiuchi the sniper for the FBI or whatever, probably Delta Forces. They got him, they used him, who shot Weaver's wife who was standing in the doorway holding her baby. It came out afterwards in the inquiry that he was told to get her. It was an execution set up here.

This is what got folk in the patriot movement really going and forming militias and things. That they saw big changes. What is this new FBI idea, and the Bureau of Alcohol Tobacco and Firearms, and they had FEMA and all these black clad like storm troopers everywhere. That's what's really... These were the... you were looking at the signal of a BIG change, a big, big change of what is supposed to be. In the US, hhhch, which has always been a nuisance to those that rule it, is this thing called the Constitution and the Bill of Rights. An awful nuisance. I gave up the articles, was it last week or the week before, from the Council on Foreign Relations, from the 70s where the CFR says, we can fight the Constitution, so we have to go around the Constitution and over it and under it, but just ignore it. …to get the, because it's such a nuisance that folk have rights.

So the Weaver case was an execution set up. They even brought in the tanks and built a road into the house so's they could take the tanks up. Just an incredible show of power, strength and military might to make an example of something. That's what was behind it, this example. You had this strange amalgamation too of the advisors to the FBI and the ATF and all the rest of it, the same characters now that they still prattle on about white supremacy. [Alan chuckles.] As, hhhch, whites have been going around the streets burning down the place, these supremacists are not. So it's part of the global structure, the groups that advised the FBI and so-and-so.

But theen you had, then you had Waco. Now, once again when you see folk getting demonized, the first strategy in warfare, you must demonize the enemy. It's like when they came out, went after Gaddafi, the great Satan. I remember even Reagan going years ago, when into the great Satan. He had three different great Satans after another, you know. M-hm. And they all followed suit, the great Satan, and eevil empires and stuff like that, you see. So you demonize the enemy.

Waco, it was an offshoot, a splinter group I think of, it wasn't the Seventh-day Adventist, it was… It might've been, yeah, it might've been Seventh-day Adventist, it was an offshoot anyway of them. But regardless, they were causing no harm. They had a big farmhouse there and a lot of their members from all over the world would come there and live a month at a time or a few weeks at a time and so on. Some of them brought their children and stuff like that. The guy who was the head of it was David Koresh that took over from I think his dad. And you can all go, oh, the crazy nutcase.

Wait a minute! They weren't crazy nutcases until they were fighting for their lives. Because they weren't fighting anybody before that. You understand this? What you are witnessing, again, from the Randy Weaver and this massive display of a new type of militarization inside the US, of, from the Weaver case to Waco, and then Waco was many, many families and children in there. Now, part of their teaching was that the world outside was evil. Babylon was the world; it was an evil empire. They were pretty well right, actually. They were a lot more correct than most Christians today, regardless of what you want to think of their particular branch or thoughts or whatever.

You see, in the US, and whether you like it or not too, people are supposed to have their rights to their religion NO MATTER what you think about it. No matter what YOU think about it, okay. Hhhch.

During the Clinton Administration and that strange character Janet Reno that had, a different record of her own by the way if you want to look into it, were obviously doing a job, a big demonstration of this new power, again, going after certain religions. They want to depict, display to the public again of this new power, like military assaults on buildings. Once it had started by the way, Koresh was, had an interview during it, hhhch, with outsiders that were allowed in, journalists, you know, TV folk. They recorded him. I think it was after he had been hit with a bullet in fact. They recorded him saying, why didn't they, if they wanted me, he said they could have got me anytime. He says, I came into town by myself every, once a week, they knew when I was coming in. They had the place bugged by the way, it was all admitted, they knew when he was coming and going and the whole thing, and they could've gotten him anytime.

But no, they wanted a big SHOW. This is what was so obvious about the whole thing, a big show. And a SHOCK to the rest of the folk in America. It's a shock. Shock and awe, eh? And they got it. Now, the early videos that were put out there at the time showed you the FBI coming up, the FBI later said that they shouted out and no one had opened the door and the whole thing. All you see is the door opening and the FBI, these guys, these black clad goons opening fire, and you saw the rounds hitting off around the doorway, hhhch, and the door slams shut. They oompff, just completely opened fire on these people. They're supposed to be a big demonstration that went straight into action trying to get up the building into the upstairs.

Of course by that time the Davidian's inside were fighting back. Because don't forget their belief system was that they were going to get slaughtered by Babylon. They get, they were taught, they were... Isn't that strange that that was their belief and philosophy and it happened, hm? They'll say, a self-fulfilling prophecy. It happened to them. But these people didn't say, everybody come out, you know, and stand way back. No, they came out the door and opened fire, at the door, the ATF. It was admitted afterwards in the inquiry too, and it took a few years, that they had members of Delta Force there by the way helping the ATF, who went around inside the building, they went and dropped through the roof afterwards. They blew a hole in the roof, and when the fires were going on, and they went around the buildings just finishing everybody off. They had bullet holes in their heads.

This is on American soil.

That's what really shocked people across the US at that time who still had a brain and a memory. And they weren't totally indoctrinated into fatso slavery, gorge yourself and be happy and shut up. No, there were still people back then who knew their rights and what was coming down the pike was rather nasty. That's why the militias flourished. That's why Bill Cooper, and others too but mainly him at the time, told folk, you know, he went to Waco when it was happening, one of the few people that went there to see it. As a witness, he says, people have to witness this, what's being, this was a massacre. This was a total genocide of a people. Guaranteed to be wiped out. They already found other people who had managed to get out of the house beforehand, and who were shot in the head outside the house in the fields by the troops around there.

On American soil. You let that go and it's not going to stop. D'you understand that?

That's why all this kind of thing has happened with groups forming because it smelled so terrible. Then 9/11 came along, BANG, you see. And when 9/11 happened the same groups that were training and indoctrinating the FBI, who were somehow given this strange power to get only their version of reality over, right, and use American forces against Americans, immediately came out and said, the greatest threat to the America is white supremacy. They're still at it. They're still at it today. And white supremacy had nothing to do with 9/11. [Alan laughing.]

It's like, now, reality is getting totally bent by the psy ops groups, totally bent. But that's the history a lot of folk don't know, that there were people ready to defend themselves and their nation, and their counties even, under their law, [Alan chuckles.] if they tried the same kind of things as you're witnessing happening, of these massive internal militaries suddenly going after people. To wipe them out, as a lesson, as a lesson... to terrify the rest.

Well, you're going to see the same things with the Covid as they go after and arrest folk, this is the next step of it, you see. It's all in their manuals, [Alan chuckles.] stage two, three, tier, etc. different names for the same agenda. Worldwide agenda. Think of the power to make this worldwide in coordination at the same time. Hm. And you think your vote matters? All planned years ago. With everybody they wanted in place in every official capacity, from the federal down to the local area, all on board with it. That's the coordination and planning that's obvious.

So yeah, that's why folk are getting ticked off with the excuse of using Covid for a tyranny, you see. It's always an enemy. Oh, it's Branch Davidians. Oh, it's the Waco crazy people. Oh, the white supremacist group, Randy Weaver, you know. I remember the lawyer for Weaver afterwards, he was a good lawyer, did a documentary on it. He says, you know, people are generally okay. But he says, if you go up to a rabbit's burrow and you stick your hand in their, into ITS territory, it's HOME, and that mother is there and she's got young, she's going to try to bite your handoff. This is a law of nature. You don't go raiding folks homes, to wipe them out either for that matter. Because what? You don't like them? Or you want to use them as an example to others? Hhhch, it's just astonishing. Really astonishing.

And the lethal gases they use too which suffocated the children, a lot of them. Never mind the ones who were burned alive. Whoah. I always said that the Waco should never be forgotten. And they kept the demonization up after, with the press all colluding naturally, you know. Just like the Covid idea, all the press is on board because they're all bought and paid for prostitutes. They are all complicit in crimes against humanity. And murder for that matter.

But they should have a huge field up there with rings of children pointing to the Clintons, statues of them, and statues of the children pointing to the Clintons and Reno and the goons that are addressed in the military garb that came to execute them all. You see, if you're not safe in your own home, I don't care what you’re praying to or who you're praying to or whatever, or what version or shade of any particular thing you're into. If you don't care about other folks right to do what they want to do, when they're not causing any problems to anybody else, then what happens to them can happen to you quite easily. These are pushing the envelope, they're all tests pushing the envelope to the next phase, the next phase, and the next phase.

It was all getting you used to an internal Army going to be unleashed upon the people inside America. Other countries are following suit, in step with it, all through that whole period by the way. You had the same thing happening in Canada. They came out with the same black outfits for the cops, these military combat boots and the tucked in pants, combat pants and the whole thing. It's all combat, combat, combat. All deliberate, before 9/11 happened. Lockstep, lockstep, lockstep. A post-democratic society, the Club of Rome. Welcome. Here you are.

It's all here, folks, and people are just munching away and watching the movies as we go through it all. Well, I'm staying at home but they're giving us lots of movies, you know. You're given a life to be in charge of it yourself. Most folk are quite happy now, unfortunately, and they're so damaged now, for the authorities and for the system, and all the entertainment is part of the authorities. So they're passing your time for you. They're giving the thoughts to you for you. You don't have to think about anything.

But there's a lot of folk out there too who still have intact minds. That's the mystery to an awful lot of people of course. You wouldn't believe the countless studies, ongoing studies for yeears on the people who don't fall under the spell as they try to find out why. And the billions that have been spent across the world for psychological investigations into why certain folk just don't fall under and comply and be very, very afraid children. Hm?

It does come down again to a spiritual thing as well. The world of matter, right, hits the world of spirit. The world that you've been taught to worship, is the world of matter and prosperity, and the folk with more matter and the access and the ownership of more matter than you, are the ones you're taught to worship. It's materialism. Interestingly, communism or Marxism is about dialectical materialism, you know, and eventually of course they would decide themselves how to distribute the material. Everyone according to their needs, or means, he said. Which is just the redistribution of wealth and giving more to the ones that they deem have the right to have more than you under a communist system. Isn't it wonderful, it all ends up the same way really? Well, you know, you don't expect the cultural manipulators and entertainers to have the same as the worker and peasants that's doing all the welding in the shipyards and stuff making real things, you know. No, you've got to pay them more, they’re important to keep the people in a form of entertained haze of compliance. Very sad, isn't it. And how quickly folk adapt. How quickly they adapt to it all.

But everybody in the States in the 90s was, hhhch, with half a brain realized something big was coming down the pike. Something wicked this way comes as it's been said before. And it was certainly coming. They were showing you, let's have these militarized guys dressed in black like executioners, that's the uniform of the executioner, folks. Getting you ready for evil coming down, eh. Authorized evil. And that's the key, AUTHORIZED evil. Be very afraid of these people, be terribly afraid of them is the message. It really is quite amazing.

The US, I think that guy who did the killing, one of the snipers that was sent, Lon Horiuchi, the sniper. He was the sniper that killed Vicki Weaver I think it was. He was given a metal for it eventually. For shooting the mother holding a baby. [Alan chuckles.] There you go. There's a psychopath, you see. It came out to that they had decided, the psychological teams that work with them, they decided in advance that she was really the boss, so it was more important to TAKE HER

OUT. Not to arrest her but take her out.

Now think, fast-forward to the present. Oh, the threat of Covid, you see, so you all have to be under the same authorities, they're going to send excess force out to you and so on. They've got to give you demonstrations on TV, so you'll all be very, very afraid... it's not going to happen to YOU. So they start off with the cops and so on, the black clad guys across the world en masse grabbing people who don't have masks on, and little women and so on, to terrify you. That's where it starts. But it's going to go further now with the stages. You see, this is the start of the real push for it now. The warm-up was in the spring. They've said it, the world that's to come out of this is a vaastly different world of the existence, for YOUR existence, then when you went in. It's a whole new way and it's not EVER to go back to the old way. Are you understanding this?

This isn't pessimism. It's from their own writings here. A preordained system that they preordained and drafted up with probably by now millions of pages over many years for a whole new way of living. Post-democratic. Postconsumer society. Basic necessities. Obedience to authority. Complete monitoring birth to death. Compliance. And you’ll get locked up if you don't take their mandatory vaccines. Locked up for life if you don't. Well, that's putting you in prison for life, isn't it, I don't care if it's your home or not.

So you're given no choice here. Untested vaccines. With no right to sue anybody if you get sick or crippled or die with it. And you're going to go and vote the same psychopaths, I don't care what party, back in again? Hhhhhhhhhhhm. In any country for that matter. It's no different in Canada. So that's part of the buildup to the different groups inside the US for regaining their rights and freedoms, or keeping them at least, or an attempt to, and sticking to the Constitution.

There were lots of independent radio programs of people who were in different states who were starting up their own, again, defense leagues [Alan chuckles.] you might call it. They knew something stunk to high heaven and it was coming down the pike. And the governments were obviously using military gear and equipping, it happened all right through Obama era too, equipping all the different areas with armored vehicles and so on and millions of dollars worth of military gear and weaponry to the internal forces here in preparation for something.

You realize, the whole planning, plan A for the climate change agreements, let's just force it this way little by little. Right down to the next step is the fast approach, oh, how can we..., Covid will do fine, you know, something called Covid, we'll push that on the public and force it and close down all the economy. Much faster, isn't it?

This was all planned yeears ago, yeeears ago, in detail to be unraveled like this. And true enough as I say, you'll see all the different universities at work, the foundations like the Rockefeller foundation with their lockstep, as part of a big plan for the future, 2010, using high tech equipment and so on for a new system, you know. Now it's 5G worldwide and all that. All part of the monitoring system. And tracking and tracing you for the rest of your lives. Not just for Covid but this is to be permanent. I've got articles, I looked into some of the companies that are making of the different tracking and tracing equipment, wearable, and regardless of what some of the newspapers say, implantable, like DARPA's talking about it. [Alan chuckles.] This is for the rest of your lives.

They said it's a massive exploding business of, like a permanent electronic tracking and tracing, for all kinds of illnesses, from here to whatever and it's not going to just stop. Now they've got, they're putting them into some stores now, thermal imaging, is the excuse but it's also photographing you biometrically from a distance, measuring the eyes and so on, because you might be wearing a mask, eh. Total tracked and traced, and what you're buying in the stores, and getting followed around the stores with their security cameras too. That's happening in Canada now too. But hhhhh, this is for the rest of your lives. This is not just Covid. They've already said that. It's a big, massive business preplanned before you ever heard of Covid. [Alan chuckles.] Yeah. Yeah. And isn't it beautiful, all the research and development has been done, and is still being done with your tax money. Public-private partnerships with these big stinking rich conglomerates. Hhhhhhh. I-yi.

You talk about tyranny, folks. You certainly area in it now. Again, it's still using the, iiiiiit's not quite got the, it's still got the glove, you know, the velvet glove on the iron fist to an extent. But it's to roll off into stages now. They even said it with Event 201, stages, once they get to the highest stage then the gloves are off, eh, and they're going to go after anybody who says anything that's not mainstream push, authorized by/for the mainstream. You're not allowed to have an opinion here, you see, you're now an enemy of the state. That's the same thing the communists always used, an enemy of the people. The techniques are always the same. Why would you change techniques that work? that's what Plato said. [Alan chuckles.] But here we are, eh.

And folk are just, again, well it's not so bad, I'm getting paid to stay at home, says a whole chunk of them. And they really think, I gave the talks long before Covid came out, I says, they're talking about depopulation. They don't need you anymore in a postindustrial system. D'you think they're going to keep you around as pets? Hm? Uh, well, they're paying me to stay at home and... [Alan laughing.] Temporarily. Then in come the conditions. Roll up your sleeves.

Oh, and we've got another vaccine. They've already said it by the way, that this isn't the first type, for the Covid, it's the first one they want to get into you fast, eh. Because it's so lucrative! And you're paying for it all by the billions of dollars. Guaranteed profits, eh. No fall out from any folk dropping dead or getting paralyzed or anything because no one can get sued. That's a great deal! Gates has already said they've got another batch of vaccines may be a year down the road to take the place of these ones that they're going to come out with. It's perpetual, folks. Are you getting the picture?

I guarantee you if this is the case, within five years most of you won't be able to think of anything at all, now that you’ve had all these things stuck into you. This is amazing tyranny. It's out of a science fiction horror, a futuristic horror, but it's here. The characters ferry into the... Hhhch, they've got the personalities, the authoritarian personalities, that they're placed up there in authority, even though you haven't voted for any of them, are characters out of some macabre horror. They really are. Aren't they? It's just astonishing. Even when they're caught in their own lies and doublespeak... Don't wear masks, then they, wear masks, don't wear masks, wear masks, you know. M-hm. [Alan laughing.]

It's just amazing. But sadly most folk will comply. Because you see, their reality is television. They've been raised that way, to obey authority, from TV. Well, that person's familiar, they're a newspaper anchorman I've been watching my whole life long, they wouldn't lie to me. Brzezinski, eh, the 1970s, he said the people will shortly be unable to think for themselves, they can only repeat with they were given on the previous nights news, shortly they'll expect the media to do their reasoning for them. That was all done in the 70s onwards.

They really believe these private conglomerate media associations are some natural appendage to their brain, they're some natural authority. Instead of being BIG BUSINESS, big private business, owned by the richest folk on the planet. Private business. And yes, they have massive agendas. The greatest thing is to give the folk their thoughts and their opinions. That's called mind control, folks. Political persuasion. Compliance. Folk used to know that but now, no. No, they're there every day, they must be a part of a natural authority of some kind. No, they're not. They're con people and aawful liars. Awful, awful liars. The lies that they've been spewing out since January are phenomenal. And going along with the handouts given by the authorities, telling you not to listen to anybody who's giving you contrary information, including professionals, disregard them, they're bad, bad, bad. That's the real system we live under though.

I gave the talk years ago and reiterated it since, that the James Bond movies were generally about characters that belong to big worldwide criminal organizations, the richest organizations on the planet. That's what ran the world at one time, and the underworld too, with lots of legitimate businesses as well. That's really what it's like, isn't it? Your Blowfeld characters, and you got Fauci. And they’re all masked men now, aren't they, eh? Hm? Like bandits. Yp. Real characters like that. Out in public.

And Bill Gates, what would you put him in, what kind of character is he? Hm. Is he the one that was a megalomaniac, like the one that was in the movie where he had a massive media enterprise. Tomorrow's news today, remember that, where he'd make tomorrow's news happen. He had the big, big ship that would actually catch all the US and Russian submarines to try and start a war I think it was, something like that. He wanted to start a war. He'd write about it. He owned newspapers in China and everywhere else too and wanted China to have a war. That's what it was, China. Yeah, he would fit into that role there, you know. He would be so cocksure of himself, and his hands would wave and everything as he explained everything, of how his world was going to turn out to be and how he'd make it this way, etc., and it would just have to be that way.

Yep. The only difference is, the actor in the James Bond movie, the actor had more humanity in his eyes. Bill Gates eyes there's nothing in it. There's nothing, there's not a human behind it there, you know, there really isn't. There's something, there's an entity of some kind but it's not, I wouldn't call it human. Not that character. How, you couldn't trust that guy. You can sense just looking at him from a computer screen that you can't sense humanity in him, in the guy at all. But there's a creature there all right. You know. Some kind of creature. Some entity. And what a tremendous, we're supposed to listen to this guy? You don't vote for him, remember. But he's been given authority over YOU by other authorities that you do vote for? I think you'd better get these characters removed from your system and rectify the system, maybe give it a good cleanout perhaps. Because it's utterly corrupt, isn't it? Not just in the States.

You see, everybody follows this, whatever happens to the States, it's the last place for change, you see. If there's resistance inside the States to clean it all up and start putting matters right, then the world would have to follow suit. Because the US is the biggest funder of all these global institutions, including the World Health Organization and the United Nations. The US was set up... It was taken over I should say, it wasn't set up to, but it was certainly taken over, and one of the big markers of it is when they set up the UN in America in the US, the United Nations building. And the World Bank, yeah. And all the institutions that run the World Bank and the world economy that forces countries to comply with new changes and so on, all set up inside America. You see, America has been the battering ram for the elite for a long time. It was taken over long ago.

But it still has the laws there if they want to use them to clean it up. [Alan chuckles.] But the people would have to do it themselves, wouldn't they?

And folk become corrupted as they adapt into the system. Like after 9/11. Look how they've adapted into it compl... they don't even mention it anymore. What they'll mention is the next part of the corruption, which is what they see in front of them. But they'll adapt, because they adapted after 9/11. And all the hell that led up to it including what they were doing with internal militaries inside the US that led to it all and they've adapted at post 9/11. And now they're obedient to all authorities and the massive police force system or whatever you want to call Homeland Security as an example.

Adapt and adapt and adapt. Well, you end up literally standing up for the corrupt system as you adapt. You're looking at the next part of the system, you say, well I don't like that. Well, maybe you wouldn't have liked 9/11 either. [Alan chuckles.] But what happened there, eh? And when they said, oh we've got a whole brand-new system set up, you know, an internal, but it will employ millions of people, you know, and we'll spy on everybody with it too, and we'll interface with the NSA and the CIA and the FBI and FEMA and on and on it goes. And you adapt and you adapt and you adapt and you adapt. And the big eating machine which is the US military across the world is now in your own country ready to eat you all. [Alan chuckles.] Full circle, eh?

Oh, I didn't realize that's what it... What did you think it was? You got to start looking at things like a child looks at things, before it even gets the name of whatever it happens to be. What's that mommy? You know. Oh that's… You got to start looking at things like a child. LOOK at things for YOURSELF. Don't ask to have them interpreted by somebody else. LOOK at what you see. Because that's what matters, what YOU see. If you can't see, there's no hope for you to begin with. There really isn't, you know.

That goes right back to the whole idea of spirit and soul, etc., doesn't it? You get this battle of folk who say, well you know, everybody's got a spirit, it lasts forever. Where did they get that from? Where, where... It's like your body, right, spirit and body, you can also get rid of your body if you want to, that's your decision. You're warned, don't worry about those that can kill the body, but those that can destroy the soul, as well. What d'you think that means, eh? What d'you really think that means?

Hhhhhhhhh, so many things to ponder as they say, that folk don't bother to ponder it. They've decided already they like the... And again, it's the world of the physical that generally ends up triumphing over the spirit, in this world. Because you, no one wants to go hungry. No one wants to freeze to death. Hm? All the things that you need basically, like an animal needs the same things, food, shelter, clothing and so on. You need them or you die, you physically die. And we're designed to try to live for as long as we can. People will fight to the end to try to get a breath out and get a new breath in. That's what you do. It's a natural thing. Never mind what the elite try to do, oh, take this pill and finish it off faster and we'll save some bucks, and we can spend it on paychecks for ourselves, you know.

It's a natural thing. Nature is being destroyed all the time here, you see. But by the same token, that a lot of people, I think everybody probably will, it's most, not them all, will occasionally wonder what else is beyond all of this. They get an inkling of something. People who are younger more so because it hasn't been utterly driven from them.

I gave talks years ago about, and again along with Jacques Ellul's talks on education and indoctrination into propaganda, where they must get the children young. The initial propaganda is meant really to destroy the child's own ability to discern things for themselves – that's what it's for – and it makes them more susceptible to believing future propaganda. If they don't get that initial propaganda at school, he said, then later propaganda will not take, won't work on a child. That's why it's mandatory you get them to school quickly for their initial indoctrination.

Look what they teach them in schools now. Total mind warfare. Total logical warfare, against logic. And the parents sit back and let that happen. Which means the parents themselves are defeated, you see, knocked out, disabled... when you let it happen. Total warfare and the folk don't even know that. They're taught that this is just progress, we're in a progressive system, a progressive democracy they call it…

…as everything that was rational is destroyed, and you're forced eventually to accept the illogical. What is right is wrong, what's wrong is right. What's up is down, what's down is up. And you pay for that. In more ways than just financial. Hmph. So the folk don't know they're in eternal warfare here. And yes, no one wants to get hurt or tortured by the system which, again, is torturing other folks in other countries. You're paying for that too. No one wants that to be done to them. But you're complying, aren't you?

What are the rules, what ARE the rules of compliance the prison system, especially in a prisoner of war torture system? Social distancing. Even when they're hooded and they're kneeling, or hunched down as they like to say, hunkered down, very uncomfortable. And by the way, they're actually using that terminology for Covid, hunkered down, again. It's all, it's just predetermined, folks. There's two languages here, one that goes right to your subconscious because you'd recognize that from the pictures you've seen with tortured prisoners, hooded ones, hunkered down. You see? But you've got a nice person telling you, so they can't be that bad. But it is that bad. So you social distance one from the other so there's no contact. You can't communicate. You're punished if you do. If you even mumble under that hood… that mask, it has the same function. It disguises the face. It dehumanizes the person wearing it that you're looking at because you can't see the features. All you see is frightened eyes. You see? It has the same effect. And then social distancing, hm. No contact. The only difference is they tie the prisoners hands together so they can't touch each other either. For human contact. Segregate the people, that's what you do. No contact. They can't even recognize human features as they look at each other. When they try to speak it's all muffled. It's the same thing. This is part of psychological torture warfare. Deliberate.

Even Fauci said, don't wear a mask, you don't need to wear a mask, it won't do you any good. And then later on, wear them, wear them, you see. From the same mouth. Because he gets his orders to, you see. And he's utterly compromised by the way in other areas, he'll do what he's told.

Once again, I'll remind you to send me a few bucks. I keep mentioning it because folk forget very quickly when they listen to long talks, even short ones, eh, [Alan chuckles.] to send me a few bucks. Because it really helps out for me. And if I keep money coming in, I can get through the winter perhaps and still put out talks. Because they're important. Some folks say you should put out videos because people are used to getting videos. But here's the point of it. Do you want to sit staring at a screen for four hours? When you can do a lot more when you get an MP3 player or whatever you're using and get other work done at the same time? Isn't that better? You see how your conditioned to everything step-by-step by technology until you think you can't do without it. But then how much time is it going to rob you that you need to do other things as well? So it's quite easy, hhhch, it's easy to listen to it with the player when you're doing something else. Do you really need to look at a face on the screen? Hm? But then some people say, well yeah, it's the only way folk are going to be these days, just adapt to it. Again, adapt and adapt. I was thinking about doing some, you know, talks that way and just putting a curtain behind me and sitting there prattling away. But I haven't really decided yet. It could be done I suppose.

But even as, I'm in the country too and it costs me a fortune just to get satellite Internet. They're really hammering me now because, I'm obviously getting hammered for what I'm doing. This is how tyrannical governments work. They won't say, admit they're doing it, they just do it. That's how they would do it in any other country, in the Third World country, they just turn down your power until it's crawling and you get dial-up speed on satellite, and then they'll play games with you telling you, oh, try this and try that, if you complain to them, maybe is your equipment, it's maybe, maybe. And all the time they know it.

I've had this on and off for years, but this really got bad recently until literally you've got dial-up speed during the day, you know. At night like a magic clock, just ftt, they turn it on. So if you want to stay up all night long then you can use it. And I really mean that, it's like a switch just turns and that's it, midnight and it sails away. But you can't stay up all night and turn your night into day. That's what they're doing, Bernays style again, mind you too, the Corporations train the public to suit your product instead of making a better product to suit your public. That's the technique they're using.

EVERYTHING is manipulation, eh. And they see us as animals to be retrained. So send me a few bucks @cuttingthroughthematrix.com and we'll see if I can take it to the next step perhaps as we go through this. Because things are really going to ramp up. You're going to see it, you're going to see folk being arrested for their point of view. Not just because of not wearing masks and so on, but for their points of view. This is the next step they said they would take it to, and they plan to do it in the next month or two. So you'll see it. You'll see the same Waco tape raids on houses where folk are getting arrested because they're putting out disinformation, not authorized information, authorized by Fauci and Gates and so on, the new Masters, the over feurers, you know. So yeah, you've gotta have the right folk putting out information, and they're authorized. Even though there's folk with more qualifications. Bill Gates has no qualifications in medicine. Are you starting to get the picture here, this is a James Bond movie you're in. [Alan laughing.] I tell ya.

So anyway, yeah, send me a few bucks and help me tick along here and we'll see what we can do. If you need videos, I might put some out. Cuttingthroughthematrix.com, list my sites, because they will hammer the .com site here and there. They've already done it once or twice where I can't even get uploaded into it. I've got the other ones there, hopefully, so make a list of them. If you can't get the .com site on Sunday night, try the other ones in my list. These are my official sites. Anything outside that list there, as I say, is not mine. It may be put up from, by somebody else, of my talks, that's okay. But the official sites are listed @cuttingthroughthematrix.com. Again, Cash, PayPal, personal checks, money gram. Even international postal money orders. Or bank orders, you can get that for a few bucks. It's fine, that gets to me. General post is better than, don't register anything. If you register anything, you see, I've got to go miles away to the post office to pick it up and sign for it. That goes for parcels too by the way, you know. If it's a small parcel they can fit it into the mailbox. It's communal mailboxes they have in Canada here in the country. They don't come around your house and drop things. I still got a few miles to go to my mailbox, and it's a whole series for the area of mailboxes, but they can get smaller parcels in there too, and letters. That way I don't have to sign for anything. The post office is maybe 10 miles away, hhh, you know, hhh, so you've got a 20-mile round-trip if you want to pick things up. So yeah, don't register anything, just general post for anything gets to me regardless. I've never seen stuff go missing in the mail that way.

So the money is definitely welcome. As I say, the emails, I get deluged, deluged with emails from across the world. I try to read the whole lot of them. There's so many people. That's the only way you get in touch with anything, like a child looking at, you know, looking at whatever it is they're looking at, you've got to decide for yourself by looking at things and getting people's real opinions of real experiences that you're going through, individual experiences, to get pictures of things.

And it makes people come alive in your mind because we're so used to living remotely with people now. Everybody's remote, you've got to start personalizing people again. They're human beings. They're not numbers or just vague numbers on some kind of Twitter or whatever it happens to be, or names. They're real people. I like to see how real people are seeing things and experiencing things. Because it also shows you the uniformity of the same agenda worldwide. That took years and years to plan and get things ready to get implemented by the right people in place at the right time across the board.

That shows you what you're up against here. Well, like everything else, they need what? They need your compliance. So, the biggest monstrosities can fall apart if they can't get compliance, and they have to give up eventually. Don't forget that. [Alan chuckles.] They always used brutality before, and if the folk still don't, it falls apart. Then they're running for other nations because they'll get arrested for their brutality. And for their crimes against humanity. They know it too by the way. That's why they always get worse before the end trying to force you into compliance. Because they know you'll have to start going after them to arrest them for what they've done. Total destruction of the economies. Total manipulation of lies and mayhem for their own purposes.

How can you enslave sentient beings? Through incredible agendas and lies and deception, and threats against the people if they don't comply. This is what we're living under here. And you can't let that ever get off the hook here. They know it. They all know it. Like Bush Junior said in an interview after he was out of office, eh. They were talking in an interview about how Bush only accepted the kind of propaganda about the enemy, that wasn't his enemy at the time but the upcoming planned enemy, hhhch, he'd only accept the bad news about them. No good news or complacent happy news, or mediocre news. He just wanted the bad news, how bad they were, these enemies, you see, to build up the case for getting the wars going against them. Bush said, and I remember him telling and he mentioned it to one of his main characters that was his sidekick in the government. He said, managed to tell him, he says, if the public ever find out what we've been up to, he says, they'll chase us down the streets with ropes in their hands. That's from an ex-president. Because they conned the whole nation into a whole series of preplanned wars. That helped devastate Europe with the fallout as well. All preplanned like a chessboard step by, if we do this it will cause this, which will cause that, which will cause that, which will cause that. Big agendas to get fulfilled. N-n-n.

So yeah, you have to hold these people to a trial for crimes against humanity. And the Covid thing, how many folk have died already? They know this is monstrous. Even the WHO was getting edgy about it and trying to, well, we shouldn't have lockdowns. Because they know they’re going to be, hhhch, they're going to be up there in the dock as well. They all know it. They know it. And then they lost all credibility, all credibility. That's when as I said the main characters in front, the Moderna and the Fauci's and so on, these guys literally become more vicious. Because they got everything to lose including their own freedom if they get arrested for what they've been doing, you know, complicit in this. And all those guys at the World Economic Forum, same thing, with their massive civil service, it's like a nation, like a massive country. And training programs, they train future leaders. They grab them as children, train them, they present them to you as future leaders just appearing out of the blue? Ah, enough, enough enough, eh, enough of this.

So don't forget, you know, it always gets worse, they say it's darkest before the light, you know. That's the darkest part of the night, hm, before the dawn. That's when it gets more vicious, when they're getting called out and recognized. They've got no option now, you see, for the damage they've done. Deliberate destruction of the world's economy to turn you into groveling slaves eventually. N-n-n.

Now, I'm going to go through some articles here, that some of them are really telling in themselves, you know. We always hear from Helena Handbasket. Some folks think that it's a Greek handbasket maker, you know. But it's not that at all. No. I know who Helena Handbasket is, but again, it's to do with the Irish to an extent as well. We are all connected now with the same agenda across the planet. And we'll end up in Hell-and-a Handbasket too, bits and pieces. Here's a story of...

Sheriff's Kettle is on a slow boil for tyrants

theirishsentinel.com / Posted by Helena Handbasket / Oct 14, 2020

A number of years ago I took my American wife to the small village of St. Cyrus on the east coast of Scotland, close to Montrose. It was there that we located the now derelict Kaim of Mathers.; Mathers being my wife's ancestral family name. The story goes that…

"The castle was constructed due to strained relations between David Barclay and Sir John (James) Melville of Glenbervie, Sheriff of Mearns. David and his uncles became frustrated with the actions of the Sheriff and made an angry appeal to the King whilst he lodged at Red Castle. The monarch was allegedly somewhat exasperated by the repeated complaints. He may, or may not, have said "for all he cared they could go and make soup of their sheriff and sup him". The complainants took this literally and prepared a large cauldron in a gully near the site of the later castle. They invited the Sheriff to a hunt but then turned on him and threw him in the cauldron boiling the unfortunate individual alive. They then allegedly duly 'supped' him. (Alan: Meaning drunk on the soup.) The King declared David and his uncles outlaws for their actions meaning any man had the right to kill them without consequence. Accordingly David Barclay built the Kaim of Mathers to serve as a secure residence."

(A: So you had to... um, that's how it used to be actually. And I know they did do awful things in those days too, you know. As I've said before, they often call it the Dark Ages, and even the Middle Ages as well, much later on too and through the Middle Ages. But the Dark Ages weren't dark at all. There's lots of histories came down through time from places in Scotland and so on of the amazing Lord of the Isles that literally ran Scotland, a good part of England and Norway, what was Norway, or the Scandinavian countries too before that as well. So we know the different things that happened. In fact, one of the main Viking ones, and it didn't matter, sometimes it would be one that would be born in, say, Norway or Sweden would fill the throne, because they're all related, or ones that were born in Scotland would fill the throne, and it was an empire in a sense of these people. We know that one of them, one is an island in Scotland, in the north of Scotland, one of the Orkny ones I think. And there's an awfully good documentary put out years ago on this little island where monks had set up their monastery there in the Middle Ages and their main crop that they grew there was barley, you know. One of the Viking lords from Norway that used to raid all over the place, loved to raid, you know they got bored awfully quickly over in Norway and they'd do these raids. But he left them alone there because he use them for the barley, because he could make his beer out of it, his booze. So they got a pass, they were never raided and killed and slaughtered. They had a good working relationship with this guy, this particular Viking Lord. [Alan chuckles.])

(A: All these little things that you get told, it's amazing. If you go to the islands and never see them, these places. Because now there's actually monks returned to the place and restored this old monastery. And from all over the world these guys. They're kind of hermits to an extent. And it's a hard life. It's not an easy life. But they've decided to live that life in the spiritual world as opposed to the commercialized materialistic system that most folk adapt into and get destroyed by. Because you'll lose your soul in it too, there's no doubt about it. But anyway, that's the kind of story you get there, is giving the story about what happened there. It's interesting it says…)

The alleged arrest of men accused of attempting to kidnap Governor Whitmer in the US state of Michigan, who has implemented one of the harshest lockdown regimes in the US under the guise of a deadly virus which has been proven to be anything but, reminded me of the story of my wife's ancestry when I read another article related to the alleged kidnapping (A: That was in the papers too.) of Whitmer (A: I guess they arrested some people who supposedly were talking about kidnapping.) which suggested, and I think this is a more likely scenario, that these individuals were attempting a citizen's arrest for crimes committed against the people of Michigan (A: Ha.) by the aforementioned tyrannical Whitmer. They had also supposedly planned to do likewise to the Governor of Virginia for similar criminal actions.

In fact, a neighbouring Sheriff has supported that claim.

"Well, it's just a charge. And they say a plot to kidnap. And you gotta remember that–are they trying to kidnap? Because a lot of people are angry with the governor and they want her arrested. So, are they trying to arrest or was it a kidnapping attempt? Because you can still, in Michigan, if it's a felony, you can make a felony arrest."

(A: It's a citizen's arrest for a felony, you see, committed. And so it hasn't really been made clear what this whole thing is about, eh.)

It brings to light the power of local law enforcement, clearly in collusion with the state apparatus, that citizens can no longer attempt a citizen's arrest without being charged with what amounts to a terrorist act.

(A: It's so true, you're supposed to be able to do a citizen's arrest.)

It again goes to show that individuals have no right to address the crimes of their elected officials, who don't forget, are servants of those people (A: [Alan chuckles.] Supposedly.) and as such are paid very well by them to carry out duties which are beneficial to the citizenry. (A: That's how it used to be, at least in theory) These tyrannical governors have no right to basically kidnap the whole population of the state and try to justify it with illegal 'Stay at Home' diktats.

(A: And that's true as well, isn't it? That is true.)

It would appear that kidnapping a population is fine if disguised under law, despite there being no law to justify such action, and it comes from the mouth of a puppet politician, but if the public decide that arresting a politician, which they have a right to do under the law, for acting tyrannically and holding the entire state population to ransom as in, "Do as you're told and you might be allowed to come out of your homes if I say so" then that's justifiable and legal.

I sincerely hope that this is a sign of things to come and that more citizens take up the mantle of enforcing the law on their own behalf to arrest individuals, whoever they are or what position of presumed power they feel they hold, and arrest such tyrants for the good of their fellow human beings who are clearly suffering abuse at the hands of a small coterie of criminals.

And that's what I'm saying, you know, it's obvious that there's way more folk that have woken up of this con here, this incredible written in stone agenda on behalf of those who have decided that they've got a natural right to rule the world and do this to you, hm. Absolutely. N-n-n. So I'll put this one up here from Helena Handbasket and have a, used to slow boil people on behalf of the king at one point.

It's like the Brahan Seer. The Brahan Seer was a real seer in Scotland. In Scotland you definitely had people who had a gift, you know. And I don't know how good it is now. But I met some actually, I met some of the seers, a famous one too. And I had some abilities myself you might say. But there was a Brahan seer, and he was, every clan used to have, give honor to any, not just a Piper... They always had a champion Piper who could literally play the history of the clan. Folk don't know that. It was written into music in its day, and some of them could sing it for hours and days on end, the whole history. That's how it used to be. But they also had a seer. A seer was someone you would ask for advice from, and he'd would look into whatever he did and so on, his stone or whatever it was, and come out with his little insights. And no one laughed at them because they were often very true. They weren't witches, there wouldn't curses and spells on people, they just had the ability to have the site, you know, the gift.

The Brahan seer was a famous one and he was awfully accurate in what he saw and so on. But the clan, it was the chief had gone over to France on a business enterprise. And his wife, this is, I think it was in the 1500s, and his wife kept waiting for him to come home, and letters were sent back by courier and so on. But she says, what is the stalling thing? It was like Bill Gates, you know, just another few months, another few months. Same idea. She eventually called the seer, the Brahan. He went there, and he had trepidation too because it's not a good thing when, you know, wives, you're getting involved now between the husband and wife, especially when they've got that kind of power. She says, well what's he doing? He says, oh I don't know, you know, ma'am. Tell me what he's doing or, and she threatened to do nasty things to him, have done to him if he didn't tell her. So he did his little paraphernalia thing and have a look see. He could see and he says, well he's with a woman, you know, he described the woman and all the rest of it.

When the chief came back, he immediately got assaulted by the wife and accused. And he couldn't deny it because she knew how to describe, she could describe the wife or whatever, this woman he had been with and all the rest of it. I think he may have even gotten the name. But what happened then, from both of them... Because this is... You never get involved between a man and wife because they both turn on you eventually, you know. Even though you didn't cause the upset, you went to please them, you see. And it's like, never go, if someone comes to you and say my spouse is so-and-so and so-and-so and so-and-so, never, you might just say, oh well. Don't say yes now, or that's terrible or whatever because you, when they get back, you are the bad guy. A bit of wisdom there.

So anyway, the poor Brahan seer now had an angry husband there, the clan chief, and his wife was mad and furious too because the bad news was broken, even though she demanded, this is how crazy some of these folk are, she blamed the seer for giving her the bad news. So the husband decided to have him put in a barrel of tar and set on fire and rolled down the hill and all that. And that's what they did with the guy. They did so. So what he did, the Brahan, he did actually cursed them because he was, you're allowed to curse them if they're going to kill you, you see. And he said, not one stone of your house will be left standing, he says, after, and I think it was either the third or fourth son was born, it was something like that, or generations. But they would be born, meaning there was a form of retardation in the children, deformed and so on. And that actually happened. [Alan chuckles.] It actually happened.

I remember they were doing a documentary on him on television live at the time and they had the cameras outside where the building was, eh. And it was only a few boulders around, or there was about one or two stones left standing. As they were giving the talk there behind them eventually the truck pulled off and pulled away the last two standing stones there of the building. They went through it too and sure enough, the offspring of that guy had met the ends that the Brahan seer had curse them with. That's a true story. [Alan chuckles.] But that's just... That's all from Helena Handbasket's thing that set me on that whole roller coaster there.

So there you go, Sheriff’s Kettle is on a slow boil for tyrants. Part of that is so true, Helen Handbasket's one. Because that's how the elite act. They don't just give orders. They just give little insinuations of this is being a problem or that being a problem, and all those beneath them run into action to fix all these problems. That's how it's really done. That way the ones at the top never take the can for anything legally, you see. And that's how it works. So I'll put that one up. Another one too is…

theirishsentinel.com / Posted by Helena Handbasket / Oct 14, 2020

(A: ...try to put all their past behind them in different groups and so on, because they're going under fast too. It says…)

Tyranny episode two is on the way (A: That's part 2 of the Covid.) as what appears to be a united Ireland in one respect at least. Both parts of the island of Ireland are now moving lockstep into drastic lockdown (A: The whole world is, at the same time, isn’t it? There’s planning for you. It’s to be perpetual by the way, this one.) of the entire landmass in what could be seen as a further extension of a social engineering exercise using the island as the perfect environment to easily lockdown given that it can be easily isolated from mainland Britain, and internationally, simply by ensuring that no flights or ferries can enter either jurisdictions. That hasn’t been suggested yet, but it’s always going to be on the table. The border is an obvious problem for both countries in that it is virtually impossible to police and therefore both states will carry out the same policies to ensure that it becomes an irrelevance. There will be no point in trying to escape one tyranny to enter another. (A: That’s from north to south, you see, and so on.)

The mainstream media continues to perpetrate the lie that Covid-19 is a highly contagious, deadly disease despite the fact that even the CDC and the WHO have admitted the opposite.

In fact, the CDC has even admitted that they have never even been able to find Covid-19. (A: That is true. They give nice drawings about it. They say they can maybe find particles of broken-down dead viruses, that’s what that whole PCR test is about.) Yes, you read that correctly, they haven’t been able to find it, isolate it, and therefore obviously diagnose anybody with it. They certainly can’t claim to be racing at ‘warp speed’ to find a vaccine for something they have no evidence even exists and therefore, again obviously, no pathogen to work on a vaccine with. (A: Hm?)

The links are hereby the way where the CDC says that they don't have the virus available to examine. [Alan chuckles.] I'm not kidding you. It's from their own website. I'll put these articles up. This is in this article too. Again, they can go on and on with the facts, it really makes no difference. This is a big agenda and folk can scream about the facts until the cows come home, until eventually the cows don't come home because they banned all meat consumption.

Food Shortage Simulation Predicts 400% Increase in Food Prices by 2030

theorganicprepper.com / 11 Oct 2020

(A: I'll put this one up.)

Recently, I wrote an article discussing the looming food crisis in the United States and the rest of the world.

(A: They want this to happen by the way. Hm.)

Back in 2015, 65 people showed up at the World Wildlife Fund’s headquarters in Washington D.C. These individuals were international policymakers, corporate businessmen, academics, and “leaders in thought.” Their goal? To run a simulation of a world food crisis that would begin in 2020 and run to 2030.

(A: I put that article up before, that one actually, from them, from their own sites. There’s a few of them actually putting up the same articles.)

The press release of the event was published on the Big Ag corporation Cargill website (A: I put that one up from their own site.) and revealed that the food shortage simulation that the decade between 2020 and 2030 would see two major food crises. During this time, prices would rise 400% of the long term average, there would be a number of climate-related weather events, governments would be toppled in Ukraine and Pakistan, and famine would force refugees from Myanmar, Chad, Sudan, and Bangladesh.

Does any of this sound familiar yet?

(A: That was 2015, remember. And they talked about taxes such as a meat tax and for carbon tax, and this article has got them there too.)

A meat tax. A carbon tax.

As I say, the whole agenda for the climate change is totally immersed in this Covid lockdown. Again, the Club of Rome has said that too, I've given up their articles two months ago where they were overjoyed fulfilling all the climate agenda through the Covid, under the guise of the Covid. So I'll put this up too about the food prices.

Also I might even put up the ones from the original sites too, such as those exercises in food security by Cargill and show you some of the characters that were at it too by the way, that are familiar today that are in charge of it.

Food Chain Reaction crisis simulation ends with global carbon tax - cargill.com / 12 Nov 2015

This article is about beef and how they're closing down the meat plants. Oh, they're testing them, you see, they keep, if you're going to close any place down, ANY place down, just put in a select group of people to test them, and they'll find particles of coronas. Because it's a normal thing in society, all the different coronaviruses, there's stacks of them, even the common cold, eh. The PCR test doesn't actually identify the coronavirus 19. It only picks up particles of what they claim are particles of viruses, not the whole viruses but particles, that could be always there, you know, dead particles. So it's a complete farce. So they can close a place down quickly with, oh, we've had so many cases today, because we've tested 10,000 and found 5000 or 7000. Well, that's because, hhhch, you're going to find them across society. Especially this time of year by the way, there's all kinds of viruses going around that you don't even know you've had. Just like Covid. So you can close down the beef plants, so…

Food economists say changing consumer habits and potential coronavirus outbreaks in processing plants may affect food supplies. Here are the foods you might see less of in grocery stores.

businessinsider.com / 3 June 2020

Beef may be less prevalent on shelves as infection might easily spread in processing plants that are not set up for social distancing.

(A: There ya go.)

It's quite amazing, isn't it. I mean, don't you get fed up with it all? Hm? Hm? Don't you get fed up? Because it's all planned this way, isn't it? It's all completely planned this way.

Oxford vaccine head says UK has no hope of normality until July with face masks and social distancing until next summer

thesun.co.uk / 14 Oct 2020

(A: Why bother having this person saying it, that's Andrew Pollard, when the heads of all countries are saying exactly the same thing, verbatim. Just like robots. [Alan chuckles.] But it's all coincidence, isn't it, eh, as they, oh, a few months more, a few years more, oh, and for the rest of your lives, you know. Yep. Oxford vaccination trial team, ah, dear, dear, dear Pollard, eh. N-n-n.)

“If we end up with a vaccine that's effective in preventing the disease, that is by far the best way to control the virus.

(A: No it’s not. It’s called herd immunity if you let folks mix, and then most folk will get it and will be immune to it. What do you think for all these ones that say, oh they’ve tested positive, more cases, more cases? Didn’t say they were sick, more cases. Well, test them again in a few weeks and what happens? They don’t have it then. If you check their blood samples, they’ve got antibodies which they develop themselves, that’s why they’re NOT SICK, folks. They don’t stay cases anymore, you see?... Do you understand, they’re not cases anymore. What happened to them? They’re now immune to them, without the vaccine, hm. Did you figure that one out?)

“When does life get back to normal? Even if we had enough vaccine for everyone, in my view it's unlikely that we're going to very rapidly be in a position where the physical distancing rules can be just dropped.”

The Oxford Vaccine Group is being run by Oxford University and is currently working on developing a vaccine with drug company Astrazeneca.

(A: It's amazing the media doesn't tell you that OBVIOUS little bit there. Those folk all have immunity to it now, or, they would be sick and stay sick until they died, hm. [Alan chuckles.] Oh, we've got 10,000 more cases. Yeah, in a week's time they won't be cases, they'll be immune. Hhhhh. Facts don't matter though. And it's just astonishing.)

The Oxford University vaccine, produced with drugs giant Astrazeneca, is one of only nine to have reached phase three trials, the final stage before implementation, and is widely seen as the leading candidate to deliver.

(A: Oh, folk are going to end up being multimillionaires off this. There's no way they're going to back off, you know.)

...early results had shown that the vaccine

causes the body to make antibodies against Covid, and that these last for at least three months.

(A: Well guess what? They said the same thing would happen if you developed your own immunity. And it might even be longer. [Alan laughing.] Do you understand they want to give you a vaccine every three months? Are you getting the picture here?)

Oxford's vaccine is based on a genetically engineered type of coronavirus that gives chimpanzees a form of the common cold.

Trials of the jab involve 20,000 volunteers in Britain and other countries being given either the vaccine or a harmless placebo.

(A: So you realize too, that it's a genetically engineered type of virus, right, coronavirus.

It's not the one you find in the wild supposedly, that they can't find. But they've genetically engineered a virus coronavirus that gives chimpanzees a form of the common cold. Well, that's not the coronavirus 19 then, is it? And so are they're trying to say here, are they going to give you, are they going to make you immune to a chimpanzee cold virus? [Alan laughing.] which they made in the lab? It seems to be, isn't it? Yp.)

Tests on volunteers given the jab in April will soon show whether they lasted for six months. 'The evidence so far in the lab is that the antibodies are able to stop the virus in its tracks,' said Professor Pollard.

(A: Now, the other studies I'll do eventually if I've got time, show that they can't lose with the tests that they're actually doing. Because the tests only have to stop very mild symptoms like sniffing or whatever, and it won't stop the actual severe effects of this virus. That's the other articles I'll touch on tonight. But these are the salesman talking here, you know, that are going to make big, big money. And it says...)

Kate Bingham, head of the UK Vaccine Taskforce, said there was only a 'slim' chance the Oxford jab could be ready by Christmas.

(A: …and so on and so on.)

At least one person in the trial has become seriously ill. Hhhch, there's only a few folk in it actually, folks. Forget the 20,000 volunteers, they're actually using a study group much, much smaller, actually. Again that goes into other articles to find out that part. And by the way, once you get this vaccine jab, you're to be electronically monitored for years to come. I've got those articles too. There's a whole agenda here, eh. A whole agenda. N-n-n.

Some folk have got neurological symptoms, it says, side effects. I know other ones too become paralyzed, eh. It's just little things like that. So I'll put this one up too, you know. These are the sales pitch articles here, and you definitely won't get much truth out of them on any negative feedback in the sales pitch. There's too much to lose, eh. Again don't forget they can't get sued for killing you or crippling you.

David Attenborough. The big man, the big eugenicists that wants to curb the population, eh, by curbing capitalism. He says curb excess capitalism to save nature. Back to austerity, for you. Not for him, he's important. He says…

Attenborough: 'Curb excess capitalism'

bbc.com / 8 Oct 2020

Sir David Attenborough says the excesses of western countries should "be curbed" to restore the natural world and we'll all be happier for it.

The veteran broadcaster said that the standard of living in wealthy nations is going to have to take a pause.

(A: So there he is, another master telling you. He belongs to the right clubs, you know.)

Nature would flourish once again he believes when "those that have a great deal, perhaps, have a little less".

Sir David was speaking to Liz Bonnin for BBC Radio 5 Live's new podcast 'What Planet Are We On?'.

Speaking personally and frankly, Sir David explained, "We are going to have to live more economically than we do. And we can do that and, I believe we will do it more happily, not less happily. (A: Well, he’ll be happy because he won’t be cutting back on anything.) And that the excesses the capitalist system has brought us, have got to be curbed somehow."

"That doesn't mean to say that capitalism is dead and I'm not an economist and I don't know. But I believe the nations of the world, ordinary people worldwide, are beginning to realise that greed does not actually lead to joy."

(A: So he’s deciding for you how much you should really get, eh. Obviously, greed doesn't lead to joy, but poverty doesn't lead to it either. Who ARE these characters that they elevate up to these spokespeople of how we should all live, eh? Eugenicists... Elitists is what they are, folks. They've got all the royal family on board with it like Prince Philip and Prince William and so on. They're all on the same panels at the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change...)

The Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change study looked at how the world would cope if temperatures rose by 1.5C by the end of this century.

(A: HHHHH! And all those terrible, terrible predictions that they had that just didn't pan out, eh, and ftt. I tell ya, n-n-n. So now you've got Covid, and you have to better comply.)

Oh, this is an interesting one. [Alan chuckles.] When Hillary Clinton was in the State Department, I mean, she and Madeleine Albright had a great time on the different war department boards and so on deciding which countries they were going to take out. They really had a great time talking about it. I really mean that too. Then Obama, remember too, Obama used to talk about he had the job of picking favorite targets for drone strikes, in the morning he picked his targets, he thought it was great.

A National Security Reckoning

foreignaffairs.com / Nov/Dec 2020 / By Hillary Clinton

(A: This is from the Council on Foreign Relations, from their magazine.)

How Washington Should Think About Power

(A: By Hillary Clinton. Hhhhh, oh, I can trust her. I feel better now already, eh, that she's going to try to get back in there. They all are actually, eh? And you can tell by their faces they love you all, they just love you, eh? It says…)

In a year marked by plague and protest, Americans are reckoning with long-overdue questions about racial justice, economic inequality (A: We'll all be the same poor shortly, very poor.), and disparities in health care. (A: What health care, you know?)

The current crisis should also prompt a reckoning about the United States' national security priorities.

(A: Maybe you should tell the public what your priorities are because they haven't benefited from them for the last 40 years.)

The country is dangerously unprepared for a range of threats, not just future pandemics but also an escalating climate crisis (A: Oh my goodness, it's the climate as well as the Covid, all these things are just so, you know it's like ghostly, you can't grab them or anything, ftt.) and multidimensional challenges from China and Russia. (A: …multidimensional… hhhhh.) Its industrial and technological strength has atrophied, its vital supply chains are vulnerable, its alliances are frayed, and its government is hollowed out. In the past, it sometimes has taken a dramatic shock—Pearl Harbor, Sputnik, 9/11—to wake up the United States to a new threat and prompt a major pivot. The COVID-19 crisis should be a big enough jolt to rouse the country from its sleep, so that it can summon its strength and meet the challenges ahead.

So here's one of the con artists [Alan chuckles.] listing all the stuff I've been talking about, all the crisis and cons that they did in the past, and she's going to tell you how you've got to live and who you've got to build up for war capabilities and… She likes wars and things, you know. Yep. Again, she names the enemies, the same enemies that you know that America's there to get rid of apparently. Iran, Iran's a terrible country, oh my goodness, the great demon Iran, eh? Hhhhh. Again. There ya go. I tell ya. I tell ya, it's pretty sad isn't that she's after the job again back in the State Department.

I'll also put up this article here, this is the Guardian newspaper. It was bought over again apparently a few years back and completely changed. It used to be pretty decent, but now it's just a big mouthpiece for the establishment.

YouTube bans misinformation about Covid vaccinations

theguardian.com / 14 Oct 2020

Any claims about Covid vaccinations that contradict the WHO will be removed, says YouTube

(A: There's democracy in action, there's freedom. The new freedom as George Bush Junior called it, the new freedom, eh.)

YouTube has banned misinformation about Covid vaccinations, just days after Facebook took similar action on its own platform.

The company says that the fact that such a vaccine might be imminent makes it the right time to take action, and expand its pre-existing policies against Covid-19 medical misinformation.

(A: …its pre-existing policies, eh? Hm.)

"A Covid-19 vaccine may be imminent, therefore we're ensuring we have the right policies in place to be able to remove misinformation related to a Covid-19 vaccine from the platform," (A: They keep saying the same things over and over.) a YouTube spokesperson said.

"Any content (A: So it's their opinion.)

Any content that includes claims about Covid-19 vaccinations that contradict expert consensus from local health authorities or the World Health Organization (WHO) will be removed from YouTube."

(A: But I use the stuff from the WHO, and from the health experts and authorities. So it doesn't matter, you see, even if you use their stuff [Alan chuckles.] where they contradict themselves, YOU get banned. This is an agenda, folks. A nondemocratic agenda, hm.)

Examples of now-banned (A: Right, now-banned…)

Examples of now-banned claims include false allegations that the vaccine would kill people or cause infertility, (A: Well, why have the governments, and I put up the links from the governments websites, Canada, the States and Britain, why have they all given blanket immunity for any damage or illness or disease or death it caused by the vaccine? Why would they give that out and give them blanket immunity from being sued …if it's so safe? Hm? So I'll say it again from their side…)

Examples of now-banned claims include false allegations that the vaccine would kill people (A: Well, if it's not going to kill people why would you have to get blanket immunity for those that give the vaccines to people for anything that happens?) or cause infertility, or claiming that the vaccine would in some way implant microchips in recipients. (A: Okay? Hm? Are you getting the picture here?)

So that's wrong, right? Obviously wrong. It is a vaccine. So they really don't need to get blanket immunity if it causes any death or injury to people, right. That's just a coincidence that they've given them blanket immunity. And they're going to ban anybody that talks about the fact that, um, it's got some way to implant microchips in the recipients, isn't it? Well, isn't that coincidental because here, right, here you have one, this other article by Major General John Sullivan, and whole bunch of Major Generals and stuff in here actually, [Alan chuckles.] and this is to do with Profusa. Profusa, it's called Profusa Lumee sensor system…

A Military-Funded Biosensor Could Be the Future of Pandemic Detection

defenseone.com / 3 Mar 2020

The Profusa Lumee sensor system consists of a special hyrogel and an emitting device. Together the two can detect and transmit data on subtle changes in the body, including, potentially, infection from diseases and viruses like coronovirus. PROFUSA (A: Right.)

If it wins FDA (A: The federal drug association agency…) approval next year, the two-part sensor could help spot new infections weeks before symptoms begin to show. (A: Right.)

(A: It's a military funded biosensor. This is from Science and Tech. By the way DARPA is in bed with them. [Alan chuckles.] But this is from March, this article here. From biowarfare and technology. This magazine by the way is one of the biggest magazines for the military and the US government, educators to them in warfare and so on. It says…)

Why are pandemics so hard to stop? Often it's because the disease moves faster than people can be tested for it. The Defense Department is helping to fund a new study to determine whether an under-the-skin biosensor can help trackers keep up — by detecting flu-like infections even before their symptoms begin to show. Its maker, Profusa, says the sensor is on track to try for FDA approval by early next year.

The sensor has two parts. One is a 3mm string of hydrogel, a material whose network of polymer chains is used in some contact lenses and other implants. Inserted under the skin with a syringe, (A: I hope the Guardian is listening.) the string includes a specially engineered molecule that sends a fluorescent signal outside of the body when the body begins to fight an infection. The other part is an electronic component attached to the skin. It sends light through the skin, detects the fluorescent signal and generates another signal that the wearer can send to a doctor, website, etc. It's like a blood lab on the skin (A: This is the PR part, eh, a blood lab on the skin…) that can pick up the body's response to illness before the presence of other symptoms, like coughing.

The announcement comes as the United States grapples with COVID-19… (A: …blah, blah, blah, blah, blah.)

The military is taking a leading role in vaccine research, Joint Chiefs of Staff Chairman Gen. Mark Milley told reporters at the Pentagon on Monday. "Our military research labs are working feverishly around the horn here to try to come up with a vaccine. So we'll see how that develops over the next couple of months," Milley said. U.S. troops themselves are also at risk. A U.S. soldier in South Korea became the first U.S. service member to contract the virus, the Wall Street Journal reported in February.

Profusa’s newest funded study, which the company announced on Tuesday, will test how well the sensor can detect influenza outbreaks up to three weeks before it’s possible to detect them using current methods.

Hwang said his company has received grants from the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency, (A: Listen, listen Guardian news paper…) or DARPA, (A: Defense Advanced Research Project that doesn’t exist, you’re claiming, fake news…) since around 2011. “They gave us grant money to help our research and as we prove out a certain milestone, as we de-risk the technology, they give us a second phrase and a third phase and provide support,” he said.

Hwang said DARPA is helping the company reach out to other outfits within the Defense Department that might use the device on troops or servicemembers. That could include partnerships with U.S. Special Operations Command, for instance, or, Indo-Pacific Command.

I'll put this, this... terrible, terrible sacrilegious nonexistent false DARPA information from DARPA [Alan chuckles.] up tonight too for those that want to look it up, while I get banned for putting up what it says.

Beware of covid-19 vaccine trials designed to succeed from the start washingtonpost.com / 22 Sept 2020

William Haseltine is a former Harvard Medical School professor and founder of the university’s cancer and HIV/AIDS research departments. He serves as chair and president of the think tank ACCESS Health International.

In response to widespread demand for more transparency, pharmaceutical companies Moderna and Pfizer have released clinical study protocols for their covid-19 vaccine trials. The goal is to reassure the public that the trials are being conducted responsibly…

(A: Well, how can it be when you’re cutting short any possible testing, like, it’s supposed to take years.)

In both the Moderna and Pfizer trials, for example, the primary objective is to prevent any occurrence of covid-19, not necessarily a severe case. Preventing serious illness is a secondary objective.

(A: Are you understanding it. Preventing serious illness is a secondary objective.)

Yet it is the severe cases of covid-19 that have killed nearly 1 million people worldwide (A: We don't even know if that's true… that died with it or because of it. A big difference.) and left many millions more with long-term damage. (A: Really?) With the current protocols, it is conceivable that a vaccine might be considered effective — and eventually approved — based primarily on its ability to prevent mild cases alone. (A: …like sniffles. Well, is that any good… to give you a new RNA type vaccine, mRNA vaccine, that's going to alter the DNA makeup of your epithelial tissue, permanently, on something that might prevent a mild case or mild snuffle? It says…)

If we were developing a vaccine for a simple cold virus, perhaps this would indeed be enough. (A: But I mean, they can't even cure the cold here apparently.) But covid-19 is far from a common cold. People are not concerned about the tickle in their throat or a runny nose; they are concerned about being put in the hospital. A covid-19 vaccine should, first and foremost, protect us from severe instances of the disease.

(A: Then he goes on about the "troubling size of the group" for each vaccine, and he gives you the big numbers that they always give you, oh there's…)

…upwards of 30,000 participants slated for each. But while the full trial sizes might be large, the protocols suggest that efficacy can be proved in an initial test group of just 106 (A: …106 people…) for the Moderna vaccine and in a group of 64 for Pfizer. But keep in mind only half of each group receives the vaccine; the other half receives a placebo.

(A: That's way too small. It's got the links here too, that's from the Washington Post. I'll put that one up as well.)

Cracked Teeth and Other Covid Vaccine Side Effects - bitchute.com / 12 Oct 2020

Cracked teeth and other side effects have come out from some of the people who have got the vaccines that were in test studies and so on. I'll put that up for those that want to look at it. It's quite interesting to have the trial seem to be rather farcical.

And the same guy, William Haseltine, right...

How we can contain Covid-19 without a vaccine

cnn.com / 4 Sept 2020

William Haseltine, PhD, is chair and president of the global health think tank ACCESS Health International. He is author of numerous books, (A: He's already got a book out on Covid naturally, you know, they just churn them out, ghostwriters I guess...) including the recently released "A Family Guide to COVID-19: Questions and Answers for Parents, Grandparents and Children."

(A: So he's one of the stars they put out in front of you to believe in, mind you, too. It says, how can we contain Covid 19 without a vaccine...)

(CNN)While the world is waiting for a safe and effective Covid-19 vaccine, there is a strategy that can potentially bring an end to the pandemic in the United States without the development of pharmaceutical drugs. (A: It talks about it’s …) …compatible with American values like personal freedom…

…would revolve around the distribution of rapid, saliva-based tests….

So his whole thing is, just get lots of tests kits out there. Do you understand, this is forever. They want you to get tested every day for the rest of your lives for this rubbish. Under the guise that maybe your immune system, or even the vaccination, will only last about three months. Well, we live with the common cold. We live with the flu. Are you starting to get the picture this is much bigger than they're telling you here? We are a business for all these companies that make all these test kits and so on. And the PCR test, you know, polymerase chain reaction tests are pretty well useless. And he even says, this guy, it can detect even trace amounts of the virus. It can detect trace amounts of any kind of type of virus pretty well. And if you get trace amounts of bits of viruses, it doesn't mean you've got the disease. Or are ill with it either, for that matter. Rubbish. Completely. And there's no point arguing that because all the data is out on it.

Again getting back to the one…

defenseone.com / 6 Oct 2020

(A: In other words, what to do. He's against Trump's doctor, eh? You can read the article. But the main part is, I mentioned earlier in that talk, it says...)

…a military doctor would still be at risk of losing his license were he or she to administer a treatment to the president that he knew to be harmful but acceded to provide because he is in uniform and the commander-in-chief ordered it.

But he also says that the president, he says, like any other, hm, citizen has a right to refuse anything that's going to get put into his body. Remember that part when they come for YOU. You know. That's in the article here and I'll put that out there too. It's up to the... That's the Nuremberg trials that came out too, or the codes for drugs and pharmaceuticals, they couldn't just use what they wanted on you for any reason at all. It's up to you to say yes or no. They can't experiment on you.

Interim Framework for COVID-19 Vaccine Allocation and Distribution in the United States - centerforhealthsecurity.org / 19 Aug 2020

This is an important one here. Again Johns Hopkins, Bloomberg School of Public Health. It's amazing how the same characters, these beeeenevolent, you know, philanthropists just took the world over, eh. Likewise Haupt said they would, philanthropy would take over the world, by first helping folk, you see, then you get more power and then you dictate to people. Then you dictate to governments. And there you go. So again, they've got the institutes for bioethics, this new thing, who should live and die, who should get treatment, who shouldn't get treatment, yada, yada, all trained by a University system, eh.

I'll put this one up for those that want to plow through it. It's a PDF. And well-being, and promoting the common good, all that rrubbish, eh. To satisfy the one who tell you to go into austerity, and poverty is good for you, you know, you could be happy if you just keep practicing on your moan, I am happy, I am happy. A stale piece of bread is as good a good juicy steak… Just keep saying it over and over. The mind control we are under is phenomenal, folks. Shoved out by professionals that think they've got the right to dictate to us. Bioethics! Hm? N-n-n. I'll put this massive piece of propaganda up here, this PDF, and add it to all the other PDFs that are out there too. Vaccine allocation and distribution in the United States. The framework is all built up already, just by pure coincidence.

Australian Media Finally Calls Out Davos ‘Great Reset’ Agenda

21stcenturywire.com / 12 Oct 2020

This week, Sky News Australia contributor and former Australian Senator Cory Bernardi, tore open the debate on COVID after calling out a globalist agenda which few in mainstream media have dared to mention so far.

(A: And good luck to him.)

Bernardi believes that the COVID-19 pandemic hysteria is being used as the Trojan horse for a globalist agenda hatched out of the World Economic Forum in Davos. (A: Well, it IS, they actually say it themselves…) It’s called The Great Reset, and its designed by elite billionaires supposedly to bring about ‘social and economic change.’

(A: In other words, they’re creating their own system.)

“Medical experts now acknowledge that lockdowns don’t work….

(A: Even the WHO, I’ll put the articles up from the WHO tonight, in case the Guardian says it’s pooh-pooh, you know, that says they don’t work, lockdown.)

Now none of that makes any sense until you open your mind to consider if there is another agenda at work.”

(A: Thank goodness the word is getting around, eh? The REAL agenda, eh. And this is what Schwab said from the World Economic Forum, the guy who is really all for this whole agenda here…)

According to technocrat, Klaus Schwab, founder and Chairman of the World Economic Forum, “Now is the historical moment of time not only to fight the … virus but to shape the system … for the post-corona era,” claims Schwab.

“(Mr Schwab) admits that COVID is the new excuse to usher in the Green New Deal that climate alarmists, profiteers and big government have been pushing for years,” said Bernardi.

(A: Well, I’ve been saying the same stuff for long before that, so there you go.)

I'll put this article up too.

Safety and Immunogenicity of SARS-CoV-2 mRNA-1273 Vaccine in Older Adults

nejm.org / 29 Sept 2020

(A: It's an interesting article actually for nerds and so on, from the New England Journal of Medicine, one of these conspiracy sites, you know. So it's doing the trials of the vaccine on older adults and so on and it goes into the fact that, you see generally what they do with older folk, what they'll do is they'll pump in extra adjuvants in, at the site of injection. They want the blood to really flow there and get an inflammation going to make the blood flow and to bring different cells there that recognize that infection or whatever, and out of that supposedly your body eventually creates antibodies to that infection. That's the idea behind the adjuvants, eh. And because older folk, like young folk don't have, have a lowered immune system, like the very young children have a lowered immune system, it hasn't developed in them yet. With older folk it's developed but now it's dying off. Well, you find that with older folks they give you extra adjuvant. Isn't that crazy? You're prone to suffer from adjuvants, so give them extra adjuvants to try to beat and torture the body into developing antibodies. Isn't that how it's really supposed to work, you see. But they found if they lower the adjuvants in older folk this time with the particular vaccines they're giving, and to get any response at all, so they had to lower what they were giving them here. It's quite an interesting thing.)

The trial was expanded to include 40 older adults, who were stratified according to age (56 to 70 years or =71 years). All the participants were assigned sequentially to receive two doses of either 25 µg or 100 µg of vaccine administered 28 days apart.

RESULTS

(A: They found out that most of the folk had moderate side effects, right...)

…moderate in severity and most frequently included fatigue, chills, headache, myalgia (A: That's great, eh?), and pain at the injection site.

(A: Remember, do no harm is the first law, eh.)

Such adverse events were dose-dependent and were more common after the second immunization.

(A: Actually, some of the folk who had it or tested last week, some of them said that, that you have to take time off work after the second immunization because you will feel so sick. Back to this article, it says…)

Binding-antibody responses increased rapidly after the first immunization. By day 57, among the participants who received the 25-µg dose, the anti–S-2P geometric mean titer (GMT) was 323,945 among those between the ages of 56 and 70 years and 1,128,391 among those who were 71 years of age or older; among the participants who received the 100-µg dose, the GMT in the two age subgroups was 1,183,066 and 3,638,522, respectively. After the second immunization, serum neutralizing activity was detected in all the participants by multiple methods.

Binding- and neutralizing-antibody responses appeared to be similar to those previously reported among vaccine recipients between the ages of 18 and 55 years and were above the median of a panel of controls who had donated convalescent serum. The vaccine elicited a strong CD4 cytokine response involving type 1 helper T cells.

CONCLUSIONS

In this small study involving older adults, adverse events associated with the mRNA-1273 vaccine were mainly mild or moderate. The 100-µg dose induced higher binding- and neutralizing-antibody titers than the 25-µg dose, which supports the use of the 100-µg dose in a phase 3 vaccine trial.

So they had to lower, they had to actually lower basically the size of the dose as opposed to increase it for older folk for the first time. Because it's a different kind of vaccine, you see. They also give you young folk too, who were getting the same kind of testing, and they can give them up to 250 µg. And then give you the assessment of antibody responses too. Mind you, it doesn't mean much until you hit the real coronavirus after the shots, that's in the wild as they call it, and see what happens to you then.

Everything That Has Happened Was Meant To Happen, by Dr. Vernon Coleman - bitchute.com / 20 Sept 2020

That's a little video, I'll put that up too. As I say, he's kind of woken up in the last little while about this, he was an author for novels. He's basically going into Agenda 21, that I was talking about for the last 25 years. And now we're following the whole darn thing with austerity, etc. So he's kind of woken up, is talking about the stuff I came out with, new normals, years ago, and he is using all these things. So it's interesting, it's good he's doing it. And we need more folks too. And more folks are jumping on the bandwagon, when they realize that what they've been told doesn't match their observations.

Google and Oracle To Monitor Americans Who Get Warp Speed's Covid-19 Vaccine For Up To Two Years

naturalblaze.com / 15 Oct 2020 / By Whitney Webb

(A: Actually, it's to be longer than that. Because they don't know how it's going to affect you in 10 years time by the way. They're altering your DNA makeup. Some of their peer publications actually, it's going to turn your body into its own medicine factory – that's how they're pushing on this stuff – yeah, and you'll start to make things to prevent things happening, you know. [Alan chuckles.] So this...)

… "pharmacovigilance surveillance system," (A: This….) …Operation Warp Speed… (A: … system, and how you're going to be monitored for years now if you get it. You're a huge business. You see, it's all part of DARPA too.)

In addition, Moncef Slaoui and OWS's vaccine coordinator, Matt Hepburn, formerly a program manager at the Pentagon's controversial (A: Hhhch.) Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency (DARPA), had previously published an article in the New England Journal of Medicine (A: I've mentioned that too.) that stated that "because some technologies have limited previous data on safety in humans, the long-term safety of these vaccines will be carefully assessed using pharmacovigilance surveillance strategies." (A: Meaning, permanent monitoring.)

The use of pharmacovigilance on those who receive the vaccine is also mentioned in the official Warp Speed "infographic," (A: I've got the links here too, I'll put them all up. They're in the article.) which states that monitoring will be done in cooperation with the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) and the Centers for Disease Control and Protection (CDC) and will involve “24 month post-trial monitoring for adverse effects.”

(A: Whatever happens after that I guess, if folk start dying off, it just won’t go down after that period, eh.)

The CDC document also references a document published in August by the Johns Hopkins Center for Health Security, associated with the Event 201 and Dark Winter simulations, as informing its Covid-19 vaccination strategy.

(A: And it says…)

… “passive reporting” systems managed by the CDC and FDA should be retooled to create “an active safety surveillance system directed by the CDC that monitors all [Covid-19] vaccine recipients—perhaps by short message service or other electronic mechanisms.”

(A: So yeah, you've got DARPA and them all involved here folks. It says...)

More Secret Contracts

While Moncef Slaoui and Warp Speed documents provide few details regarding what this “tracking system” would entail, Slaoui did note in his recent interview with the Wall Street Journal that tech giants Google and Oracle had been contracted to “collect and track vaccine data” as part of this system.

(A: And it mentions a lot of it is secret too so.)

You could spend your life on this already. You understand, this is like massive governmental departments, supra-agencies and agencies that have been contracted, they're private agencies a lot of them, on board with this. It's like they're bigger than your civil service pretty well managing all of the stuff. That's why they've actually used private agencies for so much of this, then you can't really sue them, you see, that's the legality behind it.

The other articles I mentioned too is from Government Executive is an American media publication based in Washington DC. It covers daily government business. Their reporting is to civilian posts, federal bureaucrats and military officials who partake in the day-to-day public policy in the United States. And they are part of Atlantic media group. And by God, I tell you they’re really on board with all this group. They also own Defense One, which covers emerging national security issues and so on for the military.

As I say, folk have adapted into post-9/11, eh, and the loss of privacy. Seven countries are now calling for access to your private messages now too, they want to end any apps that have end to end encryption. And folk will adapt into it. Might as well, they've adapted everything else.

The Great Barrington Declaration, you've probably heard of it too...

The Great Barrington Declaration

gbdeclaration.org

As infectious disease epidemiologists and public health scientists… (A: They put out this declaration.)

The problem is, they're the head professors at some of these universities that are on board with this whole agenda. I think it’s a strategy to put you at ease, thinking, oh, you’ve got some friends in high places maybe and they might speak for you. And they want you to sign on to it. But when you sign on to it, you realize you’re agreeing to a lot of things, like number one, the virus is real, [Alan chuckles.] the virus is pretty well deadly, and that they need a vaccine, everything should work towards a vaccine and so on. When you go through what you’re asked to comply to, which most folk won’t even look at, you’re agreeing to the whole agenda, folks, with a more kindly, sympathetic face, that’s all. Think about it.

That’s what you’re looking at too. They do mention, which we do know, you see, that's what makes me wonder about it. Because there are few that are admitting the fact you can get herd immunity, if you're allowed to reach herd immunity, by mixing together, not getting locked up and separated for the first time in history, and to get herd immunity. This is why they don't want herd immunity by natural means, hhhch, a preplanned goal for vaccination and to change the world and the way you live. It's an excuse. They also want again frequent PCR testing, you see, and so on.

Dr. Martin Kulldorff, professor of medicine at Harvard University, a biostatistician, and epidemiologist (A: …and so on.)

Dr. Sunetra Gupta, professor at Oxford University

Dr. Jay Bhattacharya, professor at Stanford University Medical School, a physician, epidemiologist, health economist, and public health policy expert focusing on infectious diseases and vulnerable populations.

So when these characters come out with the agenda, you know, with a more sympathetic face to the public, I'm very, very, very wary folks because we've been conned so much, and you have all the psychological operations on the go to get folk to conform. But look at what they want you to sign on to, and you're acknowledging the whole darn thing, hm.

This other article too, when you look at it too, really, the Great Barrington, it sounds awfully good, eh. The first, you have to accept there's a legitimate global health emergency. Is there really? And using PCR as diagnostic test for Covid is valid. It's not valid, the professionals say that. We should seek to constrain targeted groups of healthy people, which is focused protection. Should we? This is what you're signing on to, that it's acceptable to social isolate elders including from family members, and advancing the current childhood vaccination programs as a priority. And also, things they haven't gone into, is the contact tracing and civil liberties getting lost and so on. And the biosensors, right, RNA vaccine platforms and biosensors should be opposed. None of this is mentioned in it. The important stuff. So be very careful, folks, you know. They're not your friends at the top. These characters know, they're all on board. The very fact they're not getting slammed or fired like many have before them makes me wonder what they're really out there for. I tell ya. N-n-n. That's the world in which we live.

And also… tier 2 and 3 lockdown rules explained. In Britain, right. This is amazing stuff.

Lockdown Tier System Explained UK

thesun.co.uk / 17 Oct 2020

I'm in Tier 2, can I have my friends over this weekend?

In places that will be moving to Tier 2 from midnight tonight, you can currently have pals (within a group of six) over for an indoor gathering.

But as soon as the clock hits midnight, you will no longer allowed to be indoors together, unless you live in the same household or support bubble.

(A: They call them support bubble… the terminology, neologisms, eh.)

It means you can have friends over for dinner tonight (adopting the Rule of Six) - but you will only be able to socialise as a group outside from Saturday.

(A: Can you BELIEVE this?)

Can I travel from a Tier 2 lockdown area to a Tier 1 area to see friends or family?

You can, but you have to follow the rules for Tier 2 still and only see people who live outside your household or support bubble in a garden, park or outdoors.

You cannot stay overnight with friends and family in a Tier 1 area or gather inside with them.

(A: Can you believe that people are FOLLOWING this rubbish?)

Basically, you should adopt the rules of your Tier depending on where you live. If you travel from Tier 1 to Tier 2 or 3, you should adopt the tougher rules.

(A: Can you believe this rubbish?)

Can my friends from Liverpool or Lancashire come and visit me?

No - anyone living in Liverpool at the minute is under the strictest rules and is unable to mix with other households both indoors and outdoors.

You can still meet outdoors in a group (A: [Alan laughing.]) of six in a few circumstances such as in park or on beaches, public gardens or outdoor sports courts.

(A: I’m not kidding, this is supposed to be serious stuff here I’m reading, eh.)

Household mixing in beer gardens and ticketed venues is also banned.

People should try to avoid travelling outside Tier 3 areas - or into them – (A: This is the whole Agenda 21 here, eh, no travel…) other than for essential things like work, education, accessing youth services and for caring responsibilities. Overnight stays are also not advised for people from Tier 3 or those visiting Tier 3.

Lancashire is due to join Liverpool in the tougher Tier 3 lockdown from midnight tonight and will be under the same restrictions.

A support bubble is defined by the government (A: The government just defines everything now, right.) as "a close support network between one household with only one adult in the home (known as a single-adult household) and one other household of any size".

However, the Rule of Six still applies in any tier - so if your support bubble contains more than six people you should not meet all at once.

(A: It reminds me of a Dad's Army episode about the home guard. It's a comedy in Britain, a comedy series. Which at the time I ignored because I wasn't, I didn't, I wasn't interested in TV at all. But years and years later I saw bits and pieces, which was really interesting because they had a lot of real, what parents and grandparents went through for a lot of people in the war with rationing and things like that. So they have the Dad's Army to go on an exercise with a Scottish Regiment, the Seaforth I think it was, and maybe the major of the Seaforth group comes to see Mannoring and the boys and he says, of course I've bought paint for the exercise. He starts to explain what the color paints are for. One, he says white is for wounded, and he says yellow is for dead and red is for something else, you know. So then Jonesy the Corporal starts to explain it during the exercise and, red for dead, and yellow for something, and he was completely utterly confused with the whole thing because it was so ridiculous. That's how these things were, these military exercises often were ridiculous. But this is what this reminds me of, you know, the absurdity, absurdity all about absurdity...)

Can I still see my partner and have sex?

If you do not live together and are in Tier 2 you can still see each other outside, but No10 confirmed you cannot have sex or have physical contact.

But if one of you lives alone you can form a support bubble, in which case you can be as close as you like.

(A: So you have to form a support bubble. I wonder if you have to get a license for support bubbles, hm, and so on. This is astonishing. N-n-n. Support bubbles, eh?)

Can I have a plumber around to fix my boiler? (A: I thought it was going to say fix my bubble. [Alan chuckles.] Again, maybe it was leaking. [Alan chuckles.] Everything is such farce.)

This is what they're teaching, they're teaching you to live in insanity. And if you comply you become insane. It's like children, I remember this back in the 90s giving a talk on children that were found, who had been brought up in a house like prisoners. They were literally raised like prisoners, in a room, and they can hardly speak and so on. But when they got them out of there, eventually when they found out they had been kept like that up to about the age of about nine or 10, whatever, even if they put them outside, they kept walking in circles. That's what happens to you when you have to comply with madness. You become mad and conditioned into madness. I hope you understand this is total warfare on the public on sanity.

Another one too, during all this too, migrants eh, they come in every day in Britain. And they get these boats, I wonder what happens to these boats? You actually see some of these boats, and they’re in harbors in Britain on the coastline, do they get them back? whoever supplies them all? Is it you know who, the same character who’s supplying a lot of these things to the refugees, and gives them new identification cards and new cell phones and stuff, and lists of all the different laws where they can go claim money and all that kind of stuff?

Migrants halt live-fire (A: …live firing...) Army exercise after landing on Kent beach being used as a firing range

thesun.co.uk / 14 Oct 2020

Hhhch, so they just come right in with the boats when this exercise was going on, so they had to stop it all. There you go. In the photographs they showed you it, in the papers they showed you some of these boats, like brand-new little boats they come in in. All funded and all that. None of them look poor to me. And some of the article's about, oh, they probably were escaping from places where they were under fire. No, they weren't. Look at these characters. They don't belong to any of the present danger zone areas. And they look well fed and healthy actually. [Alan chuckles.] Healthier than the people in Britain a lot of them. So there you go, facts don't really matter, eh.

Again another article from the military science and tech group, eh, that I mentioned already. It says...

Moderna: 5 things to know about the largest biotech to IPO marketwatch.com / 7 Dec 2018

(A: That was in Bloomberg, and it's 2018.)

Moderna Inc. raised over $600 million Thursday in biotech’s largest initial public offering to date.

(A: So it raised all that money, right, and it sold, back then…)

Moderna sold about 26.3 million shares priced at $23 a share late Thursday, at the midpoint of the projected range of $22 to $24.

Moderna listed 10 underwriters on its filing, led by Morgan Stanley, Goldman Sachs and JP Morgan.

The Cambridge, Mass.-based company has bet on the promise of molecules called messenger RNA, or mRNA, and their potential to prompt the human body to make its own medicine.

(A: This is before Covid came out, remember. It's like sitting waiting in the wings, folks, how they hadn't made anything up until Covid, eh.)

Moderna MRNA, +3.61%, has raised more than $2.6 billion through partnerships and investments since its inception in 2009. Despite the boom in biotech IPOs over the years, the company remained private for years — until now.

(A: Okay? It was just sitting waiting, isn't it? N-n-n. And it goes into…)

The science behind the pipeline

Moderna calls mRNA "the software of life."

(A: Isn't that a great PR push?)

Cells use mRNA to translate DNA (A: This is for your body.) into the proteins the body uses to function. Moderna believes it can use mRNA to spur the body to produce its own therapeutic proteins, essentially putting a drug factory inside of the patient.

(A: Is that what you want, a little drug factory?)

As one might guess, it's not an easy task. Moderna's scientists have a big job ahead of them: For each potential drug, they need to figure out how to safely get the mRNA therapy into the appropriate cells, make sure the mRNA actually yields sufficient amounts of protein to have a therapeutic effect and ensure the therapies won't trigger an immune reaction in patients.

(A: You see that's an auto-, that's when you get a cytokine storm, where it kills you, when you hit a real virus after getting the vaccination. It says…)

Years away from a marketable product

The company’s drug development programs run the gamut of clinical specialties, spanning infectious disease, oncology, cardiovascular disease and rare genetic diseases.

(A: So they tried everything, right. And back then…)

The biotech unicorn has 21 mRNA-based drugs in the pipeline, but only 10 are in clinical trials.

(A: I wonder what happened to all the test people, maybe they used it on animals, who knows?)

As the company noted in its most recent securities filing, no mRNA-based drug has ever been approved by the FDA nor any other regulatory agency, so it will be years before Moderna will be able to bring anything to market.

(A: Well BINGO, they got Covid 19, eh. That’s just coincidence! It’s the same coincidence as the PNAC group, we need a Pearl Harbor event and all that to get this list of countries demolished, and 9/11 happened, bingo. It’s the same coincidence, eh. So the article in 2018 says…)

…no mRNA-based drug has ever been approved by the FDA nor any other regulatory agency, so it will be years before Moderna will be able to bring anything to market.

Executives make a pretty penny

Moderna disclosed the compensation of its three highest-paid executive officers, who made a combined $40 million in cash and stock in 2017. (A: Ftt.) Stephen Hoge, the company’s president, received $19 million in options (A: I wonder what they’re getting now, eh? Ooooooooooo.) and a $4.4 million cash bonus in 2017. Lorence Kim, Moderna’s CFO, received $5.5 million in stock and a $1 million cash bonus, while Chief Executive Stéphane Bancel received $4.6 million in options and a $1.5 million cash bonus.

(A: I bet that’s way, way up now, eh? M-hm. I tell ya. I tell ya. N-n-n.)

There you go, that's from the horses mouth. But facts don't matter, np, when there's big agendas at work, eh. And from the Sun too...

Oxford vaccine head

says UK has no hope of normality until July

(A: So this is step-… ach, give it a few years… and ach, another few years, eh?)

(A: It's forever, folks. It's forever. And again…)

…no hope of returning to normality until mass immunisation is well underway

(A: There ya go. That’s it.)

And Paris is still losing, folk are still losing their heads when a teacher got his head cut off outside the school, I guess because they showed the prophet Mohammed, they said it was a cartoon of him. Why do they do this though, eh? Why do they do this when they know the dangers of it all? So…

Paris attack: Jihadi wearing bomb vest ‘beheads teacher outside school’ after he showed kids Prophet Mohammed cartoon - thesun.co.uk / 16 Oct 2020

It was a jihadi thought to be wearing a bomb vest that had been shot dead by cops near Paris after allegedly beheading a teacher outside the school.

I think the guy, this jihadist was born in Chechnya, or probably Russia. He was a Chechnyan born in Russia I think, that's what it was. I can't remember, it's just another kind of new normal, eh? I'll put these articles up.

A very interesting article I should really just, I'll give a couple more articles on Profuse just to back up what I said there. But I may keep some other articles for next week because there's a lot here actually. And it's been going on for a long time already and I've got to render this long talk at the end of it.

Remember too, send a few bucks my way @cuttingthroughthematrix.com website. Cash, PayPal, checks are fine, international postal money orders you can get. And you've got to call them international postal orders, to send to Canada if you can get them. The States doesn't use them anymore, but some parts of Europe still does I think, and elsewhere. I think you can even get a little bank check if you can't get any other thing. As long as it’s money of some kind or another you can send it to me. That will keep me ticking along as we go through these dark, dark times obviously.

And they are dark, aren't they? So you've got to remember that ultimately this is an agenda. In fact what really matters, and they're going to get harder and harder and more nasty as they turned the goon squads on you, the black clad characters that started off in the 90s. The whole world adopted the same outfits and uniforms and suddenly your police were wearing combat gear, and were like military, at night, operative soldiers, special forces. And of course they look, they strut around now looking like that too, don't they, ready for combat, with a whole bunch of pockets on them. So, this is your police! Supposedly still called your police. They shouldn't be called police anymore. Police were approachable, serving the community. Uniforms like that are meant for occupying forces… who use deadly force, quite frequently. We’ve got to remember that.

For those too who are criticizing everything that's happening inside, you know darn well that the revolutions underway are led by the same characters at the VERY top. You don't get revolutions on the go during an epidemic. You don't let the demonstrations, as they want to call it as they're burning places, happen and no one gets arrested for not social distancing. But you'll see lots of YouTube's where cops gang up on some woman or another for not wearing a mask and beating her up.

Something is VERY, very wrong. And you shouldn't stand for it. You can stand for it. You've got to say this is enough. Because it's not going to end here.

They've already said in their articles, the electronic ones and the electronic monitoring, if you get the shot it's going to take years of monitoring you. Which means you've got to have something which identifies you electronically wherever you go. If you don't have a cell phone, they're going to give you the bracelets, whether you accept the vaccine or not. Are you getting the picture? It IS the Fourth Industrial Revolution that Mr. slob Schwab talked about. Someone I didn't vote for either. We're run by tyrants which have nothing to do with democracy.

So remember, you're gonna go through terrible times. Have small groups of people that you can depend on. Think for yourselves. Don't wait for governments to help you on anything. As times get worse and then harder and so on, have a few friends at least that will stand by each other. You've got to have it. Because they plan years of hell here. Years. And you've got to help each other out. Don't wait for government to do anything for you.

And actually, there's folk now terrified in places like Canada to even end up in the hospital with its euthanasia policies and its bioethics committees. I'll let that one die, they're older, and we'll save that one over there, we'll give them the medication that will save them. The medical system here has lost all credibility because of this, their policies in bioethics.

So send a few bucks my way, help me tick along, so I can keep putting the work out. Because lots of folk use my material. And the word spreads. It spreads and spreads, even if they don't mention me, hhhch, you can tell where it's coming from by the, they'll often use the same terminology that I use and etc, etc. and I put out. I do all the work for them and find the articles and so on.

So look after me and I'll try and look after you as best I can as we go through hell. Remember that evil doesn't have to triumph. Complacency is, the old story that evil, you know, can only triumph if good people do nothing. You have to start standing up for yourself and say no. That's enough. Kind of like Network, you know, I'm a human being, he says, and I'm not going to take it anymore. And you gotta start doing that.

Because they're not going to stop with this agenda, and it isn't, the Covid is just the excuse for the whole electronic prison. As I've said before, the trick of the elect, is electric.

For myself Alan Watt from Ontario, Canada, where winter is really coming on here, it's good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

Oct. 25, 2020 (#1800)

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on 25 October 2020. As always, I hope you're all getting by as best as you can [Alan chuckles.] during these incredible looney tunes times. Because that's what we're in, isn't it, it's all crazy. It's planned that way.

There's never been such a massive, massive psy-op operation coordinated worldwide at the same time. Which tells you, you obviously have a global coordination factor involved in it, a kind of government you might say, when everybody at the top in every country is on board with the exact same agenda. Which is lauded by the World Economic Forum, they're a big part of it. These are the same guys who attend every year the progress towards globalization and the global system that they're always on about. In fact, they're rather ticked right now that populism is rising, you see that in all the World Economic Forum, the Club of Rome, all the big affiliated groups that really are one big system at the very top of the world, the Bank for International Settlements, the United Nations, the World Bank, International Monetary Fund, etc. They're all part of this global structure that's to bring in a global society.

You can't vote for any of them of course because they don't believe in democracy. Except to fool you once in a while to get you to go and vote. Because really, if you vote, you're voting in your masters, and you're giving authority over you to these people. You give it away, you see. Kind of crazy isn't it when you think about it. I gave talks back in the 90s on that very, very thing, it's a legality. They don't have to tell you any real truth, there's no law that says, by the way, that politicians should not lie to you. I remember going through these talks years ago when it was debated at very high places. They actually came out in Canada and said at one point from the High Court, the Supreme Court in Canada, that people who run for politics, even local or state or provincial, national, they said, there's no law where they have to actually tell you the truth, and stick to it. It's not like they're giving you a pact. You see, you just have to agree to allow them to rule over you when you vote them in. It's quite simple, isn't it. Once elected, a politician or a group of them or the whole government can do as they want regardless of what they promised the public. It's never been any different, really.

It's almost a test of your gullibility, that's what I've always thought about, gullibility and naïveté. That's why they like you to be naïve and to believe what you're told all the time. I've mentioned before too many times over many, many years that voting every five years or so is a good way to delay revolutions, or rebellions. Generally rebellion is the proper name because a rebellion is when you're not happy about the changes that are happening, you see, either taxes going up or something like that, or getting told to stay in your homes nationwide, things like that. So you just vote new people in all the time because you're sick of the people who put in the last lot of rules and regulations, and globalized laws, etc., for the trading partners, the big top trading partners on the planet. That's what globalization is about, who can trade and who can't. Under public-private partnerships of course we fund all big projects, ALL the big projects.

There's nothing new in what I'm telling you, it's just that they haven't been told for a long time what it's all about. And also, you'd have to read the old, old books about it. The old, ha, the old globalists in, say, the 19th century, the HG Wells types, who wrote lots of good fiction, science fiction with a lot of eugenics involved in it too you'll notice. He wrote fiction about a utopia to come, and he also wrote it as a kind of, almost like a documentary type/style of what was to come, like in A Modern Utopia. He talked about how they'd get rid of the excess population, the unnecessary population in this wonderful socialist system.

Socialism remember was to be a world ruled by experts. And human values given by religion or developed through the millennium by religion and humans themselves obviously, would be disregarded altogether and discarded eventually, until you're living totally under authority by professionals and experts. That's what communism was supposed to eventually be based on too.

Communism remember was never totally achieved in the Soviet system. Because it was meant eventually to train the public, and train through generations, almost like a genetic indoctrination, hhhch, in the Lysenko type style only to do with people instead of plants. That they would train people, and it would be, there'd be a kind of genetic memory so you would be better and better citizens with each generation as time went on, until you have the perfect system where all the old, old values of me-first or me-surviving would all be basically destroyed. Because you had to serve the greater good, you see, and they do it willingly eventually in a perfect Soviet system. Eventually wouldn't even need money, you'd be allocated, like credits, same thing that Bertrand Russell talked about for the British socialist system.

Again, don't get confused by socialism. Hhhch, there's different meanings to it depending on who you happen, or what organizations you happen to belong to. And the top capitalists were always for socialism/communism. Because it's better to have an efficient system, a technocratically run system. If you get a public that will obey you. The obstacle has always been individual rights and individualism. So they have to get rid of that.

Again, HG Wells talked about it in A Modern Utopia, about getting rid of the excess population. You don't need them anymore, these silly, you know, feelings of humankind, them bonded together as a humans, nonsense, nonsense, no. Get rid of the ones that are inferior and you don't need anymore, he said. We used to think that we would have to kill them, but he said, we decided to sterilize them instead and they'd gradually just die out because they couldn't reproduce. This is in A Modern Utopia, Wells. Wonderful characters they give you to follow, eh?

And you'll like a lot of their stories, and you'll say, that's a fascinating time machine story there and that's wonderful and I'm enthralled. But again, he was given the star making machinery and he couldn't fail basically. It wasn't just one person writing material. He had professors handing him lots of stuff for his books, and people to help him write his stuff, you see. They made him into a star. Because you follow the stars, and if HG Wells said that was the way to go, then so should you, he was clever and you're not so clever, you're not rich and famous like him.

See? And that's the proof of it right there, that's how easy it is. And that's how they create the stars in the big machine. Like actresses and actors and that kind of thing, they actually make stars out of scientists now too. Big publicity, [Alan speaking with a super deep voice] when you see billions and billions of stars... things like that. When they go off the subject of science, you start following them… Oh, I guess maybe he's right there too, you know. [Alan chuckles.] We're so...

What I'm saying here is, everything that's happening today is simply the culmination of centuries of indoctrination and techniques being used on the public which they're completely unaware of. You'll never really catch on to it. You think things are just happening now. You don't realize the incredible tremendous work that's gone into getting to this stage of the game, never mind your technologies. They couldn't do it without the Internet and computers. Couldn't do any of it without that, because they must know everything about every single individual on the planet.

Then they've got to get you all into a system where you can't even feed yourself without digital currency. Then they start doing what Bertrand Russell suggested they do in the 1940s and 50s. He said, eventually the state will dish out credits. Now, credit is just money, you know, a token if you like. It will be put into your bank account. You can’t save it up in the new system that's to come, if you didn't use it on the same month, it will start off at the same amount again. Like if it's, say, 500 C, for credits, it will be 500 again the next month and that will pay, you'll have to pay your cost of living out of that and so on. And if you're bad, he said it's too, that you'd… It's a social credit system, eh, [Alan chuckles.] which they planned way back in the 40s and 50s it would come down the road, eh. People think it's just happening now. You'd have to behave and do what you're told or else you'll be cut off. Just like they can cut you off the Internet now and stop your work if they want to. They're openly talking about it and they're doing it, and across the board in some ways.

There's nothing new under the sun. It's just that now is the time to do it all because they have the perfect system to make you comply. They've made it pretty well impossible for so many people to get through without, you know, the Internet and digital currency. Everything is done on the computer now, or cell phone. It was planned that way. And you buy your chains, oh, I want that flashing light there, it's pretty colors, and it's got more pixels than the last one, you know. Lucifer, eh. [Alan chuckles.] The light. [Alan chuckles.] Just dazzled by it. And the folk, honestly, you can't help them. They're too far gone. And it's not their fault, you see, they're brought up like that and trained to accept it all as quite natural. Never realizing that very important folk, as far as history goes, talked about this coming system long ago, long before you heard of a computer in fact, and how they would make it all happen.

But getting back to the Soviet system. As I say, the Soviet system was never really achieved. Because eventually through, as I said, through generations of raising the perfect children, the perfect children, the perfect children, and basically somehow breeding out of them the idea of selfishness, then you'd all be there to serve the state. Again, cogs in the wheel, you see, that's what you'll be, that would be the function of you. And you would accept it quite happily.

There would be big supermarket stores they said eventually, this is going way back, many, many years before the giant supermarkets you have today and supermarket stores. They said, eventually you'll walk-in for, it could be food or hardware or whatever, and you would just take what you needed and that was it, no extras. No maybe two, just in case. You'd all take just, just because you're a perfect citizen. And that's what they want. They want basically drones, people as drones basically. That's what they want you to be. But they never achieved it of course. That's still to come.

It's astonishing to me in some ways because you can see the psychopathy behind it, there's no doubt about that at all. Psychopaths are way more numerous than you think. You also have a whole layer of them below that that work as civil servants, that accept the dictates of the Masters, you see. They'll also push whatever order they're given, to the limit. That's why you end up with massacres and mass slaughters, and perhaps even genocides, eh. Genocides generally, they don't say come into this camp, we're going to kill you. They might say, come into this camp where you'll be safe, you know. They've already got these camps going up across the world under the guise of Covid… and even future releases of diseases and things, you see.

So you've got to stop, way back, stand back a bit here, this is governments talking, eh. And d'you really believe them? They have closed the economies of the whole planet down together in unison, regardless of the FACTS from people working in the hospital, like thousands of them across the planet working in the hospitals coming together and saying, what you're telling the public isn't matching up! And people are getting banned on the Internet just for repeating it.

This is total war. Total war of an authoritarian nature that the world has never seen, never seen the lengths of where you literally shut up everybody, you know. In the KGB, or the NKVD in the old cheka groups after the Bolshevik revolution, they just brought folk in and slaughtered them. Then they went into the, and they made it known what was happening, folk were disappearing all the time. They made it known what was happening to terrify the rest of the folk to comply, you see. You're seeing it happening now, without the grabbing folks physically. At the moment. This will happen in the next few weeks by the way.

Because under the stages of lockdowns, it also is the staging color-coded idea of going after people who are speaking out against the top authorities that are all in lockstep, hhhch, as they say, together to push all of this through. This isn't just a Covid thing. It's rather obvious. You don't crash economies... You don't put people totally at risk of, they can't even get into hospitals for regular... The same message is out now that, don't even go into hospitals if you don't have to, even if you have something really severe. Well, we've already had lots of folk dying with heart attacks and so on at home, through the whole farce, you know, February, March and April. Mainly, in again, old folks' homes. Because folk were terrified. Look what they were going to do. Can you imagine, listening to the news, they were listening to the same news, the national news, getting the same horror stories, in the old folks' homes. All they kept repeating was, old folk are going to die, old folk are going to die, old folk are going to die. Then they tell it, we're going to ram these tubes down your trachea, eh, and make you breath by a machine, but that's dangerous too, that might kill you as well.

Rather than give you basic treatments that they've given people every winter through spring when you get the cold/flu season coming on, when all the bronchial problems really start up big time, every year. That's what they're counting so badly on, what happens every late fall and the weather changes, it gets damp and cold and so on. You're guaranteed to have folk go to the doctors initially. Now they might just cut them off in the hospitals. And don't forget, Covid also includes the common cold, it's a coronavirus. M-hm. And the test, the PCR tests detect these things as well. They detect fragments of coronaviruses. Fragments. Not viruses but fragments of what could be, could have been coronaviruses. It's so iffy.

It's perfect really. That's why they can't lose, by having fights about data, you know. And throwing out massive figures by computers like Neil Ferguson was doing. The same man by the way that helped destroy the entire meat supply of Britain at one point with the mad cow disease and his computer systems. All slaughtered, eh. This man is a one-man wrecking machine. So why do you think he gets the job of giving you vast...? It's because he's a psychopath, folks! He has no…

The average person if they know what they're doing, would you please go along with this and really convince the public to be terrified, and they've got to give up all rights and so on, and lots of folk will die because of it, of depression or they can't get in the hospital, they're afraid to go to hospital, or they won't be admitted anyway at hospital, etc, because they want you to do it, you might have qualms if you're a normal human being. But a psychopath doesn't.

They don't have anxiety. It's something which is lacking in them is anxiety. If anything happens to a psychopath in their life, that threatens their ability to manipulate freely throughout society, locally, on a larger scale if they’re politicians, or even on top of the military, you find them in the military too, and different categories of them, actors and actresses, are the hysterical attention seeking psychopath, that's a category they fall into as well.

So yeah, you might have a breakdown if you're forced to do it, or even if you were told initially, it's for the greater good, you know, the noble lie, it's for the greater good, and history will justify it, you know. And when history doesn't justify it, you'd start to have a breakdown, you see, because you were responsible for maybe millions of folk dying because they couldn't get to hospital, or they couldn't get diagnosed and they couldn't get their cancer treatments. And the early cancer treatments, if they can get a primary tumor, they can get it, if they can get it out quick you've got a darn good chance of survival. If you can't get in… every day counts then, you see, when it's diagnosed.

What's happening is a horror show. There's been lots of staffs in hospitals across the world come out, nurses and doctors about this. It makes no difference to the agenda, eh. That's you're telling point here. It isn't just like some automaton that just takes over because they can't think straight, you know, at the top. This is an agenda, which knows darn well what's going on. It ties in completely with the great reset, you know, the global great reset of the World Economic Forum, that was to follow the 2007/8 crash that they talked about, this big reset. The reset is not just the resetting of the value of your currency. It's your whole way of living. It's the way of living they've been telling you about and trying to get you to accept since Maurice Strong fronted for the Rockefeller foundation in 1992. That was the big one, the big Biodiversity Treaty came out of it of course.

It was to literally dismantle all industry within the Western nations. That was part of it, a big part of it. They said that we won't be happy until we literally dismantled even all the energy units, to bring down the standard of living in the West. Which also would take down a lot of the life capacity for people because you need energy to live on and by. Nature is a nasty enemy. You got to get away from this flower power idea of flowers in your hair here and realize that nature is something we've struggled with for, who knows, thousands and thousands of years, eh, at least, to survive within.

Because it's very cruel and it doesn't care. There is no consciousness saying, I care about you, I'm nature, I care about you. It doesn't exist. Sometimes you feel close to it, closer than others at that magical moment on a nice sunny day, that kind of thing. But the rest of the time, if it goes into sudden freezes and you don't have any heat, you die rather nastily. Hm. Or if you fall in that beautiful lake there, and you’ve seen the pictures, the photographs, if you fall in that lake there it doesn't care if you drown or not. It's just like the beautiful sea, you know, it's great to travel on ships, I much prefer ships because you're linked to the past as well, you're traveling the same sea routes that people did thousands of years ago, and at least hundreds. Hhhch, but thousands too, because we're far older than they tell you especially when it comes to sea travel. Definitely you're traveling the same sea routes as Vikings and other groups down through history, travel and traders. It's like America BC, fantastic book to read and other books too by Barry Fell. Interesting books indeed.

Interesting again because we live in such a this-is-the-way-it-is system, where some kind of strange authority that exists, and this is getting back to, hhhch, getting into the old ideas of these secretive governing groups. Which definitely exist. There's no doubt on it at all. Like Carol Quigley talked to, you might even get that audio yet, I don't know if it's still out there. Professor Carol Quigley who literally groomed people to be, you know, presidents and to run the State Department's, and massive incomes and have tremendous power across the world. Including the military too because the military-industrial complex, he was all for it and taking over the world, etc. He was an elitist himself, Carol Quigley. He liked to boast about it.

Psychopaths do like to boast about their little parts in it too sometimes. That's why he came out with Tragedy and Hope that immediately got hammered by the, hhhch, the publisher realized he had let too much out of the bag, you know. Yep. Quigley said, I agree with it, I'm not against what these groups are doing, this is especially the main group. He said, I object occasionally about some of their methods. But that was his only objection to the system. The audio was to one of his students at university that he was grooming, and they had met in the cafeteria and it was being tape-recorded.

He pulls out a dollar bill of all things. You know, the conspiracy theory idea. But here's Professor Carol Quigley, a guy who was the historian for a while for the archives of an alternate history of the Royal Institute of International Affairs / Lord Alfred Milner group. Same group. And also the CFR, the American branch at that time. He got into their archives, and it explained what really caused wars, and they were behind it. He thought it was wonderful, they should come out and, he said, the world was ready to accept this kind of knowledge that, and to learn the part that this massive, this organization had to play in it. Well, the people didn't want, they didn't want the public to know that these characters had been behind different wars and taking over the world's resources, and had future wars to come, and how they'd back certain totalitarian nations and so on, and they studied these nations, eh. So he wanted to boast about it. So they kind of grabbed his book. They broke the plates too, the actual plates. But luckily others managed to get some of the first editions and tore them apart and put them together again. And they're accurate because I've seen both copies, the original ones and the ones which have no copyright anymore. They're the original article, duplicate, nothing is missing out of them.

But he pulls out the dollar bill to this, and he says, but listen, don't tell anybody, he says, it's bad for your career if anybody finds out. Meaning the conspiracy idea, right. He said, but look on that dollar bill there, there's an all-seeing eye in a pyramid. He said, you know that symbol is thousands of years old, and he starts talking about it a little bit. He's trying to get through to this person, this youngster he's grooming to be a leader, you see, that's what they do, they pick future leaders. He's telling him, there's a bigger power running the whole system than just you electing whoever's put in front of you to vote for. You see, he's grooming the guy.

But anyway, that audio got out there and you might be able to listen to it if you get a hold of it. That's how the world really is run though. This is the professor that remember Bill Clinton gave accolades to and he said that was his mentor, was Professor Carol Quigley, that got him into politics and gave him, got him the Rhodes scholarship so he could go over to London and then skip off to Russia. That's what happened, that's what he did too.

But anyway, that's the world we're living in. It's vastly different from the world we're trained to believe in. In fact, they couldn't, as I say, get the agenda through without making us incredibly naïve. And it's true, once you're in school at the age of five or whatever it is, they are immediately indoctrinated into what they tell you is reality. That's what I've always said, I've said this before, this essential primary school indoctrination is essential. Jacques Ellul said that without the initial indoctrination, subsequent indoctrination will not take. You see through it, even if you're only 7 or 8 or maybe 10 or 12, you'll see through it. But if you get that early indoctrination, you're being trained just to listen and obey, listen to and obey, and accept, you see. There's no debate then.

That's how the world really is. Sure enough, every 30, 40 years some parts of vaults are opened. Because it's part of ‘Revelation of the Method’, that's what it's called. Getting back to that all-seeing eye and the pyramid, eh. Hhhch. And by the way I've got very old, some are really old encyclopedias here, very old, where they have the people who contended amongst each other in the Americas during the Revolutionary war, and even before it, of what kind of symbols they would put forth. They've got all their names there and the different ones that they put forward to be accepted for the great seal, etc., and the currencies they were using. You know, it was quite fascinating to realize they actually had currencies in the Americas, and during the Revolutionary war, and afterwards by the way, including Masonic currencies, where they have the all-seeing on the actual coins themselves. It's quite fascinating to see it. So yeah, that's a whole sideline to itself anyway.

Rather than segue into that I'll continue on with what I'm trying to prattle on about here, which is, your reality is vastly different than what you're being taught to believe in. People are pretty decent. Decent people, it doesn't matter about being ultimately likable, I'm talking about decent people have decency in them. That's what elites and psychopaths count on, is that you'll have this decency factor. If you take the history of, say, parts of Britain, even from the 1800s onwards it was rather hellish for most folk, you know. It was bad enough when you lived in a country where you grow tall, we're pretty tall in Scotland, right, you know. Until you hit about 18, then your long bones ossify, they stop growing, then with all that rain you start shrinking again, eh? So that's why you never throw your clothing away when you're young because you'll eventually be able to wear it again because you've shrunk into it. So that's the whole thing, is a pretty miserable country when it's pouring rain all the time.

Britain was so managed in a feudal system for such a long time, it was kind of ingrained in the people, you know. It wasn't until they gave basic education in the 19th century to the general population, the working population just so they can follow instructions and basic instructions, written instructions for working machinery in factories and keep records and notes for the boss and things like that. But otherwise, they would never have given you education at all, you see. And that was it, it really was for that reason. So you get minimalistic education, and even then, they turned out what they called the penny novel. Because they got worried about the general public. They had meetings, the elites had meetings, the manufacturers and owners and so on had meetings in England. Dickens, you know, he knew about these things and other ones too. They had meetings because they worried if they'd lowered the working day for the peasants, down to under 16 hours a day, that was the average you had to do, then you might get up to mischief.

Meaning, you might start thinking, that would cause mischief, you see, that, in fact, thinking was mischief. If the peasants started thinking, if they had time to themselves, they had time to communicate and think about things. So they had meetings, they actually said that they were terribly worried about revolutions, if the people had time on their hands they could organize and start communicating and pass information towards each other, now that they could get basic writing skills and reading skills. So what they decided to do was try to divert the free time of the public as they lowered it down to say 12 hours a day or 14 hours a day. Which was a great advance, hhhch, by the way, in those days. So they came out with the penny novels.

Just like today, they said, well, you understand how they did the same thing with TV, they split it into categories, including gender, what the women like to watch what guys like to watch and things like that. So, sports and so on for the guys. And lots of flesh if they can get it in. Of course in book form they really catered to the women big time with romantic novels. Always lifting them out of where they lived in crowded terrible red brick homes in these overcrowded cities, with overcrowded houses and overcrowded rooms with no bathrooms in them, outside toilets and nice things like that. Well-documented by the way, this is not make-believe.

It completely goes against the way I was brought up, you see. Because I knew, I knew that the rubbish that they put on television, you know, about like the Ann of Green Gables idea, and lots of spinoffs for the British system. So you'd always have the rich young girl, or the young master you know, who's the son of the master, young master, with their coaches and footmen and all that kind of stuff. Everybody seemed to have some kind of work. But they didn't take you to the inner cities and show you the squalor and folk dying through overwork, malnutrition, because even if you work you're on such a, basically a subsistence, it wasn't even a subsistence wage, it wouldn't keep you alive. Folk didn't often hit 30 years of age. That's the reality of it.

But if you just watch the BBC you think about all these wonderful things of folk who were well-dressed, coachmen, butlers and servants, and even the highway robbers, the highwaymen are well-dressed too in these BBC, in old productions of this glorious past. And they all had horses and so on. If you're a peasant, you didn't have a horse, you know. They'd lock you up and wonder where you stole it from, because you couldn't have a horse. It's expensive to have horses and to keep horses.

Again, I've mentioned before, sometimes down through Europe and in Britain too, you couldn't wear silk. You couldn't, even if you found it, a bit of silk, and they passed a law at one time so the peasants couldn't wear silk. It was above their station, you understand. Being a peasant you had to always know you are peasant and just accept it. And grovel. And if you had a hat, you know, you doffed the hat, as they called it, and bowed sort of, you scraped and all that. That was the system that really existed. It really did.

You could get out of it temporarily if you're a guy, if you join the military. That system existed right through into the 1900s. Actually, it's back again. It's never really stopped with its continuous wars that I even talked about from the [Alan chuckles.] Pentagon articles and so on. They talked about perpetual war would be the new norm. And we're in it of course. We've been in it for a long time. It wasn't just a war on nations and resources, to take over them for the elite families and big corporations, but it was a war on the public themselves. That's really what you've been in.

But the people who lived in each era didn't live in utter despair, you understand. There were some getting, they rely upon this basic natural humanity in people. And sure enough, little charges can start, and a penny here and a penny there, again a penny at one time was worth, hhhch, a bit of money could buy a loaf with them at one time before inflation set in with the con game of paper money. They would help each other out with charities. Not great but hopefully it would keep you alive. Maybe, you know. It wasn't the greatest system. There was no welfare system/unemployment system.

The wars were always on the go then too, the British Empire, this private business, it was called the British Empire. And that's what it was, it was a private business for the elite families of London, the City of London, and the bankers, naturally. But it was pretty bad, so guys could escape for a little bit, if they could live through it that is, for the wars and all the rest of it. If they could live through it, they might get some kind of little pension out of it, and a bit of respect that came. Isn't it ironic that you get a bit of respect by serving the system that's kept you in squalor? [Alan laughing.] …and maybe your parents and grandparents too if you had them. It's quite something.

And then they teach you to respect it. That was the great invention really of the 20th century, that came out of World War I, the mass slaughter of all nations involved, and the wiping out of a generation really. And sometimes three generations, sometimes you had your, sometimes people had their grandparents and their parents and the youngsters, sons, wiped out, totally, from villages and counties all throughout England and Scotland and Ireland and Wales, eh. Wiped out completely. So much so that when World War II came out, the farms, there were lots of empty farms, or the farms had maybe one person working it. They couldn't even feed the population at the time, so they relied upon the shipping from especially America, the US and Canada to bring in goods.

But anyway, they train you that somehow, like year zero, that's how communists do it too, they always start you off with year zero when they have taken over completely. It's a good idea, you see, because it makes sure there's another bunch of ignorant schmucks that are going to grow up never knowing what happened before, you know. That's how they started really the 20th century after the Boer war, countless wars and the Boer war leading right into World War I basically. Then after World War I, and the huge negotiations at the time by the early trade unions to get some more cash, just to live on, eh.

Why... I mean, folks were working and starving. Hhhch. No kidding. Hhhch. They didn't have cars or telephones. No, that's for basic necessities, folks. They still had no, again, if they were laid off or they were sick, that was just too bad for you. So they negotiated, and they wanted housing to be built. They're paying all these taxes for wars and stuff, why couldn't they take their tax money and build houses for the people? That's how the council really started up for their housing committees, etc. Even then towards the end of World War I they were running out of so many men, you know. And you can't believe how many were getting slaughtered per day... day after day, in World War I. And massacred.

That was genocide. You weren't even allowed to lie down in the mud and crawl toward, you were supposed to run towards the enemy, through the mud, with big heavy packs on, through machine-gun fire, nothing, no cover at all. [Alan chuckles.] That was very sane, wasn't it? [Alan chuckles.] I guess the same guys that ran the war is running Covid, y'know, let's close the whole economies down. But this is the reality of it.

I've often mentioned that movie that's a satirical movie and musical at times, using all the old world war... They churn out during wars all of these happy-happy little sings-songs type songs that people can join in. To make you all feel you're working towards something that's jolly good, etc. etc., hm. So Oh What A Lovely War, it's worth watching to get the idea across. It did have the actual figures up on a big ding-dong scoreboard daily of the amount of thousands that were dying with this battle and that battle, per day, you know. These were factual ones, and they show you the dates of them, these were actually historical facts.

But again, that's what it reminds me of, there's a much bigger plan. Just like Quigley talked about with Tragedy and Hope. He knew it too, he was all for it, as I say, and he was all for the creation of wars and talking about the need for wars to get stages of the big global system through. So World War I, at least they had to negotiate to the peasantry, what was left of them, decimated, right, some of them got some concessions for all the tax money that they were dishing out all the time, and the loss of life, and the horrible conditions they lived in.

For a little while they thought they were getting somewhere. They had to, of course, they reneged as soon, and a lot of the guys wanted the vote too. People think, oh, the women were all fighting, no, the guys didn't have the vote either unless you had property. That's... Isn't it amazing, isn't it amazing how that's missed all the time because it doesn't fit the modern perspectives and the modern agendas where only women suffered, or other people suffered. But no, the people themselves in Britain, right, the guys, the white peasants, [Alan chuckles.] yeah, they had to fight to get to that kind of vote.

Just when they think they were getting some concessions, and getting lied to and lied to of course, they get hit with the Great Depression and they're back to square one. And you get out of the Great Depression only temporarily because of again, a Covid event. Remember, this is how they do it. The historians all admit this, that you would never have got out of the Great Depression, even temporarily, if it hadn't been for World War II.

Because suddenly, suddenly the government's borrowing billions, from the same shadowy characters, you know, that are just behind the scenes. Before the wars, they're broke, eh. They're always broke, completely broke before the wars break out. And suddenly they just find this money everywhere, eh? I'm not kidding you, I'm not, I can validate what I'm saying here. The same thing happened before 9/11. Oh, they were just dead broke in America, you know, absolutely dead broke. They actually said, oh they were finding, and so did Britain, [Alan chuckles.] oh, we're just finding money, we went back over accounts, we're just finding millions here and millions there. Although the US lost, what, $3,000,000,000,000 I think in the Defense Department according to Rumsfeld and so on, that was never found. It was just one of these things. You know, you get holes in your pockets, don't you. And psychopaths have lots of holes in their pockets.

But yeah, they managed to find the money for these amazing wars. And they threw, just like the Covid, they threw billions, in today's money, billions at different corporations that could supply armaments and all kinds of things, and dirigible balloons that might stop low-flying bombers coming down, which they never did because they were much higher than that. But it didn't matter. You see, facts don't matter about the waste of money. And they appoint these commissars in charge of trade and all things in Britain. They just appoint them.

Because you've got to suspend democracy to save you, you know. Which is exactly by the way, I mean, when you look into the Nuremberg trials, that Herman Goring said... It's amazing how for so long they kept the public from hearing what he was talking about, you know, at trial. He was actually asked during interrogation on camera why they just, why the Germans had stopped democracy, you know. And he says, because it was an emergency time and they said it wasn't working, we needed an efficient way of ordering the system back into operation. Well, that's exactly what Britain did during the war too, [Alan laughing.] they stopped all democracy. Martial law system, eh. Curfews. Rationing. Ration cards even. Even travel permits within certain areas and certain places and so on. Countless spies within society from your own government to make sure that loose lips didn't sink ships. Again, your Karen’s of that day too, if you see someone getting extra meat from the butcher then report them and things like that. All kinds of terrible things went down. The same stuff.

Yeah, everybody, every company, every major corporation that existed was ready to make anything at all, manufacture anything for the, hhmph, war effort, or hhmph, Covid effort, or whatever. It's all the same, you see. So they pulled Britain through temporarily, and Canada too by the way. All the countries were affected by the depression to different extents, mind you. But Canada for instance was noted by the United Nations, on the list of countries that were most likely to succeed in industry and be very wealthy because they put so much money into a few corporate hands, all backed by the taxpayers that now had all these big factories that would be making different machinery for the war, aircraft and so on, and they could be turned to peaceful uses. So they use the same excuse as Goring, it was an emergency situation so you can't have democracy. And that's okay when the West said it though I suppose. There you go.

You can't get, you've got to understand eventually you have to break your conditioning to understand anything at all. I've said it before, I've said it, waking up is like jumping out of an airplane and without a parachute, and you have to free fall, and have some faith that somehow, somehow it's going to be okay. Because on the way down you're going to have all these different doors opening and beckoning you in. You might see glimpses of different things and glimpses of that and so on, and you don't want to get stuck in it.

It's very much like Buddhism. In Buddhism there's the stage they get to in Buddhism that the priests, you know, when often they're meditating and they're in solitude and so on, where they talk about supernatural or preternatural occurrences happening to them. Seeing things, without drugs, but seeing things and knowing things, as things come to them, maybe a little vision, things like that. But things that shouldn't happen, happen in other words, eh.

Now, the West in modern times, right, about the 90s onwards with the pushing of Wiccanism and different things like that, really meant to get you away from any kind of idea of… to destroy completely any idea of the old system of Christianity, which still gave you some kind of moral values. It had to be destroyed. So you supplant it by giving youngsters really interesting, interesting stuff. And let's be honest, I mean, every youngster wants to... they do sense things when you're young before it's completely drummed all out of you. You'll sense things. You'll get little ideas, little insights into things. Best pals, children start talking at the same time on the same subject using the same words, as an example. Or you start singing the same song at the same time at the exact same word, eh. And you turn and you look at each other and laugh, because it's quite natural, isn't it? Things like that. And you know when someone's going to come visit you and things like that. You get these little insights. Which you take for granted. And as the world gets to you, because it's not meant to make you happy or to allow you to develop naturally, or have any confidence in your own experiences, you are being trained always to listen to experts and authority figures and so on by a TV and so on. So these natural instincts are drummed out of you with the cares of the world as they say.

But with the Buddhists, they're different from the West where they were pushing youngsters at one point, just to get rid of the old religion, that's the idea behind it, of giving these insights and the what-if's and so on, try this and try that, oooooo, aaaaaa, you know, and go ghost hunting and all that kind of stuff. The idea is to get folk into it, really into it. Suddenly books appeared, I'd say even in the late 80s. You would see it in libraries and bookstores, and books that used to have all kinds of philosophies and things suddenly were getting replaced by stacks and stacks of self-help books, that also incorporated the so-called supernatural into them too and positive thinking of course, all these kind of things were pushed into it. Most, even the ones that pretended to be spiritual, really, were more positive thinking... Just want it and think about it and it will come to you idea and that kind of thing.

So as they were pushing that on the West, you see, which can take over your life if you go that way completely, it will take over your life, you're actually stuck on an earthly realm by doing so. Because in Buddhism, as they go through a phase where this starts to happen, where they actually experience the things very frequently, they're told to ignore them because that's the trap. I'm talking about waking up here too; believe you me, it all ties in together. That's the trap. Ignore these things that try to pull you in because folk can get captivated by it and ooooo and wonder, and wow, WOW, like any drug you want a bigger WOW the next time, until you get bigger and bigger and bigger, until you're addicted like any addict to a drug, you see. So you ignore that part to go into much higher understandings and insights. Or you get trapped.

Well, that's what waking up is. I used to say too, it's like coming out from under the ground... Very much like the Australian aborigines, the dreamtime people as they sometimes like to call them, and when the explorers met the aboriginal natives. I don't know if they still call them even aboriginals or not. Odd name to call people though, ab-original, it's like not original. That's a question in itself. However, they're natives, and the explorers tried to find out, just like anthropologists do, about them, you know, what's your history, what do you, you know? And why were they covered in what appeared to be these paintings, they painted themselves. And inside the rocks too and caves and things like that they would do paintings.

They explained that they, about a dreamtime period, that's different names for the same thing. I think they even made movies about it and some of them are really entertaining, some of them. But the kind of dreamtime, they were in some kind of limbo for a long time, countless eons, who knows, it could be eons, who knows, after some catastrophe in the world. It's almost like they lived in stasis in the womb of the earth, that's what it symbolized I guess, and they came out to tell the people what had happened, you know. What the rest of the story is we never really find out, [Alan chuckles.] or if they forgot what happened or what. But it was an awful long time so you can't blame them.

You often find that kind of history going on with the different peoples, of catastrophes, long, long, long ago, you know, catastrophes. So you've got to understand that reality has different meanings to different peoples according to your histories, and how you survive, and under what conditions of survival around you too. Whether it's kind of arid and kind of dry, or good soil and wet and so on and so on. All these things to be factored into the cultures of the people which ends up being the mentality. But peoples generally always, again, back to the whole point of natural humanity, they're decent to each other so they can get through hard times regardless of it, through natural phenomenon and natural hardships. But as I say, we also get through the unnatural ones, the ones from wars that didn't have to happen, lockdowns, hm.

Hell is getting... You haven't seen the hell yet from the lockdowns. This is the Earth Summit agenda, you know, this is it, what charges for climate change, and deindustrialization, making energy itself eventually scarce for the general population, step-by-step into scarcities. Because they said it in a lot of their publications that the healthier you are comes from having energy and heating, etc., and food. As a start, hm. And you can't depopulate the world where folk are healthy. They won't listen to you when they're healthy. They want to work and earn money and spend it on things, etc., and buy things. And that has to stop. Well, bingo, you know, here you go. Here you go.

Getting back to Australians, I always think too that if people had been, like natives there and natives in other areas in the world who live very simply, that you might laugh at when you think about them, oh my, how can they live like that. Lots of them are still living like they lived for thousands of years. Hm. And as Plato said, the easiest systems to fall apart quickly and get destroyed and cause massive death are artificial systems and the cities of course. The old, hhhch, occultic ideas of the city, very important. But completely artificial. And everything that's built inside the city, all the different systems of commerce, that's all artificial too, you see. One collapses and the next one collapses like dominoes and dominoes and dominoes, until they're all collapsed. That's how fast the whole thing can vanish.

That's what Plato's uncle Solon supposedly told him. He found his writings that his uncle had kept too of, that's where they got this sort of Atlantis from, that's where it really came from. His uncle had gone to Egypt, like most of the aristocracy of the ancient world went, you know. The wealthy went to different parts of the world for their higher education. Which is a kind of occultic system of degreed system. Of course they went to Egypt for part of it. Solon, according to Plato and the writings of his uncle, was told by the priests of Egypt, he says, you know, you Greeks, how old do you think you are? And they gave him some kind of number. They kind of laughed at him, they says, you don't even know your history, how long you've existed as a people. Yep.

Now, they're talking into a time obviously that was before writing even occurred, for them, for the Greeks anyway. They said to him that many, many civilizations had risen to great, great peaks of power, you know, and totally collapsed. Now, getting back to, the more artificial they are the easier and quicker they are to collapse. So they have come and gone, many of them, that we don't even have the records of, hm. That's why Plato talked about they'd have the fragility of the advanced systems.

Now, what I'm telling you too is known by those who rule the world. Because they always plan their own survival, and they use all of you to get there, generations of us to get there. To get to their advanced system, almost a very space-age type system where they themselves will be the superhumans, you know, if not the gods themselves. In some of their religions how they actually, they talk about being God's. Again too, even from a scientific point of view, they say, well what is a God? A God has got power of life or death, could be immortal, if you make yourself to be immortal then you might be classed as a God. And power over others, ultimate power and total power over other people through such advanced weaponry, then you've got power over life and death then you see.

This is from writings of characters who have been in these organizations down through centuries. They use us like staging rockets. I've mentioned this talk before back in the 90s too. They talk about what humans are here for. And talking about all of you. YOU. You're not actually human, [Alan chuckles.] you're the animals, but they talk about why you're here, and you're here to serve them, and you've always been here to serve them.

Like a staging rocket in a sense. Again, getting back to what Pike talked about, about revolutions, but it also applies to the systems and the generations. You can't just go out there and plant a tree, you know, or crop of any kind and expect it to grow. You've got to prepare the ground big time. Find out what you need, what's lacking in any particular soil, especially for whatever you're going to grow because different things are needed for different crops and things or even for trees. That's where you get different colors in different trees, of the wood, they suck up different minerals, different kinds of trees suck up different kinds of minerals from the ground.

So you prepare the ground for what you want to grow. But first you must decide what you want to grow, you see. So prepare the ground. What you need to prepare the ground, etc. You've got bacteria in the ground, you gotta dig it up, let the air in there and get the bacteria going. You might have to fertilize it too to increase the bacterial load and insects and so on. Everything is a balance of course. And before you even decide to put the seed in, no point in putting it in, into packed ground, it's impacted you know, there's no air in it, you know, it's just flattened, flattened and flattened so you've got to break it up and get the air in there. And get the right kind of place to grow it in the first place.

So it's a lot of work goes into that idea as Pike explained it. That's what he's talking about, society and revolutions, for the elite themselves. They have their revolutions, you see. You might go along with that but whatever you're fighting for, you're being used because they have a different goal in mind as to the outcome of where it's supposed to go. Always. Always. It never changes. Then they write the history books so's the next generation thinks, well, this is what happened, why it happened. And of course they're lied to. Lying often takes just simple omission of half the story. You know, oh, I never lied, you know, I just didn't tell them the rest of the story. Which will completely alter your perspective on any particular incidents or incidences or the whole darn war or whatever it happened to be. Or cultural change.

So we are the staging rockets to prepare the soil, you know, the first one. We get them up, you know, to a certain height above the earth. This is allegorical speaking of course. They have their goal, you see, to rise higher than the heavens, higher than the gods, just like Nimrod. It's a good analogy. So the staging rocket drops away. It's already shoved the payload further on, with another stage there, then another stage goes, a second one goes, you see. Then maybe even a third stage rocket goes. These are all boosters that they're meant to get the payload up there into space out of the earth's gravitational pull. That's how it's worked out.

That's what WE are, whole eons, worked down eons of humanity to get them, the elite, from this stage to that stage to that stage. Then we die off, you see, that's it, our function is over, you know. You fall back to earth like the spent rocket stages. They actually explain it to each other like this of course, and that's what we are. We're completely disposable. We are source of income for them because we produce. They don't need money at the top, it's just that they've trained us to need money and to make it a necessity to make money, which they have total control of at the top naturally, make it out of thin air. Then they'll have you all working for this thing called money.

Would you all be, if you could all be independent and not terrified of surviving, and you knew how to farm and you all had the ability, and there's no regulations on having a little farm somewhere, [Alan chuckles.] and grow crops and all the rest of it, would you be just as terrified? You see?

So you all have to earn this money, you see, to survive in this system, which is presented to you as the only way that you can survive. You see, you've got to earn money to pay taxes. There's another con too when they brought in the taxes. Because at one time folk could live, and especially in the States, without paying taxes. Once they created the Federal Reserve, the whole idea was so the reserve could loan to the government, eh – a lot of nothings, and to get payment back, this is an old technique, it's been going on for thousands of years in other countries under different guises, the same system – but then they get the right to tax the people to pay back the loans, you see, the government, this is how the whole cons works. That's what the Bank of England was for, and the Federal Reserve was created to do the same thing. Before the Federal Reserve, at one time the people in parts of the US didn't pay taxes. In fact, they didn't even need money in some parts of the South. They could grow their own food and so on and live quite simply.

And that was their right to live simply. Why the heck not, eh? But when they brought in the taxes, suddenly you've got the census and they want a bit of tax money demanded off you. Well, then you had to go and get a job to get money to pay them taxes. What a racket, eh! And folk really vote and think they're free. Aagh. Oh! What a SCAM! [Alan chuckles.] Then the next generation thinks it's all quite normal because anything becomes normalized very quickly, it's only by, well, hasn't it always been here? No, it hasn't. Well it's been here for quite a while, isn't it? Well, uh-uh-uh. That's how the tricks are done.

That's how they can, that's how the British Empire really was created. Once they got the Bank of England in and gave right of the ones who owned the banks, then they decided about the taxation of the public to pay for all the loans that they would give to governments and so on, the private bank of course that was behind it, then you could really expand the country and use it as a business. The country is the business, you see. And the Empire is their business, the ones who own the money to start with. You set up a system and across the world, and you create an empire, and all the money flows through your hands, and your relatives' hands in fact, and acquaintances' hands, and people who serve that system which you created, and they call it an empire. Then you justify it in the history books as being for the greater good and to civilize the barbarians and things like that, that's what we, we bring civilization to them.

As I've said already, I remember watching an awfully good documentary and it was about, just, it was, I think it was something of Ethiopia in fact. It was about tribesmen and tribes' people who lived very simply. They were herdsmen, as they had been for hundreds maybe thousands of years. Nothing much had changed. Their wealth was their cattle. The guys went off with the cattle every day in their pastures and stuff, guarded them and fought off any wild beasts and things like that. The women at home, they did the domestic stuff and the food, the chores. But they also re-patched their homes, these little domed homes, that weren't huge things. But they actually use cow poop over the, and it hardened in the sun kind of like concrete. But they would do this, and folk would laugh it and oh, oh, you know.

These folks could survive, if the world collapsed tomorrow, the whole system stopped and the trade stopped and the ships running, all these cargoes from China stopped, etc., these folk wouldn't even care nor know. It would make any difference to them. Every tool that they had they made themselves. So laugh away, folks, you know, this system makes you utterly dependent on an artificial system ruled by others. And that's the key to it, you don't have the rights to know even who makes the stuff, owns it or anything else. When they switch off the money, just like the digital system, oh you've been bad, you've said things you shouldn't have said, we're switching you off. The very thing the Bertrand Russell talked about. It's all here. Long-term planning. Folk never really catch on, they hear you saying it but they can't believe it. Oh, they might have said it, but he didn't realize it was going to come down the... Oh yes, they did, folks.

I've got books here where some of the big foundations have members churning out the books in the 1920s and 30s saying that they themselves wouldn't see the fulfillment of this global system they were going to bring in, but their own offspring would be ruling it and they would see it, and it might be a third generation, but they were positive it would all happen.

There's nothing happening by chance. The plan for free trade with China was at least mentioned, I've mentioned this before, in the 1930s by what was then the early Royal Institute of International Affairs in their annual meeting, and they published a book on it, and I have it here. They talked about that eventually China would take over as the policeman of the world. At that time the US wasn't the complete policeman of the world in the 1930s. After the war it would be. But this is before the war started. You're living in, you're just living through scripts, a big term schedule. The same organizations that held the meeting are still running the show today and talking about it.

You see, we get caught up in the minutia of the little bits, that's why they throw lots of little conflicting facts out to you. It's all opposing facts, isn't it, and statistics and opposing statistics, from the same sources. Until you're in a quagmire of data. It's like data barbed wire, mental, it's around your brain, [Alan chuckles.] it's everywhere, and it's put out there intentionally for you to pick them up and start arguing facts. Because the facts are glaringly absent from what they're dishing out. They want you to ignore that. They want you to get tied up in it, you see. It's a technique, a massive psy-op operation on the go for different purposes and a different reason. You don't lockdown the world just spontaneously. It took years and years and years to plan all this.

Now, before I prattle on any longer, I better mention again, it's very important what I'm saying, to go into cuttingthroughthematrix.com website. Take a note of all the sites that are mine listed there, all my official sites. Because you're in a time when they're pulling sites down and if they pull one down maybe I'll have another one to go to, you see. These are my official sites. There are other sites out there that use my stuff and put it up for me, you know, or they'll ask me if they can put it up and I say yeah go ahead. So I don't mind them using it as long as they don't change anything, you see. But the ones I own myself and am responsible for are @cuttingthroughthematrix.com and all the sites listed there. Remember to go into them and use them when you need to because they're awfully important. Because we're going through terrible times. This is just the start of the massive censorship. This is, once you get up to the color-coding wartime thing, they had the same thing after 9/11, oh red alert, amber alert, yada, ya, all the stuff from the old Star Trek series, for terrorism, you see. Now it's a war OF terror on the public with Covid and they're using the same sort of ideas of scales and tiered lockdowns they call them.

It's all mentioned in Event 201 and in the Lockstep part of the Rockefeller publication in 2010, Lockstep was part of that. They talked about how they will eventually have to lock people up and maybe imprison people. Just like any war, you see. In a war situation, this is what, all the techniques they're using is for a war situation and you lock folk up arbitrarily, you see, without trial or anything else. As they did before World War II started in some countries, a lot of folk didn't want the wars, you were already broke and bust from World War I, hhhch, you'd lost all your relatives, and they complained about it. Well, they were all locked up at the start of the war, as the war was starting, and no trial, and locked up for four or five years in Britain as an example, and other countries too.

That's what they do, you see, they give themselves powers to be tyrants and they say it's a necessity. Beautiful too. You see, we didn't have such great lawyers in past days, the feudal system didn't have that, you know. The Kings were pretty brutal. They didn't say much to the peasants, just, obey or we cut your heads off. It was that simple, you see. Eventually they got very good about it and sophisticated and they could get lots and lots of lawyers, and batteries of lawyers to all work together along with public relations, which is propaganda characters, and they'd work together, good PR companies to brainwash the public into total compliance. You see, oh, it's for necessity, isn't it, if we don't all help, you see, we'll all die. They're keeping us safe.

Who'd have thought, eh? I mean, can you imagine Genghis Khan, he could’ve just taken over the world, his part of the world with a small, just a small bunch of bureaucrats and lawyers. A lot cheaper, eh? We're here to save you from the big draaaagons. Really? Oh yeah, they're coming. You see, if we're here there's a magical property we have inside of us and it repels the dragons, you know. Really? Oh yeah, sure. Okay, okay, what do we have to do? Give up all your rights and we'll be the bosses, and just for this emergency period only you understand. [Alan laughing.] It's quite good really. That's how it works. Quite simple.

So again, send a few bucks my way @cuttingthroughthematrix.com. There's books and discs there to buy, definitely PayPal, Cash, whatever, is definitely handy, and checks as well even. We're in a terrible time which is going to get worse. Because again, once they go up through the higher level tiered system, which they really want to ram through, and they've got the machinery ready, the big cranking machine that will just churn out statistics, nothing to do with reality. Of course, the more test they give out, they know, the more will come back positive. Because they're pretty well designed that way. Hhhch, they're so, they're such a, that's why they picked that test by the way because it's so ambiguous and guaranteed to be so. They can have everybody arguing about it. As you're all arguing, they're locking you all down and saying, well, you know…

It isn't until they would give you actually who's sick because of it. Well, we don't get these figures of who's actually sick with it, you see. All you get is new cases. No, the more tests you do the more cases you'll find because these fragments, and it’s fragments of particular viruses and not even a particular one, and but a general type, ha, that actually are used for the testing. Even then, depending what labs you go to you get different results anyway. And different countries actually have different levels, once it goes through this generating system of multiplication of the particles to decide if you've actually had the disease or not, or you've got it, that's how... The inventor, for goodness’ sake, said it's not to be, it's useless for diagnostic purposes. Anyway, that's got nothing... facts don't matter.

You're going to go through terrible times. I keep telling people, don't wait for government to do anything. The government is all on board with this. This is a bigger... This is the technique to be used to bring you into complete sustainability, depopulation, lowered expectation, postconsumer society they've been talking about for years. This is the excuse to make it happen. That's what the reset is all about.

Back to the main trait that you have to survive and that's that you have natural humanity to each other. If you lose that you're done for. In the ultra materialistic society you're going to find it gets worse and worse all the time for helping each other out. It creates a selfishness, and it's been indoctrinated into you when they gave you leaders which were psychopaths, and a whole upper crust that's really psychopathic, and pushed that as being the way to be. Well, you don't have the millions that they have. You don't live in the lifestyles that they have. Or the so-called celebrities, these nothings that they make into stars, that are meant to influence your behavior, for you to emulate their behavior. You can't afford that so, you know, you're not even in the game. And on the way of trying to get what they've got you'll lose your humanity because you adopted the psychopathic culture. You don't have to be a psychopath to adopt the culture. That's why horrific things happen when tyrants take over. Even when it's evident that slaughter is taking place, or genocide or whatever, the rest of the public go into complete shock and say nothing, or they’re kept in ignorance. But the ones that are managing it all, the bureaucracies, they are well, well of it and they'll say nothing too. That never changes. But when a real psychopathic culture is run by the real psychopaths, we're in big, big trouble. And we are in trouble. There's no doubt about it.

Again, back to what sustainability is all about, is depopulation. This is factual, read their own articles from the Club of Rome. Read their articles on sustainability. They all, the WEF is the same. How you must, and I gave these talks years ago on sustainability and brownouts that would be coming eventually. They had meetings in Europe back in the late 90s, early 2000s about the coming energy crisis they would create and how they would actually ration energy and give you rolling brownouts. They practiced in some countries in Europe with it already to iron out the problems so that it's all ready to go, about, shortly, probably this winter, next spring is when they'll hit you with the rationing of power.

Maurice Strong, the same character that again fronted for the Rockefellers, it was drafted up all for the Rio Summit, the whole thing and sustainability and so on, and biodiversity. It was all to do with sustainability and depopulation, cutting back energy and all kinds of production and consumer products, etc., that was all to start to slide into it. You see, it's all your fault. The Club of Rome said that, they pretty well hit on the idea of blaming humanity, using the idea of climate change actually, that's what they were tasked with, finding a way to get the public to give up their rights and freedoms, to save the world, you know, and blame the public at the same time.

They've trained a whole generation in their 20s now who believe this stuff, and that's all they had through schooling. There's nothing you can't train youngsters into. Every tyrant in history knows that. It's even in the Bible, you know. You'll find bits in the Old Testament how they could use, the children could turn on their parents and kill their parents and so on. Standard stuff down through time, you know. When the Communists in Latin America and elsewhere have taken over, they've often used youth groups, youth brigades, they create them. Even the States has been behind the creation of some of these ones in Latin America as we know, with the School of the Americas. But they create youth brigades, and the first thing you were taught to do is kill their parents, and kill, it had to be a member... And this is all through the gang culture in Latin America now, to get into the game you've got to kill an adult. It doesn't matter really who it is, just kill them, you know, because they’re the enemy. And then they're trying to be radical little soldiers, mercenary soldiers for the cause.

Nothing happened by itself. Everything gets funded. Everything gets directed and trained. The CIA is up to its, hhhhh, nostrils in the stink that it's made across the planet for such a long time. With an agenda that most Americans would freak out about if they could actually understand any of it. It's meant to be so secretive you don't understand, because you're not meant to understand. It's nothing to do with helping any of you. Np.

Any, what country could actually believe they have some kind of democracy when they have Secret Service establishments that are so secretive even the politicians can't find out what they're up to? Why go along the pretense of voting politicians in, you know? That's so's you could actually believe that that's all there is to it. You forget very quickly, isn't it, hhhch, there's another secretive organization running your country. It's old techniques, eh, work awfully well.

So yeah, sustainability, depopulation, reduce energy supplies. Even a few years ago they mentioned that at the WEF and the climate meeting, that they could get their agenda through by just reducing basic energy. That's heating, cooling, everything electricity, you name it. Britain, I gave the talks years ago when it became normal, they normalized it, the deaths in winter in Britain of folk dying in their homes. Not on the streets but in their homes. Now it's normal so many thousands a year, you know, ah, well, it's just... Couldn't afford the credits, energy credits, energy unit credits they call them in Britain, and so it's okay... The same government that's taxed these people into the graves, with a life often of austerity, through taxes and didn't have all the cash when they were growing up… And bringing in lots of migrants and housing them in hotels and the whole bit. Meanwhile, the same people are freezing to death in their homes! And you think that's okay? Do you realize how screwed up your brains are?! Hm?!

That's incredible. You're finished I'm afraid, the countries that have accepted all this, they're completely finished. They're so immobilized, their brains are literally compartmentalized and in stasis, some parts of them, where they can't figure out, how come your government is allowing you lot to freeze to death and your older folk to freeze to death in their own homes, and say it's normal? But the same folk can't get money from the taxes they've paid to heat themselves because it's going to bring in more people from elsewhere?

D'you realize you're finished? You're so cowed you can't even stand up for yourselves. And that's the whole key of it, isn't it? I was reading recently about the tenders that the Canadian government put out for building these big camps for, possibly for, you know, infectious diseases, possibly. It could be used for any function once they come up across Canada. I'll put the PDFs from the government tonight. Folk can look into it if they want to. Again, the government’s going to build it, to keep you safe. Where have we heard this before in history? Hm?

The “Federal Quarantine/Isolation sites” - buyandsell.gc.ca

These even got tenders, they want these big, massive companies, the kind of Halliburton type companies that used to, that managed multitasking kind of corporations, this big umbrella system that would take care of it. Because the government really doesn't exist anymore, it's completely farmed out to private companies, that's another thing too, you know. You'd have to get back to basics. You'd be surprised how much money you'd have in your pocket if it wasn't for these governments farming every possible task out to private corporations. That are generally their pals, you know. Maybe even relatives some of them.

So anyway, you've got all these camps, they want to put these camps up and have these big private security companies too that are trained and licensed to take care of them. So there's your guards. Camps and guards right off the bat. Now, these are obviously long-term projects. And you'd better understand something. This Covid is not meant to go away. It's here forever. Or the idea of it, hm, here forever. It's better than terrorism, you know. From the 9/11 thing that changed every, every nat... And again every country, never mind the color coding of terrorism, oh it's a red alert, it's an amber alert, it's a whatever. It has one, two, three, four, five tier lockdown, different grades of lockdown, with color coding on the phone apps by the way, same thing, eh, [Alan chuckles.] which was all tried out in China in the spring, what we're copying now. But the camps, here's the camps on the go as well. These are going to be long term maybe perpetual things. So yeah, it's beautiful, the Covid is to be here forever regardless of evidence, or lack of, or whatever.

It's perfect because every year... People think... Until Covid, most folk seem to have, I used to give talks about this too, hhhhh, in the 20th century, eh, and with towns and cities, with a little bit of money coming in, an insurance payment, insurance companies came in, eh, to get buried and so on. But also, let's get the undertakers. A massive business, undertaking, eh. You take folk under, you put them under, that's the idea of undertaking. It really flourished in the 20th century. Most peasants at one time couldn't afford to get these kind of, or you did it yourselves. Your own families would actually take you to the graveyard and dig out of place for you and put you in and so on. Lots of folk couldn't have coffins because it was too expensive. In comes the undertaker. As soon as you get a few bucks in your pocket, there's a thousand companies spring up, and thousands of companies are after each penny you've got. For every penny you earn there's a thousand companies that want it. So that's how the system is. This is the city system of Plato, he talked about, and how they would use the cities to basically take over the world, and for a system, the system that would be planned down through the ages, actually even before he came along.

So anyway, you have your insurance companies and undertakers. The undertakers would come to the homes at one point. Because most folk, again, would die at home. Once they got a National Health Service in they could have them farmed out to either private nursing homes, which they're doing now of course, where they literally just keep food and water from you until you die, that seems to be the process. Or they give you euthanasia now when they're advanced, the more civilized countries get euthanasia. Then the undertaker deals with all that too. So you don't really see much of the misery, you see.

Before Covid you could get in to see people in the homes, in the exit… I call them exit homes, some of these places because we've lost our humanity, even in these homes, definitely, the whole purpose of them, etc. And that was… I keep getting sidetracked with thoughts here, but I was just thinking there that, you know, up until about the 30s and so on you didn't have all these nursing homes. It was the mafias that came in during prohibition, and Al Capone was one that really started chains of nursing homes and retirement homes, eh. [Alan chuckles.] They could launder a lot of money through them too.

But really as I say, at one time we were all conscious of death. Right up until the 20th century and into the first part of the 20th century, it wasn't unusual for children to die young, very young. You had some excellent, hhhch, photographic work about that. It was a whole business in photography eventually in Canada and elsewhere with, they actually photographed the children, they'd try to prop them up and make them look alive and stuff for photographs, that had died. It was so common, you see. And the houses were pretty bad. The houses that didn't have, and most of it was hygiene, they could be nice clean homes, but they didn't have hot running water and so on, then bacterium especially flourishes. So they didn't have that in a lot of the homes at one point. So you had people would die young. Other homes were so cold and drafty, you didn't have the double glazing either by the way in your windows. You'd have frost in your windows, I grew up like that with frost, with ice inside the windows, you know, one pane and that was it.

When heating was rationed, here's the key, which they view, they know what they've done in the past you see. Fuel was rationed and coal was rationed because it was so expensive. They kept it expensive in the working-class areas too, that you couldn't afford to heat all the rooms, or the bedrooms. You'd make one fire in the living room and that was it. It rose up maybe a little bit, and if you had the bedroom above it, you had a little bit heat, if you didn't, well tough cheese. That's how things really were right up until, in a good part of Britain when I was growing up in different areas. Yeah, a lot of folk would die young. You'd get all these different problems, earaches and infections of the ears and stuff like that with the climate and the cold and yada, yada. And other things now too.

So, they know that if they start pulling down energy again or making it so expensive you can't heat yourself, well eventually this all returns and folk start to die off. It's to bring down the population. You understand, they want to reduce the population. How do you think they're going to do it? I've mentioned this before, this term resolute. When folk have sworn in battle, to go into battle, they're sworn to be resolute, to be resolute together, no one will chicken out. Well, that's the whole authorized bureaucracies across the planet working in unison are completely sworn on board with this sustainability agenda for depopulation.

Look at all the abortions. And this is a hot topic too, abortion. But the thing is, once you get into literally killing children who have been born who were unwanted, well that's okay now because it will bring down the numbers. I mean... whoah! In the process we're in a horror show, folks. Regardless of if you are pro or con, the fact is WE are responsible, hhhhch, for all this happening. And yet it's in a culture now where you've been destroyed by promotion of promiscuity to destroy the culture which has the side effect of having lots and lots of children, but they're not wanted, then they bring in the mass abortion. Do you understand how it works?

People in the 1920s who were bringing communism across the West talked about this. You must destroy the system entirely of the West. The culture, the values, everything. Not just the family, the whole, all the value system. How do you do it? You promote the things that cause the problems. [Alan chuckles.] It's just too easy, you know, and if you have the money behind you, which they've never had problems with the Communists parties in the West, even today, you know, they're the richest folk on the planet, because it's more efficient for them to have control over the world. Technocracy, you know.

But folk never quite catch on. Again, they get caught up in today's battle. Today's battle is just part of an ongoing battle. It's a battlefield with many fronts on it and folk don't know that. Many fronts. Look what they're doing for the food industry. If they want to cut, which they are doing, hhhch, or plants or factory, if there's any factory still working, they just go say, oh we're having a mass Covid testing system, you know, a million in this area. Well, they're guaranteed to get X amount of positives, you see. It doesn't mean ill folk, just positives. Then they close it down. They've done that with meat plants in Canada. They can do it with other farms for the grain and for the harvesting and say it's all gone to pot and so on. You get food scarcity. Then you get rationing coming in. A wartime scenario.

You cannot... D'you realize this is the total lockdown as I say, was planned years ago. And it is in lockstep, they're all in lockstep, and they are all resolute. They've all sworn onto this come hell or high water. And I mean it, there's nothing going to change their mind about this. There's nothing. All the countless doctors that have come out in signed petitions against all this, who are actually working in the hospitals saying it's bogus, you know. It doesn't make any difference. We're looking at resolute. The same face you would see on troops that were turned on their own people, as though they were robots. We're seeing it now. To the bitter end. That's war scenario.

We forget, it's unfortunate, you know, a lot of folk, you have lots of little breakdowns as you wake up to reality. Lots of little ones. It's like countless deaths of democracy, and what you believed in, just all died along the way. When you realize what really runs the world... and runs your system... and every part of your system. It's a death. That's the same symptoms as a death, you know. Your sadness. Then your anger. There's the different phases you go through when you realize there's no such thing as democracy, never mind your reality that you thought you had.

Folk adapt into every step of whatever period they're living in, eh. HG Wells talk about creating massive arenas for sports to keep the peasants quiet, you know, it was an outlet. Way back then. Others did too because they all went to the same meetings, the same organizations. You adapt into it and then, so yeah, generations grew up with football teams. That didn't exist before. The little teams that did exist were just local teams and they were amateurs. Nobody played professionally at one time. These are games that children did. Until the big, the same characters that owned the news media and so on started buying them up, make them into professional teams and making lots of money off them. But young guys, they get attached to it, they think this is normal. They think this is all theirs. It's not theirs. That's not your team either. It's all put on for you for other reasons. Never mind to fleece you as well.

But also to keep you fairly quiet and content. And your angst is played out on the field vicariously. You don't play the match yourself, it's played through the other people and you identify with this as some kind of tribal team. It's all done deliberately. But you'll cry and moan if you can't, if it gets canceled or whatever. Because you realize, you think that you're right. No, it's not. It didn't exist in your great granddad's time, you know. There's reasons for everything. And folk make money off us. Everywhere you turn someone's making stacks of money off you. And they are public-private partnerships, they get money off the taxpayer, grants to build massive new arenas, eh. That's how the world runs and most folk don't know.

Hhhch, getting back to the penny novels I talked about earlier. A lot of these novels would help, for the guys they would be war things. So the peasant guys who, if they were lucky to get a job in the factory and work 16 hours a day, could escape into fantasy. They could be some kind of soldier doing some heroic thing in a battle and getting metals for it in his fantasy, that's what you played out. It was just formula books, formula books, you know. For the women they would have these romance stories. Just like the 1920s, they churned out all these ballroom dancing things and cars and limos and butlers for working-class girls to just have their tongues hanging out over and just, my God, they actually have all that? [Alan chuckles.] Yep. Total escapism by giving you the unobtainable. That's what they turned out.

The one for the women, the ones for the women eventually turn into, the romance ones, and I remember reading, hhhch, some a few years back, how it was a lucrative field. It was really soft porn for women that it turned into. It was all, it catered for that too. There's nothing happens by chance by itself. Again, the whole penny novel idea was to stop people from forming unions and things like that and organizations for rights. Keep them in the land of fantasy and escapism and they wouldn't get so angry, that was the idea. That's how we're managed, isn't it? Now of course we're programmed completely through fiction, and we have been our whole lives long.

Now, the idea about resources, running out of resources was never the problem at all. It was, the more resources you've got and the healthier you are and the more energy you can use, and the more business there is for earning money, the more folk can have children and the bigger society becomes. Even though it's literally been declining in the West. The West is an incredible target of this depopulation agenda. They were declining in the populations before the mass migration and so on. Not terribly, they could have balanced out eventually into something which was more workable actually, and that would have happened. But they flooded the country with mass migration to make it seem that you're all so overcrowded and overpopulated, until everybody thinks, well I guess we are. No, you're not. It's mass migration. From their own statistics from the Department of Statistics in Britain they admit this every year, but folks seem to neglect that part.

But no, you can't please the bosses, you see. It's depopulation across the world is what they want. They definitely have a sliding scale of different countries, and priorities for others and so on. That's what you're living through is herd management really. Herd management. And of course you get herd immunity, and herd vaccinations coming along the pike. Because they don't want you to have your own herd immunity, even though the folk are getting it.

I just wanted to jump something before I forget it and that's this whole idea, that is the idea of herd immunity. I've touched on it before. Now, the media keeps, through the terror campaign by the media, which is authorized of course and promoted and I'm sure they get paid well to do it, they have, they always talk about there's so many cases, so many cases. And you'll say, my God, eventually everybody's going to be a case. Wouldn't you think that if you didn't understand anything at all? If they find, you find you've got 10,000 new cases in this area, because you’ve tested about half a million that they, you know, the day before and another, oh, well everybody is going to be a case.

Now, if you're a case of Covid how do you think they can eventually test negative for it? Do you think the virus eventually just says I'm giving up with this person, I can't win the battle, I'm just going to give up? Or do you think maybe Covid's got a little clock inside it that switches it off? Now, we're talking about folk who don't get any kind of treatment because they aren't sick, eh? Because the test that they're using pick up little particles of dead, what's called, viruses, but they're supposedly little particles of, almost like casings you might say, you know. Because it isn't a bacterium with a case actually a virus? But regardless, little bits and pieces, this is the theory behind it all, you know. Do you think this just gives up? No, you see, these folk they're not worried about because, and you shouldn't worry about them because it means they've developed antibodies to it, if they had it in the first place, they've now developed antibodies, which over, like always, this happens with all viruses, and it destroys, you know it kills off the virus. That's why you can test them later and they're clear, you see, even with the faulty testing. But they're clear regardless. You can do an antibody test and they'll say, oh, they seem to have antibodies against it. So therefore, that's a blood test for that, you see.

So anyway, there you go. That's herd immunity. Which is normal. But they don't want to tell you that. Do they? They want to leave you in limbo that, oh no, my God, all these cases are just adding up until there must be about 100,000,000 in your own country with it. That's what you're led to think. Because you're reading the stats from last month tested, how many got it, and then the next month and so on. And my God, we must have... No, it's gone away obviously [Alan chuckles.] in these people because now they are immune to it. They have herd immunity. Which supposedly is what they wanted vaccines to do. But if you get it naturally, herd immunity, and then you haven't got any side effects from a vaccine. It's far easier and healthier to have natural herd immunity develop.

I've got all these articles here from the vaccine companies talking about this. By the way, just mentioning this is going to get the folk banned, and maybe me too, just mentioning it. That's how bad it is now. But again, we're in a stage now where they said they would go into eventual not just banning folk here and banning folk there, but they've been arresting people just for speaking out now. You're not allowed to say anything in this democratic system that's contrary to the overlords, you know. You can't say anything. There's democracy. Are you going to vote for this system?

You should be demanding that these characters that are pushing this get all arrested here for the incredible damage to the economy, to the structure of society, to the families, to the elderly, never mind the mental health aspect of it too and the physical health aspect of folk who've been dying needlessly because they can get treatments. This, these are war crimes and these people should be held... I really mean that, if they get away with this, HELL is going to be extended for an awful, maybe the rest of your life on planet Earth here. That's why they're resolute at the top, they know what will happen if they let up on the drumbeats. They know. And none of them, psychopaths like life, they enjoy life better, more than you do. Because they don't worry about things. Hhhch, they enjoy things, eh. They really do. N-n-n.

So this is the system you're in now. And they're all resolute indeed because they know the consequences if they let go on this. And the public, if a miracle happened and they did back off, you'd have to still push on to get these characters arrested. Because the lies that have been told are so incredible, and the disasters are so horrible what they've done, you'll never recover economically out of this to begin with. Again, look at how the plan for sustainability has worked. Bomff, postconsumer, post this, post that, all done, boom, boom, boomff. With one fell blow, close down everything. And guess what happens? [Alan chuckles.] Then they supposedly borrow money from characters. Who are these characters that lend? Where did they get the money? Is the money, money, or just a blip on a screen? Hm? …out of nothing. But they're going to end up saying that they own you, literally own you and your nations lock, stock and barrel, if they say that it’s all got to get paid back somehow, hm? N-n-n.

Total war scenario, eh. Hhhhhh. I used to read articles and books too about bureaucrats and how societies function when they were invaded by other nations. It's really interesting, to me anyway that kind of stuff is. It's pretty dry for some people but it's interesting too. Because you look back at history and you say well how, why did France just capitulate and... Oh, they give you wonderful movies about resistance fighters and all that, but it's generally just the Communists, small communist pockets here and there and so on.

But the fact is, there was no great push, you see, and forget Germany too, I'm talking about even before that as well. I mean Britain invaded an awful lot of countries just to help, to save them and give them civilization you understand, so's that certain rich families in London that already owned the banks could own the whole empire, that's the whole purpose of making an empire, private business as they say. You think about it, how they managed the minds and the psyches of the people doing the invading. A lot of folk would think it’s for the greater good, well you know, look at the way they're living... As I say, well, leave them alone… and as we all fall apart 100 years down the road, which we're doing now, or 200 years, they could still go on. You can't. The people who are wearing all the fancy buttons and stuff, shiny buttons and the fancy outfits could all die off. But the folk they're trying to dominate literally could continue for thousands of years like that.

So who's superior? Hm? Did the people look unhappy to you in these tribal situations? Well, you know, they can't read, you know, Dickins and you know. Do you really need that? Do you think it all comes down to the education you've got to give you happiness? Are you happier because of an education? [Alan chuckles.] Think about it, really, when you think some of these folks could pass down their histories just orally to each other, you know. Did it really matter outside their own tribe what happen in the world? They could look at the stars and get just as much satisfaction and wonderment out of them too. You see.

So it's all what you think of as civilization. Civilization is a more perfected form of slavery. That's what you find that Charles Galton Darwin talked about, slavery, in The Next Million Years. We're in it, by the way, the system he talked about. He was the physicist remember who worked on the atomic bomb, the Manhattan Project, that brought his book out in the 1950s, The Next Million Years. Rather unabashedly too. Because at that time right after World War II the UN was pushing to take over the world, quite openly. They had articles out and published in all the top papers, it's maybe time the people accept they need global government and that this national idea was just old stuff, old hat as they say. So they were rather boastful about their...

Until the folk started kicking back. They didn't want this idea of some unknown people across the sea somewhere, sitting somewhere and dictating your affairs at home. It just doesn't seem right, you see. And it's true, it's so true, is that the EU, if you're not in the EU itself, and Britain certainly wasn't in, living in Europe, then here's the faceless people across the part of the world, eh, running you, all these countries. Of course we know the commission wasn't democratic anyway at the very top, regardless of the politicians down below that had no real rights at all to change any of it, it was all done by the commission. But facts don't matter even there.

But you think about it, they came out with, you know, the idea of eugenics. That was a big, big part of it, and all down through all the Darwin families. Charles Galton Darwin, the Manhattan Project guy, he was quite open about it. He says that slavery has always existed down through time in one form or another. That's what I'm talking about here, your perceptions of things. You've been trained to see things and even given terms for certain things which are awfully misleading so that you don't catch on that you're in a form of slavery. So he said, it's always existed, slavery, in some form or another, and I have no doubt it will continue in one form or another down through the future.

You're at a stage now, which is interesting the parallels that you're in, the paradoxes really, of a soviet type system of technocracy running everything. Experts, you see, but it's like masses, armies of them, layers and layers and layers of experts, all living off of the taxes, off the purse of the public, and also on behalf and with the top corporate bosses in the world. Quigley said there's a new feudal system we're going to bring in, he said, and he was all for it, a new feudal system, nondemocratic, a feudal system and the overlords would be the CEOs of the top international corporations. Well, you're here.

But that's the paradox, eh. You've got a Sovietized system, just like the Reese Commission talked about, merging with the capitalist system, working as one basically. We’re feeding the mouths of thousands and thousands and thousands and thousands and thousands of bureaucrats and civil servants, and nevermind all the private companies that are really the same too, like private corporate groups of civil servants and bureaucrats that are all farmed out. We are the slaves paying for it all. And yet the slaves that humbly, and getting more humble as the big plan, and a more primitive lifestyle, that’s what we’re going into, planned, as these overlords, these scum that live off of you are getting richer and richer and living better and higher and all that. That's why they won't ever turn against, this is why they'd rather kill you off before they'll admit they're wrong, because they've got so much to gain from it.

Getting back to the books I've read on all the different, and Britain too, going into countries and taking them over. The first thing they do is they round up characters that are going to fight against them. Even spokespeople, you see, they round them up. If you can't win them over and bribe them off, you round them up. And use martial law type strategy and you line them all up and... Lord Kitchener did this. Lord Kitchener in Britain, the great Lord Kitchener, under the official secrets act they kept his records classified for 100 years. He's a great, whenever they had real trouble with anything they brought in Kitchener. He would just out of martial law go into every village and every town, and every fifth person, every male, whoever, pick him out, line them up and shoot them. That was it. The message came across very quickly, you'd better buckle under or we kill you. That's how Britain brought civilizations to the world.

The same thing happened, as I say, when you get invaded from other countries. And Britain was near it, but not really in a sense, France definitely was. Now, [Alan chuckles.] France had meddled with Germany too since World War I, wouldn't let them go. They kept going over and plundering the Ruhr Valley for coal and so on and not paying the Germans. They were just taking it all from them as reparation for World War I. They kept at it, they kept at it, so naturally France was going to get invaded if Germany fought its way out of this mess it was locked down into for reparations. The very predictions that the top reporters at the time that churned the books out after the Paris agreement said it would have to do this, if the Germans, they can't pay the whole world off, pay everybody's costs for the World War I as though they were solely responsible for it, they'd have to fight their way out. Or die, starve to death. That was the idea. So they fought their way out of it, and they went into these countries.

But it's interesting reading how it works down through time too, even with the Romans doing the same thing. They go into nations, and there's always a type of bureaucracy, you see, your civil service in every country, even in ancient times, that managed things. Eventually the bureaucrats in the invading army, the civil servants that come in with them to restructure things get pally with their counterparts in the country they're invading, their civil servants, and they have so much in common they blend very quickly together. Then they start becoming pally with each other and then visiting each other, and even intermarrying each other over time. That's how quick they adapt. They're already living off the people anyway, they’re parasites, of any country. [Alan chuckles.] The invaders and the ones that get invaded, these civil servants, so they adapt rather quickly into doing, well you know, it's practical and it’s survival, survive and live well, we don't want to drop our standard of living, we all live off the people eventually so that's how they see it. That's how it works.

Yeah so, Galton Darwin is quite right, slavery always exists in some form or another, and he presumed it always would, on behalf of the dominant minority as Aldous Huxley talked about them. He called them a dominant minority that ruled everything. And there was a dominant, you could call it a technocratic group that he said he belonged to, the scientific groups that serve the dominant minority. And in science, he's talking about all kinds of science including sociology and psychology and psychiatry, and behaviorism, all these systems to manage the populations and manage people.

When I think of the elite who ruled and do rule Britain, you know, at one time they were quite open about their disdain for the public. They'd call them the villains, you know, everybody was a varlot and a villlian and so on. If you were a common peasant, you couldn't be trusted for anything, you see, you were some kind of midget, like mental midget and that's how they saw you as unfit, unclean and everything else. That was the way of it. They had to do a real good makeover to convince the public that they changed when World War I came along, and you know, we're different now, and yeah, we'll get some of your tax money going back and getting houses, but we've got a lot of debts to pay because of the war and stuff. But still, you know, and you might get some votes now, you see, maybe, not all of you, but you'll get some votes to have a say in anything.

I mean, they call Britain the greatest democracy in the world. Who's kidding who? And the longest democracy in the world. Again, most folk couldn't vote for centuries, eh. Even the US was similar, they didn't want everybody to get the vote, or the man either, all the men to get the vote when they first formed. They didn't trust the general population. You've got to remember that the general people who brought, the Masons that created the Constitution were wealthy landowners themselves most of them. So it was an old idea, that whole idea of who should get the rights to vote for whatever and so on.

And you couldn't be trusted, you see, if you were poor. You see, poor is interesting. It's a crime to be poor, you see. That's really what came behind it, in the poorhouses, they had books put out for those who manage the poorhouses in Britain and the poorhouses were not put out really to help the people. They were put out as a warning initially not to be unemployed, that was the point, in Queen Victoria's time. And they made sure that the hell stories about the poorhouses proliferated throughout society. Oh, if you don't do what you're told and so on you'll lose this job and you'll end up in the poor house. That was a threat that they would use, you see.

So they were not sort of wonderful places to be. Neither, mind you, were some of them as bad as they made them out to be too. Especially again once you go into about the time of World War I or whatever, or just before World War I. They had to give some kind of display of, because Britain had such a bad name for the way it treated its own people. 'The sick man of Europe' they called them because they had no system to help the people at all. Germany was way ahead of them with even pension plans and so on. But not Britain. In Britain the class system is so ingrained it was just astonishing.

So they had to do a total remake, a makeover of good publicity, you see, and good novelists and writers to remake the whole idea of, we were always on the, we were always champions of the people and champions of the Commonwealth countries, we're champions, you see. The same as Rockefeller did, old Rockefeller, after he had the tent cities shot up by the militias that he ordered in to shoot up striking miners, they had to remake him as a beneficent character now, remake him into a philanthropist, he was there to help them now, you see. Total makeover. The same thing happened with the countries that had colonies, same idea.

This is the truth of things, you know. Now, it's not to say either that the folk who go and put uniforms on, the peasants who end up filling the uniforms, cannon fodder, are evil people either. Because they were given no option as to, generally as to, in fact Britain was so good at the wars, when they had different wars on the go, they had agreed with the different factory owners, who had the votes in the parliaments and so on these characters, they could get them to lay off lots of people and the government would subsidize any losses and so on. The guys would immediately, there was no pension or layoff money or... So immediately the bands of the army would coincide, and they would go around the different places that were getting laid off and offer the young guys money, to take the king's shilling, and join up, and away you went, you see. So that was their option. Everything is psychology and management, herd management. And they go off quite proud actually because they think they're going to be a somebody, you know. They don't, most of them often couldn't read or write or could hardly write at all, that's really how bad it was. They were sent off to the slaughter a lot of them. Oftentimes. And nothing much has changed even today. There's people across Britain who are quite proud to have the youngsters going off into the Army. But if you're not getting invaded, why are you, why are you proud for your guys to get sent off to countries that haven't invaded you?

You see, logic doesn't matter, it doesn't come into it now. Now once a thing is normalized, well, this is what we do, we're proud to be it and so on. And they will be proud. Young guys are proud to wear the outfits. But once cold wars and things are over, you don't really have, you can fall back on why you exist. So you end up, you're really a mercenary. And you have to accept that's what you are now, is a mercenary. I don't care about the, oh, we're really working under the United Nations. You're still a mercenary. And the United Nations is not what you think it is either with its purposes and so on.

Reality is vastly different than the way it's portrayed here, the simplistic way that they want you all to believe in. It really is astonishing how we're trained and trained to believe absolute nonsense. And they don't stop with it. As I say, they can talk about the coming war with Germany and Japan in the 1930s in their own books, the Rockefeller group, and yet once it happens it's all, oh, supposedly a surprise, eh, and surprise attacks and so on. Vietnam is the same thing, the Gulf of Tonkin incident. I don't know if the old tapes are still there of the captains on the ships in Tonkin in communication with the president's group, you know, and McNamara. They kept asking the captain, is it rough sea, and they'd say, is there any trails of torpedoes? No. Are you sure there's not any? No, I can't see any, you know. Is there any possibility at all there might have been? Well, that's impossible to really say. That means it's possible to say it too. Well, you know... That's what they went on, that they had torpedoes fired, and it didn't happen. It didn't matter. False flag, complete false flag.

9/11 happened with about a thousand coincidences all happening that day supposedly. It really is astonishing, isn't it, absolutely astonishing how reality is totally warped immediately. And the coverups that go on is just, is astronomical. Then again, you have the same thing in Britain with 7/7, eh, and the coincidences. [Alan laughing.] Come on here! Uuugh. No coincidences at all obviously. Again, 9/11 was to bring the whole world onto its knees under a unified group of fighting terrorism. There you go. Now it's Covid. We're all unified to fight Covid and crash the world's economies on behalf of the World Economic Forum and Klaus Schwab and the global reset, into austerity and poverty. With all of its fallout, which they know is going to happen, and IS a happening. With death.

This is a total war on the public of the planet. I hope you realize that. THEY do at the top. That's why I say they're resolute and they're not going to back off because they know the consequences if they back off now. What they've done so far is nothing to where they're going to go with all this. The World Bank as I've said before in their PDF from the World Bank group, they say that they are planning for at least five years of this, and it could be renewed again this whole part of the script of their agenda to take care of it.

Can you imagine how the world is going to be in five years time... with very little getting produced... very little growing for food... EH, HM, and so on?

First time in history that HEALTHY folk are locked up. First time in HISTORY. There's unified lockstep for you across the world. M-hm-hm. Total war.

So I personally have no doubt this is going to continue. The public will be led on a few weeks at a time, into a few months at a time, a few years at a time, well, just another few months. I said all this – this is like repetition isn't it, Groundhog Day – from February this would all happen. That's what it is, you're conned and goaded and lied, and led, and cajoled, and humored, a little bit at a time as you're lied to and lied to and lied to, for compliance's sake, into a prewritten agenda.

So I still say that you've got to try and have a support group because it's all down to individuals now and friends and so on. That's what it's all coming down to, folks. Don't wait for government for anything. They're not your friend now, they've made it quite plain. You have to learn to help each other. The ones who are active and fit have to find ways to get food to other folk and so on. It's coming down the pike. It WILL come eventually.

They're going to use the troops now in England, you've probably noticed that, to help the public. They said it too in the Lockstep thing too, and the ones for Canada I noticed as well, that they've got the public used to the troops occasionally helping, like sandbags in floods and things, so they can use the same techniques to help, you know, get the troops out there to police the public. This is all disclosed stuff from their own PDFs from governments. Quite something, eh.

I think of Ireland too and places like that. You'd think really, you'd have hoped, you would have hoped that the countries that have been hammered for centuries, centuries, the worst... and Scotland too for that matter, even Wales as well, you know, hammered and hammered. And sucked dry from, hhhch, again, for that square City of London and a lot of the people around London who live in big, massive, massive mansions they like to show you on television. But the folk never had much of a chance at all, you know. Wales was kept as a mining community. It was like they helped fuel the homes of Britain and the factories, just like Scotland, parts of Scotland did too, and the ships of the Navy and so on, that's part of what they did too, you know.

But there's never been much... they've been looked down upon by the elite in London, you know, as though they were some kind of subhuman. Jonathan Swift, best known for Gulliver's Travels, I suppose, and other writings too, wrote A Modest Proposal, a kind of satirical almost Malthusian text on the state of Ireland in his day and the problems that they had then. Because Ireland was always under attack for a long time. It was used as a massive farm supply, hhhch, for Britain or England and its colonies. And for supplying even the troops across the waters in other countries too, for food and beef and all the rest of it. It also was a conquered nation.

What comes out during, if you understand A Modest Proposal, about eating your children, which was again a kind of satirical technique. Because way back into ancient Rome in fact where they wrote about using a technique to stir up the emotions and the public to get them talking about things and thinking about things. That's the technique that was used, because of the terrible state of the Irish people at the time of a big transition into, again, an industrial age from just farming, and they were to be used as human resources. Back then they talked about human resources and how they kind of managed population, what they would need and what they wouldn't need, etc. It was all getting talked about way back in his day using the Malthusian dialogue and so on.

So where we are today is almost... well, we are, it's the same argument today with the WEF, World Economic Form, the climate change groups too, all the same groups really, talking about too many of YOU, we don't need you all anymore, and you're eating up their resources and you're in the way of their futuristic plans just because of your existence. I'm not kidding you. This is where we are today. It's a horrible state of affairs to be in. This group have literally usurped all power on the planet to themselves as though it's a quite natural thing to do. So any excuse will do to get what they want.

Just like, again getting back to Swift and his modest proposal, let them eat their babies basically. And even, hhhch, came up with recipes… to REALLY get the horror stirred up and get the debate going.

Because there are planned famines. There's no doubt about it whatsoever and down through time. He mentions it himself that in ancient times some countries, like Rome, for the peasantry, and Greece as well. The Grecian Island sometimes would actually sterilize, or you know, they'd, um, neuter the boys for instance if they said there were too many children on some of the islands at one point. And those that owned them often, including in Rome, would do the same thing if the slave population was getting too big or whatever. They bred slaves, you see. Just like they did in Latin America and the Incas, they bred the slaves.

So ah, hhhhh, these are.... Again, we live in a kind of a naïve sanitized version of indoctrination, that's what we're given, so that we don't think about these things. We don't. Which again, is a great cover for those who talk about them and plan societies all the time at the top. They see themselves as the owners of the world and the farmers and we're just the animals to them. That tells you so much, folks, I mean, about, hhhch, the people they laud up and elevate into history as stars, you know, Gulliver's Travels and all that. That was a pretty typical viewpoint from his class perspective.

I may have mentioned it once maybe before that when I was about 15, 15, and it was in the summer, and I worked for a few weeks in a grocery store. Part of what I was doing was deboning ribs, you know. You take the bones out of these ribs for bacon and then you'd bundle up the meat and you'd tie it off, you know, in these rounds for the slicing machine. But there was an old guy there that they'd hired who was good at what he did. But he was like, he looked like a skeleton. He was a good age, way past retirement age. But he was an alcoholic, a chronic alcoholic, and he'd pull out his little bottle every so often as he was deboning and all this and have a swig and he would chat and so on.

He had joined the military as a boy soldier, you see, way back in the year dot. And it had to be, around 1900 or something I would think. I mean he was so old even to look at him. But it's hard to tell on alcoholics too because they're so aged just by their appearance sake. But he knew about it too and he mentioned the sold ruins of a prison, a military prison that had been, it was part of a castle actually, but it was the outskirts of the castle part but was remnants of a prison. He mentioned that, he says, you've seen that in town? I says, yeah. He says, I was in it. He says, he mentioned what they used to do for punishment if you're late back from leave or whatever it happened to be, or insubordination. They literally said, ah, they could lash you, they could lash you, absolutely, they still had the lashing laws back then when he said it, when he was a boy soldier. But he said that, and he joined it surely because he had nothing else to work at, you know, at the time.

But he said that they put you in these the jails and he says that there's a huge, big room there, and they had these huge, maybe a foot, maybe a foot and a half wide stone balls that had been literally chiseled to be balls, you know, like huge cannonballs in a sense. Heavy suckers. They'd paint, you had to paint them black, at one end of this hall, and then your whole day was to it carry to the other side, like a whitewash, they would use that very fast drying kind of paint which they used to use on the buildings. You get to the other side, and you had to wash the stuff off and then paint it black. So it was white to black, and black to white, and then carry them back again, you see. Back and forth back and forth, to break your spirit and your will.

That's what you had to do. He thought that was quite normal. Hhhch. He didn't have any hard feelings about it, he realized that's just what they did to try to break your spirit to get you to obey, you see. Folk don't realize that this is somebody that I MET, you know, who had been through that. Whereas all I would have ever thought was the military was way more civilized now, you know. You're talking to a living person there who experienced the other side of it before they did the great makeover, you see, in the 20th century. That's really what is pretty, pretty brutal, you know, that's how you're treated. There's no sort of, you know, hhhch, humane anything at all with things. And that was normal to then too, that's what they saw as normal.

We forget how fast perceptions can be reinvented to give you the impression of something else altogether, very quickly. The same with the lies they gave them in World War I about, yeah, we'll put your tax money in building. They failed badly in that, so they had to get busy in the 1930s. Because they knew there was a war coming again and they knew they'd have to get the people into it and involved. But even after World War II they were so short on housing that they opened, they gave law to reopen buildings that had been condemned sometimes 70 years before. That was Great Britain. Condemned because they have, it wasn't just rising damp, you had weeping walls and everything. I knew that because I was, I actually started my life off in one of them, hhhch, with the family. That was your GREAT Britain, that had been through two world wars, and supposedly were the victors. But no, it's... Again, come the 70s and 80s, and then definitely from the 80s on, those who were born have no recollection of any that, they can't imagine it was that bad at all. All they see is these dramas put out by the BBC re-creating history, you see.

So yeah, the countries that were hated then, for some reason, mainly because occasionally they used to give awful problems to the authorities in London, they'd have the occasional revolutions and rebellions and so on, have never been so… That's what gets me, you see, there's something beyond everything you're told as to what manages the system. But it never forgets, never forgets, and if you've rebelled against it centuries ago, they'll never forget that either. They'll have their wicked way eventually, no doubt about it. You can't imagine... You're beyond the human element when you get into that kind of... hhhch. I know you can definitely train generations of the same people to hate, to hate, to hate others. There's no doubt about that too. If you make it a cause to teach them to hate, that's definitely a factor in some folks. But not to the extent you'll see it when, with what you'd think centuries had passed and you think, well the elite would ease up on, say, the Celtic countries. But no, not at all. N-n, not at all.

Then they've got their patsies in the Scottish national government in Scotland and it's an absolute farce. It's an absolute farce. I mean, they're more communistic than the guys around Lenin as far as destroying the borders of Scotland, [Alan chuckles.] or anything to do with... I mean, that's what got me, hm, the SNP and suddenly you're international? Wait a minute, international socialism... that's to the end of borders and nations. So what's the point in fighting? You've all been had for the old communist/capitalist cause. Because it's the capitalists that ran communism, the real capitalists, hhhch, believe you me, ran communism. So let's all go communistic for SNP and eliminate your borders. So you fight for sovereignty to give it away? [Alan laughing.] And the folk still haven't figured that one out yet too. And the patsies that are fronting for the government there, which is such a joke, it's just a comedy, really. Beyond a comedy of errors indeed. Sad, isn't it, to watch destruction, destruction, destruction of folk really who keep trying to get up there and have a good life, and only to watch it get destroyed time after time after time. Just like Ireland, same kind of thing. Pretty sad that.

So you have Scotland and Ireland, regardless of how England was supposedly, and still part of, under the EU. Boris Johnson of course in England that many including Peter Hitchens denounced basically at the beginning as a real lefty liberal type, that's now remade to be the conservative leader kind of. What a joke that is, isn't it, with the guy's history himself. Mind you, he was the Mayor of London at one point. Now, do you really make them the mayor of, I'm talking about the City of London. That's a big thing to get into their financial organization there, like, you're-one-of-us type kind of thing. But again, he's dithered on the BREXIT thing, as it was meant to happen. Again Peter Hitchens called him out on that a while back, he said that would probably happen.

I think personally he, say, I think he's very similar to the States where if Biden was to get in, I think the idea is he'll drop out eventually and Harris takes over, without getting elected, you see. Because I don't think people would vote for her by herself to be elected as the head. That happened in Canada years ago. It's a common thing using the British Commonwealth countries where Brian Mulroney had done what he was put in to do by his masters with the free-trade deals and so on, and he was given stacks of seats on the boards of big corporations including Barrick Gold Corp at one point too. The same thing with Bush Junior, he was given, was it Bush Junior, was given seats on that very same thing eventually. They always get rewarded with seats on boards. That they don't have to attend anything, they just have to put their name on it, and they get a massive stipend coming from the, as part of their income every year. That's how things really work, you know.

I think that in Canada, yeah, you had Mulroney, he retired early, you know, or gave up being the Prime Minister basically. Actually the second in command who was appointed, it was, she was called Kim Campbell. Interesting character. She stepped in of course without getting elected and had a year or something like that, I don't know how long she was there for, and then she was out. That's how they often get people in that wouldn't get elected, you see, to make a statement for the history books. I think that's really what Biden would be, if he did get in, that's what they would do with him. I'm pretty sure of it. Boris Johnson is similar, I think that Dominic Raab would be, is meant to maybe take over from Johnson himself. That's how the game's played. It's for the public consumption so's you think, well you know, ... characters that would never get in, or get elected in just stand down and their deputies take over. Well, it's more arranged than you can imagine at times, the times in which we live, eh?

Again, they're front people. Everything's a front in the system. The people who are elected, remember that Carol Quigley said, as prime ministers and presidents, and the top echelon, meaning their deputies too, you only need a small coterie at the top in any party to belong to the CFR, as an example, and Quigley said that himself. He said for the last, what, 60 years I think he said, now he said that in the 1960s, every prime minister and every president of the United States has been a member of the same organization, this group that was for globally running the world and into a global Parliament eventually. He mentioned that in his own book again.

So yeah, they're not just coming out with some kind of fantasy that they have. It's a reality. They belong to organizations that call themselves the establishment, and they have different names for it too. The establishment. They boast about it. Other times they'll deny it, oh no, we're just an informal group. There's nothing informal about them. They have whole bureaucracies that draft up laws to be put into, to be signed by governments. That's not some little hobby group here, the Council on Foreign Relations. [Alan chuckles.] N-n-n.

We're living in such a corrupt time, aren't we, where it's rather open. The massive corruption that's there, and it's not that it's new, it's just that they've been better at hiding it in the past. I don't think they even bother about it now. I can remember too when Bush Junior was in, and even before Junior you had the Clinton's in. I remember when the Clinton's were in, I said, you had all these, you had Janet Reno in, and you had Waco and you had eventually the Oklahoma City bombing. All these kind of things happened with the same group and at the same time. I mean, the Oklahoma City bombing by the way, they tried to get an antiterrorism bill through, domestically, hm, before that happened, it was turned down. That weekend it was turned down, voted down, they had, the building went up at Oklahoma City. You know, you can't make this stuff up. You honestly can't make it up. They always get what they want, don't they, eh. So it was passed through then quickly and unanimously. That's how things really do work.

We live through a big, almost like a pantomime. A pantomime in the old sense of theater, was a real fantasy show, where you knew the characters were not who they said they were or pretended to be, but it was a good show, you see, a fantasy. And that's what we're living through is an amazing fantasy because we must participate in the lies we're told to believe, to get anything done and to accept it. It takes an awful lot of fantasy to accept that, you know, what's going on. Hm? Massively so.

When other folk who are professionals, and this right now with the whole idea of this, the supposed pandemic, with thousands of doctors across the world now getting together, who are working in the hospitals, not the people who are given titles after they qualify as GPs and work as bureaucrats but folk in the hospitals coming out and saying, come on here, we can't go along with this, and they're getting censored and threatened... something is awfully wrong. And we really have to participate in the fantasy to go along with it, don't we?
We really do. Facts don't matter. I've said that for such a long time now, you know, long before Covid came along, facts don't matter. And here we are with it all.

So again, you've got these from people like Boris Johnson, and you've got the ones for Scotland too that pretend that they're, again, willfully ignorant... I just, I don't know, you know. Well if you lock the country down, we're destitute as it is, you know. Well yeah, mmmmmmmm... [Alan laughing.] Ah, it's quite something. First time in history as I say all the healthy folk get locked down. Then everybody gets locked down, eh, EVERYBODY gets locked down. They're even telling you now, even Fauci mentioned it, that even with the shots you're still going to get locked down and wear facemasks, and Gates mentioned it, you'll need more shots, different kinds, down the road, you know.

I love how these tyrants speak. Don't you? With such conviction and authority. And self-assuredness too. No wonder since they own so much of the system, or appear to, you know. But again, I think they're worried too, I think they're fronts as well for much, much bigger ones behind them. Most famous people you know that's presented you are, again, made to be stars by an existing system. The same system they gave you Adam Weishaupt. D'you really think that Adam Weishaupt just sat there bored stiff in the library, eh, in Ingolstadt University, just sat there bored stiff. I've read all these books, he says, and I'm bored stiff with it all, you know. I've read about, you know, I've read ancient history to the present and the march of armies and the march of civilization, and I'm bored with it all, eh. I think I could invent a better system where I could dominate the schmucks and all the fools that are earning cash, and I could divert a lot of cash into my coffers, and get them to do it willingly, and to serve me through different philanthropic organizations and brotherhoods and things like that, you know, we'll use the Masons like a starting point.

He just sat there and got bored stiff and came up with it all by himself, eh? And he says, what'll I pick for my symbols? And he picks the same symbols that Quigley talked about, there's the pyramid and the all-seeing eye. That already existed and had been resuscitated before he came along, mind you, by Freemasonry and the Rosicrucians. And he says, yeah, I could really take over all the Masonic lodges, and we'll get fancy names, like cover names for ourselves, like Spartacus and things like that, you know. We'll tell them, now here's the mysteries, and here's the mysteries of Christianity, as an example, because that was the main target you see. And he says, we'll give them the real meanings of what Jesus is supposed to be and the real meanings behind his death and crucifixion, and we'll drag it out into different degrees so that each time they get up to a higher degree we'll give them a new meaning for the one we gave/lied about before, you see. So yeah, that's for the lower degrees. But you told us that was the last one. No, no, no, he says, here's a higher meaning to it now, you see. And they go on and on and on forever. That's where they end up basically, at the top of the staircase that doesn't go anywhere else. Unless you want to jump over the edge of it.

But do you really think he just sat and dreamed all that up himself? and had that incredible financial ability to get himself into all the different lodges? and the characters he ran into at all the lodges, very quickly too, you know, across a good part of Europe and even in America as well, eventually? It's just coincidence of course that he put down as 1776 was the founding, just the same as the founding of America. It's just coincidence, that, isn't it? And it's a coincidence too that their seal, the great seal in America had an opposing seal on it too with the pyramid and all that. Ftt, that's ALL coincidence, eh? I think in the Bible they should change it all, you know, and I'm surprised that Weishaupt didn't think of this. Just change it all, start with Genesis, in the beginning there was a coincidence, and everything else after that was a bigger coincidence. Eh, just start that way, because that's what we're getting told to believe, everything is just a coincidence. Hm?

But there you are, that's what happens if you get hold up in a big library you know and you get bored stiff, you just start getting ideas of conquest and taking over the world, and creating subversive systems that would eventually use everybody and you'd laugh at them and scoff at the folk, and he said that too in his own writings, eh. Now, there's a psychopath being arrogant, because they love to boast how they’ve fooled people. He mentioned that high members of the church had joint it believing that he was giving them the real meanings of Christianity, and they were thanking him for it, and he laughed and says, the fools, he says, the fools. Yep, that's what happened too, see, and that's what they said about Paul in the Bible, the New Testament. Festus [?] said that too him, he says, Paul, Paul, too much learning hath made thee mad. Maybe that's what happens when you read too much, eh, you end up like Weishaupt. But that's what we're told, eh. It's a much bigger operation than little Weishaupt. Much, much bigger.

That's how everything is portrayed to us today as well. It's the same with other groups that are demonstrating across the US. Highly coordinated, thousands, millions of bucks getting put to them. We know all the sources. Some folks have got banned already from [Alan chuckles.] for publishing all the different companies that give money to them all. That tells you a lot in itself, doesn't it? It tells you all of these companies have amazing power, and also that your governments, and really, you have no free press, you have no free social systems to converse in anymore. It's all owned by the big corporations that are funding things that are actually being labeled subversive, maybe even terroristic. Or you can take your own opinion and say, well they're just protesting, if you want to believe that.

But, you're not allowed to criticize any of the system now of what you see, any reality at all is forbidden. It's forbidden to mention any facts and truth and any self perception. Even though your perceptions are shared by millions more, [Alan chuckles.] it doesn't matter. It's being forbidden, you see. Das ist Verboten! And you'd better get used to the idea. It's here with its social electronic systems of censorship, isn't it. Total monopolies. That's why again anti-trust was always important before.

It all started with the Rockefellers, again, this family that was one of many families actually that took over all the resources of America very quickly. And belonged to an organization which eventually he chaired himself, old man Rockefeller and then David Rockefeller, they cheered the organizations which they fronted for, as they took over the resources of the Americas. And, banned all competition by forbidding them to transport their oil and so on, on the train tracks that they eventually, that Rockefeller eventually took over. Amazing. It's the same thing as the Internet. Oh, you can't use our Internet because you said nasty things, and we don't agree with what you say, and you're not allowed to say those things, and so you can't be on them. That's where you are, folks, with the same system. Monopoly. Monopoly. Monopoly.

But you've got to say, well who made, who created Zuckerberg? Do you really believe that the Hollywood version, the silly little movie they put out, oh, he was just a genius? Do you really believe that? No, no. He was launched into stardom, and picked for it very young, as a front man. I've mentioned before about many of the organizations that eventually had to admit to, that the CIA created and owned, and they are big real corporations that belong to, they're part of the military-industrial complex now. So these characters are made to be, you know, who they are.

Bill Gates is the same. He's a businessman. But something made sure that the path for Bill Gates was completely smooth and the doors were opened, and opposing or any other companies that were going to compete were shut out. That's some big powerful organization that could do that. Nevermind all the lawsuits that came in from IBM and different companies as they try to say that he was appropriating their programs or whatever it happened be, or their systems, as corporations do. But that's what you're living in. They create all these fronts. Very real things but fronts nonetheless. And front people, they elevate them into stardom. So a businessman that doesn't have even a first aid certificate ends up running the world vaccine companies and telling us how to live and not live and locking us down for our health… and we're supposed to obey that, you know.

It's astonishing the religious aspect of it, religiosity of it all. It's important too to realize how they create these characters and how the big machinery that creates the stardom, to get you to accept them as somehow superior and they're like geniuses over you. As I say, they take a businessman, right, he wasn't an inventor, he was a businessman. We know who his dad was too, but he's definitely a businessman. His dad was into eugenics as well and Planned Parenthood and all these kind of things and depopulation, etc., etc. That's where the lack of trust comes in too. But as I say, he reinvents himself once he's supposedly fronting, with billions of dollars of income every year, right, that you think is all his. As I say, he doesn't have a first-aid certificate, but he's launched to be somehow a supreme authority on vaccinations, without even having studied virology or understanding it at all. And he sits there dictating, and again he gets access across the board. That tells you that this massive agency/organization, this cult if you like, that runs the world, that's huge, eh, with every Corporation on board with heads, all the media on board, all pushing the same guy... is like a Messiah, a religious aspect to it. A man with… Because what else is there? He has no qualifications of any kind in this field. But he's pushed, and the whole world is supposed to obey him like he's a God. That's a religious aspect, folks. I mean, come on here.

That's a... hhhch, we’re run by something much bigger, much, much bigger than politicians or spokespeople or spokespeople experts [Alan chuckles.] as they like to call it now. Much, much bigger than all of that, whatever runs the system, eh, and creates these characters that we're supposed to just obey religiously, that have no qualifications in the fields that they're making us ceased our way of living completely into a new system because of, and he doesn't even know, I bet he couldn't even explain what a virus is.

And none of them even attempt to try and tell you. Have you noticed that too? You see, if they start telling the general public what a virus is, how they detect what a virus is, however virus operates inside the human body, and actually educate you on what they claim it is, they don't even attempt to do that. Have you noticed that? They just dictate to you what you'd better do and obey them. And they want you to try out something that's novel, [Alan chuckles.] a new type of vaccine, never been tried out. Short-term testing is a joke, you know, it's a dangerous joke, folks, because a lot of these things have long-term effects. And permanent effects. And you won't know after a few weeks of testing anything. But based on what? Based on Bill Gates? Have faith in Bill Gates? A man who can't describe what it is, a virus, or Fauci who doesn't attempt to.

D'you understand what's going on? What I'm saying is, if you obey all this, then you're now into insanity. Because they haven't attempted to try to tell you what's behind it all. They haven't tried to attempt to even tell you why you won't get herd, even though you're getting herd immunity, like any other virus, why you've got to ignore the fact of herd immunity. In fact, you see, locking you down is to stop the spread of getting herd immunity by acquiring it, even though at a superficial level you won't even know you've had it, like lots of other viruses, you see, but your body kicks in with an immune response to it. Herd immunity. WHY won't your own herd immunity work? Hm? Well, because we've got a vaccine sitting waiting in the wings for years, and it's never been tried, and we want to make sure you all take it. Well, I... Yy... You can't, I can't trust this. That's not good enough. To put your life in their hands with a novel kind of, a new type of vaccine. Hm? Ho, oh, hhhch.

Anyway, this is tyranny. This is, it's got all the definitions of tyranny right there, folks. They don't even attempt to explain realistically and honestly why you should take all these, take, be waiting for a, and why should we be locked down completely at home and not acquire herd immunity the usual way? They don't even bother with that. That's tyranny. That really is. What else can you call it? Well, there you go, back to Adam Weishaupt and you know, his library and his too much reading.

Remember too, again, go into cuttingthroughthematrix.com. I'm sure you get fed up with me saying that too. But lots of you will forget that, and then one week I will be, you won't be able to get me the usual way. Then you be scratching your head saying I wish I'd copied all that down when he said it. Cuttingthroughthematrix.com. List my websites. Save them for the future use, these are my official sites. And send a few bucks my way. It takes money. And believe you me, we're all going through this. And the one thing I can honestly assure you of is no one's backing me. I might touch on that after I just mentioned this, but no one's backing me. I don't have any ulterior motive here. I have no company or organization behind me. I've given talks before of how they supply you with leaders. I mean, do you really expect them not to? So send a few bucks, cuttingthroughthematrix.com. Cash is fine. Checks are fine. PayPal is fine. Money Gram is fine. If you can think of anything else too let me know. But yeah, these are the ways to do it. Hopefully I can keep my sites all up and going and get through this with you because we're going through the biggest trial you've ever had, you'll ever have in your lives. This is the biggest trial.

All or nothing. A world famine, or no world famine. It's all hinging on now. It really is. It really is. And they know it at the top. They plan to bring it out with... Hhhch, hhhch, d'you think they sat down, d'you really think they're all so stupid really they say, oh let's close down the entire planet to save them, and what will happen if there is no one making anything and there's no money circulating eventually, and all the food stops? Do you really think they haven't...? Do you really...? What do you think they...? Honestly, if you're going to believe them here, you're going to deserve what you get. I hate to say that.

Because they know what they're doing. They know what they're bringing down. Fauci and the rest of them gave the clues at the very beginning, way back in February and March, that life will never be the same again. We heard the same statement right after 9/11, the dust hadn't cleared, life will never be the same again. These are occult phrases that are let out. Like, now is the time is another phrase that they use. Bill Cooper used that. He mentioned that and he explained what it meant. It was used for revolutions before by an elite. He called his program The Hour of the Time. These are occult phrases, you see, that are used by THE organization that runs the planet. And life will never go back to what you thought was normal. Never go back. What part of never go back don't you get? Now, if it was all canceled right off the bat now and you went back to work again, yeah, you could get back. But no, they're telling you they're not going to let that happen, ever, no matter what... come hell or high water are they going to stop this agenda.

So again, help each other out. Get set up and ready for it because you're going to have to have small groups that will help each other out during the hard times. And some folk can get around certain things and get things that are necessary and blah blah blah blah blah during hard times, which are definitely planned, folks. Definitely planned. And now they've got the militaries coming in to help you? Hm? The military's an Army, I don't c... The United Nations always prattles on about its armies across the... When you see troops, soldiers are meant to go into battle, folks, that's their purpose. Public relations exercises of them handing out food is just that, it's a temporary exercise in publicity. The real purpose is to force, they're called a military force for a reason. If you're bringing them out to work amongst, along with the contact tracers, WHOAH-HO-HO. Oh-ho, WHOAH, folks, eh?

It's bad enough they've already privatized, again, dished out the cash to these private companies, these mercenary companies across the world, these big, huge corporations, eh. That manage prisons. They manage all kinds of things across, including teach your teachers at colleges and things. They manage so many, the multi holding, investment holding companies, investment companies, that's what they are really, eh. They take the place of what governments are supposed to be doing, you know. And they charge a pretty penny for it too, a lot more than even if the government was doing it themselves. They always say, well, you can't criticize them, the government will tell you that, or you can but there's nothing you can do about it, it's not us that are doing it, they're private. Well, your governments farm them out to the private companies with that intention, there's nothing else you can do about it. [Alan chuckles.] If it's still in the hands of government you can vote folk in and out, then they hate that, you know. Well, it's not my problem really, you know, it's a private contract, you can try and sue them, but you probably won't win.

And folks still prattle on about democracy. Even though the Club of Rome, the BIG, the big think tank for sustainability that comes out with the big ideas in depopulation and population reduction, even though they say that democracy is just too obsolete, they can't get their big objectives done trying to satisfy the people. So there are front groups that are astonishing in the world. But they've always done it as I've said before, always done it. No doubt they'll continue to do it. Why not. They've always infiltrated all kinds of groups to find out what they are up to. They put their own plants in there. Always. Always. Always.

We even had it in recent history where some folk in Britain came out and their job in MI5 was to infiltrate left-wing groups, or not necessarily the left wing, but any kind of labor type, or group, working group in Britain itself. They'd infiltrate. They'd come in there and they'd dress like they were testers. They'd learn the lingo in advance, because everybody's taped of course, all conversations. You learn the language just like a religion. They come in and start parroting it off, and you're accept very quickly into it. Then you do volunteer work for them. They come in and say, well you know, that's a lot of work for you, don't, you all go home tonight, I'll fix all this up for you. Well yeah, that's a lot of… No, no. And before you know it, within a year they get elected to head the organization. This is how the Communists worked. The same thing. All countries use the same systems, that work, you see, by government, espionage and infiltration and all the rest of it.

Anyway, they come in and they find out how it's all done. They had a case in Britain where two MI5 came out, a man and woman that worked together. The guy put in some good information and then he went back into it. His job initially was to infiltrate these groups on behalf of government. That also came out about even Tony Blair, that he was put into the left-wing groups by MI5 initially; that was the kind of scuttlebutt that came out of people in-the-know at the time. Blair himself is a globalist. He works for the globalists of course, naturally. But so does the British government, the real British government work for the globalists. The folk never figure it out. Just like the folk in America can never figure out the CIA, you know. So it's rather sad.

Yeah, they supply you with your leaders. I can tell you something, I know, I really do know how much out of the week I work just gathering information perhaps for a talk, and I was doing five days a week just on information explaining it to the people on the radio shows. It took from morning till night every day, every day, every day just scouring the planet for the information, the relevant information to put together, to connect the dots for people. That's what I did. To show them what was happening as it was developing. And it was, there was no guesswork about it once you had all the pieces of the puzzle in front of you. That's what I do. And it's not a conspiracy theory. It's from their own sources. So I know how long it takes.

Suddenly out of the blue you'd have folk coming out there, that have got written blogs out, you know. You could say, well okay, they're taking stuff, like guys, me and others do, and putting it out themselves perhaps with their own spin on it. Then you see them too just churning out either books along with it one after the other. Now remember, these folk are presented as individuals. So, they're doing daily blogs, with stacks of articles. They're doing books out. They just, most folk have to admit now are, most folk today have ghostwritten books, they don't do it themselves. It's been like that for a long, long time. But regardless, anyway, they have their name stamped on it. So they're supposed to have, be doing books. AND they're putting videos out. Now, you're looking at teams of people to do all this work for one person. Do you ever figure that one out yourselves? [Alan chuckles.] But I know how long it takes to do even what I do. And there's no way you can turn the books out and do very well put together videos, all on your little lonesome. It's impossible. It's IMpossible. Even if you didn't need sleep, it's still impossible, one person to do it. So you're supplied with the heroes. And the zeros.

Interesting, just recently I heard someone who was heavily involved in the money system, a woman who puts a lot of good information out there in the past. I haven't really followed her, but she had, again, government positions at one point, or appointed positions I should say, over finance, etc. She actually mentioned on some talk last week there that, she says that the great reset is necessary, she's all for it. After getting a big, big following to fight all these things for years and getting airtime on different alternate media or whatever, but she's all for it, you know, we really need the great reset and a new way of living, and she says, we're going to start doing everything locally. Well, that was the mantra from the globalists for years. Not just think globally, act locally. But it's all right back to the earth, little areas, and there's money to be made in getting back to basics like growing food and stuff. What... are we going to start to reinvent little plot farming again? You know how that would... the work involved in just that alone? Never mind the fact, time is awfully short to start learning all that. [Alan chuckles.]

Yeah, you're given your leaders, folks. And they must be awfully believable initially at least to take root and to be believed. I've seen some, and when they're launched initially they'll take everybody's factual, all the investigators' factual articles and they'll push them and repeat them and parrot them too. Once they've got the following, you'll see them bending off, hhhch, into a different tangent, or going into discrediting by adding the ridiculous to it. Then other folk get labeled as ridiculous, you know. You always find, regardless, that they're well-financed. Awfully well-financed. You know how much it would cost to get the book publishing companies to push and publish your books and have them distributed across the planet?

So getting back to what I'm saying, I'm on my Jack Todd, and that's what... there's no one backing me. And yet I still, I'm burning up my life here putting out what I put out because it's imperative that at least folk have a chance to understand what's really happening. You've got to realize, yeah, you can say there's no doubt about it, there's a massive spiritual battle going on here. Massive. More than you know, [Alan chuckles.] that manifests itself in the physical realm too, and it's utterly, utterly ruthless, folks. But by the same token, you can't just go off into Lala land and say I'll just dwell on the, in the spiritual realm. Because you can't just disregard the physical, you understand, you've got a duty in the physical too because you are placed here. You are here.

It's important that you realize that you can't just let evil prosper. And this evil is on the greatest rampage that it's had for thousands of years right now. Thousands of years. It sees the laurels it's going to grab to put on itself at the end, after the conquest of the whole planet and everybody and everything on the planet. Within its grasp. And then the reduction over a period of time, there could be a generation or two of reducing the population right down, down, down, down, down as they elevate themselves up and up and up and up in the higher realms of longevity and through science and so on. They want to become Gods, there's no doubt about it. Some of them have been rather obvious about that part of it in their public talks.

So it's up to you folks to live through evil. Your politicians and your bureaucracies are all, as always, have decided what side they're on, they're not there to serve the public. They have masters above the public obviously that put them there. But for the horror that's coming down and the horror that's going to be, it's already inflicted on the public, and what's to come is a lot worse. So you have to start either being active or at the very least prepared to help each other out because no one else is going to help you during these terrible times... of total surveillance individually, total. Mandated by the corporations, hm, so that you must use their devices, you must have their apps, etc., you must, must, must, must, must. Really?

That was always the definition of fascism, government working completely in lockstep with corporations and private business and capitalism. That is fascism. Real fascism, not the fake one you always here about where they distort it. Real fascism is government working with, and sometimes on behalf of the big corporations. But definitely governments are working on organizations much bigger than just the corporations themselves.

Now, here's an article here and it says…

Big Brother is watching your social distancing: Fury as traffic flow cameras are secretly switched to monitor millions of pedestrians in government-backed Covid project

dailymail.co.uk / 23 Oct 2020

(Alan: This is from the Daily Mail, eh.)

Millions of people are being monitored for social distancing

as part of a government-backed project

(A: Do you really believe it’s just for a government-backed, for Covid? Do you really believe this? If they can make you dance, you know, on one leg five times a day and tell you it will fight Covid, and you go along with that, you’re doomed. Completely, you're getting trained into absolute absurdity, that's where they're going with this.)

(A: Remember too, I went through the history of this 6 feet apart, the 2-meter idea and where it came from. I mentioned it was a schoolgirl that supposedly came out with a program, developed by her daddy who worked with a military-industrial complex corporation. [Alan chuckles.] I put it out there. This to make her popular, to get her into Harvard or something eventually, you know, that's what daddies at that level do, you see. Nothing to do with anything in reality. It was put through a computer program what distance you would have to be apart, as though a virus stops by magic at a certain distance and just drops to the floor! [Alan chuckles.] Absurdity.)

(A: So anyway nevermind the damage, it's meant to disrupt all social coherence as a society and keep you all apart from each other. So these cameras now that were meant, supposedly meant, supposedly... D'you really believe they were just meant, they could just suddenly switch them to watch all of you? No, no. This was on the books years ago when they put the darn things in in the first place, hm.)

secretly rolled out across Britain, the Mail can reveal.

In what campaigners call a sign the country is heading to a 'truly dark place', at least 363 cameras originally installed to monitor traffic flow have been switched – without public consultation – to snoop on pedestrians.

(A: WHEN do the public EVER, when are they ever consulted on anything that matters? It doesn’t happen.)

An investigation revealed that Vivacity Labs, the company behind the Artificial Intelligence camera technology, was awarded almost £50,000 by the Department for Business, Energy and Industrial Strategy [BEIS] in June to 'improve the collection of social distancing data'.

The brief from public body Innovate UK – funded by BEIS – said pedestrians in 16 cities would be monitored for how close they are to one another in public places to 'help the Government plan the removal of lockdown measures'.

(A: Can you believe this trash! Uuugh, yoi-yoi-yoi. Now, this will get unrolled in all the different cameras they've got. Mind you, they put the cameras up everywhere too. They've got mics in them as well, and then they admitted years ago they were listening to all the conversations of folk. Hhhhh. And folk say they're fr… Oh, we're in the best, freest democracy in the world.)

An image from the Vivacity Labs website. The company says it is for marketing purposes only and does not reflect how the technology is actually used

(A: [Alan laughing.] Oh, that's okay then. Yep.)

Vivacity refused to reveal where its cameras were, citing 'commercial confidentiality'. But the Mail can reveal they are monitoring social distancing across large swathes of the country, including Liverpool, Oxfordshire, Cambridgeshire, Warwickshire, Manchester, Bournemouth, Peterborough and Westminster.

Vivacity – whose Cambridge-educated founders (A: ...founders, funders, they're always the same things.) created the social distancing tech to 'help inform [government] policy decisions' – also has a 'confidential' contract to provide the Department for Transport with monthly updates on adherence to social distancing from its cameras across Britain. In addition, the Behavioural Insights Team quango,

(A: …that's the BITs I keep talking about too. Hhhmph, who should also be put on trial, the whole lot of them. The ones that said they should really make the people more anxious… They told the media to hype up their stories, you know, exaggerate them a bit to make the folk more anxious so's they'll comply. That's the BIT insights team quango, hm.)

part-funded by the Cabinet Office (A: …the government.), cited Vivacity data in a report about reducing the two-metre rule to one metre.

(A: There you go. N-n-n.)

Despite the widespread and potentially life-changing use of the data, (A: WHAT! …life-changing use of the data, hm…) pedestrians have remained unaware their movements are being tracked because neither the Government nor many of the councils who approved the installation of cameras consulted the public on their change of use.

In an interview last month, Mark Nicholson, one of Vivacity's founders, said the technology could soon be expanded to carry out temperature checks 'depending on how far down the 'Big Brother' route we want to go'.

[Alan laughing.] Ah, there ya go. It goes on and on this article too. It's quite a long, this one's quite a long article actually too. But regardless, this is what you're supposed to put up with, is total fascism, eh. Big bucks. Your tax money buys your chains. And the folk who produce them and get all the contracts live high on the hog. We're the hogs, you see. They certainly do, don't they, eh?

Another one too is Ireland, eh. I've got a couple of articles on Ireland there by our old friend Helena Handbasket and how …

Ireland's Dark Winter of Discontent Has Started

theirishsentinel.com / Posted by Helena Handbasket / Oct 23, 2020

War takes many forms. It's not always obvious who the enemy is or even the tactics being used against you which are defined as a weapon.

In Ireland today, the latest attack began in March and is part of a long term war over many generations with the current wave of assault now accelerating rapidly.

The new harsh lockdown, with all its lunacy exposed, is still being accepted by the majority of Irish people as somehow necessary, despite the fact that they were told months ago that a similar '3 week' lockdown would help 'flatten the curve' and allow the country to go back to some form of 'normality', albeit a new normality which bore no resemblance to the past in any shape or form, and yet the Irish people accepted such action as crucial to the health of the nation, having been threatened with overwhelmed hospitals and doctor's surgeries, people dropping dead in the street and a complete collapse of society, mass unemployment and wholesale decimation of the state.

How well they were fooled as they complied to such diktats, while hospitals remained empty, as did family businesses, from clearly idiotic puppet politicians who ignored their own rules, repeatedly flaunting their untouchable status to the plebs, who would soon be dying in droves in care homes where the elderly were abandoned to die without hope, without care and without family members to console them; not to mention skyrocketing suicide rates across the demographic spectrum as jobs were lost, historical family businesses destroyed and an unprecedented increase in domestic violence, drug and alcohol dependence and abuse of both.

(A: Yep. It’s a good enough article too. It’s… the dark winter of Irish history it says…)

What now as Ireland goes into what will undoubtedly become the darkest winter in Irish history? It will put the tyranny of British rule in the shade as the country implodes on itself voluntarily with a few dissenting voices still trying to warn the compliant masses as to what’s clearly happening right before their eyes.

(A: It's true enough, I knew the winters, it's always a favorite time. I used to give the same talk in the winters about the folk who would die off in the cold in their homes in Britain. I gave the talks on it, how they used the winter, you see. That's why they don't generally go off to war in the wintertime to a cold country. It says…)

There’s a good reason historically why armies didn’t attack in winter. It was cold and wet and armies tended to become bogged down and demoralized very quickly, diseases and viruses were an issue as were the simple logistics of arming, fueling and feeding large bodies of soldiers.

The current attack in the war being perpetrated on the Irish people by their own government is using the winter season to ensure that its enemy, the people of Ireland, will be debilitated in much the same way under lockdown through the winter to such an extent that it may be impossible for them to fight back in any meaningful way.

But that can’t be allowed to happen.

And he goes on to mention why it cannot be allowed to happen. Which is all true. It's much, much truer than you mi... Scotland is the same too. Scotland is put down as a three or four tier lockdown they call it now. N-n-n. I'll put this article up. It's true, and it's what I've been talking about as well, and…

Ireland to impose 5km travel limit in strict new Covid lockdown

theguardian.com / 19 Oct 2020

(A: They always do that, they always restrict travel. So, 5-kilometer travel limit... So you personally can't get within 2 meters of somebody, and you can't go 5 kilometers from your home. eh. It says…)

Move to level 5 measures (A: Hhhch. These are the color-coding thing, oh, level 5, ARR-ARR-ARR. Yep. Star Trek, eh?) to include closing most shops and banning home visits

(A: So most of the economy is to be shut down, eh.)

Non-essential shops will close and people are asked to stay at home, with a 5km (3 mile) travel limit for exercise, (A: You're only allowed out, like a prisoner, for a little bit of exercise, if you can prove you're out for exercise.) to curb surging infection rates…

(A: It doesn't mean that they're actually illness rates. If you get any, ANY particles of this virus in this terrible, you're guaranteed to show positive for most of them. Because the test is disgustingly awful. It's not meant to be used as a diagnostic tool. That's why they picked it. So they're not closing it down because folk are getting sick. They're closing it down to stop the infection rate. Now, I've got an answer to all of it. It could be stopped, it could be cured tomorrow, the whole problem, stop testing the people. Stop testing them, and that's it. They have nothing else to use as ammunition, just stop testing the people. But again, the whole system has nothing to do with Covid. This is your whole reset, your whole new way of austere living cradle-to-grave. And you unfortunately are the first generation to get hit with the massive disaster of it all and the effects of it all. And the guff, the guff that they're just churning on the public here, you know, it says...)

In a sombre address to announce the restrictions the taoiseach, Micheál Martin, (A: He's one of the politicians.) said he understood there would be disappointment, loneliness and despair but that there was hope.

(A: D'you hear… what… what… Uuuhhhhhhhhhhhhhh. Give the guy a psychopath award, eh. Let's destroy everything but tell you, don't be lonely and despair, don't go into despair, there's always hope, you know…)

"If we pull together over the next six weeks we will be able

(A: How many, how often have you heard that since this started? Then it will be another month, two months. Oh, then it will be, they've already told you it's going to go into next year and maybe into the following year. [Alan chuckles.] This carrot, little bit of carrot, for the poor donkey here, eh? Another few weeks. Oh, another few weeks, eh? Here's again too…)

Martin said the government had rejected a strategy of zero Covid as unrealistic (A: Well, of course it is. There’s always particles out there to be tested. There always will be. Even before Covid came along. The common cold will give the…)

Periodic lockdowns may become the norm, he suggested.

(A: And he says…)

...a strategy of herd immunity is unethical.

It's unethical to get/have herd immunity. Although that's what's happened down through history up to the present, it's unethical, you see. You've got to be lockdown instead. And don't get herd immunity for goodness’ sake, we can't sell all these vaccines if you get herd immunity. Anyway, facts have nothing to do with it. I won't even go into all the statistics, it's pointless, as you know, eh. And all the folk that, look at the many disclosures that have come out in the last few months of how they were working out how/who died OF Covid versus those that died WITH Covid, you know. The Covid particles, right, the coronavirus particles are common. There's lots of coronaviruses out there. The particles are dead virus parts, that's what we're told, that's the theory behind it, not actual viruses themselves, but particles that could belong, that COULD belong to viruses. N-n-n. So I'll put up these articles for those who want to know.

Army called in to help make sure businesses following covid rules liverpoolecho.co.uk / 23 Oct 2020

(A: This is from Liverpool Echo, there used to be a newspaper called the Liverpool Echo, I'm not sure if it still is today. It says…)

Military personnel are being deployed to help (A: …to help, you see.) Merseyside councils ensure businesses are complying with lockdown regulation.

The troops, who will not be in uniform,

(A: HUH? Can you hear, you see, not in uniform troops but they’re on active duty, eh?)

will provide extra capacity for councils’ environmental health teams as they monitor compliance with Covid-19 rules.

(A: Whoah, whoah, whoah! Whoah, whoah, whoah, eh? Well why not just call them, what, Stasi, or… Why not, eh? Not in uniform. Eh, why not? NKVD perhaps? Eh? [Alan chuckles.])

Deputy Chief Constable Serena Kennedy, who chairs the Merseyside Resilience Forum (MRF), said: “Through the MRF, a request was made under the Military Aid for Civil Authorities (MACA) process to support the additional work that environmental health officers across the region are being asked to undertake around Covid-19 understanding and compliance. (A: …compliance, hm.)

“This request has been agreed and means that there will be a small number of fully-qualified personnel working across the six authorities for a period of eight weeks.

(A: Well, expand that into permanent I would say.)

“They will not be in uniform; they are being deployed to provide additional capacity on a time-limited basis for each of our environmental health teams, carrying out the same duties as our permanent EH personnel.”

(A: These are squads that are going to hunt folk down. That’s what they are. So these teams are being responsible for…)

Environmental health teams have been responsible for inspecting businesses to ensure they are complying with regulations throughout the crisis and assisting with contact tracing to identify clusters of infections.

The government has previously said soldiers could be brought in to provide logistics support or perform back office functions for the police so officers can be deployed onto the streets.

And you thought that the antiterrorism thing was bad when you saw troops in London in different places, eh. Well, here they are now going to come into your homes. Ahhhh, democracy is just, I can smell it, it's a wonderful, nice fragrance, isn't it? Better remember and vote too the next time they bring out a Boris type character who waves his hands a lot, and makes you want to like him. It's all stage-managed, you know, but you're supposed to like them, you see. So there's the Army that's, now if they've got it in Liverpool, they'll have it elsewhere too.

Nicholas Sturgeon. Achhhhhhh. Achhhhhhhh. Poor ole Scotland, eh.

Sturgeon - 5 Tier Covid Plan for Scotland

mirror.co.uk / 23 Oct 2020

(A: 5 Tier. You see, they all try to outdo each other. What are you? Oh, we're in level 3. Aach, we've got level 5 here. There you go.)

Nicola Sturgeon has unveiled a new five-tier lockdown system for battling (A: Oh, it's a BATTLE.) coronavirus in Scotland.

The First Minister said the levels, rising from 0 - 4, would avoid a "one-size fits all approach" for areas of the country with lower infection rates.

Level 4, the highest level, is closer to a full lockdown, Ms Sturgeon said, with non-essential shops (A: Again, there's this nonessential thing.) forced to close and bans on indoor meet-ups. (A: You can't meet up indoors. Hhhhhhh. My goodness. Coming over for coffee? Oh, you can't, it's not allowed. Oh no.)

(A: Now listen to this…)

Whereas Level 1 and Level 2 are the closest to normal the country can be without effective treatment or a vaccine.

(A: You see, they don't even bring in herd immunity developing itself, like it's been doing in Sweden and elsewhere, hm. Otherwise people would get tested, you've got it, so cases would mean you would be sick, and permanently sick until a vaccine. Because if you're thinking no one is getting better… No. These folk after two weeks generally it's gone, tcht-tcht-tcht, gone-gone-gone, you've got immunity to it. M-hm. You see, this is the stuff they prattled out back in February. The agenda has never changed. You can't get back to any kind of...)

… the closest to normal the country can be without effective treatment or a vaccine.

(A: Normal ain’t gonna do it. And getting your own herd immunity is just not on, eh, it's just too cheap, there's no profit off it.)

Schools should remain open under all tiers - which run from Level 0 to Level 4 - even under the toughest restrictions.

But she said restrictions would not be as strict as the lockdown in the first wave of the pandemic.

(A: Who is she kidding, eh?)

"We are not back at square one," Ms Sturgeon said.

The First Minister told a briefing in Edinburgh there were grounds for "cautious optimism"

(A: Again, why do we even repeat the trash that comes out of their mouths? Really? Cautious optimism…)

as cases were rising

(A: …only because you’re testing. Stop testing.)

but the infection rate appeared to be slowing.

(A: That means that most folk have already had it, you see, and got immune to it if that’s the case. Otherwise they would all be sick and stay sick, you see.

The new set of restrictions had been expected after Boris Johnson announced the three-tier alert system for England.

When do these changes come in?

If approved at Holyrood next week, (A: I’m glad the virus will hold off until next week.) the new measures will come into force in Scotland on November 2.

Alert levels will be reviewed on a weekly basis, Ms Sturgeon said.

(A: So here you go…)

Level 0

Ms Sturgeon said Level 0 will see most businesses open and eight people from three households able to meet indoors. (A: Are you understanding it now?)

Some 15 people from five households can gather outdoors.

(A: [Alan laughing.] This is [Alan laughing.] such a farce.)

Schools and most businesses will remain open, although pubs and restaurants may have a curfew. (A: Right.)

Travel to areas in Levels 3-4 - and areas of the UK under the highest restrictions - will be banned.

Life events such as weddings and funerals will be allowed with a maximum of 50 people in attendance

(A: You see, this virus isn’t so bad. I mean, it’s got a heart, isn’t it? If it… weddings and funerals, you can get 50 people there, so that’s okay, you see, it’s got a, obviously it’s got a heart.)

Level 0 is the closest to normal the country can get without effective treatment or a vaccine, Ms Sturgeon said. (A: …again… hhhch, to make sure you get the point of what's coming.)

Level 1

There would be slightly more restrictions, with indoor meet-ups reduced to six people (A: Right.) from two households.

Other measures would be close to those seen across the country in September.

Small indoor seated events will be allowed although outdoor standing events will be banned.

(A: Supposing you stood on one leg, on a Thursday only, in the afternoon. Is that okay? This is ridiculous.)

Life events will be reduced to a maximum of 20 people.

People should work from home unless they cannot do their jobs remotely (A: WHAT choice do they have?)

Level 2

Different households will not be banned from indoor meet-ups.

Stadium gatherings and events will be banned and venues such as soft play centres, funfairs and theatres will be shut.

Cinemas and amusement arcades will remain open.

(A: So they know, you see again, they know that Hollywood must get its movies out in the cinema, right, otherwise we'll all go to, again, hell and a handbasket, eh.)

Pubs will be allowed to open indoors as long as they serve a main meal.

Schools will remain open with enhanced protections.

Level 3

People should avoid public transport and there should be no travel outside of the area, unless essential.

This is a total lockdown, folks. This is total austerity. Total lockdown. They're giving grants to small businesses, eh. But I don't see what it says about the individual people. Hm. N-n-n. I tell ya. It was meant to destroy everything obviously.

Another doctor too, Stephen Malthouse in Canada, British Columbia, again who has put a letter out as well to the… It doesn't make any difference.

Canadian doctor calls out govt, blasts lockdowns: 'Induce fear, create compliance'

lifesitenews.com / 23 Oct 2020

BRITISH COLUMBIA, October 23, 2020 (LifeSiteNews) – A Canadian physician practicing family medicine for over 40 years has written to his province's top doctor to blast the latter's COVID-19 lockdown policy.

(A: It's rather obvious they're all, again, stalwart, they're SWORN to this agenda. I mean sworn, literally sworn with OATHS to this agenda. There's no doubt about it. When people working with patients, not sitting in offices, but working with patients, by the THOUSANDS are coming out with the same kind of stuff, hm, and it's getting ignored. Anyway…)

The mainstream media has created a religion out of public health, (A: That's what he says, this doctor.) one based on superstition, not science, with the power to rule over an obedient public. The news channels have raised you to almost saint-like status[.] … (A: …talking about the medical profession.) Yet, your public directives do not make sense, contradict the research, and are causing people a great deal of harm. As a fellow doctor, I appeal to you to re-examine your policies and change direction before Public Health causes irreparable damage to our province's health and economic well-being."

In his letter, Malthouse states that there “appears to be no scientific or medical evidence for” the continuance of lockdowns, face masks, social distancing, the “arbitrary” closing of schools and businesses, and the “the closing down of or restrictions on religious places of worship.”

“The Great Barrington Declaration, signed by more than 30,000 health scientists and medical doctors from around the world, adds support for this statement,” wrote Malthouse. The Great Barrington Declaration blasts the harm caused by lockdowns.

There's lots and lots like that, you know. Facts don't matter. They're sworn, they're SWORN at the top to this agenda, I mean literally on oath, there's no doubt about it. You would have somebody breaking out of the top if they weren't all sworn onto the same agenda. And I mean literally physically sworn to it, there's no doubt about it. They're dedicated. You would have different officials coming out at the top who are at high levels of government completely against it individually here and there, that would start to happen. And when it doesn't happen it means they all know, that they're sworn to it. Absolutely. And they'll be well rewarded if they stick to it, there is no doubt about this at all. The evidence is overwhelming from the doctors that are working with patients in the hospitals. And all the other staff too. Overwhelming.

So there you go. Another one too is the World Doctors Alliance who go through the same kind of stuff. I won’t even keep repeating it. I’ll put the articles up for you to read with the facts in it too from the different doctors with the facts that they have uncovered and detailed and so on. They went into, [Alan chuckles.] this article also goes into this [Alan chuckles.] Professor Neil Ferguson, the guy that did his modeling, they said it was not even peer-reviewed before being acted upon.

globalresearch.ca / 23 Oct 2020

Professor Ferguson’s modelling was not even peer reviewed before being acted upon by several nations.

(A: That makes me wonder, who, what is this organization that always uses Professor Ferguson? Hm? I tell ya.)

Countries which did not lock down Sweden, Japan, Taiwan, South Korea and Belarus have all done significantly better than us in terms of percentage of population deaths. They also have herd immunity and intact economies.

This article will definitely get banned because you're not allowed to say that now. It's forbidden to get herd immunity by yourself. Forbidden. You see, it's heresy to state that you've got an immune system, or your immune system is working and you've got antibodies. It's heresy. Because you haven't had the vaccine yet, you see. I'll put these ones up.

It's interesting too, an article came out, the average age of death of folk who came down regardless and died with comorbidities, meaning pre-existing problems, and maybe even not necessarily have died of Covid. As I say, you'll find, remember what the president of that African country did even? He tested motor oil with the same swab tests, ah, and also some fruit and sent it off to the WHO laboratories in his own country. They all came back positive for Covid. That's facts. That came out, folks. So this particular test is beyond... It's deliberately chosen for its problems, [Alan chuckles.] I really think so.

Also too, I'll put another article up on [Alan chuckles.] this is system in Scotland.

Scotland lockdown: Full list of new coronavirus rules and restrictions - thesun.co.uk / 8 Oct 2020

Because even the cops don't understand it in Scotland and in England. Even the police chiefs don't understand it. It's just so ridiculous. And how many folk can be here on a certain time and not there on a certain other time and... and arghhh. It truly is, this is an exercise in bureaucracy, you know, honestly it is. It's beyond any kind of farce. We could look back, I can remember, this is what you'd expect to read, something like this with the bubonic plague, or the black death, you see, they used to call it in Britain. That where you see these, these animal masks with the big, long snouts. They could understand what caused the disease at the time, but they thought it was a miasma, something in the air maybe that was causing it. But in reality, it was a disease cabitium [?], caused, carried by a flea that inhabited the rats that came off the ships. That's the theory about it anyway. But anyway, when you read about the characters who are making money off fighting that disease at the time, which they didn't know what was causing it or anything, right. They had all kinds of con men on the go. Conology really flourishes during times of crisis. Especially when you can create a crisis.

Back then they had the real problem with this, this deadly disease at the time in the Middle Ages. So they made these masks out of animal shapes, and that would partly scare off I guess the disease, that was the idea behind it. They didn't know why it would work, the salesman would give you good patter, a good patter, a good patter merchant, you see, and good conmen, good sellers, you see, as to why you should where it.

They also had people who said they were magic [Alan chuckles.] outside toilets, eh, and that this strange miasma that they thought was somehow in the air or something, would be frightened off by the stink from the toilet, the smell, you see, especially if you urinated outside the toilet and around the toilet. I don't know how many times, mind you, it was probably a specific number of times. Very much like the Covid idea, you can allow so many folk into your home this time of day but not on others and blah blah blah.

Then they also had, oh yeah, and some really inventive characters were selling rose scented, well, perfume, they would perfume these handkerchiefs you would cover your face with. Like a facemask, you see, you'd put your face... They died too, mind you, with the facemasks. But otherwise you know, paper on your face would have fought all diseases down through history, we never knew that, did we? And you wouldn't need a medical system really in that case, just a lot of paper. Anyway, they would sell this perfume paper and you would do that thing around the toilets and stuff. I guess the idea was to shock the disease or whatever it was, away from you, you know, just scare it away from you with the facemasks on and this paper or the handkerchief with some perfume of rose on it. They made fortunes with this off the public, eh.

What I'm saying is, that's what, you hear about things that they did, and ring-a-ring-of-roses, eh, a pocket full of posies, eh. That was the idea too, having, if you had rose petals and that, the posies in the handkerchiefs... A-tishoo! A-tishoo! We all fall down. You see? That was the thing behind it all. It didn't stop the plague of course. But when you see the rituals they had to go through back then trying to stop it all. This is what we're reading today with these 3 tier and 4 tier and 5 tier lockdowns, and so many people can, from your little street can meet into your home maybe this day, but not the rest of the time under a level 2 and yada, yada, ya. Absolute FARCIAL stuff. That no one understands. It's not meant you understand, it's not meant to be understood. It's meant to be acted upon by authoritarian cops and so on. Who hand out tickets. And folk get angry and furious as the society breaks down until you just comply with every ridiculous dictat that comes. Because they've just started with these ideas. If they can have you walking on your hands, they'll have you walking on your hands. I really mean that.

These are HUGE experiments in psychological operations on the go right now. Massive, MASSIVE studies on people management and manipulating the people into obeyance. When you break the normal thought patterns and rational patterns of behavior, when you break it, and Pavlov knew this, you can eventually get the public to do anything, no matter how aberrant. Huge. It's got nothing to do with stopping anything, folks. Except bringing the economies to a complete end. An END. To bring in total dependent austerity. So yeah, you could tie it into the, we could laugh at the Middle Ages stuff, oh. Laugh at this stuff now, folks, of what they're telling you to do.

Now here's another one from the Daily Mail as well. It says…

The OTHER coronavirus death toll: 26,000 more people than usual died in private homes in England and Wales between March and September - but only 3% of them from Covid

dailymail.co.uk / 19 Oct 2020

(A: It says that’s…) …26,000 excess deaths… (A: …over the normal.)

At least 26,000 more people than usual have died at home during the coronavirus pandemic in England and Wales potentially because they couldn't or didn't want to go to hospital, according to official statistics.

(A: You couldn’t get into hospital. Np. That was the main reason.)

Between March 20, the week lockdown started, and September 11, a total of 85,400 people died in private homes rather than in hospitals or care homes, an Office for National Statistics report revealed today. This is the equivalent of around 100 extra deaths each day.

The number, which is a surge of 43.8 per cent on the average for that time of year, includes fatalities of any cause, with Covid-19 only mentioned on 2.9 per cent of all the death certificates. Six out of 10 of those who died at home were aged over 70.

Deaths in private homes were nearly double the five-year average for between April 3 and May 7, when Britain was overwhelmed by the virus and have remained 'well above average' since March. Yet in hospitals and care homes the number of deaths slipped below average in June, once the first wave of Covid-19 had blown over. It has now risen slightly back up in care homes, but remains low in hospitals.

Statisticians said the change represented a 'redistribution' in where people die, arguing many ill patients would have been reluctant to go to hospital out of fear of catching Covid-19 (A: They were telling them, if they phoned in, to stay at home. Remember the articles?) or suffered disruptions to their usual NHS treatment because of the draconian lockdown.

Heart disease was the biggest cause of the deaths, followed by cancers and dementia (A: I think we’re all getting demented now with all these new regulations, eh, stand on your left foot on a Thursday and your right foot on Wednesday.) – it is normal for these to be the main killers. For comparison, the Government's official Covid-19 death toll stands at around 45,000.

(A: Right. Now, it doesn't mean that's what killed them, hm, because we already saw them fudging figures, it was just incredible the lies that were put out already. Anyway it says…)

Experts are not sure whether the statistics are necessarily bad – many people choose to die at home rather than in hospital – but warn people might have missed out on proper end-of-life care, which includes painkillers, and that some of the people may actually have been saved if they were in a hospital.

(A: No kidding. Isn't that what hospitals are FOR? Hm? D'you realize all reality has been turned upside down. And as I mentioned earlier, I never finished what I was on about. But folk used to just die at home all the time. It wasn't until Covid started, most folk are so out of the fact that folk die at all, in this age where undertakers deal with it and so on, and they die in the hospitals, you don't see them. You only end up if you ever go to a funeral at all, that's where you see anything to do with the person that's dead, is the funeral or cremation. But in reality, that used to be what folk grew up with, when life was pretty short for a lot of people. That was normal right through up into the 20th century. So we all knew growing up that folk died, we'd see people dying in your family, we knew it. And your neighbors, you'd see them dying too. You would think, with Covid, nobody died until Covid came along. This is an amazing time to watch the psychological warfare being to put down our throats here. We had all the lies as they were packing statistics of the deaths with Covid, even though they would admit later that most of them didn't die of Covid. N-n-n. And here they'll go again with this, the next round of it. So...)

Experts are not sure whether the statistics are necessarily bad

(A: [Alan chuckles.] …eh. Rather than just say, yeah, lots of folk died in their homes because they couldn't get into hospital, isn't that bad. But the experts that caused it all…)

… are not sure whether the statistics are necessarily bad

(A: …you know. [Alan chuckles.] Naturally, psychopaths would say that.)

Tories today said the figures lay bare the 'other coronavirus death toll' and called for Number 10 to provide a cost-benefit analysis of lockdown measures. They must work out, the Conservative MPs said, how to balance rules so they protect people from Covid but don't put patients off getting NHS (A: National Health Service.) care meaning they die from other illnesses.

Fiona Carragher, the director of research and influencing at the Alzheimer's Society, said that the death toll from dementia alone — which rose by 75 per cent in women — revealed the impact of isolation, fear of coronavirus and suspension of health and social care services.

(A: Well, of course it did. Now, this article does go on to list percentages of people who died at home, right, between March 14 and September 11. Interestingly pick the 11th, eh?)

WHAT DID PEOPLE DIE OF AT HOME?

MALE DEATHS BETWEEN MARCH 14 AND SEP 11:

Cause of death

Deaths 2020

Deaths average

Heart disease

Lung cancer

(A: …folk that died at HOME, right. Hm.)

Prostate cancer

(A: Can you imagine dying at home, you can’t get hospital treatment or nothing.)

Lung disease

Bowel cancer

8,300 (+26%)

(A: So imagine dying of prostate cancer and bowel cancer at home, eh. That’s the males.)

FEMALE DEATHS BETWEEN MARCH 14 AND SEP 11:

Cause of death

(A: It’s got percentages as well. The hell that folk have been put through here by this big agenda on behalf of this agenda here by these psychopaths that run it all... ! You have to bring them, there's got to be a reckoning. There HAS to. They know it too. They won't back off now. This is when they get really vicious because they can't back off from the damage they've done already for this agenda, folks. They know that people will demand justice here and reckoning for what's happened and been done to them. And justice has to be seen to be done, you know. Hhhch, it's incredible. And they haven't finished yet, folks. Then they go into, the same article, again getting back to the fact that most folk think nobody died until Covid came along.)

'Usually around 300 people die each day in their homes in England and Wales,' (A: Usually. That's regardless of the Covid, right.) said Cambridge University statistician Professor David Spiegelhalter.

'The latest ONS analysis confirms that even after the peak of the epidemic this has stayed at around 400 a day and shows no sign of declining – that's one-third extra, very few of which are from Covid. (A: Right. So, even though it's higher, it's not from Covid.)

'Non-Covid deaths in hospital have correspondingly declined, suggesting most of these deaths would normally have occurred in hospital, and people have either been reluctant to go, discouraged from attending, (A: They told them not to come in, right.) or the services have been disrupted.

(A: No kidding, when you close down everything, and you tell them, and the hospitals are too busy with dancing nurses and stuff, why bother going in.)

'It is unclear how many of these lives could have been extended had they gone to hospital, for example among the 450 extra deaths from cardiac arrhythmias (A: That's when you go into abnormal heartbeats, irregular and so on.) (abnormal heartbeats).

'Crucially, the ONS data cannot tell us about the quality of these deaths, particularly in terms of the end-of-life care provided to the patients and the support for their families.'

‘Dealing with this disease is a complex optimisation problem. It becomes clearer every day that the government needs to provide cost benefit analysis of the major choices they face.’

(A: Well, I think they already know the cost benefit analysis of shutting everything down and everything comes to a grind, you know.)

Heart disease was the leading cause of death at home for both sexes in England, the Office for National Statistics report showed.

In normal times in all settings, dementia is the biggest cause of death in the UK, but many people with the brain condition end up in care homes, while those with heart disease may still be able to live independently and are therefore more likely to die at home.

Deaths from other deadly conditions including cancers and dementia were also above average in private homes.

(A: Interesting how that was up there too, eh.)

For men, prostate cancer fatalities at home were 53.5 per cent higher than average (A: …for men.)

... because you couldn't get into hospital for treatments and so on. N-n-n. I tell ya.
I-yi-yi. Anyway, you know, another one too is...

Huge lawsuits coming against Covid totalitarians and the con artists as well. I don't think it makes any difference, this is, I said back in January/February, this is written in stone, there's no doubt about it. You could tell by the terminology they were using, that facts that came along afterwards didn't make any difference at all, and they wouldn't make any difference. This is an agenda. Also Global Research has put out an article and it says…

The Covid-19 Numbers Game: The “Second Wave” is Based on Fake Statistics - globalresearch.ca / 24 Oct 2020

And it's true, you can play all the statistics the rest of your life if you want, it's not meant to make any sense to you. Even when the WHO, remember the WHO actually changed the rules, just for this one, for the pandemic for Covid, as to the amount of folk who were diagnosed worldwide to have it before they declare a pandemic. They actually changed it into a few hundred. It should have been thousands. They changed it, oh, that's okay, those numbers don't matter anymore to declare pandemic, remember. The article is out there too. Lots of folks saved it. I've got it too.

First Tests Of New "Immunity Passports" Will Take Place Wednesday

zerohedge.com / 20 Oct 2020

Back in April, when the coronavirus was still new and scary, with cities from New York, to London to Paris in its grip, the professional commentariat was abuzz with speculation about what our not-too-distant post-COVID-19 future might look like. At one point, the mayor of the French city of Nice and Bill Gates were among the most prominent voices discussing health passports, and the WHO was apparently treating the topic with extreme caution. (A: The WHO.)

Since then, discussion has faded somewhat, due in part to the relentless messaging from President Trump and others about the coming vaccines. But as the leading western vaccine projects prepare to apply for emergency use from the FDA as soon as November or December, the World Economic Forum, the same supranational organization that organizes the annual forum in Davos, is taking the lead in testing a global standard to communicate that an individual hasn't been infected with COVID-19.

…called the CommonPass system is being led by Paul Meyer, the CEO of the Commons Project, a Swiss non-profit financed by the Rockefeller Foundation. (A: [Alan laughing.] Everywhere you go, and you turn a stone, and the same characters pop up all the time, eh, the Rockefeller foundation.) Meyer insists countries are looking for better ways to "thoughtfully reopen" their borders as European countries start cutting down intra-EU travel once again.

You understand, with you know, again, rope your pant leg sort of thing and stand on your hands, and if you bring in four neighbors you should be able to do cartwheels in the house or something. Eventually with the psy-op operation you'll do anything to get away from all the madness. Oh, if you get the passport, you'll be fine then. Like suddenly the passports just declares that you're fine! [Alan chuckles.] So that's good enough, eh? Ahhhh. [Alan chuckles.] So anyway, it's got this thing to do with your phone and all the rest of it. This is the complete world monitoring system for your entire life birth to death, that's what it's about, folks, and Covid is the excuse.

Also this article's not bad actually. It's… CIGI is an interesting organization. It's really part of the big CFR group for Canada, Center for International Governance Innovation it's called, and they're in Waterloo University, a big campus down that way I think too. They create leaders again for Canada and so on. They go by Chatham House rules, they actually say that, you know, so they are part of the Royal Institute of International Affairs /Council on Foreign Relations group.

The CIGI Rule - cigionline.org

They pick young guys who will be the future leaders in all areas in Canada and other parts of the world. It says...

COVID-19 as a Case for Social Scoring Systems (A: It's… You know…)

cigionline.org / 15 Sept 2020

We're witnessing one of the largest ever collaborative efforts among medical researchers (A: …blah, blah, blah…) working to stop the spread of COVID-19. (A: …yada, yada, ya.)

While scoring systems are widely criticized and often discussed in dystopian contexts (A: …for being totalitarian, right.), the current global need to mitigate the spread of COVID-19 provides a decent case for considering social scoring systems.

(A: So this is a guy who's up and coming - Iiii don't know if it's a guy or not, it.. Jesse Hirsh.)

Digital economies and societies already depend upon scoring systems to navigate and manage information.

Examples include:

rating and recommendation systems that help people choose where to eat or who to buy from;

(A: What, you can't decide for yourself? Hm? Ughhhhhhhhhhh. Anyway, the whole point is they want to use the Chinese system, they actually mention…)

The Chinese government has established the National Credit Information Sharing Platform, which acts as a kind of API (application programming interface) for all the various agencies' social credit systems, gathering and storing their data.

(A: That's one of the big projects they're working at with CIGI, this group here is.)

The main part, you see, this is really an arm of the Council on Foreign Relations. But the main part too is all about a world system. It's always been about a world system and world governments and so on. It's the same system that came out of Cecil Rhodes idea, you know. The same system. And don't forget that Rockefeller was a member of Cecil Rhodes foundation. They made Cecil Rhodes a star financially, so much so that you must give the money back if you have no family to leave it to. That was in Cecil Rhodes will, to give the money back to the Rothschilds. This is official history. You can check it up for yourselves. It's not hidden. Look at the wills of Cecil Rhodes. Again, the CFR, Council on Foreign Relations, Lord Alfred Milner group that ran the whole system for the Empire, it's the same system, folks, you know, take over the world's resources, yada, yada, ya, bring in a global system of government or governance, and basically run the public through pretty well an expert system. That's why the CFR/RIIA/Lord Alfred Milner group and Rhodes were all for the same, exact same, they were the same one system, hm, different faces of it. It hasn't changed. Bring in a whole system. Create the stars, take over the... you know, create the stars for the public to follow, and nothing has changed.

So China yeah, they were fascinated by the set up, they helped actually the Soviet system get created, hhhch, and they studied it well. They studied all kinds of tyrannies across the world to see which worked efficiently. For those people who think that they are all your organizations. No, they're not. They're very elitist indeed.

So there you are, COVID-19 as a Case for Social Scoring Systems. There you go, from folks that you don't elect to advise governments, and who become parts of governments and your top bureaucracies. They placed them there for you to follow. Another one from the same organization...

Now More than Ever, the World Needs Data Stewards

cigionline.org / 1 Oct 2020

The coronavirus (COVID-19) crisis is the latest illustration of the importance of statistics to guide policy and individuals' actions. (A: You see, you can't guide your own actions, you see, so you need these organizations to get statistics and system set up to guide your actions, you're just too stupid to do it yourself.) Because of differences in testing rates and how cause of death is registered in public records (A: It was quite simple, it's called fudging.), the extent of the pandemic is unknown, making actions to counter it complicated. (A: There you go.) For example, Sub-Saharan Africa did not record its first case of COVID-19 until late February, and even after that, its caseload lagged behind other regions of the world. This might have been due… (A: I like their preciseness…)

This might have been due to the genuinely slow arrival and spread of the virus;

(A: You see, might have been…)

to "co-immunity" (A: …right…) within the population

(A: So they might have got a kind of heard immunity. Oh, we can't say herd immunity, oh my goodness me, without a vaccine.)

(because of exposure to other microbes whose interaction with COVID-19 is not currently understood); …

(A: So they might have, well mind you too they also had the Middle East Respiratory Syndrome, that type too you see, maybe that's what gave them an immunity towards this one. Oh, I can't say that again! I keep forgetting myself, I'm gonna, oh… Hhhhhh, dear. Anyway…)

As another example, there is a belief among US intelligence analysts that the extent of the pandemic and the resulting deaths in China were understated by the authorities. (A: Right.)

(A: It always amazes me how these organizations are allowed to say things that you shouldn't say, you see. I mean, here they are inferring, eh, inferring that US intelligence analysts say that the deaths in China were understated by the authorities in China, eh. Well, you couldn't say that; I'm glad I'm not saying it.)

Varying approaches to identifying cause of death during the pandemic have also resulted in disparate fatality rates attributable to the virus, leading to undercounting in some US states and overcounting in others.

Without detailed and comparable statistics — and, furthermore, widespread political willingness, institutional capacity and other capabilities to gather, disseminate and make sense of them — we will never be able to distinguish fact from fiction or coincidence from causation.

(A: Well, how can they say that when they're after cash to get the rights to manage all the data? [Alan chuckles.] This is what the article is about for CIGI and so on, eh. You need one organization that will gather all data, right, that's what you really need, hm. There you are. Statisticians, eh.)

Foundations of Strong Data Stewardship

You see, they're not totalitarian, they're stewards. Stewards look after things, you see. You know that… don't you? So they should get that, and they should be the stewards of the whole, of a whole unified data collection system, eh, that's what they should be. You need something like that for goodness sakes, if you want to survive and all perish together, eh. From the same organization too, it's amazing when you get into something, and I've been watching this group for a long time, they also go into little articles, and I was reading…

India-Canada Energy Cooperation - cigionline.org

I've mentioned before, it's through Gateway House, eh, that's their version, really, Indian Counseling Global Relations, that's their version of Chatham House, you see. It's the same organization across the British Empire, for those you haven't caught on yet. [Alan chuckles.] It's the Center for International Governance Innovation. It's worth a read for those who want to know how the world system really works and how they pick the bureaucracies of every single nation on the planet [Alan chuckles.] and put them in. And how they... They reap the rewards once they're in charge of the central banking systems.

CIGI – Publications - cigionline.org

It's quite interesting though to see how it really works. An old organization. Very old. Again going back to Lord Alfred Milner, at least, and probably other names before he came along. But that morphed into the Royal Institute of International Affairs / Council on Foreign Relations and the Pacific Region alliance, you know. It's all the same organization. The CFR in America, because it doesn't sound very good to have a Royal Institute for America, you know, for the USA. It might not wash down too well. It might wash, they might not care today, who knows, I just don't know.

So data governance is important for that too. Obviously, there's only one good organization should run the whole system for goodness sakes, eh. It says that Jim Balsillie is the organization that fronts for the CFR here, the CIGI, and it says…

...at the IMF, International Monetary Fund statistical forums.

So they're into all the same organizations that were set up by the Royal Institute of International Affairs.

The global digital governance precedents.

Now remember, they're talking too about the social credit system, global digital governance. They're going to govern you through, digitally, that means cutting you off too if you disagree with them. Like Bertrand Russell said. OLD agenda, folks. Digital governance. How else are they going to govern you digitally, eh? They can give you the finger perhaps. But here you go with it and it's all there. They never sleep, these big organizations. These institutions are there for generations, eh. M-hm. I tell ya.

And I love how they say, security and democracy. Most folk in democracies don't know they're ruled by these characters. They know different folks' names; they don't realize they all belong to the same organizations. Like Quigley said that they are.

This other article too is...

Glaring Parallels Between the 9/11 and Covid Ops - globalresearch.ca / Oct 22, 2020

That's quite an interesting article. Also…

AstraZeneca Covid-19 vaccine study put on hold due to suspected adverse reaction in participant in the U.K. - statnews.com / 8 Sept 2020

That was September 8. I don't know if it's the same one but this one is CNBC and it says...

AstraZeneca shares turn negative

(A: Their shares, that's all they care about is the shares, eh, of the billionaires… you see, they've already turned everybody into multi-billionaires here, even the lower guys on the totem pole, because of vaccines.)

AstraZeneca shares turn negative after Brazilian health authority says volunteer in Covid vaccine study dies - cnbc.com / 21 Oct 2020

I'm sure they'll just brush it under the carpet and say, oh, they probably had something else, you know. That's all they, hhhch, that's what the story's about is the shares plummeted.

This is a good article too to show you, again you see, you're getting taught you're a nonessential worker, eh. You're either important or you're not important, that immediately puts you into a devalued category if you're not important, nonessential. But they're doing the same thing in the stories. You noticed that before where they had taped out, I think that Walmart supposedly had taped out different places you couldn't go into during it. Only in for food, eh? Like a little rat. I remember giving the talks on how they train the rats in these cages and so on in mazes in the laboratories, they'd pull levers to get their seed and stuff. They've got you doing the same stuff. And walk in a certain direction. And it's just one way only. You have all this absolute nonsense. I'm surprised they don't put just 1 foot down and you have to hop everywhere. I mean, why not? Hm? And have your face covered. Anyway, hhhhh. So yeah, they were stopping folk from going to it, so they're back at the same thing too, it says...

Furious Tesco shopper rips coverings off ‘non-essential’ items (A: …called nonessential…) in Wales as rage over ‘disgraceful’ lockdown boils over

thesun.co.uk / 25 Oct 2020

(A: He just got fed up with it. I mean, you go into the store to get something, suddenly it's all taped off, you can't get it because is not essential what you're buying? You see, post consumerism, is that sinking into your head here? For those who are hard of thinking, POST consumerist society, essentials only. And even then, it's going to be rationed food, etc. That's where it's going to go.)

Gwilym Owen said he was not ashamed of what he had done in the store - Credit: Wales News Service

Gwilym Owen was filmed angrily pulling coverings off rails of clothes while in a store without a face covering shouting, since would have clothes been exempt?

"Rip the fs off. Kids f clothes, mate, it's a disgrace.

"Coming into winter now, it's a fg disgrace."

"Since when has clothes been non essential?"

Isn't that something, eh? Another one too says…

Mum can’t

It shows you the poor child that she's got, this daughter, she was told she was unable to replace… Her little girl is in the hospital, you should see her, she's got real problems, this child. So the mom was unable to replace her hospitalized four-year-old daughter's bloodied clothes because they’re nonessential items.

Mum can’t get new clothes for hospitalised daughter, 4, whose old ones were covered in blood as they’re ‘non-essential’

thesun.co.uk / 24 Oct 2020

Today is the first full week of Wales firebreak lockdown and stores are currently unable to sell a range of products to customers.

Ms. Jones, 27, was left angry and frustrated and upset when she couldn't buy essential items for Eden, who was born with lymphatic malformation.

(A: You see her face is distorted, poor little kid, you know.)

She said, "Please someone tell me how it's nonessential that I pop to the closest supermarket to the hospital which is five minutes away to get my daughter new underwear and pajamas as hers are soaked in blood."

Ms. Jones was forced to make a 40 mile round-trip from the hospital in Cardiff to get replacements from family members.

A 40-mile round-trip to get clothing from family members. And actually with severe lockdowns you won’t be allowed to even travel that far shortly. Do you understand all the frustrations of the madness that this is intentionally causing? I say intentionally causing. So the mom said she's never felt so angry and so on and so on. N-n-n. I'll put that article up for you. One of thousands I'm sure of articles of the disgusting things... Never mind the folk dying at home and so on, that are told to stay at home who suffer heart attacks, and painful cancers they can't even get treatments or even painkillers for it. Horrible deaths. And these folk who have caused all of this have got a lot to answer for. You know they do.

Don't forget, the countries that haven't done the lockdowns, like Sweden, haven't had the problems we've had, or even the death rate for that matter. N-n-n. The nations that didn't even bother with the facemasks never had, it made no difference in numbers at all. Even the articles, I've got ones here that mentioned that they're admitting [Alan chuckles.] in the States, in different US states, the surveys on folk who are wearing the facemasks, that there's stats of folk who tested positive with it were mainly wearing facemasks. Facemasks, and still getting it, you see. Not sick with it, just the positive. As I say, stop the testing with the PCR testing and you'll find it will all go away. That would be too normal a thing to do when you have a big agenda at play here.

I'll put up too the quarantine isolation camps. Also too, interesting, the tenders, the government's put out the tenders that’s put out for supplies and so on. They have thousands of, hhhch, stockpiling tear gas, eh. It's quite interesting.

Politician raises alarm over Trudeau Govt’s plan to build COVID ‘Quarantine/Isolation’ camps

lifesitenews.com / 9 Oct 2020

Randy Hillier, politician, independent parliamentarian, makes a comment about the Canadian government's plan to build holding camps for those infected with the Covid and possible other uses.

He asked the Doug Ford government of Ontario if they knew of “how many of these camps will be built, and how many people does this government expect to detain.” He pointed out how documentation shows that the “Federal Quarantine/Isolation sites” could be used for “other requirements” besides for COVID-19.

(A: ...and so on. But yeah, you actually see the tenders for teargas.)

The “Tear Gas” RFP lists a total of 36,000 canisters required by the DND (A: Department of National Defense.) which the winning contractor is to have shipped to the Canadian Forces Ammunition Depot (CFAD) in Dundurn, Saskatchewan, by March 31, 2021.

So that's still to come. So that's the total, 36,000 canisters. I know they were looking for riots possibly, by the way, in Canada back in February. They didn't know what was going to happen eventually. All governments are doing the same thing by the way. Because what they're going to bring down is going to cause riots eventually. And when folk riot in Canada, it would have to be awfully, awfully severe, believe you me, what's going on. And from a South Korean newspaper...

Deaths after flu shots in South Korea fan fears, but authorities find no link (A: ...to the flu shots.) - channelnewsasia.com / 21 Oct 2020

…and that's how other countries deal with the flu shot, right. I've also got an article here about some nations noticing of viral interference if they've had the flu shots and they get the Covid thing, and it’s actually exacerbating the Covid into a worse thing. That's of course what the Department of Defense in the US had in 2018, the military, I've got the articles here. I put them out at the time and folk grab them and it flitted across the world those articles. From the Department of Defense is on record when they said that they were warning folk, hhhch, that the flu shots, back then 2018, were causing viral interference. Because it primed you, pulmonary priming, so when you hit the actual flu itself you'd have an overreaction and you have a cytokine storm which could do terrible damage or even kill you.

Another one too is, it's so sad, again, from some organizations that used to be, have some kind of credence, you know, but you're finding now that some of them, well, they're all on board now for money, big, big money. The big magazines too, and medical magazines and so on. I'll put this one up on, this is the New England Journal of Medicine. They have professionals telling the doctors how they are going to try to convince the public to accept this and how to cajole them, hhhch, and all that kind of stuff, and to accept, and what they'd learned with previous campaigns with previous vaccines, what works and what didn't work and so on. It's called…

Ensuring Uptake of Vaccines against SARS-CoV-2 nejm.org / 1 Oct 2020

A recent poll found that only 49% of Americans planned to get vaccinated against SARS-CoV-2.

One option for increasing vaccine uptake is to require it.

(A: Right, there's your option.)

Mandatory vaccination has proven effective in ensuring high childhood immunization rates in many high-income countries. However, except for influenza vaccination of health care workers, mandates have not been widely used for adults.

Although a vaccine remains months to years away, developing a policy strategy to ensure uptake takes time.

(A: Nothing is to do about safety here, you understand, it's about making sure you get it. They treat the public like cattle, like dumb stupid cattle. They won't explain anything to the public at all. So they have these techniques to just cajole you or try to force you into something, eh. It says…)

We offer a framework that states can apply now to help ensure uptake of the vaccine when it becomes available — including consideration of when a mandate might become appropriate. Our approach is guided by lessons from U.S. experiences with vaccines for the 1976 “swine flu,” (A: HA! …that was a real success, eh.) H1N1 influenza, smallpox, and human papillomavirus (HPV).

(A: I tell ya.)

SIX TRIGGER CRITERIA FOR STATE COVID-19 VACCINATION MANDATES.

Mandate, right. So there's your choice in democracies, eh, and free societies, there's your choices. Never mind the fact that other countries have already got a good herd immunity that did not lock down anything. Because you catch it, it's impossible not to get, like most viruses you don't even know you've had it, through your entire life. It happens all the time, folks. I'll put this article up.

Remember folks once again, and I've got some articles to go yet but I just want to remember again please send me a few bucks. Cuttingthroughthematrix.com. Very important, make a list of the sites on my website cuttingthroughthematrix.com, all my official sites are listed there. Because we're now in a terrible time where just saying something that's forbidden, whether you know it or not, you see, it makes no difference. The authorities now are going into the real wartime, like level 4 mode which they mentioned in the Event 201 they would eventually go to and just stop you from speaking about it. The only information we're supposed to get are from the authorized authorities themselves. That said, there's no choice. That's the mandate, folks.

That's what your wonderful Internet has come to. As I knew it would years ago. I said they will sensor and sensor, after they've got you used to all this free stuff and you're hypnotized by it, and addicted to it, then they'll clampdown on everything and use it as a control mechanism. That's what it was designed to do. It really was. They don't care if you're happy and you're having good pleasure on the Internet. No, they want to make sure you're addicted to it and so you'll stay on as they take away all your rights and freedoms.

I always laugh at how they really think, people, they really care about you or they care about minorities or sexual orientation, and they really fall for all of it. The people who rule the world don't give a DARN, DON'T GIVE A DARN about any of you. But they use these techniques to split you all apart.

So send a few bucks my way @cuttingthroughthematrix.com, right. PayPal, check is fine, Cash is fine. Money Gram as I mentioned before too. It will help me tick along here because it's a lot of work here, and I've got a whole bunch of sites there.

Also another one is from Salt Lake City. It says…

Leaders in US, Europe divided on response to surging coronavirus

nypost.com / 21 Oct 2020

SALT LAKE CITY — Virus cases are surging across Europe and many US states, but responses by leaders are miles apart, with officials in Ireland, France and elsewhere imposing curfews (A: [Alan chuckles.] It’s wartime isn’t it.) and restricting gatherings even as some US governors resist mask mandates or more aggressive measures.

You all, you won't be allowed out. This is the point, the whole point is to hem you in with laws and restrictions, regulations, and until you're so weakened and fed up with it all you'll... taaaake your vaccination. That's the point of it. This is how they make you take it, you see, you're given no choice here. It's all coercion, coercion, coercion, and without giving you choices. Then when you get sick with it, they'll say, well you agreed to take it. Psychopaths, psychopaths, eh.

So this article here talks about Utah and what's happening in Utah. What's happening there, it's not that bad either actually. They play the statistic game, which means nothing at all.

Virus to stay 'at least until next summer' - Macron

bbc.com / 24 Oct 2020

(A: You can take, that's from Macron in France, right. Oh, he's happy for it because it will help to cut down on the color revolution there, the yellowjackets and so on, yellow vests. It takes a lot of heat off him for his inadequacy of breaking the country.)

French President Emmanuel Macron says his country will be fighting the virus until at least the middle of next year as cases there surged past a million.

(A: Well, stop testing. How many folk are sick with it? You understand, if it has surged past a million, they don't tell you that next week that million will be clear. They don't stay as cases, you see, they're then clear, that means you got resistance antibodies. Otherwise you would be sick, and it would stay that way until you died. Do you understand that? It's so simple. Every doctor knows that. Hhhhh. But they don't tell the public that. Well, what happened to all these millions of cases that are positive? Well, now they’re fine, they’re not testing positive with it at all.)

The World Health Organization said the spike in European cases was a critical moment in the fight against the virus.

(A: Hm.)

It called for quick action to prevent health services being overwhelmed.

(A: …the same stuff they keep churning out, but who got overwhelmed? Who? Hm? I tell ya. N-n-n.)

So it's a good propaganda article this one on the spikes and so on. Also this article here is on US scientists fret over increasing numbers who say they'll refuse Covid 19 vaccine. That's the New York Post.

Scientists worry as more Americans say they'll refuse COVID-19 vaccine

nypost.com / 17 Oct 2020

The technocrat scientists believe that they're in charge of vaccinating humanity for the good, and for the good of everyone, and it's their responsibility to carry out the mission as people push back and say no. These same scientists are incredulous that anyone would not agree with their science.

Tara Granger, 36, has worked as a nurse for two decades in Suffolk County, NY, and she and her two children have been vaccinated every year.

(A: I guess for flu, I don't know.)

"Drugs are my life," she says. "It's what I learned in school."

But she's been questioning the promised upcoming vaccine for COVID-19, in large part because of what she's witnessed firsthand about the financial incentives for vaccines.

"It scares me that I got so many free lunches and free dinners because I pushed the flu vaccine," Granger says. "What am I going to get when I push a COVID vaccine?"

Granger got sick from the coronavirus earlier this summer and said she did "the opposite of what people said to do. I took my supplements and vitamins, and didn't go to the hospital to be put on a ventilator and die. I was smart enough to say, 'My immune system can fight this, I just have to find the right way to do it.' "

Her job will require her to recommend the COVID vaccine when it’s available, but Granger said she won’t personally be getting it.

“The vaccine isn’t something we need, even if it is safe,” she says. “People want an easy solution and they think this is it. But it isn’t.”

A Pew Research poll from late September showed that about half of US adults (51 percent) wouldn’t get a COVID-19 vaccine if it was available today — a big drop from the 72 percent who said they’d get one back in May. (A: …when they were terrifying us all.)

So that's a nurse there, 20 years in the profession, eh, 36 years old, is not going to take it. Of course anybody who doesn't take it is called anti-Vaxxer, even though you might not only want this one. You see, you're getting labeled and smeared. These are techniques, psy-op warfare. These are military techniques used in campaigns to dehumanize enemies. Rather than just say, some folk don't want this particular vaccine, and they don't think it's even necessary. Which is their right by the way. N-n-n. Well, you might have what they call vaccine hesitancy. Hhhhhhhhh! Oh, you can trust the manufacturers, can't you, hm? There you go. So that was from Eric Spitznagel via the New York Post it says here, this article here.

Sweden loosens Covid lockdown rules for elderly and vulnerable due to mental health impact of lockdown

telegraph.co.uk / 22 Oct 2020

…Sweden no longer need to isolate themselves, the government said on Thursday, pointing to lower Covid infection rates than in spring and a growing toll on the mental health of its elderly as behind the new recommendation.

The move to ease the burden on the elderly comes as many countries across Europe are reimposing restrictions to get to grips with surging infections, but the health agency has said it does not see evidence of a second wave in Sweden.

Oh, they hate Sweden, don't they? Hhhch. And have they been hammered by the media in the West, eh. You don't have any… You see, you don't have, even if it was just greed, if it was just greed, by the richest folk on the planet, the big corporations, eh, these conglomerations and stacks of businesses, thousands of businesses each one of them... If it was just pure greed you wouldn't get this kind of kickback that you're getting for nations that don't, that say they're not…

Because there's not a lot of people in Sweden, it's not a huge population. So you'd just say, ach, well, we don't need them, we're making massive profits elsewhere. So it's not just money, you understand? It's a huge agenda. A whole new way of just, I won't call it living, it's called existing, under pure sustainability and austerity.

Craig Murray, who is a former ambassador of the UK and human rights activist, and he says…

People Need to Reclaim the Internet

craigmurray.org.uk / 19 Oct 2020

(A: Well, good luck if you could. I tell ya. He says…)

No matter how much you dislike Trump, only a fool can fail to see the implications for public access to information of the massive suppression on the internet of the Hunter Biden leaks.

(A: So he goes into what happened there with what's come out recently. He talks about his coverage, his own coverage on the Julian Assange trial and so on.)

Even my blog has never been so systematically subject to shadowbanning from Twitter and Facebook as now. Normally about 50% of my blog readers arrive from Twitter and 40% from Facebook. During the trial it has been 3% from Twitter and 9% from Facebook. That is a fall from 90% to 12%. In the February hearings Facebook and Twitter were between them sending me over 200,000 readers a day. Now they are between them sending me 3,000 readers a day. To be plain that is very much less than my normal daily traffic from them just in ordinary times.

(A: It shows you how they manage it all, in real time. They've got all these algorithms and just a word can divert them off to other sites, it will kick in, you see, you're flagged immediately.)

My own family have not been getting their notifications of my posts on either platform.

(A: So that's your proof there too.)

It was not just me: everyone reporting the Assange trial on social media suffered the same effect.

(A: Well, isn’t that interesting, eh.)

Wikileaks, which has 5.6 million Twitter followers, were obtaining about the same number of Twitter “impressions” of their tweets (ie number who saw them) as I was. I spoke with several of the major US independent news sites and they all reported the same.

I have written before about the great danger to internet freedom from the fact that a few massively dominant social media corporations – Facebook, Twitter, Instagram – have become in effect the “gatekeepers” to internet traffic. In the Assange hearing and Hunter Biden cases we see perhaps the first overt use of that coordinated power to control public information worldwide.

This is only, believe you me, it's way beyond just talking about characters just like that. I mean, hhhch, there's thousands of things you can't find anymore. Again, they said they'd prompt you, they've been prompting you for years if you look up certain topics as to where they want you to go as opposed to where you want to go. It's... yeah, it's... But what's interesting to me to is the Biden thing, I won't even fall into that trap, about the claims of course, of supposedly, well, basically racketeering, you know, and politicians. What's new about politicians and racketeering?

I've got an article, it was from the Guardian actually, going way back, years, into Fergie, you know. Let's see if I can find it here somewhere, possibly. That's where Fergie, you know, was asking £500,000 a time for introductions to her hubby at the time when he was the minister for development or something. In other words, the usual, dishing out lots of cash from the British government on behalf of the parliament. The Guardian was saying, what's wrong with that? It's amazing how they're selective. They can't go across the board, if it's wrong for one person, how come it's right for someone else? You know? There's no continuity or consistency of logic. Everything is so politicized now, isn't it, everything's politics and who they believe and who they don't believe in. So that was their take back then, so what's wrong with her asking for that kind of money for introductions to her hubby when she was married to him. It's, hhhhh, aachh, well that's the system you're living in, eh.

Why shouldn't Fergie sell access to Prince Andrew? - theguardian.com / 24 May 2020

This article here again is, at least he's gone into, as I say, Craig Murray, he's going into the system of the Internet and how it's just a censorship technique. And again, it falls in too with CIGI I mentioned earlier, and they'll be eventually managing all the data, who gets banned and who gets a good credit score, who won't get a good credit score, as you go into a digital economy, a real digital economy including government dishing out your credits and how they can punish you for being bad and naughty, like Bertrand Russell talked about. Old agendas. And folk think, oh that's not that, oh he's talking about Bertrand Russell, what's that got to do with the present day? EVERYTHING! You're living through an old plan. [Alan chuckles.]

Police chiefs admit even they don’t understand Covid rules - metro.co.uk / 22 Oct 2020

I'll put that one up too. And...

Why won't they tell us the truth about coronavirus beds? Matt Hancock

(A: That's the minister in charge of the… That's a politician. A minister is a politician. It's not someone that gives you a sermon on religion. Although you've got to have a lot of belief to believe that Hancock and his ilk are any decent characters at all or good politicians.)

and Boris Johnson say they're almost full,

(A: That's what they're telling them about the beds, eh, right now in Britain.)

but Manchester's own medical expert disagrees

dailymail.co.uk / 20 Oct 2020

(A: [Alan chuckles.] This is what you're getting, eh?)

but Manchester's own medical expert disagrees

(A: …about, oh the beds are almost full, says Boris Johnson, hhhhh, and Hancock, the people that are supposed to represent the public, right. Yeah, they're LIARS.)

Hospital bed occupancy has become a propaganda tool in the bad-tempered row over Covid restrictions in Manchester.

Downing Street has used terrifying statistics in an attempt to gain public support for forcing local leaders into accepting strict tier-three measures.

They claim the city’s hospitals will become ‘overwhelmed’ within a few weeks, and even the surge capacity will be used up.

But Manchester mayor Andy Burnham and other local leaders have challenged the Government’s use of data, accusing ministers of ‘cherry picking’ figures to exaggerate the scale of the problem in the North West.

(A: Thank goodness. It's good to see some officials coming out, eh. Isn't it?)

They claim that, even though cases are increasing,

(A: Well, now they’re doing the, what is it, a million tests a day now. Guaranteed to find cases. It doesn't mean they're ill. Then eventually, as I say, next week they're not a case anymore, because obviously they've now got antibodies, or they'd STAY a case, wouldn't they? [Alan chuckles.]) current occupancy in critical-care units is not far above the norm for this time of year.

(A: You see, you go into winter, they know they're going to get a lot of folk in with bronchial problems that are going to end up in hospital, right.)

Even Professor Jane Eddleston, who leads the Government’s coronavirus response in Greater Manchester, has insisted that although the numbers are ‘stark’ the ‘system can cope’.

But what is the truth of the matter? How bad is the situation facing Greater Manchester’s hospitals as Covid-19 cases escalate?

The fact is that we simply do not have the data to form an accurate picture. Intensive care occupancy figures are not regularly collected and the Government’s projections are murky at best.

(A: [Alan chuckles.] No kidding, eh. It says even though that Covid 19, Covid patients are going up, right, in Manchester.)

That is up from fewer than 100 a day at the beginning of September.

But it is fewer than half the 1,200 patients a day in hospital at the peak in April. And the rate of increase is far slower – mainly because existing regulations are slowing the spread of the virus.

I think it's personally because most folk have got immunity to it, that that's what they've developed. Otherwise you'd still, you would stay as an infected case, you see, you would stay permanently as an infected case, unless your immune system kicks in and creates antibodies to eliminate it. This is basic medicine.

What do No 10's coronavirus graphs REALLY show? School children and twenty-somethings have driven England's current Covid-19 outbreak - but infection rates among them are FALLING in almost every region - dailymail.co.uk / 20 Oct 2020

Yeah, the youngsters can get it, but they don't even get ill with it. That's normal too. Sometimes it will hit just the elderly. Sometimes a few illnesses will hit mainly the youngsters. This one here hardly touches the youngsters at all. So because you get a few particles in your nostrils doesn't mean you've got it anyway.

Here's the one by, [Alan chuckles.] I'm talking about the hypocrisy of news agencies and so on. 2010 and that's from the Guardian…

Why shouldn't Fergie sell access to Prince Andrew?

theguardian.com / 24 May 2010

(A: From the Guardian.)

Flogging influence for cash is an ancient practice in business, and the Windsors have hardly paid for the Duchess's silence

(A: So there ya go.)

She has apologised for the "embarrassment caused", referring to a "serious lapse in judgment". "I am very sorry that this has happened."

She was up to her eyes in hock eventually. Remember the, in fact, this next article here ties in with that, it was to do with...

Sarah Ferguson's telephone call to Prince Andrew's paedo ex-pal Jeffrey Epstein - mirror.co.uk / 31 July 2019

Because they found, remember, they actually admitted they found notes from Fergie to Epstein asking to borrow money. I mean, she was really compromised, eh, on a lot of different levels. What a world, eh.

Another article too is interesting…

Guillain-Barré syndrome and Flu Vaccine

cdc.gov

(A: It's from the CDC by the way, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. Now, you've got to look at the wording. Everything goes through public relations. Everything, everything for the public goes through public relations. That means, a propaganda outfit where they soften things to get you to accept things. So...)

Guillain-Barré syndrome (GBS) is a rare disorder in which a person's own immune system damages their nerve cells (A: …right, it attacks your own nerve cells. Never used to happen.), causing muscle weakness and sometimes paralysis. GBS can cause symptoms that usually last for a few weeks. Most people recover fully from GBS, (A: So there's the nice part, most recover.) but some people have long-term nerve damage. In very rare cases, people have died of GBS, usually from difficulty breathing.

([Alan chuckles.] It stops you breathing, eh. It's called death. But it's an awful way to go because you suffocate eventually, you see, because your system that makes you breathe just stops working gradually, gradually, until you can't breathe.)

In the United States, an estimated 3,000 to 6,000 people develop GBS each year.

What causes GBS?

The exact cause of GBS is unknown, but about two-thirds of people who develop GBS experience symptoms several days or weeks after they have been sick with diarrhea or a respiratory illness. Infection with the bacterium Campylobacter jejuni is one of the most common risk factors for GBS. People also can develop GBS after having the flu or other infections (such as cytomegalovirus and Epstein Barr virus). On very rare occasions, they may develop GBS in the days or weeks after getting a vaccination.

(A: Interesting how they give you the list of it and they put that one at the very bottom, eh.
M-hm.)

(A: Who can get it? Anybody. M-hm.)

Who is at risk for developing GBS?

Anyone can develop GBS; however, it is more common among older adults.

(A: ...and so on and so on.)

How common is it among people who have been vaccinated against flu?

(A: Now, this was written for the CDC, right.)

The background rate for GBS in the Unites States is about 80 to 160 cases of GBS each week, regardless of vaccination.

(A: [Alan chuckles.] Okay, I’m sold on it now, it’s a good one then… that’s me. M-hm.)

Here's also, I mentioned before how everything would eventually tie into your immunity passport. Not just to go across the waters, but even to travel even a few miles from your home eventually. Even 1 mile. That's where it's going to go. I said too, they were using, they'd use airports initially to push it all.

Passengers flying to Hong Kong are first to use £80 twenty-minute airport COVID test at Heathrow in trial bidding to get struggling travel industry off the ground - dailymail.co.uk / 19 Oct 2020

That's what they're saying here. And also this article is awfully important too.

Purdue Pharma Pleads Guilty to Criminal Charges for Opioid Sales

nytimes.com / 21 Oct 2020

(A: That happened recently, October 21st.)

Purdue Pharma, the maker of OxyContin, has agreed to plead guilty to criminal charges related to its marketing of the addictive painkiller, and faces penalties of roughly $8.3 billion, the Justice Department announced on Wednesday. The settlement could pave the way for a resolution of thousands of lawsuits brought against the company for its role in a public health crisis that has killed more than 450,000 Americans since 1999.

(A: That's just Americans.)

The company’s owners, members of the wealthy Sackler family, have agreed to pay $225 million in civil penalties. Prosecutors said the agreement did not preclude the filing of criminal charges against Purdue executives or individual Sacklers.

(A: Massive scam that was, you know. And lots of doctors were getting bribes and stuff too to push it. And oh, just amazing stuff that was going on. And they knew it too, it was highly addictive, from the very beginning, before they even gave it out there to the public, they knew from all the studies they had done what would happen.)

OxyContin, which came on the market in the mid-90s, is seen as an early, ferocious driver of the opioid epidemic and Purdue is regarded as the architect of muscular, misleading drug marketing.

(A: Well, do you mean trying to tell us that drug companies and big Pharma companies are misleading, drug marketing strategies, is that what they’re using? …that you can believe them if they’re going to give you something to help you, right? M-hm.)

But it is unlikely the company will pay anything close to the $8.3 billion negotiated in the settlement deal. That is because Purdue sought bankruptcy court protection amid the onslaught of lawsuits, and so the federal government will now have to take its place in a long line of creditors. Typically, creditors end up collecting pennies on the dollar in bankruptcy proceedings.

Purdue Pharma Plea Offers Little Solace to Survivors of Opioid CrisisOct. 21, 2020

The settlement does give the Justice Department and the Trump administration a high-profile achievement that the president can tout on the campaign trail. Mr. Trump won the 2016 election in part because he vowed to combat an opioid addiction crisis that had gripped large swaths of the country and continues to be an issue in important swing states.

But state attorneys general from Massachusetts, New York and North Carolina, among others, have raised questions about just how much of an effect the settlement will have with respect to holding the Sackler family to account. Purdue was keen to settle its federal legal troubles under a Trump administration, which it sensed would cut a better deal than a new Biden administration. The $225 million that the Sacklers would pay as part of their civil settlements is small relative to the family’s net worth, estimated to be at least $13 billion, much of it generated from sales of OxyContin.

Joe Rice, a negotiator for local governments that are suing Purdue, said, “Purdue is doing everything they can to get this deal done in this administration. It’s advantageous to both sides.”

This federal case against Purdue is distinct from thousands of opioid-related lawsuits against other drug manufacturers, as well as distributors and pharmacy chains, still pending in federal and state courts.

Purdue has long demanded that the federal charges against it be resolved before it would agree to a larger settlement with cities, tribes, states and individuals, who claim that its relentless marketing of OxyContin directly contributed to a crisis of addiction and overdoses, resulting in towering costs in health care, law enforcement and unemployment. Lawyers close to negotiations expect that the final settlement may emerge early next year.

In the federal settlement, the company agreed to plead guilty to felony charges of defrauding federal health agencies and violating anti-kickback laws. The penalties include $3.54 billion in criminal fines and $2 billion in criminal forfeiture of profits, the largest penalties ever levied against a pharmaceutical manufacturer. The company pleaded guilty to marketing opioids to more than 100 doctors that it suspected of writing illegal prescriptions and lying about this to the federal Drug Enforcement Administration.

Purdue also pleaded guilty to paying illegal kickbacks to doctors and to an electronic health records company, Practice Fusion. In January Practice Fusion paid $145 million in fines for taking kickbacks from drug manufacturers in exchange for embedding pop-up alerts to physicians, intended to boost opioid prescriptions.

The Purdue settlement also includes $2.8 billion in civil penalties, related to allegations that the company violated the False Claims Act by using aggressive marketing tactics to convince doctors to unnecessarily prescribe opioids — frivolous prescriptions that experts say helped fuel a drug addiction crisis that has ravaged America for decades.

(A: They're too wealthy to go bankrupt. They just shift money around all over the place. That's what these characters do. I tell ya. And how many doctors were on board with this too, and pushing it for kickbacks? It actually mentions the antikickback laws that are on the books already and so on. I tell ya. N-n-n. That's the real system, eh, that's it.)

Those prescriptions were often paid for by federal health care programs like Medicare and Medicaid.

…using aggressive marketing tactics to convince doctors to unnecessarily prescribe opioids — frivolous prescriptions that experts say helped fuel a drug addiction crisis that has ravaged America for decades.

(A: A lot of it was on purpose too, you know. You have no idea the big psyops that go on.)

A year ago, under the weight of opioid litigation, Purdue filed for bankruptcy, and it is expected to emerge at some point as a new company.

(A: I guess a phoenix coming, eh.)

At least two other opioid manufacturers, Insys Therapeutics and Mallinckrodt, have also sought bankruptcy protection because of litigation.

(A: They won't lose, the family won't. They're too big, too rich with all the cash they brought in over the years. Hhhch, and again, how they remake each other. Just like Rockefeller getting remade again with the public relations company he hired to remake him as a philanthropist and beneficent to society, he was really a nice guy.)

Purdue has proposed that the company be run as a “public benefit corporation,” with proceeds from continuing limited sales of OxyContin and several overdose-reversing medications under development to go toward opioid abatement. The Justice Department endorses that model.

(A: Isn’t that nice, eh. There ya go. N-n-n. [Alan chuckles.] It says here before a lot of it happened...)

A forensic audit last year by Purdue found that the Sacklers (A: ...the family…) directed at least $10.7 billion in the company’s proceeds to family-controlled trusts (A: ...that can’t be touched, you see…) and holding companies, even as Purdue was facing legal scrutiny. Much of those proceeds, the Sacklers have said, went toward tax payments. (A: Yeah, sure. [Alan chuckles.])

You’ve got to laugh, eh? New York Times. Good enough article. At least they printed it, so that's something I suppose. Folk forget so quickly don't they. Meanwhile there's folk dying of cancers in their homes under this Covid thing as I've mentioned in the previous articles who couldn't get treatments in the hospitals. Imagine dying of cancer and no painkillers and things? For the greater good, hm.

Well, that's how it is, folks. So again, cuttingthroughthematrix.com. Hopefully we can still keep going and get through, hhhch, whatever is to come with a bit of humor here and there. You've got to have some. I always say you've got to have small groups and you swear to each other to help each other out. Because government is abandoning you. They are the culprit behind all, so much of this at the moment. And hell is coming down. You don't want to be just a statistic for the numbers, you know, and who die at home and all that. You've got to help each other out one way or another. Some way, and you can help each other out.

Never mind the folk who literally, in fear and terror watching television every day, you know, thinking the world is coming to an end, that's what it seems like to them. Unless they comply and give up all their rights and do what they're told, and take/allow whatever vaccine company to pump their stuff into your body, you know. That's where they're going, as they said at the New England Journal of Medicine there. What a disgusting article. There's nothing at all about the necessity of explaining to the public what this particular vaccine will do? and why it is so necessary? and will even work? and what are the real bad side effects that they might cause? Never mind the fact that they know, that the companies, whoever is going to administer it, and the companies themselves, are given a complete blanket immunity from prosecution and personal lawsuits!

Well, hhhch, NO. N-N-N. Nope. Can't go along with that, folks. You're either an animal, property, that's what you are, or a human being.

You're a person. Remember that.

But help each other out regardless through these terrible times to come. This is just the start of it as you go in through the cold weather and folk have lots of bronchial problems every, every winter. This is what they expect in the hospitals, they wait for the onslaught, long before Covid came along. That’s what you would wait for in the hospitals coming, the change in the weather and folk get older all the time so every year there's a crop of people who just hit that magic time for them and they get awfully ill with lung problems. They already have pre-existing problems and then you can guarantee lots of them come in. That's normal.

So you've got to help each other out and reassure people, if you can reassure them. Don't just leave people to be on their own and never hear from a phone call or whatever. Give them a call once in a while to keep in touch, to make sure that they are okay? And is there anything that they need? Anything you can get for them? That's what you got to do.

Government is trying to isolate everybody from everybody else, to make you dependent on them. Believe you me, you never want to be dependent on government for anything. [Alan chuckles.]

You've got to help each other to get through the terrible times ahead, folks. The global reset is what they're calling it. The great reset [Alan chuckles.] for the whole way of living, or existing. And the more folks help each other, the more confident they get in their right to help each other… and to reclaim their dignity as human beings.

For myself, I'm Alan Watt from Ontario, Canada where the trains are going by like crazy with heavy, heavy goods going way north. Which tells me all I need to know about a long, long, long term strategy of war against the people as they lock themselves down with their massive food supplies for the wealthy elite, you know, that are going to run the show.

So for me, Alan Watt from Ontario, Canada, it's good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

"Cutting Through the Matrix" with Alan Watt

(Blurb, i.e. Educational Talk)

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on November 1, 2020. Hhhch, as they say, time flies, eh? But I mean, [Alan chuckles.] you start to wonder if you're in some kind of time machine and it's going fast forward. Because for me it's like living through many talks I've given over the years in the past, where from their sources they gave you lots of clues where they were heading with the future. And it's here, the future is here.

So we're going through amazing times as they fulfill big agendas that seem just too far-fetched for most of the general public. Most of the public, it's sad to say, it is sad to say that the indoctrination has been perfect with them. But this is a natural thing. We're so well studied that we're too predictable. If you know the formulas to introduce certain hypes and fears and terror, the public will always behave in the same way. Plato said that, so it's been done for an awful long time, eh. It's been used over and over.

We really are in it today, aren't we? And I mean in it, indeed. Because the massive changes that are planned, and then implemented, and will go down in history just the same way as 9/11. I'm sure 9/11, apart from the fact [Alan chuckles.] they pretty well told you what they wanted to do with the wars that would happen IF they could get a Pearl Harbor event, from the PNAC group, the Project for a New American Century group. The neo-cons as they call them. They publish them a couple of times in the 90s. Then 9/11 came along and they got a Pearl Harbor event.

Bingo, all these massive totalitarian measures were rammed out on the American people. But not just the Americans, across the world at the same time. You see, that gives you a clue as well. Why would the whole world go into this anti-terrorism mode, which is really a war upon the public with massive surveillance on everybody, loss of rights and freedoms, and the loss of rights even to walk into an airport without being frisked, groped and all the rest of it, X-rayed, etc. We had all these rights before that we, you all took for granted. We always take our rights for granted. That's maybe the key to everything today.

Because you don't realize how you adapt into new normals. And they give you new normals all the time. I gave talks on the new normals back in the 90s, that's what I call it, is the new normal, then I explained what it meant and how it was introduced. And here we are, new normals are all here. And folk really think that, especially the young folk, naturally it's all they know. It's so odd talking about 9/11 again because I remember saying the week that it happened, it might have even been the night. I said, a generation will grow up and 20 years down the road they don't know any other way of living except massive surveillance as being normal. A digital kind of system would come in because they talked back then of bringing in a digital currency, because terrorists might use all the cash and stuff, all the bad guys use cash. They just unfolded the agenda way back then.

But now you have them, there's a lot of young folk who naturally, that's all they know, think it's all quite normal. They question nothing. And why should they question anything? They can't believe that the parents allowed, if it's all true that it's mayhem and conspiracy, why would their parents allow it? Well, their parents were as dumb as they are because we’re always kept dumb. Hhhch, in fact, you're born with a pretty intact mind, but they go to work very quickly to destroy it. That's the system in which you live.

Nevermind... There's countless, countless articles and studies done, professional studies done, legitimate studies about the fluoride in the drinking water, for goodness’ sake, and the history of it being used in other countries that were totalitarian before hand. They noted the fact that it did drop a few IQ points off the public. So it's good for, that's a good reason to use it on the public if you want to have less fuss from them.

We do know that the United Nations, the World Health Organization, that you can't believe the World Health Organization. Dr. Who, for goodness’ sake, eh. Dr. WHO indeed. But they do a survey every year and at least they publish the IQ, or they used to up until maybe two or three years ago, of different countries across the world. The same test supposedly applied to the same age groups up-and-coming every year or so. They said that the IQ was dropping pretty drastically, not just by, you know, percentages of one point, but by quite a few points. And of course as always, there's never a reason for it happening and they never go into...

D'you understand, if you're truly looked after by the farmers and you're the cattle, hm, you're owned, you're owned. You are where they get all their cash from and their high living standard. You build everything for them if you're working. You create the cash flow, and that's what they use to plunder you to take it all from you in one way or another. And they make you dependent on their systems, because they own all the corporations and factories in other countries. They don't, they never enter into the fact, they just own them all, big holding companies, but they make sure that you must use their products. Including their health services by the way and their medications and vaccines and everything else. Don't they? [Alan chuckles.]

That's called fascism for those who really don't know what it means, when the corporations collude with governments to control and manage and pretty well own the public. It's all been done. Of course the little communists at the bottom never figure that out. The ones who follow I should say, never figure that out. But they're useful, useful idiots according to the ones who own them and use them. Even Bertrand Russell said that too and he was all for using them, to bring in the beautiful order on behalf of the intelligentsia, the people who should own it all, you see, and know how you should be living.

But again, if you're brought up to be naïve, which everybody is, you're trained, and every country has just the same techniques to make you believe the country's all genuine. You just stumbled down through history. Occasionally they'll give you a king or a queen that was half decent. Germany had some, even had hobbies, like, you know, repairing clocks and things. It's a nice idea of a guy who just liked to build castles, and fairytale castles, and work on clocks, you know, the old-fashioned, beautiful clocks actually. So it must've been a nice guy compared to some of them. And this is what you get.

And it's true enough, with the hit and miss idea, if you truly had just kings and queens running the countries, you would think occasionally you'd get one or two that's half decent. But in reality, kings and queens are the fronts. Because the ones behind them, the advisors, the ones who know how to work the machinery of governance, they're the ones who have the power. Especially the ones who run the money. [Alan laughing.] Obviously, to the system. That's what Rothschild was saying. He said, give me the control over the money of a nation I care not who makes the laws. Because he makes the laws. With every loan, the same with United Nations, I've gone through some of them before, actually quite a few of them. Especially today with the World Bank and all that and the money they dish out across the world, comes with all these conditions of how you must adapt to the new cultures, or things you thought abhorrent are now, you'd better do it or you get no loans.

That's how it's always been. Money comes attached to conditions, not just financial conditions but with running and changing and altering your culture, you see. Which weakens you. That's the whole point of it. You can't be conquered as a culture if, unless you allow it to be weakened. You don't realize, it's like the Parthenon in Greece, you know, you have a huge roof there in the temple with all these pillars. That's a lot of weight distributed amongst all those pillars. Architects know how to distribute exactly how much weight to each pillar so it's nice and strong. But you knock one down, you see, that's a tenant of your culture, your system you might say, it's an analogy. If you knock one down, and now the rest of them have a little bit added extra weight to them to share amongst them. Then you knock another one down. Now there's more resting on fewer and fewer pillars. Now you keep knocking them down until you collapse. That's how it's done.

It's very Fabian in a sense, but that's how it's done. It takes a while to get it accomplished, but you're guaranteed for it to happen. You must eventually fall if you keep chipping away. People never realize that if you really, if you really took each pillar, as an example of being 50 years, you could go longer actually, 100, but say 50 years, and say one pillar goes missing. Well in that 50 years, and there's a generation born, and they're up to the age of 50 when the next pillar goes down, you see. So you don't see it so much, you think it's just happening by itself. If it all happened within about a year or two, you'd all get wisened up and say, something else is going on here.

So if you wanted to really take down a nation well you do the Gramsci type of takedown. You take over the culture until you run the culture, you are the culture in fact. That's how you take it down. Bezmenov put it across pretty well too. Yuri Bezmenov talked about the war of the Soviet system against the West was a cultural war really. Because you destroy the culture, everything else falls apart anyway. Folk won't go off and fight for wars and stuff if you destroy the culture. You can't get them unified behind any party in politics. You also make sure, you see, hhhch, even the ones who go into politics that are traditionally psychopathic become worse themselves until they're anything but role models to follow, so no one does follow them. Because they become corrupted even more so than they are by nature. But then when you get the public following the same corruption, mainly through entertainment and through the wars on the culture and adapting into the new systems of sexual revolutions, that came with all the fallout of the sexual revolution, then step-by-step you become degraded and you collapse, you can't stand strong.

So you had the sexual revolution promoted through the movies, that really became a bit more explicit in the 1960s, in Britain that is. They tried it all from the beginning in Hollywood really pushing it, until they were hauled back a bit by different censoring committees. Then they came back out again in the 60s and they pushed it once again. So it's all cultural war. It isn't just what sells. I mean, that's definitely a part of it too. Sex does sell. It's in all the ads and so on. It's a primitive need in a sense, you see. Nature doesn't care about if you can support a child or not or support yourself, as long as you have sex to make sure the species goes on, that's how you're made, you see. So you can always exploit something. It's the same as food. Food you need, you see, or you die. [Alan chuckles.]

Which I think we'll come to again with the Covid stuff as they create massive famines, which is part of the intention to bring you into austerity. But that's a different story again. It's a different type of the war, of course. It's still terror, it's a war of terror upon the public, the whole Covid idea and the lockdowns and so on, and the destruction of your economy in one fell swoop. Awfully good for the World Economic Forum and the Club of Rome, I must admit. Well-planned, it took years to plan it.

Getting back to just the culture itself, you see, if you're a strong culture you wouldn't accept any of that either. [Alan chuckles.] You really wouldn't. You'd have more common sense. You would have this idea, the strange idea that was, that used to be pretty, um, ingrained in people because we fought for centuries to get it. One was privacy. That also was lumped into your rights, you had individual rights, you see. The people have given it all away since 9/11 pretty well under the guise of a war on terror, which is a war of terror on the public which stripped you of all your rights and privacy and all the rest of it.

The second part now is the Covid, you see, so out they unroll what was sitting on the same dusty shelves covered in dust. They blow the dust off it and bring in the 5G Internet of Things and implement it all. And it's all this money apparently, it's just fictitious anyway, but it's all this money to implement all these projects. You can't fix roads and so on because it's not intended, it's not intended they fix roads. Infrastructure is to be falling apart, at least outside the cities. They'll do some work eventually once you're all crammed into the sustainable cities and smart cities as they want to call them. They'll fill in a few potholes but the rest of the country roads they're going to just fill up and close off.

I watched this happening for years actually, the buildup to it with, when I used to do the talks on the United Nations biosphere's and so on. They had these different areas marked off for human habitats, and maps that they churned out. Amazing, for an organization that you pay billions too, but you don't get any right to vote for anything. In fact, you don't even get in to talk about it, you know, with them. It's a closed shop. Nondemocratic. So this nondemocratic system which you support and finance, dictates all the policies for the future. Because they in turn are owned as well, you know, by the same guys that own all your money systems. And again, the guys at the WEF for instance.

So they'll bring in their animal corridors and human habitat corridors. The human habitat corridors follow these big, long highways they were putting up too in the 90s onwards to the present time. That's where you are to live within a certain radius, or outside, around those particular routes, you see. If you're in the long lines outside of them, it's pretty precise, but if you live on the side roads that go off for miles and left and right and East and West, you see, and these roads go north to south, then you have to get closer and closer into the corridors because you won't even get Wi-Fi there. It's quite amazing.

Because I know people who, like myself, for instance, I live just outside the corridor and I can't get the Wi-Fi. Now, if I was in a mile further in, I could probably get it, the signal. But I'm not, so I'm... So you've got all these little encouragements for you to move, that's how it's done, you see. Most folk don't realize you're prompted to make decisions they want you to make, without realizing, you've been given no choice [Alan chuckles.] since they've planned the Wi-Fi future, eh. And that's how they do it.

Their smart cities have been on the go for quite a few years now. I did lots of talks years ago about it, and the organizations again involved. In the cities with the counselors, the have counselors, like in Toronto for instance, city counselors that are supposedly elected, I think. That's a joke too with who they are. I'm sure they're all on the payroll, they get kickbacks. We're living in an amazing system of more open corruption, you see. I think it's always been here but it's more open today because most of the folk, the public don't seem to care so much when it's found out.

But who gave, who decided to just make the smart cities? We know who they were, the different companies and Google and all the rest of them that planned all this kind of thing, with Silicon Valley, yada, yada. Massive projects worldwide, the smart city projects of the Department of Defense for instance, how the future would be, these massive cities, and eventually city-states, you see. That's what they have planned for the future. Right down to even having occasional wars between the new city-states. Just like the old ones, the old walled cities, they'd have these wars, and mainly to do with finances. It would be financial type warfare and sabotage of each other's economies by the new system that would evolve. Which would be again way post-democratic. They might even fade out the whole idea of politicians, which I wouldn't care about because they're on the take anyway.

We wouldn't be in the mess we're in if you had real people and real politicians and real counselors even who really cared about you and did what the laws say that they're there to do. None of them do, eh. None of them do. You take just basic, basic government, it doesn't matter if it's a Republic or so-called, the farce of democracy. But you get a vote and that's it, in either of them, that's it, a vote to get somebody in, that's it. But you forget what it's even supposed to be. It's supposed to be that you sent somebody off to government, either local, like a province or a state in the States, but in Canada it's a province, you send one off there, or one off, and maybe one off to the federal government, you see.

But they're supposed to be one of YOU. It's not supposed to be a full-time profession. It's one of you, who was elected to represent YOU, your area, your state, you see. Not a party. And not corporations or anything else. I mean, all they do is sit there with their hands out for the lobbyists, these characters. That's what they do. They don't represent. So why?... Why?... Why do we go along with it? It's because everything's changed gradually, like the pillars getting taken, until you adapt and think it's all quite normal. It's not normal at all.

It's not normal when all the lobbyists can line up and have, and these politicians have goodness knows how many secretaries to make all the appointments to see different lobbyists. But the general population that they're supposed to represent can't get in to see them. You can't even get a reply from them, or generally some rubberstamped, you know, generic copy of something that's been used before… We feel your pain, signed so-and-so, you know, photocopied, and that's about all you get. We live in a joke, don't we.

And we pretend that we're somehow free. Even though your grandparents and great-grandparents would be in shock to see what you've given up. Not the.. not even knowing you've given it all up, and you're still giving it up. To save your skins you're giving up all your freedoms to fight this, this, this bug out there. Hhhhh! This bug, this invention of a horror movie. After giving us stacks of these movies in the past getting you ready for it. Because you're always trained through fiction, you see. Total lockdowns and plague and pandemic and ooooh, virus, and... And here's what you must, here's how you must behave, and here's the authorities doing... Really?! Is that what they do, eh? Hhhch, you're all trained into the fiction before they supposedly release something, if they did or whatever. And you jump in. And again, they're not taking your rights and freedoms away anymore or less than they were doing it after 9/11. They're keeping you safe... You know, the tyrants call down through, we're keeping you safe. So you have no rights. In fact, if you demand rights, you're putting everybody else at risk! [Alan chuckles.] We're living in amazing times, eh. It truly is amazing to watch it all come out.

I like some of the old sci-fi movies. I mean, old ones. Because it's like old stage plays, and maybe still some today in fact, amateur into the professional stage plays. Where the actors have to really get, make you believe that it's real, whatever they're portraying to you and they're characters are real, you see. Britain was a good country for giving you, and so was the States years ago, for giving you good character actors, you see. They could play the role, very believable role, very adaptable, not just stereotyped into the same role over and over and over like some are. But good character actors make it believable. And no matter how ridiculous, if it's a sci-fi for instance, how ridiculous, and how cheap [Alan chuckles.] the sets were, [Alan chuckles.] you enjoyed it. Because they got into it. They put a realistic enthusiasm in their parts and it's quite good, little cardboard boxes and things like that. Things that a lot of folk, youngsters today would just laugh at because it's just too cheap. They're used to special-effects and big-money and special-effects. Years ago you they didn't need that, you had good acting. You had the human element, more of the human elements to different characters that were evolved and portrayed, so it was really good. I liked that.

But here's the difference, that still was fiction, and you always knew it was fiction. Hm? But what you, again, here's an analogy, you take what they do, which is they try and convince you that what they're trying to entertain you with is real, regardless of the set, regardless of the settings around them on the stage or wherever it happens to be or in the movie. It was almost Shakespearean in a sense, if it's a play, because Shakespeare's stage used to come down into the audience, like a kind of runway, and the audience could see the actors and all that. But the idea was to make you, the audience, participate to an extent in the play. That was really important, and that stayed for hundreds of years, maybe even still today, trying to bring the audience into the stage play, by participation.

That's the difference between good entertainment, you see. But by the same token you always knew that it was entertainment. Yet you transferred all, because for the last maybe 30 years now, increasingly so, and actually even before that, to do with the sexual revolution into the plays and movies that they put on television, it was all to change sexual culture, which is to change and actually destroy the marriage culture and the family unit as it used to be known.

I even joked today, because you talk about the nuclear family. But really, to my mind today, the nuclear family, because everything's got double entendres and so on, the new-clear family today is transparent because there's nothing they don't know about any of you. You are the nuclear family with the data, whereas the old one of course was the nuclear age and all the rest of it. But now you're clear, they can see right through you, and they know all about you. But they want to know more about you than you do. And everybody in your family. In fact, they even know what your family is up to when you don't. [Alan chuckles.] So that's your, that's a little play on the nuclear family.

But you take the settings too of these old Sci-Fi’s, the cheapo Sci-Fi’s, and you would see the characters really get into the, describing something horrible, and alien, and using cheap sets and so on, and keep a straight face! That's a skill. Keeping a straight face, with an expression of consternation and worry, or even fear, you know, by these actors. But you put all that into the Covid thing, and you look at Fauci [Alan chuckles.] and he's... [Alan chuckles.] You want to laugh! I mean, you do. [Alan chuckles.] They keep straight faces... Even though you see the giveaways in their faces, like Fauci. And definitely Bill Gates. I mean, he would flop as an actor anytime. Because there's something else in that character that, ah... There's nothing you could trust in the man. It really shines from his face. The most insincere eyes, hhhch, you've ever seen, as he's prattling on and waving his hands around.

But yeah, they’re telling you to give up all your rights and freedoms and obey them, and demolish the economy. Because this is the great reset, remember. This is the whole Agenda 21, the agenda for the 21st century. The whole thing, not just 2030 and different parts along the way, for the WHOLE thing. Right, not just 15 years apart, the different implementation dates and so on, but the whole thing for the whole century getting rammed down now, you see. Sustainability. Agenda 21. The green new deal. All these things, blah blah blah. Population reduction. Austere living, meaning poverty.

I've said it before, you see it in Britain, that's what they used to call serfs. The serf was the slave, because you’re British for goodness’ sake, and you got this more modern idea of freedoms and you're in a democracy, you know. So you could never have had slaves. They called them serfs. But that's what you were, you are bought and sold with the land. [Alan chuckles.] You were a slave. In fact, if you ran away from the area you were born in, your Lord could have the S branded in your forehead for those who don't know that, eh. And they did that. And they could kill you too.

That's the way it was. That was the land of freedom, you know, land of the free and home of the brave and all that. So that's how they whitewash history to make the next generation go off the wars and fight for a British Empire of course. Of course they wouldn't own any of it, the general population, they just pay for the upkeep of it all and for the militarization of it and so on. Why should businesses pay for their enterprises, for goodness’ sake, when you've got these massive populations that do it for you?

You just make sure there's unemployment at a certain level every so often and young guys will go off and fight. They do, you know, it's quite a natural thing for them to do actually, in any country, if they can't get work. So you just make sure you always keep enough unemployed to go off, and then you tell them they'll be somebody. Because if you're an unemployed young guy you're a nobody, you see. But you go off and kill folk for your country, or for your businesses, and you're a somebody.

And they'll make you proud of it. They do, young guys will get, be proud of it. You know, they feel no shame in what they did. Because they're given basic simple propaganda to believe in. Very simple. Brzezinski said it himself and so did Kissinger, you must always give them simple propaganda. Not elaborate complex propaganda, because they can pick holes in it. Make it simple, keep it simple. They never changed that.

But as I say, we live with so many fallacies of the past, you know. People look at these old, old the awful BBC dramas, they always say that when a country is in decline, you see, when a nation is in decline, when they always give you, promote, use your tax money to make stuff like the BBC does, movies for TV or whatever or plays, on maybe the 17th century or something like that. They show you these cottages and with the thatched roofs some of them, you know, for the peasantry, and the better ones for the lords of the manor. And they're always decent folk, these lords of the manor, you know, and they get their family problems in the dramas and fictions that they give you. And we should all be concerned about the elites' families’ problems, not the peasants who are living on straw on the floor of their homes. [Alan laughing.]

How they can really drastically change society and your impression of what society was. And what it is today. And yet there was a culture. It doesn't matter about how poor folk were, there was a definite culture, absolutely a very strong and rich culture! You'll find it in most countries in fact, underneath it all there's still that decency and a real strong culture, you know. They might've been wearing silks and so on, but they still had a strong heritage. Of course you did. And even that now is getting eradicated because it's their destiny too, it's been planned, predestined for them to be wiped out pretty well or bred out of extinction. And that's the truth of it, folks. It's not my opinion. I've got stacks of information and info from the sources who actually work towards it. That's how it is, eh, you do get false histories.

So yeah, we've never seen so many poor actors compared to the old Sci-Fi ones. We've got poor actors now coming out to terrify you. Then you have all these admissions, lots of admissions from the companies, like SAGE, involved in Britain, and the ones for the States, they've got the ones for the States and Canada too, eh. Nevermind all the other ones, they've got battalions of cyber warfare operatives they call them, thousands of them. They're working for Brigade 77 and so on like that and many other organizations like that doing unconventional warfare. It's all lumped in with unconventional warfare which is a strategy well-funded indeed with special operations and pure psychological warfare.

They do. If you're a nuisance, and if you open up chat rooms and so on, or you even put down comments on anything you put out there on social media in the comments section, you will be infiltrated right away, if you're a problem, if you're a nuisance. You've got people who will give you fake names and all the rest of it who will try to befriend you, because they already found your… Don't forget, when you've got access to Silicon Valley, and the NSA, to your entire personality, and the profiling they've done on you, they can see any weak spots that you've had. They've got your histories too, you know. They'll know how to open that little chink, that, whatever weakness it is, and then they'll try and blow your mind by turning on you after they befriend you, things like that. These are from their operations manuals, by the way, they actually have operational manuals on this.

Your taxpayer funds this, these anonymous pieces of you know what. They're funded by your tax money to try and wreck folks' lives. Can you... This is your government. These are the folk that you vote for, these governments, ah, that employ this filth, by the thousands… to quench any other opinion on any particular topic that the government wants to have eliminated. And you still think [Alan chuckles.] you're a free and democratic society!! [Alan laughing.] What a joke, eh. What a joke.

And yeah, I could go on and on and on about the Covid, but I won't right now. Maybe later I'll give a few articles out. But the thing is, I mean, I don't even argue, debate, that they want you into, with the facts versus what they tell you, you know. Even from, it all comes from the same sources which they will then counter again and deny… [Alan chuckles.] if you've got it all. This is all deliberate psychological warfare. It's a technique that they use. They used it in 9/11 as well. And even before 9/11 they've used the same techniques, where they put out the initial propaganda, and then they say, well this is how it happened. Because you had thousands of folks that saw the same footage and say, well wait a minute here, this looks like controlled demolition. So you immediately put out one or two contrary opinions to it, or you'll see what's been chatted, especially today with social media, in real time they can get folks' opinions on it, you know, guide it to them and they know what's being said.

And before you know it, they've got a whole bunch of other theories thrown out there, with professional, very professionally sounding professors and so on coming out with these ideas. What else could have done this, you see? Until... and see, because before hand, one thing everybody was united on, wait a minute, we've seen this before with control demolitions. You see, that was a unified front. The word is unified. Everybody saw that, that's the conclusion he came to. How do you destroy an opposite? You must divide and conquer. So before you know it, and they know how to do it, they'll even target their news to certain people knowing that this one, they'll fall for this line or whatever, and they'll fall for that line, until you have them all arguing with each other. Then the general population, and folk will come along a year later and look into it, or two years later, get totally confused and give up and just... just deny it all as conspiracy theory. That's how you do it.

They've all been neutralized. Rather than stick to the initial premise, they all saw them falling in like controlled demolitions into their own footprint. They all dropped, boomphfff, bop-bop-bop-bop-bop floor by floor. That was destroyed effectively by, well it could have been an amazing radiation techniques and super this and... Well, who cares? The fact is, you all saw it. If you're unified, then you'd be together, a much bigger opposition. It's harder to ignore a bigger opposition.

The same thing comes along with the Covid, as you know. Initially, they changed the name three times I think, isn't it, three times. Again, they had SARS Cov-2, remember? So if it’s a SARS types virus, they didn't say, well why didn't we all die with SARS Cov-1? You know? Why didn't we? I mean, we didn't get vaccinations all put out that could be for that, did we? I guess it's all forgotten because folk buildup herd immunity to viruses. That's what you do anyway by nature, you see. But what they don't tell you as well, if you take the PCR test, the swab test they're using, which is not meant [Alan chuckles.] for diagnosing, it's pathetic. The inventor said that. But facts don't matter, you know.

Because they're guaranteed to get results. Well, they always pick up fragments of viruses, and they literally amplify them, they multiply them through different techniques in the laboratory to try and see if they could be alive, could it possibly indicate somewhere down the line a live virus. And every country's got different levels of measuring these fragments, you see, so they can get different results. It's useless for testing for that. Apart from the fact, you're always breathing in viruses. It's like with Covid, folk didn't die until you heard of Covid. Suddenly death is happening. But they don't tell you that the same numbers, or maybe even more at times, have died every winter from the flu and the cold. And it's the elderly that are more vulnerable always too, or folks who are compromised with lung diseases and so on. That's just the way it is. It's always been that way.

There's many, there's hundreds and hundreds and hundreds of viruses out there, all the time, that your body fights off. And you know, you don't always have the antibodies to them because after a while, I mean, certain T cells actually have memories, it's almost like a blueprint, they know how to remanufacture the particular antibody if that thing came back. That's how it works, you see. Otherwise with so many viruses out there, you know, and lots of coronavirus types including the common cold as well, with all of them out there your body would, you'd be dead, again with cytokine storms all the time. In fact, there'd be more antibodies to everything that you've had in your lifetime, and didn't know you had, never gave you problems, you fought it off without you even knowing, that's how, a good immune system. But your antibodies, there'd be more antibodies than you'd have red blood cells! [Alan laughing.] It's as simple as that. So your body is a great machine. It can actually stop overproducing them when it's not sensing in their environment the same stimulants from a particular virus so it will switch it off for a while, but it's still got the blueprint how to manufacture it should it come along. That's normal.

So you read bits and pieces of these things coming out of the different medical journals, and it's printed in the papers, and they're very selective not to tell you that your body, and they'll say, oh, you know the... And it was interesting, even Fauci said, oh, there's no guarantee that your own immune system is going to create antibodies that will last very long. Well, the same with the vaccination, why do you think they give you the flu shots every year? [Alan laughing.] So this is the jokes with all these things.

But they know darn well that, you understand, think back to this, what they call the Spanish flu. Think back to the articles you read about it, at least, and there's lots of documentaries about it. Never mind the living conditions of the time. Never mind the fact that lots of them were in the Army at the time during World War I, which was a horrible system where folk died in World War I of disease probably more than anything else, in the trenches for years for goodness sake. A lot of them didn't even get home even for a leave in four years, in Britain. Terrible climate as well and terrible winters. Mud and all that. Uuugghhh. Malnutrition, yada, ya.

But yeah, how come the whole planet didn't die off of the Spanish flu? Without a vaccination? Hm? [Alan chuckles.] Well naturally they develop antibodies and the folk who produced antibodies threw it off. A lot of folk, again, didn't show symptoms of it. That's standard stuff. Certain folk might be more prone, it could either hit you, or the older folk, this is how viruses work. But it also depends on times and conditions, eh. And when you have malnutrition in societies like you still did in World War I, they had rationing going on in European countries, and then you get hit with something… AND that included coal shortages, a lot of coal was going off to the war effort for factories for munitions and for heating, you know, and powering the machinery, the steam. Also for the navies, massive navies. So there's less and less of coal, right, so coal was rationed for domestic use.

So you put these things together and you get a lot of other problems, eh. Including, don't forget too, a lot of folk were dying of flus and things, other flus. And the common cold. And all the other kinds of viral upper respiratory diseases. But facts are, facts get in the way again, you see. Facts are just a darn nuisance when you've got a very poor sci-fi to produce and display to the public, to put on display, and convince the public to give up all their rights and freedoms, and put your whole faith, your whole future, or non-future because you might die of the vaccination, some of folk they said might die, and you can’t sue anybody if you get sick because of it because they’ve passed the laws that they get immunity for giving it, the vaccine companies that is and also the folk who are going to stick it in you, as a pincushion, and get paid for doing it. They're not doing it for free, hhhch.

So yeah, you understand you can't, that's, you're supposed to just accept on faith and accept, well I might die of this. How do you feel at the moment? I feel fine. Do you feel sick? No, no, I'm not sick at all. Well, take this shot anyway and if you die at least you made your decision to take it. And that's it. That's a contract right there actually.

That's how they're putting it across to you. If they even give you, they're supposed to give you, get informed consent before they do any medical procedure on you. That's a medical procedure actually, it's still invasive, eh, sticking something in you. They want you to forget all that and just give up all your right up, to even your own life, to the system and science and corporations that are behind it all. They want to terrify you so much that you just throw you're hands in the air and say, for goodness sake, go on with it then. Then they'll tell you, well this is only the first one of the series of them. Oh.

Now last week, last week I think it was, before, I read the articles again in the mainstream newspapers, that were the people who were getting tested with it. Getting you ready for getting sick by the way. Because as I say, with the first one, said so and so, the test subject, it wasn't so bad, a bit of a sore arm, you know, stiff and sore. It's the second one, this woman said, that it might floor you for a day or two, so you might have to go off work. Well, you won't have to borrow work, you won't have any work anyway, we're all going bankrupt. But yeah, you might have to take days off. Well, something that's going to put you on your back for a couple of days IS doing you harm.

You have to... DO NO HARM is the first rule in the old Hippocratic oath that they used to take. Do no harm. Someone who is going to get floored on their back, who was healthy before by the way, and is going to get put on their back for at least a couple of days, I'd say that's doing them harm. Never mind the fact you don't have long-term studies. There's even articles I'll touch on today where they want their right to put through the vaccinations that they say might have been rushed through initial testing, but they want to put them through, out there without you even getting licensed by the government. You see, no one wants to touch this and get, in case somehow, like some miracle, there could be lawsuits down the road regardless of what they've signed onto.

So what's the game here? Hm? Well, the game is something I did talks on years ago, that they are now calling the immunity passport. [Alan chuckles.] They wanted everyone electronically to have electronic surveillance, from the United Nations, WHO and so on, and some way of registering vaccinations. Not just the occasional thing that you would volunteer for and say okay, you know. But ALL vaccinations that were on the books already, and boosters, annual boosters for everything and so on and so on.

You see, again, we are the business. I don't care what excuse... WE are a business. When folk are becoming multibillionaires off you, that's called a business, you see. And when you exploit the public to get the business, then, hhhch, you are exploitative, and you are also rather evil. And when your governments are in bed with them, that's called fascism, folks, where you must take this company's product, even if it's going to harm you. Simple as that.

We've all went through the whole admissions, which I'll touch on again, from the health authorities in the summer where they had to backtrack on all the Covid deaths as they called them, that were to terrify you, and reduce them by 90, was it 96%! [Alan chuckles.] They were padding everything, for deaths. No matter what you died of it was Covid. And Covid, this wishy-washy particle test, little bits and pieces of a possible virus, that doesn't mean you've got it. It doesn't even mean you've had it. If you had that in you're nostrils, then regardless of what killed you, even accidents on the road, they put you down as a Covid death. So they did, a lot of them did retract that. Officially. And by a massive sum, massive sum. When they go to such lengths to lie to you, why would you go right back to square one where the bogeyman is again, eh? Is this because it's Halloween? [Alan's voice is very deep and gravelly.] Woooo, be VERY, VERY afraid, children, I want to drink your blood. And they're right back to square one again with the same stuff, waving the hands, terrifying you. Same stuff.

When do you want to start trusting the same liars, who were shown to be liars, come the summer with the admissions? But they're right back at it again. And they'll keep at it, they won't give up. And don't forget with their tiered lockdown system from Event 201, and also the Lockstep 2010, and all the other admissions that have come out since from the different organizations working towards this agenda. Do you really think these folk are going to give up? They're not going to give up. It's a world agenda to bring the whole world under a new form of RULERship. Rulership is not government. It's rulership. They might use governance. It's rulership, rulership by themselves, and corporations.

What is it Quigley said? He was all for the agenda, the man who taught the State Department employees in the US, he taught them, generations of them, that ran everything. That's the most important part in the US government, the State Department. They dish out the billions across the planet and decide, it's all private business and corporations and so on and who gets what taxpayer money thrown out to what nation or whatever. All that stuff, you know, who's going to get rich. All these new characters that are brought into it suddenly are billionaires a lot of them, or their friends are, or their families become. It's soo incredibly corrupt. But really, it's not corrupt because corruption would infer that it's illegal. But it's not illegal. That's just it. We live in an incredible fiction of reality, the one they've drafted up for us, you see, and indoctrinated into us.

People have forgotten the joking, I call them jokes for inquiries that they had after 2007/8 supposedly, it was a little reset then too, a little collapse, planned collapse. The heads of the Federal Reserve there and so on, was it Bernanke, there were different ones there, an inquiry and they made it quite plain that they couldn't be prosecuted for what they did and that their system, the Federal Reserve system was a separate body from the US government that could not have any penalties levied against them.

It's astonishing. And folk think it's federal and it's part of... No, no. Nope. All government sections that used to run the countries have privatized, they privatized whole areas long, long ago and farmed it out to private agencies. Again, parts of the fascistic system, you see. That way you can’t challenge anything. Oh, that used to be what government, we used to deal with that part of society, but it's nothing to do with us now so you can't sue us, it's owned by a private company, they do it all for us.

That's how... public-private partnerships. Well, if you're a member of the public do you get a say in the, hhhch, that you're signed on, or even complain that you're signed onto these partnerships? Have you ever seen anything? …any questionnaire asking you for your permission on anything? No. Terminology is so important because that's how they get everything that they want done. By the use of words. Very important, words, aren't they? George Orwell had it in 1984, words, very important the use of words, and these things called words when he was sitting in the cafeteria. Someone who worked in the dictionary next to him came in and they have a little conversation. Oh, you’re working on the latest version so-and-so of the dictionary. Oh yes. He said, did you know that the dictionary used to be, and he put his hands out and he showed him something about this size, about 3 inches or 4 inches. And he says, last year was down to, and shows you, it was something down to about an inch. And he says, but this year it's down to about 1/4 inch. He said, really brother, wow. Because once again, Orwell shows you that this surrealistic system that you're in, they're into, where you have to literally warp your own brain and go through an act of madness to accept it all. Or be discovered that you're still sane. So they say at the table, oh, I see, brother.

So the words are becoming minimalistic, fewer and fewer words. So when eventually you get to a stage where for if you were subversive, a terrorist, I'm talking about like with wrong-think or own-think and so on, they have all these different terms, which they’re coming out with now, they're using them quite openly now, aren't they? You got vaccine hesitancy now. Hhhhh! And they've got agencies employed to overcome your personal, YOU, your vaccine hesitancy. It used to be called your choice. No, you're hesitant. Hmmmm.

So at the table he says, I see, brother. So when there's no more words to express your discontent, or even organize to fight and become terrorists, then the terrorism will be obsolete, it couldn't happen because you can't convey the thoughts. Precisely, brother. And that's where you're going, folks. Linguistic minimalism. And they then implant all these new words. Have you noticed how it's just a whole barrage of new terms come out recently? I don't even bother trying to find out what they are anymore. I don't care. I don't need to lose my sanity. War. Complete war on everything including vocabulary. It's really interesting.

Before I go, for this part, I'll just mentioned you should go into cuttingthroughthematrix.com. I always say the same talk. Don't just dismiss it or turn off your ears. Because it's all coming down very quickly. If you can't find my talks, I get suddenly cut off or whatever, go into cuttingthroughthematrix.com. Look at all my official sites which are listed there. Copy that, take a note of it so that if one goes down hopefully you can still get me on another one. These are all my official sites. Other sites will use my talks out there, and as long as they don't change anything, you know, they can use them. But my official ones are my .com site and my official, every one is an official site on the .com site that's listed there. Make a note of it. It's awfully important because they're going to, under the different stage 2, 3, 4 and 5 tier lockdowns and so on, they also upped the ante against going after folk who won't agree with it.

They call them social influencers.

A social influencer is someone that collects facts and has got the ability to put them across to people. That's a dangerous thing in this day and age. So they're at war with you. They're at war with you. Make no mistake, this is war, total war on the whole population, even the ones who don't know what's going on, they've got a war against them to bring in a new system which they must give obeyance to. A system that they talked about for years trying to get you to deindustrialized totally, going back to a preindustrial age where folk died of all kinds of pneumonias because they couldn't even heat themselves nevermind have decent nourishment and so on.

It's all to come back, you see. Under necessity. There's too many of you. Too many of you. Even though all the European countries were diminishing in populations. They weren't ever that high to be honest with you compared to other nations. But they were good, the people were good, and they listen to their betters that said, that's okay, two to a family, you know, and that will be just replacement rate and no more. You start getting one to a family and then you are below replacement. But even so, it's not overpopulation. In fact, if you were to meet the targets they wanted you to meet in the 1930s, 40s, 50s, 60, 70s and 80s, you'd done awfully well, you were good citizens, you see.

But then they flood your countries with mass migration from countries that have never heard of minimalistic families, that no one had told them to cut back on population, so they'll still breed and so on. Then they turn around, oh there's too many of you now. Well, what’s it supposed to be? You're being good and you're not having as many children. Well, now that's bad now. It's bad for you because you'll die off. [Alan chuckles.] But there you go, you can't, you see, it's not meant that you satisfy your owners.

It's what's being planned for the world and certain groups especially had to be completely eradicated. I was thinking of that today. I was looking at the articles in Ireland and Scotland and I thought, how come countries that literally had genocides carried out on them, and they were planned genocides, let's make no bones about that, you know. That you'd think, and again it shows you how the great work that was done on them to make them all forget, and by again, faked history and all the rest of it and it was potatoes that killed you off, bad potatoes, bad spuds and stuff like that, you know. But that was planned genocide.

Yeah, people used to say to me, the Highlands are so beautiful in Scotland, you know, soo beautiful. And I'd say yeah, you can go there, and you see these wild mountains and valleys. Beautiful. A good day is when it's not pouring rain. It's beautiful empty places. But it's a tremendous feeling of sadness there, if you’re Scott, at least for me anyway. I used to tell the tourists, yeah, it's hard to imagine, millions of people used to live all in those places. What happened to them? Well, they were slaughtered. Slaughtered and starved. And deported across the world to other nations, to build it up, for Britain, for the UK, the British Empire.

So bad too that when you read the historian and author John Prebble wrote some good books on the Highland clearances. I think one of them is called The Highland Clearances. The Lion in the North was another one, and Culloden I think perhaps too. He was a historian also for the British war association basically, the military association, the Department of Defense basically, so he knew his stuff. He went into the histories of what happened. And had access to it too because there's so much they don't tell the public when it comes to planned slaughter. So he put some good information out there, enough that he was allowed to put out, put it that way.

He talks about the rebellion in 1745, the uprising as they call it, which ended in Culloden in 1746. But the clearances itself went on for years after that. There was a rampage just to go out and try hunt down everybody, hhhch, across the entire Highland region of Scotland. They wiped out so many families. Some of the soldiers, as I've mentioned before, did write about it when they went back home to England, and to the southern Scotland, a lot of them were southern Scottish too in the southern regiments. They talked about the atrocities that they had seen and maybe even participated in too.

I've seen that, the originals, that were documentation that used to be in Inverness, and obviously ones in London as well. But the plan was to get rid of them, literally, put everybody to the sword, you know, man, woman and child. Anybody who was suspected... just the fact they lived in the Highlands after a revolution, where a small part of them joined the revolution for the then Prince Charles Stuart, a small part really joined it, a very small, compared to the rest of the population. It didn't matter, they also wanted to get rid of these upstarts. Because the Scots had a habit of saying no to things, you know. That's a darn nuisance, that, when you've got folks that just put their feet in and say, I'm not going to do that, no way.

Tyrants hate that kind of attitude. The disobedience is just awful. So, they got rid of them. They sent the troops after the battle of Culloden after them and they went through the Highlands with complete impunity. The same kind of impunity you're going to get for damage you caused or death due to giving folk vaccines, complete immunity from prosecution or anything else. So they sent the military loose on them. There were no tribunals. There was no lists, grabbing folk, yeah, oh, they had them too. But for the rest of the population, they went through the Highlands, and if you spoke your language, Gaelic, hhhch, that was enough to get you killed. Men, women and children. And some of the troops were in the British Army, they'd write about it later, absolutely horrific things they witnessed.

So yeah, beautiful place, and you've got to realize that millions of folk used to live there, and there would be a lot more in this day and age if they hadn't been wiped out. Other ones were put into ships when they had the clearances, once the world started to get a whiff of this genocide going on, they said, oh, we’re sending them off to other colonies, eh, for part of the British Empire. So then they started getting old, and they've got records of the old ships that were scheduled for being destroyed because they were sinking. Hhhch. Old, old ships, old wooden ships, and they put a lot of these folk on it, by force, at bayonet point, on the West Coast supposedly to go to Canada, America as they called it then. The relatives, the records are all there in the museums, of relatives watching them, these boats go off, and they were sinking before they hit the horizon, they were already sunk and the folk were drowned. Boat after boat after boat after boat. As they knew they would sink. That's how you get rid of people. Yep.

So yeah, you think about Scotland and Ireland, and I say how, they're getting the worst of the lockdowns. They've got these tyrants that are now... They came out supposedly to get their independence, hhhch, then they end up under the European Union and a worse tyranny. But they also ended up really with a communistic kind of government running them. Don't forget, in other words they want, communism is a front, it always was a front for something else to dominate you. But also for technocracy, the same groups that they say efficiency is run by experts, society has got to be efficient, you can't have this rights thing, that's a nuisance, that slows down progress, you know. We want to put roads through here, roads, and move folk from here over to there and... that's progress. You know, having to butter up the people to, eh, it's just too slow and cumbersome. The actually said that at the Club of Rome, hhhch, Maggie Thatcher said that she when she joined the technocratic groups actually after retirement. She says, we can get things done without having to go through public process, or public ridicule. Or opposition.

So yeah, as I say, cuttingthroughthematrix.com. Buy the books and discs, or straight donations are really welcome. Because it does cost a lot to keep things just ticking along here and I want to maybe, if I can, do a lot more, get good equipment and get better Internet access. Because I'm getting hammered. I'm in the country and I get hammered through satellite. Because they've got opposition and yeah, they'll just start slowing it at the right time. During the day it slows like crazy. It's not cheap either by the way. And I could never use my maximum quota because I never get the speed to use it all anyway. You can see them slowing it down. Unless you stay up after midnight. So it's good for business sense like Bernays said that, rather than give the customer good products, change the customer to suit your product. And that's what they do on the Internet. And under the Covid guise especially, they're doing, oh well, you know, it's Covid slowing you down. They actually said that to me when I complained, Covid, it's Covid that's doing it. I thought, oh really, Covid's in the satellite, oh well, maybe the satellite caught it. It's got nothing to do with reality. They're bringing more and more customers on it too, to a certain amount of bandwidth, so that using the Bernays techniques, just change a lot of them that are existing, during the Covid lockdowns, to stay up all night so they can get some speed. This is how they do it. This is the, you know, society is so corrupt. That's called smart marketing, eh, smart business. Being corrupt is smart business, not serving the public by fulfilling the obligations that you're tied into.

So go into cuttingthroughthematrix.com, send a few bucks my way. PayPal is fine. Cash is fine. Personal checks is fine. And Money Gram still works too. Hopefully we can get things to tick along a bit longer as we go through the biggest changes of your lives, folks. This is it. This is something that I was waiting for, for years, I knew it would happen. And here it is. It isn't, there's nothing that's getting pushed through that they didn't try to get pushed through using climate change. Which again was a front for complete sustainability, cutbacks and everything, postconsumer society.

Again, with Agenda 21. Everything is the agenda for the 21st century. Every part of it, right down to the abolition of private vehicles eventually. You'll go through the electric phase but there will be the abolition of vehicles permanently, unless it's for essential vehicles only. That's actually, here's that essential again, eh, they're using it under Covid, essential vehicles only. Which meant really fire, ambulance and police you see. Because you won't need it in your smart cities, eh. You won't need to go anywhere unless you've got a bike. So that means all the older folk, or folk who've got arthritis, well, forget them, you know, they're just written off, you know, they're disposable.

You are in a ruthless system. That's what Bertrand Russell said. He was all for it, the scientific tyranny. He knew it would be a, he knew it would be merciless, he said that, scientific tyranny, but he was all for it, as opposed to any other kind of tyranny, he said, I hope it will be a scientific one. Yep. He's also the guy who's famous for calling folk useless eaters. N-n-n.

But yeah, we're living through amazing times. So again, send a few bucks my way and we'll see what we can do. Because this, this is to change everything. This is to be the most momentous event, I would say more momentous actually with the long-term plans that have to come, to be implemented. The fact that they were planning this before World War I and II a lot of them when you read their books, hhhch, in the proper societies that run the world. But the most momentous thing in hundreds of years.

When you look at the World Economic Forum and again, another organization that we don't get to vote for, if you accept it at all and you go along with its agenda you're bowing to fascism. The top corporations and banks on the planet, that have their CEOs there, eh? And they don't believe in democracy. They are all for the function... You see, this is where you, as you're getting entertained to death, I used to give talks on being entertained to death years ago, years and years ago, and how you don't know, you're being entertained but you also are being programmed through all the entertainment. But you will be entertained to death. All the thoughts that you could have had for yourself that originated in your own mind and the pathways that your mind could run down with your own thoughts, that would have developed and expanded your horizons and your thinking, and it's, I'm so sad that those years are gone, you'll never get them back again.

But you'll mention all the, you'll remember all the series that you watched, and dramas, all the way back to, was it The Rifleman they had in the States, I think. Wells Fargo, hm, The Lone Ranger. Then getting worse and worse up to the different moonshine epi.. was it those guys that did the moonshine things, that wear tight, tight pants until... I think they could sing soprano. The Dukes of Hazard. The immature silliness of the Dukes of Hazard that you're fed this with what they called entertainment which has kept you infantile, noninvolved. You had all these different things that addicted the youngsters to watch, you know, which also programmed them. But it's like Lala your life away, that's how I used to think of it, Lala your life away. That's part of the intention of it. But no, you never get years back.

Don't forget, you develop as a person through your own thinking. It doesn't mean that everything's original, you take in information from books and what you can glean for yourself, if you're on a quest you might say, an interest in something. But just sitting back with your, you know, and people zonk out in front of television after work, it's understandable, the mouth is open and the eyes just, and getting programmed with mainly nonsense, because it's just rubbish [Alan chuckles.] that would probably do more harm than good if you were to even try and copy the fantasies. But that's how you're programmed. At the same time it keeps you off the streets. It stops you from complaining about your life.

And there's no doubt about it, you know, at a certain age all youngsters, they know this in psychodynamics, and they go through different milestones of development on children up to adulthood. They know exactly the years, the time spans where different things happen, certain phases you go through, and it's just like clockwork, it just happens, you see. Some cultures are awfully good at managing it, so it doesn't destroy the culture as the youth go through these phases. Other ones become relaxed and the ones that become relaxed eventually get destroyed because the culture is weaponized, and they don't know it. Neither did the youngsters themselves who often really think they're doing it all themselves, that it's a revolution for this, it's a music revolution. It's a pop revolution. It's a cultural revolution. It's a sexual revolution. They're giving the word, don't just brush off the idea of revolution. It's part, most revolutions are bloodless remember, or fairly bloodless, but they're meant to alter society. They're planned that way, it doesn't, they never happened by themselves.

A revolution is always planned. They're very important, again, this Gramsci type technique that the communists use, the front group communism. And that's the beauty of communism, it can take so many different guises or covers or names, that folk don't recognize it for what it really is behind the mask. That's why it always used front groups in the West, when it was the old Soviet type system. At least that's how it was given to the public, because it wasn't really Soviet, but it was a Soviet type era communism they would push. They had churches and everybody signing on to it because they'd all, they all have do-good type agendas, you see. Do you believe in...? Yeah. You think that's right or wrong? Oh, that's not right, no. Sign this. And they would sign on and become a national front for this, that or whatever. That's how you get the changes made, you see, they only read the propaganda that's dished out to them through handouts or newspapers, the selected, purpose-made newspapers, every month or so. You change society bit by bit by bit. Massive warfare programs really done under a more peaceable normalistic guise. That's how it seems so innocuous and harmless. And that's how they succeed. That's how it succeeds.

So yeah, you're always going through different parts of revolutions, and they know exactly the age groups to hit the young with, you see, and use that energy and that dissatisfaction. Youngsters... we've all been there. You really think, well, unless you've been created by something else. Hhhch, but most of us have been there, and you think that there's got to be more to it all than this, you know! Because you don't realize your metabolism itself is kind of wired, without drugs, and you, what else can I do today? And days are a bit longer, you see, have you noticed that, when you're younger your days are... You're fascinated, God, I did all this today, when I was seven, you know, and I went here and went there and climbed this tree and all the rest of it, and jumped over that little berm, that stream. You come back home, and you had done a whole host of things, you know, eventually get something to eat and you'd conk out in a chair, that was it till the next day. That's fantastic sleep you'd have.

But you'd seem to have days would stretch, if someone had a watch, you'd say what time is it? And you'd swear an hour or two had passed, and only about 15 minutes had passed, you see. Because your mind is so occupied with so much. As you get older you've seen all the rotten movies a thousand times. And your life is boring. And you have nothing more to look forward to, to an extent.

You've seen all the cons from politics. You've seen the corruption in politics, the corruption in businesses, corruption in everything and you're a bit jaded, you see, so time can kind of, it seems to go pretty fast and because nothing interests you anymore. For most folk unfortunately, they lose interest in things. And that's pretty sad. Because it really needn't be that way, if you had a real decent system to live in.

But getting back to the Irish and the Scots as an example, you see, they were slated for extinction pretty well long ago, at the end of the rebellion in Scotland in 1745 where they were trying to get the Stuarts back on the throne, you see, instead of this Germanic, they call them the Germanic line that came into Britain. That yeah, there was a massive genocide on the Highlanders. The memory is still there today, at least it was through, up until, oh, I went through there in maybe the 70s and back again in the 80s later on for a couple of years. But just going through it and talking to folks that knew, and families in the north into the west, they, ah, the memories were there, a lot of them.

A lot of them had family memories of it too. And other places as well, you had whole, whole villages just wiped out, you know, they'd bring them to the ground, under the guise of replacing people with sheep. That was another thing they did too, this new economy would be not clans anymore, you are replaced with sheep. The lords pretty well all went along with it, this feudalistic system of lords, as they wiped out the clans and the clan chiefs, you see.

That's the sadness. You see, saddness is in, you go to places where there had been big battles, and horrific slaughters happened. You find, I do, I sense these things. You can actually go in certain places that you never knew battles took place, then you feel it, but you just know it, and then you go and check it up. And sure enough, you'd be right enough. It's almost like an imprint of something is in the space there, it's there, you know, and the horror of it all too.

When they, I think they had an episode of Star Trek many years ago, where again you had lots of your programming from, actually for the multicultural society, the quest went for free trade across the universe, you know. [Alan chuckles.] But yeah, you had one episode where I think it was Spock sensed a ship that had suddenly just got wiped out, and he felt, they felt the immed... the annihilation, the nonexistence and, you know, bomff, instantly, of all these people who'd just suddenly gone. That's pretty well what it's like too, I think, with horror and genocide and slaughter, these things stick with you, you know.

But yeah, you've got lovely places and lovely glens, and nothing left, no houses left standing, they were burned out. The people in them too were often burned, you know, that was the way of it. Beautiful. Um, the first country that brought democracy is this, you know, this Britain idea, this UK idea, and yeah, champion of the peoples.

Wolfe was there too. Wolfe was a lieutenant, or a captain I think, at Culloden on the British side. He did write about it in his memoirs. Again, they always admire the bravery of folk who are, again, this resolute idea when you're set to go into battle and take the consequences that it was going to hurt, and this is death, and you all know it, you know. Just like today, the forces of dominance over the planet are going to destroy are set in determination, this resolute, they won't back down. Come hell or high water, and total slaughter amongst the people or starvation, they're going to go through with this agenda, folks.

Back to Culloden and the Highlands. The folk literally, hhhch, today probably have forgotten most of it, what really did happen. Wolfe himself did talk about that they did slaughter the wounded on the battlefield. They tossed them into graves, they were still alive a lot of them. They went after the families, even in places like neighboring places like Inverness, anybody who they fought and they found in the battlefield they would go after, they would track down their families and so on and slaughter them as well. Right across North and East to West. It went on for years. No courts for all of that.

If it hadn't been so successful in wiping out the memories of all of that, then perhaps you would have had a more prosperous and decent real system belonging to those countries, Scotland and Ireland, you know. Real system, not this pseudo-communistic technocratic system where literally, in they come, hhhch, and they're opening their borders for... Why would you fight for nationalism and your peoples and your histories, and then open your borders to eliminate the people in the country? It's another form of genocide. It is.

The UN had to admit that too by the way, that part of, one of the definitions of genocide is the eradication of the domestic peoples in their own countries by promoting other languages, as an example, or even forbidding the languages. Well, Gaelic was forbidden for years in Scotland. You know, that goes under genocide too. You couldn't wear a tartan, your local tribe, clan, or area, that's where it all came from, your local area's tartan, you couldn't wear it, or it was an instant execution. No trial again. Execution if you wore a tartan. And spoke Gaelic.

Now, once again, the people who run [Alan chuckles.] the Bank of England [Alan chuckles.] and so on, [Alan chuckles.] they don't waste anything. What is it you hear in the CFR and all these different groups? I can remember when 9/11 happened and one of the CFR members came on and said, how can we use this disaster to our advantage? The CFR remember, I have it written down who he is too, it's on the tip of my tongue. That's how they've always been. They don't see things the way you do. They see everything as an opportunity. So they forbid the people to speak their own language, Gaelic, you know, as a step to total deculturalization and annihilation, apart from slaughtering them too. And forbidden from wearing their tartans, on pain of death, you know. Except for the young guys, except if you would sign onto the British army and get sent off to where Britain is conquering other nations, you could talk Gaelic then and wear your tartans. Never allow a good opportunity to go to waste, eh?

So Wolfe mentioned that too, because eventually he took a bunch of them over to Québec, over to Canada, and fight the French at the time. That was the whole idea, Britain was fighting to control the whole Americas at the time, or the North Americas as they called it at that time. But Wolfe mentioned it too and he says that, he said regiment after regiment to hit the heights of, was at the height of Abram, I think it was Abram, they call that place over there in Québec, where the French were embedded, you see. Eventually they let lose the ones who won the battle, they let lose the Fraser Highlanders that were the remnants of one of the clans that got slaughtered at Culloden. They'd signed up to keep their heritage, and they were promised to be able to send for wives and so on if they fought. Of course they lied and all that too. But he said they went up on, this is like more modern warfare really, but they still went into battle with the sword and shield and the battle-axe, you know. He wrote quite a good description of it. And they won, you know. You're awful useful if you're, and that's all Scotland had since then was this strange pride, worked on tremendously by London, as being, you know, warriors basically. Use the warriors for their purpose, but not for Scotland, and personally you got nothing out of it.

But that's what young guys would be, all you can be, and be somebody. And you know, still to this day a lot of them still join up to be somebodies. And this is the age of mercenaries now, we don't really have, especially since the Cold War ended you don't really have other reasons for going into other countries. Forget all this pretense that you're some kind of modern social worker because you have blue caps on for the UN or NATO. You know, you go in with grenades and firearms, you're still a soldier. A peacekeeper, sorry, they call them peacekeeper. You don't go to war, you go to peace, you keep the peace. You don't invade countries, you go in to keep the peace. Doublespeak, eh?

But anyway, yeah, that's what happened, as I say. So it's so sad to watch countries that really did, and it's documented genocide, you know, documented, literally end up being initially socialistic. Because they're in such dire straits, after two world wars, a depression… World War I, a depression, into World War II, and after that just utterly devastated and broke. So you end up with this kind of socialistic kind of system that initially seems to work for you. You do get something for you and make sure you get something back for all the pain you've endured, for centuries. And before you know it, you're dominated by folk who have a different idea of democracies.

Forget democracy and socialism, it doesn't go together, in socialism. It's an excuse to dominate and rule efficiently under technocracy. Which is just on behalf of those who already own you. Under the modern system you've got to understand you have to have a purpose. Battles, you had battles before going all the way back, not just to Hume and other ones too, philosophers and, but long before that was the purpose of people. Right into World War II even Germany, they had debates at the time, do we, are the people there to serve the corporations and the economy, or is the economy there to serve the people? That's still going on today. It's actually over, according to all those who rule you at the moment. You're supposed to serve the corporations. That's why you're supposed take vaccinations when the corporations make them. You've got to take their products, as an example, and do what you're told.

You keep getting fewer and fewer choices on everything. I said this before, you have these signs and symptoms, it's like disease, there's signs and symptoms of disease. That's how you can often identify what's wrong. It's the same thing with society. Signs and symptoms, eh. And when your choices are getting taken away from you, bit by bit, and you say, well that's okay, I don't, I don't care, I'm not driving much now, I don't really need gasoline, you know, petrol. But wait a minute. Your transportation that brings you your food, the trains are run by diesel and bring you your food and all the goods that you need are all transported with this. So you'd better start caring. It doesn't matter if you use this thing or not, you are using it, at least these goods brought to you certainly are using them.

Don't you start to get it? So you shouldn't be against something that's vital to your own survival or the survival of others. Then you start saying, oh you know, and I laughed too, with inflation, this creeping, creeping inflation. They always show you the cost, when you're reading old the books and so on, they'll tell you about, what a 1,000,000 pounds could buy you in 1900, is probably about, I don't know, about 100,000,000 today with inflation and devaluation of the dollar and pound and so on. But yeah, you just think about it. It's incredible what you could get for even, like a few hundred pounds a hundred years ago, where you could maybe buy a brand-new car for 400 back in the 1930s or whatever it was. But the fact is, it's devalued, and you adapt, and you adapt, and you adapt and adapt. So much so, and this is part of the reason the con men do it too, oh you know, the public are noticing, eventually they'll need like big satchels or sacks on their backs for cash. Because the same things they're buying, it takes more and more and more money, so you either wear out your pant pockets with coin, or, they give you paper. That's one of the reasons the paper came out too. It wasn't just the fact that there's nothing backing it, or you wouldn't think, you wouldn't know, you couldn't prove someone was backing it even when it used to be.

But yeah, when they first did away with the physical pound, or a sovereign, you know, or a physical one, then they came out with banknotes. You see it in the old Sherlock Holmes movies and so on, they try to be original to the time period and so on, and you'll see a pound note, or a 5 pounds note, and they'll pull out this big, gigantic wallet, you know, they had special pockets made for their wallets inside their coats. The pound note was almost a foot long. Hhhch. It looked impressive, you see, that was the idea. Well, it's not gold or silver but it's, pah, look at that! You know, that's, wow! And then they got smaller and smaller, even with that. Because as they get smaller, it's showing you the currency is worth less and less and less as well.

Even today if you go shopping for food for a month, just the once a month, you would need a big fat thick wallet to hold all the paper or plastic money they're using. The plastic notes, they have that in Canada. So for most folk they've taken it now, well yes, it's much simpler to have digital money, and let the companies take it off for you. Completely forgetting that during Great Depression's, in fact in 2007/8, the banks can freeze your assets, they can freeze your money, they can freeze their bank machines, today, and you have nothing left to use. You should always have choices.

The choices are not getting eliminated for your benefit. It's for a desired outcome. Again, under the great reset there's to be a totally digital surveilled economy. Yeah. Right down to, they already, remember we tried, they've even done that to an extent with yard sales you'd have in the summer. You have little balloons and signs saying yard sale at the weekend. They'd even start eliminating the yard sales with inspectors for an underground economy. Or someone just selling off some junk maybe once a summer, they might get 20 bucks or 30 bucks for the junk, but the government wants its cut off that. You see, you own nothing. Even when it's used, hhhch, you own nothing.

In crown lands under the British system, I think they owned, what was it, 4 inches of your topsoil supposedly is yours, everything below it, if they discover anything, is owned by the Crown. Yep. Was it Egypt, you look at the old declarations from Egypt, the praises they sung to the gods. The gods were the pharaohs and their families, eh. Nothing's changed. But they'd have these great prayers to them, you know, and they'd say things like, oh great Sun God so-and-so, Amenhotep the blah blah blah. Now, that was the priest, but they'd pick a pharaoh, and they'd say he's a sun, he is a sun God, you see, and everything under the sun, in the air, on the ground, under the ground, in the water is owned, is his, everything is his, you see.

It's good to be a, have these ambitions to be a king... like a pharaoh, because the profits are pretty good, returns are good on your investment, if you can con the people to accept it. You always must make sure to you have an awfully good priestly class because the priestly class really, um... And again, the psychology that went into the priestly class in Egypt is fantastic when you look at the different sects that were authorized, you see. You had ones for women, making sure they're all on board with you, you know. Because you gotta get groups that feel your pain, eh. Then you have the ones, you'd even have priests, men priests that would be the priest of Isis, you see, and they'd castrate themselves. So you had all kinds of priests that served different functions in society. They stood for certain things in society, like even the animal kingdom, the ones would have powers over this and powers over that. They had magicians too, eh, you find some of them talked about the magicians, they named certain ones.

Amenhotep that they used in the movie The Mummy I think, was actually a real one, a real character, a well respected one. Because they had a temple for him, and the stairs were worn right down so it was well, well frequented. So he was definitely the go-to priest obviously, even after death... for favors in certain aspects that you wanted to happen. So, important stuff like that.

So yeah, the psychology is quite fascinating how you keep people obeying and accepting the system there. It really is fascinating. Right down to their descriptions of disaster. Because don't forget, we live in age and an era where most things are visual for people. Unfortunately so. They don't read so much. They can't get into a book and get into the world, where that book has such relevance to them, for the rest of their lives, by picturing things. Your mind does expand when you are, again, getting back to Shakespearean plays, you're participating in the drama, you see. You might see something different in your own mind, slightly different from a person next to you. That's the beauty of the variations, the varieties of the takes on any particular given product of entertainment back then. In the offerings, as they say.

But you've got to realize we're jaded. We're very much jaded. Right down to the youngsters today, they want Sci-Fi’s... The old sci-fi movies with monsters in them, like prehistoric monsters, were, it was a profession that, it was a trade making those little monsters. They made them out of different, it's like kind of plasticines. But they have to make the arms move a little bit and a little bit and little bits, like a frame-by-frame thing. A lot of work in them. Some of them are really, really well done. That's all gone because of the computerization of things today, it's all done on the computer pretty well. It's a shame in a sense.

Before that too, you didn't have it, you only had descriptions by good storytellers. The Greeks were good at storytelling of course, good orators. So you ended up with where you read the descriptions of horrors happening in Egypt, and they had horrors when again when pharaohs died as an example, or members of their family. But horrors too with droughts, when the droughts happened and the rains didn't come all the way from Uganda, the mountains of Uganda down the Nile, eh, then horrible things happened. And they had fantastic storage facilities underground for reservoirs and so on. They were not dumb people, believe you me. But they also had the occasional invasion. Don't forget too that they had an empire, so they did a lot of invading themselves. But when they had terrible invasions, they recorded everything. That's one good thing about them, they recorded so much. Literally written in stone, much like the covid agenda, you know, nothing's going to change it. And you…

For instance, when the Habiru came in and the sea peoples, the invasion that came into Egypt at one point, and they'd been speculating if they were driven in again through a famine time caused by droughts and so on. Because the climate's always changing, right. It was changing before there were humans on the planet. But anyway, there was one scene where this enemy, and they were, and they hated these particular invaders that came in. They'd say they were the cruelest most evil people ever. They were not, they didn't go by any honor, decency, code or anything like that to the people they were conquering, the Egyptians. Some of the overseers in Egypt, one of the main ones in fact said that they tortured and then killed his sons in front of him, for delight. They also cut off the arms of the people and put them on, in carriages, and towed them around the city to terrify the people. A war of terror. They understood terror, eh.

But hearing them describe it, they talked about things which really was a dramatic way at the time of getting a tremendous pain across, a point across, of horror and pain and loss, where they'd say that the sky was falling. They're talking about you personally, when your whole world was falling apart and your family was dying and so on. So the stars falling out of the sky, the trembling of everything, something that you would imagine when, because your whole world is getting shattered, that's what they're telling you. This is the descriptions that they used. It's really impressive to me how they put it across.

They're describing the same kind of thing the families, for instance, in Scotland, they were getting genocided indeed, were experiencing towards... Everything is coming, you can't, your whole lineage is coming to an end. Along with everyone you know. And you're waiting for God to intervene, it's not happening. Everything, this is like the scream of death, the final one, you know. The Egyptians portrayed it awfully well in their memoirs with individual families of what happened, you know, and the ground was trembling and, you know, stars were shaking in the sky and it was falling... Because they should be, you understand, they should be like that, that's how it should be.

It's the same thing I've often thought about with, I don't how I got on this subject at all, but I was thinking about when people die in your own, in YOUR life, you see. Or pets die, hm. How many of you have had an animal, a cat or a dog, and had to go to the vet and it dies? The next thing you know you're walking the street or whatever and you had a tremendous... you've got that loss there. Death is a loss, you know, be it a person or a pet or whatever. Tremendous loss. But if you go out there, people are just the same. But inside you're feeling that same thing as the ancient Egyptians, the sky is falling, everything's shattered, everything's… Because it's in you, you see. But everybody around you is continuing in a way that perhaps you think to yourself they shouldn't be, you're trying to explain, it shouldn't be, something so important should stop the world for a little while, shouldn't it, that's what you think. That's what you feel. And people are nice enough but they're again, everything is impartial with them, that serve you or you buy something or whatever it happens to be. But you can't share your grief amongst them, and you wonder why normality is still continuing, you see.

This is why you can never let these things be dismissed and allow yourselves to be ruled by people who want us to be run like machines in technocracy. Where they're training you now that they want to put you down, oh sorry, it's assisted suicide, or euthanasia, if you become sick, you see, or a burden on society. Don't you feel guilty of being a burden to society? You're seeing that in the Covid thing. Bioethics groups are already out there, I put out their PDFs from the Rockefeller foundation as they're advising the government on how to cope with this, right down to bioethics, who should get medicines and who should not? Who's worth saving, who's not worth saving? Who's essential and who's not?

They want you all to accept it under this kind of a massive deadly plague. They never stop, do they? And they can't stop now. Because evil and tyranny become far, far worse the closer they become to be discovered as to who they are and what they are and what they're doing. They have no option now but to go all the way and be ferocious about it. Because you would have to eventually go after them and arrest them for the worst crimes against humanity. With the WEF and the Club of Rome and all the other groups involved that we don't elect, that have decided that they have the right to run our lives, and that we exist in their system on their sufferance, as long as we've got a purpose that they need us for individually.

Hhhch. Oh, I wasn't at that, were you at that meeting? Did you sign away all your own ability to think and do for yourself? And let them rule your lives for you? Or take it away for that matter? No.

So yep, you'd better start to understand what's going on here, the biggest evil event planned to be a worldwide war type scenario. It took years to plan. It took years to set up the right people across the board in politics and civil service, and so-called Ministers of Health and so on. They put them in the right place at the right time, all completely on board. They knew they would be. I'm sure they'll be well rewarded, all of them, for it. It took years to plan all this. But it also tells you, you see, the system that you were getting entertained with that kept you in Lala land, that gave you all of this, was already operating, like when you were in Lala land, and hhhch, they were keeping you kind of compliant back then.

And I suppose I'm talking about all of this tonight, because I don't really plan these talks, but during the day I noticed that Sean Connery was dead, eh? 90 years old. That was the whole idea, was James Bond movies, you see, James Bond and the waning British Empire that of course was relived again as long as James Bond was going across the world sorting it all out, eh? and doing amazing things, and always fighting and shooting and stuff like that. Completely different from general intelligence work which is pretty boring for most folk.

But it gives excitement to a lot of people's lives and so on that idea of it, of a Bond type character. Of course with his little benefits like all these women that just went gaga and threw themselves at him, ttt, wherever he went, eh? Immediately as well. Immediately. It's just astonishing that. Then you had all the good songs they put into it, like Shirley Bassey, eh. Shirley Bassey, we used to call her Birley Shassey as children, eh. She would do these kind of little movements and as she sung. And she BELTED out the song, what a pair of lungs, eh! Whoooof, she belted out these songs. They were well suited to that movie, that was part of its enchantment.

But ordinary folk at the time, because it was pretty miserable when the movies came out for most folk with all the power cuts. They had power cuts in Britain then. They had, again, back to austerity, eh, all the debts to pay from the world wars and stuff. So they let the working classes have a bit of escapism. They would see places on the screen, these... and it was a big screen remember, that they couldn't imagine ever going to, hm, exotic places and having a great ole time to themselves. Of course it all happened inside a movie house.

So you had James Bond, that started off, it says, as a bricklayer in Scotland. Tried the Navy when he was young and got discharged after about three years because of an ulcer and things like that. He worked at different things. He was into the bodybuilding; he went into some of the competitions. I think he was picked up by or spotted by, I think it says Mae West or something like that, one of these actresses, old actresses who put him forward for tests and for movies and stuff and that's how he got into it. So good for him, you know, because very few folk had that kind of chance to get out of the rut, as they say, in those particular days. He did okay for himself, that's for sure.

So he represented an era, a big, long era, right, during the same era that again the cultural wars and revolution that was going on. That was always part of the sexual revolution by the way, you know, for those who don't know it, and everybody enjoyed watching all these movies. The gadgetry they had as well was awfully impressive. For youngsters, oh my, look at that, a little helicopter just comes out of a couple of boxes, you put it together and away you go. Awfully… It had a bit of everything for everybody, really. Then the music scene that also gave you the so-called British invasion of music into America. And it really wasn't just spontaneous. It wasn't like the Beatles, the four lads from Liverpool idea. They were a package, a created package by the big industry, the machinery that creates it all. And massive studio too they were put into. Fantastic equipment, right at the birth really of stereo. There was even argument at the top, well, not arguments, little snide comments from Mick Jagger at one point about, oh, stereo would never take off, because the Beatles were putting their stuff out on stereo, by Martin who was doing all their mixing and stuff from, with advanced equipment. But they were a product, the Beatles, the culmination of a massive enterprise really.

They gave you, and that's what's presented to the young as though that's the future, it’s an upbeat kind of thing. Even though your life was, could be pretty miserable if you were poor. Most youngsters were working class people who never really saw themselves or didn't know if they'd even get a job if they left school. A lot of them were trained, I always said that the British working classes were trained to be working classes. They weren't given anything at school to make them think they could go into business for themselves, back in those days.

Britain did depend at that time on a big working-class, and then it had fallen apart after World War II obviously, and right through the 60s it was, they hadn't caught up with replacing work with anything. Then in the 70s they were deindustrializing and sending their businesses across the waters to the Far East. That accelerated and accelerated up until the free trade deal with China, and then we all send our business over to China. We paid for it thanks to the same politicians and their families that are locking you down with Covid now. [Alan chuckles.] They'll vote them in again, eh, vote 'em in and they'll do great, if you just vote them in again, and then they'll finish you off completely.

But no, you never really had a, I don't know if it's a generation, I've said this, especially in Britain, I don't think there's been a generation that had peace from war, or the threat of war, or bankruptcies and bank collapses, they don't give you peace in a single generation. They don't. They really don't. They keep you on your toes all the time. That's part of controlling folk. It makes them obey you more when they think, when they're terrified of some disaster happening, or war or whatever, so there's always the government says, we're always here to help you. That's the idea.

World War I changed society. All sides. Like Quigley said and other professors have said that too, that it's not meant to just, it's great to see even how they word this. It's not meant just to conquer an enemy, you see, it's also meant to change the cultures on all participating sides. So, everybody ends up changed, you see, from war. And it's planned change. Someone else benefits from it, and it's planned that way too, and directed. Just like all cultural changes, people are going to profit from it, and they do, they've planned in advance who will get in, hhhch, who's wise enough to know that's what you're supposed to do.

Most of the folk going through it, it never dawns on them that folk make money off their misery. But that's a good part of the system in which we live. Misery is awfully profitable. Fear especially, eh. But the money that's been tossed around since this Covid thing, you know, was unleashed on the public, hhhhh, trillions, some said. A YEAR hasn't passed yet remember, trillions of dollars, trillions of pounds, and they're still tossing it out there, for the hands that are out there to grab it, all these big corporate boys, you know, and gals. Grabbing it all. Snapping it up to make new devices to monitor you and snap up...

Even Sudbury in Ontario here, I heard on the radio yesterday they were awarded some massive funding for a very advanced policing in high tech equipment and so on. And I thought, this is their 5G, this is all part of the complete, the global reset. The reset is to reset what you do, what your function is, what your purpose in life is to be, who will decide if you're going to live or die, what you're going to work at, where you're going to live, what you're going to eat, or not eat, how much energy will be allocated to you, will they write you off if you get sick, are you essential or not? This is your complete technocratic society, folks. And every part of it, where multibillionaires are created with their hands out... oh, I've got a better idea, I could make this gadget, you know, to implant in them or stick it in their skin, or clamp it on their earlobe or whatever, and make money off of you. You get so many prostitutes of your own people just sell you right out. For greed, eh?

That's why people used to look to the American system, which on paper was fantastic. Always is on paper, it's fantastic, isn't it. Even the communists did a constitution in the communist countries. It was awfully nice. The same with even the UN has got one, you know, but it was never implemented in reality. But the American Constitution was the first one in history where they put down for the rights of the people. Everybody, eh. Now, it was, they were all shafted rather quickly by lawyers of course who can, we've got to interpret this, there's big money here, and misery again, and no matter what kind of court case comes in, you know, even though, in fact we make money off the fact they've got so many rights because we can drag anything out for years until they're bankrupt, eh. And lawyers never go bankrupt themselves.

It was never meant to be like that. The Constitution was supposed to be straightforward, a straightforward Constitution and a straightforward Bill of Rights that would not get overloaded with all these amendments. The thing that George Orwell put in Animal Farm, eh, the amendments that the pigs drafted up, with the Constitution and the rules, then started to change it by making little amendments, by putting a word on the end of a line here and there, or, taking it off. [Alan chuckles.] That's how it's done, eh. Yep. It's like, the people, we shall have property, and the right to property, UNLESS… [Alan chuckles.] blah blah blah. Yep. And government will never take anything off them, UNLESS…

You see, all these little things to change, as psychopaths move in. And the people are entertained, and they lose interest in watching. Perpetual vigilance, it says. But the whole world watched the US for the fact if they were sticking to the rights that they had, they would never go to such an awful state of being ruled and oppressed and exploited as they did in the rest of Europe by psychopaths. So it was a light, it was a light, you know, for a long time it was a light to the world that you had rights, actually written down. Then you end up with George Bush Junior, eh, who said when he was talking, well come on, about the Patriot Act and all that and taking rights-of-way. He says, it's just a piece of paper, the Constitution. That's what he said. Twice he said that, it's just a piece of paper, you know. He's right though. It's just a piece of paper, unless you back it up. And you give it all away through fear and terror, oh my God, so the terrorists are going to blow up more towers. No, they're not. [Alan laughing.]

Even if they blew up a couple, if they were terrorists that blew up a couple, that really were foreign, right, even if there were, is that the right reason for making global war on it? And locking the whole planet down under the guise of anti-terrorism, and having no rights and freedoms and privacies? All the things that we fought for centuries to get! Privacy was one of them, and security in your own home.

Here they want to know everything you're looking at. Before 9/11 happened, by the way, the CIA set up offices in Canada and along with the FBI, in preparation for 9/11 coming down the pike. It broke out in the papers in Canada, not just about the phones, 1995, it was me who put that story out there, and it was Gratin[?] that came out I think with it in the Toronto Sun initially, or was it in The Sun, yeah, I think it was in The Sun. They said they'll bug our phones to please Uncle Sam. Then they passed a law for telecommunications devices to have backdoors, including just phones, or fax machines, or, then they started with photocopiers with unique IDing, an invisible ID, I think it printed on every page. ALL in advance of 9/11, you see. Along with the massive Omnibus crime bill that came out in Canada in 1998 with Allan Rock. Then he went off to work at the United Nations. A complete, you know, antiterrorism bill, that's what it was. Nothing had happened.

I've mentioned this before, and the black outfits and combat boots and combat pants for the cops, all changed, in preparation for 9/11 coming along, and for losing your rights and freedoms and yada, yada ya. Canada had signed the agreement with the US for this back door into all the communications devices. Nothing asked, the people weren't asked, do you mind? You know? They didn’t, you didn't even have the excuse, any excuse for terrorism happening to go along, but they did it anyway.

You see, that's when you're supposed to stand for yourselves as they start taking it away from you. Most folk under terror don't think to stop and say, no, you can't do that. Or they'll say, there's emergency powers, there's a wartime act, you don't have any rights, do what you're told. But folk fought for centuries to get privacy. Centuries.

At one time the census, and this is what it's supposed to be, the census done every 10 years or whatever it is. It's supposed to just ask how many folk live in this household. That's it, what number. That was it. By law. Now they not only know everything about you, they know how much money you've got. They know where you work at. They know what your bank savings are. They know everything about you. Never mind all the electronic surveillance already there too.

I did the talks years ago when from all the information they gather about us, it's like we're farmed, as I say, they project the budgets and expenditures for the next 20, 30, 40, 50 years, your lifetime, how much money they expect to tax off of you, if you remain fairly healthy and so on, according to your IQ level, what kind of work you might get into and blah blah blah blah blah. I'm not kidding you. And you think you're free?

Hm-hm-hm. Sad, sad, sad. That's why you're supposed to stand up for yourself, for your rights and freedoms ALL THE TIME. Or you end up in HELL. And it's always deceptive, oh, it's to save the country, is to save the world, it's to save the planet, it's to save save save... Always under an excuse.

But the bottom line is, with Covid it's the great reset, no more democracy once it's all done. You won't even remember what democracy is supposed to, supposed to be, not that you've known it, but what it's supposed to be. You won't know it. They'll give you an ersatz kind of, a fake type democracy. That's what you had for a long time. Which is really the Soviet system. You see, the Soviet system was called the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. And Soviet means 'rule by councils'. That was the idea. So every segment of society, or even not just workplaces and so on or work types like welders and plumbers, you would have the Soviet, someone that would speak on your behalf. Then it went into women's groups and this group and that group. This is what Soviet... Well, that's what they've given you, folks. You still think it's democracy? No, it's not democracy. Well, we've got people who stand up for this group and that group, and even in-comers and minority groups and so on. That's the Soviet system. And the ones who lead it are all bought and paid for and put there by the system itself. You understand how it works?

So each little Soviet group leader – or NGO leader, put it that way too, that's good enough as well, because they're involved in it too – go forward and say, on behalf of the people’s 11th blah blah blah, you know, with the left-foot-big-toe-long-toenail group, hm, as opposed to the right toenail group that's long, we demand… And the government says, weeell it's such a coincidence you, that's a reasonable request, and they put it in the books and pass it into law. That's how it's done, you see.

The governments are just so happy to wait for you coming with demands, which they're waiting to hear. You know. Otherwise nothing else gets done for anybody else. I've said before, you've got to belong to some special rights group eventually in the coming new type of democracy to get any benefit at all from it. No one is going to stand up for you as an individual, you see. That's what they've done, they've given you this new type of democracy. Under the old kind of democracy the individuals all had rights, [Alan chuckles.] everybody had rights. Not now. You gotta belong to a group to have any rights at all. The individual is totally disregarded. It's completely reversed. Democracy, they used to define it as rule on behalf of the majority, not by the majority but on behalf of the majority, you see, with special attention given to minority groups. Now, it's the reverse, it's a complete reversal. Hhhch. So there ya go.

Folk don't even know the changes when they're living through them. They don't know. Especially when they're worrying and they have to go off and work, or scrape a living, or they're locked down under the Covid idea. But that's what they've decided, you see, that you're supposed to exist for a purpose, and the purpose is to serve not just the economy, whatever's left of it, but if your masters actually even need you or not, that's what it's about. Well, you're surplus, you're nonessential. And you're starting to accept that? Then they've got these, like in all ages, the cops get turned on the public, same with the troops, eventually, unfortunately. Really sad, isn't it? And police services now are police forces. Have you noticed the change? It happened over years. I gave these talks, again, years and years ago. Force is force, eh?

I’ve said before too, that it really is the reason that you had so many vocal groups back in the 1990s in the States come out and form. The US used to have tremendous ability amongst its citizenry to form groups to oppose what they saw as tyranny coming down the pike. That's one thing most countries didn't have, was that ability, to even be vigilant, the US at least were vigilant about that, property rights, and the rights not to be harassed in their own homes, etc.

by authorities, and all these kind of different things. Or even have their homes taken from them by arbitrary powers of confiscation.

That's why so many militia groups formed in the late 90s, SEEING all these different changes. I've mentioned it before, it wasn't just Waco and different things were happening. But seeing the transformation of the authorities and the powers the authorities were using over the public were becoming more and more militaristic. Therefore they were definitely scheduled to be changed or eliminated. You must, and the government has been awfully successful at targeting groups who they saw as potentially, they call them, subversive. But really, they were trying to keep the law [Alan chuckles.], if you're holding onto their Constitution and their Bill of Rights. Well, the message was loud and clear, you don't have that anymore, do you. That was the message the authorities were giving you. Yep.

But folk were getting awfully edgy with the rules that were getting rammed through just like crazy. In Canada even with that omnibus Crime Bill of Allen Rock's, at least some reporters back then when they could actually ask serious questions did say, what on earth is going on, this is a martial law kind of plan for indefinite detention that you would have under warfare, that there was no war on the go at the time. It's, the public didn't know it was a war on them, that's what it was, it was coming down the pike.

Everything was getting changed for it, in preparation for a different kind of system. The great reset of the WEF is just a faster way to bring it all in quickly. But they were already bringing parts of it in, as I say, even that ridiculous remaking of police forces as militarized battalions with the combat gear, and black combat gear, right. Which was the outfits for special forces before that, that's what they were. I-yi-yi. Hhhhhhh.

And if you can't hang onto your rights you do lose them. Because there's lots of very successful psychopaths, and once again, when they combine together, successful psychopaths, they are tremendously formidable. And they don't give up easily. They don't walk off and say, okay, well, we've been wrong, we give up, and away they go. It doesn't happen like that.

So here you are, you know, the great reset. A whole new way of existing... I won't say living because it won't be living as such. It's to be total austerity eventually. You're watching under the guise of Covid every healthy person, first time in history, being locked down. First time in history, with no bombs dropping, no threats of invasion, you have the entire economy ABOLISHED with a stroke, BOMFF. Not by a prolonged warfare but instantly, BOMFF. And no economy, guess what happens? Eventually starvation sets in.

The same guys that brought you all this brought you communism a long time ago. As I mentioned before, the Royal Institute of International Affairs, the Lord Alfred Milner group studied the American system, "the first great experiment". Could individuals really accept and appreciate having individual liberties, and would it be successful? Or would they end up in such chaos they’d have to be ruled by authority, authoritarians, you see. And along comes "the second great experiment", which they helped fund too by the way, the Soviets and the Bolshevik Soviet system, to see if the authoritarian technique of specialists running it all would be more efficient, and would the folk accept it, you see?

Now you're into the new combination of where it's really both of them mixed together. Exactly like the Reese Commission talked about, blending the two systems together using foundations and subverting the culture, society and everything else, and using education, by the big foundations. And here it all is. A whole new way of living, eh. That your betters, the ones who've decided that they are the natural rulers because they already ruled all the things that you need, they own it all, to exist, from food, to everything, and your function is to serve them. And they might keep you alive if they need you. For as long as they need you, you see.

And you should be grateful for that. They're saving your lives, you know, from Covid, by crashing the world's economy. By preplanning it all, by writing it all, the bioethics scenarios and how to manage folk where who's essential, who's not, who should get medication, and who shall get food or not. Are you starting to get the picture?

This is absolute tyranny. And the climate change group is the same bunch, same bunch that gave you all of that. It's the WEF, have decided this is the only way to ram it through quickly. They're fed-up sitting waiting for you to give up all your rights. They're fed up with it. Your lords and masters are fed up with it. So they have decided for you and this is the excuse for it all.

Massive propaganda warfare programs. Massive subversion of society, and subversion of your rights, and the elimination of your rights. Targeting folk who are complaining about it. And eventually they'll be arresting folk who complain. Because you might be a social influencer. In fact, it doesn't matter if it's the truth you're giving, that's got nothing to do with it, facts don't matter when establishment is at war with you. Hhhch. Yep. You have the greatest tyrants in history with the greatest technologies at their disposal trying to subvert and destroy everything that you've known, and everything that's yours, including your future. All of you, across the world. Because they're fed up waiting for you to give it all up yourselves.

Slaves, slaves, I'm telling you, you just can't get good help these days, eh?

So there you have, as I say, the James Bond character, eh, Sean Connery dead at 90. He did well for himself. In the same year too, I think you had two other members, they were in the Bond movies, I think it was Honor Blackman died earlier in the year. Then you had another one, another woman who was in The Avengers as well supposedly died in a rig, died as well. What's going on here? There's nothing left to look back to, even though it was all fiction. And you say, well it's all gone, eh, down the tubes. And you have to ask, what's left there, you know.

To my mind, the new Bond is just like a cartoon character on steroids, you know. He doesn't use his head; he runs after cars like a sprinter. And you've got this little wimp of a guy with a computer, a young fellow, Q, who's the new Q, eh? Ugh, it's just not the same at all, is it? So there ya go, it's just died out.

But again, getting back to Scotland, a country that definitely has had genocide on a large scale. Managed by a fake SNP party, Scottish Nationalist Party, that really is just international socialists, which means borderless, which means the end of you, Scotland. That's the intention of it. They're going through the hate laws, eh. These hate laws, and they've brought, I think it was Alastair Campbell who's a judge, he's also a Lord, like, Bracadale or something, they give him some kind of title. Or Bracadale, yeah, Alastair Campbell. I would never call him, any man Lord anyway. I'm not into the feudal system at all. Supposedly it's got some of the comedians up in arms against it. Because again, you can't have a joke about anything, even amongst yourselves, about yourselves, anymore. If someone gets offended by, this is their, this is the straitjacket you're all getting put into. And once you can't think for yourselves or speak for yourselves on different topics, they keep adding in, until eventually you're in the Orwellian system of 1984. That's its intention, folks. It's psychological. There are teams of specialists dreaming this stuff up and working on it. Teams and teams of them.

It's interesting to even notice that they're using this kind of, Scotland as a kind of test base for it. Because they've been so beaten down. When they could quite simply rise up again and say, hey, we demand all our rights, we're taking it all back because we're victims of genocide. That's how you've got to start, folks. That's what, don't argue the nonsense bills, just state the facts, folks, and they have to back off and become subservient to you. D'you understand?

So anyway, this says…

Controversy Continues over Hate Crime Bill in Scotland

ncregister.com / 30 Oct 2020

GLASGOW — Amid a contentious debate in Scotland over a proposed hate crimes law, which the Catholic bishops of the country oppose, (Alan: …everybody else does too.) a cabinet minister this week suggested that the law could apply to speech uttered within a private dwelling if the speaker intends to stir up hatred.

(A: Well, again, who's going to decide that? There are Alexa, all these different silly things that they're buying that's listening to them all, I guess that's what they mean. How else are they going to know when someone's just letting off steam? Everybody let's off steam about something.)

The Scottish government introduced the Hate Crime and Public Order (Scotland) Bill April 23 in response to an independent review (A: …it says… hhhch…) of hate crime laws led by Alastair Campbell, (A: Again, they call him…) Lord Bracadale, a retired judge. The government argues the bill modernizes, consolidates, and extends existing hate crime legislation. It also abolishes the offense of blasphemy.

During an Oct. 27 hearing, a Scottish parliament member questioned Justice Secretary Humza Yousaf about whether the bill might include a defense for speech uttered in the privacy of one's home, a so-called "dwelling defense."

(A: That's what used to be called, you can say what you want in your own house.)

"My concern with the dwelling defense...as a parliament, [and] even as a society, are we comfortable with giving a defense in law to somebody whose behavior is threatening or abusive — as an example, that is intentionally stirring up hatred against Muslims — are we saying that that is justified because it is in the home?" Yousaf replied.

"Are we saying that as a society we are comfortable with no criminal sanctions being applied to people because that has been done in the confines of their dwelling? Whereas if they stepped out into the street outside of the house, then that would be a criminal offense? I'm just not convinced as a point of policy or principle that it is one that I agree with, but I will continue to keep an open mind."

(A: They're going that way, that was where the whole idea with the appointment a while back, as a trial, under GIRFEC, of appointing a state appointed kind of guardian kind of person to come into the homes of every, every family that had a child to monitor the child's progress. It was to do with what the child was thinking and speaking about, by the way.)

Hhhhhhh, iyy. You know something, Scotland, you know, ftt, you've got to stand up for yourselves. You really do. M-hm. You really do. Sad, again, but that's all Scotland is now is sadness, it really is sadness for what's happened, for centuries actually. And they're being demolished right now. And with this technique of using a communistic type of government, this international socialism, what part of international socialism don't you get? What do you think an internationalist body sworn to internationalism, sworn to a borderless world, is going to give you as a nation except what you're getting? Hm? I tell ya. Hhhch.

It's quite something. Quite something. So this goes on and on. I'll put two or three articles up about that for anybody that cares to even read it. Because it's sad, isn't it, that you… You're watching a completely organized movement to destroy what's left of the fabric of the nation. And it is deliberate. It's all deliberate, folks. OF COURSE IT IS, hhhch. Until you can't even think something, nevermind say it. Even if you even make an inquiry, even a child asking a question, it's now illegal to ask that question. Yep, hhmph, we are the strawmen, eh, you go out with a whimper, not with a bang, is that the way of it? N-n-n.

Total war on the people. And they just go along with that and go, oh well, what can we do? M-hm. Well, you know, they allowed us to speak Gaelic again. They even opened up some schools to speak Gaelic again. Oh. [Alan laughing.] Ahh. It gives you the feeling of being provincial a little bit, doesn't it, eh? M-hm-hm. Quite amazing.

This new ‘hate crime’ law is even more pernicious and worrying than celebrity critics like Rowan Atkinson and John Cleese realise - rt.com / 20 Oct 2020

Independent review of hate crime legislation in Scotland: final report

gov.scot / 31 May 2018

You see, all these laws are one-way laws, and who's going to try the people, it won't be their own people. It won't be their own people on anything, you see. What happened to this whole idea you can only be tried in law by your own peer group. That's your own nationality, your own people, your ethnic group, religious group, etc., cultural group that you grew up with. That's what can try you. Because you've got to accept all the cultural system, the parts of the cultural system that you grew up with, that's why you have to have your own people. That's why the nobility can't be tried by anybody else except their own peer group. And when you're not getting your peer group, when you're getting folk who might hate you, to try you, that's going to end up in... That's what it's meant to do, and cause more dissensions. Which will cause hatred, obviously.

This is what it's all about. So as I say, you've got different people come out and speaking out about it and how bad it is, etc. Because it's, I see it as pure hate on the people. You don't need these laws. There are already plenty of laws on the books, you don't need these laws. Yep, to force folk to change what they think. No, that's not freedom. That's not freedom, eh. That's not William Wallace, is it? [Alan chuckles.]

Here's an article here and it says…

WHO Taps ‘Anti-Conspiracy’ Crusader to Sway Public Opinion on COVID Vaccine

childrenshealthdefense.org / 23 Oct 2020

(A: You have no idea the massive ongoing war on the thousand areas, with neuroscientists and behaviorists and psychologists, all working in teams, in behavioral insights teams to change your opinions on everything. Hm. Is that freedom? Is it?! Your tax money is being given to these characters so's they can change your mind on a whole bunch of different areas. So, the WHO, that takes massive funding from Bill Gates, eh, taps anti-conspiracy crusader, right, to sway public opinion on Covid vaccine. And WHO's the crusader, who do we need, eh?)

…the World Health Organization's (WHO) efforts to encourage public acceptance of a COVID-19 vaccine, Children's Health Defense has learned.

Last week, WHO's general director, Dr. Tedros Ghebreyesus, tweeted that he was glad to speak

(A: By the way, I don't know why they gave him the doctorship for, he wasn't a doctor before, hm.)

tweeted that he was glad to speak with the organization's Technical Advisory Group (TAG) (A: They've got these little acronyms for everything, eh. TAG, I thought you used to get little things on your skin, you just burned them off.) on Behavioural Insights (A: These are the behavioral insights teams that PROMPT you on how to think proper thoughts, you understand, on the Internet.) and Sciences for Health to "discuss vaccine acceptance and uptake (A: This is the term they want to use now.) in the context of COVID-19."

(A: Before they come out with a vaccine, they're trying to brainwash you all to get ready to take it.)

In his next tweet Ghebreyesus announced that Cass Sunstein, (A: Remember the Nudge book that I used to talk about years ago, Nudge, how to nudge folk into thinking the right things and behaving the right way and changing their minds in the right direction and so on. Cass Sunstein, that uuuuuuuuuuugh... oink, oink, eh.) founder and director of the Program on Behavioral Economics and Public Policy at Harvard Law School, will chair the advisory group, which was created in July.

Sunstein was former President Barack Obama's head of Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs where he was responsible for overseeing policies relating to information quality.

(A: Meaning, the right information, you know, the right opinions and so on. Don't you get a bit ticked off about these folk all getting...   Don't you have a right to see where your tax money goes? Why are you paying to be brainwashed by these characters, on behalf of big corporations?)

In 2008, Sunstein wrote a paper proposing that governments employ teams of covert agents to “cognitively infiltrate” online dissident groups and websites which advocate “false conspiracy theories” about the government.

(A: The government's never been involved in any conspiracies! It's just coincidences all the time. It's a coincidence, in fact, they've hired Sunstein to brainwash you. It's already rectified your thoughts.)

In the paper, Sunstein and his co-authors wrote:

“Our principal claim here involves the potential value of cognitive infiltration of extremist groups, designed to introduce informational diversity into such groups and to expose indefensible conspiracy theories as such.”

(A: Well, if you noticed, they haven’t given you any facts at all that stays stable for more than a week from the authorities, eh. So bring on the heavy brainwashers here, the ones who are paid millions, that’s what his salary will probably be here, to brainwash you into accepting big pharma’s untested vaccinations. Not just any vaccination, but brand-new type, RNA type vaccinations. Hmmmm.)

The government-led operations described in Sunstein’s paper would work to increase faith in government policy

(A: So in other words, don't just churn out facts, which are understandable, or, they can't be disputed, you see. They won't churn out facts. That's what they should do. Why would you need characters to brainwash you and your opinions and to find ways to censor you if they just churned out the facts here? Hm? Now, this is what you turn to when you've got nothing to stand for, or stand on, no facts to stand on, except nonsense.)

The government-led operations described in Sunstein's paper would work to increase faith in government policy and policymakers and undermine the credibility of "conspiracists" who question their motives. They would also maintain a vigorous "counter misinformation establishment" to counter "conspiracy" groups opposed to government policies that aim to protect the common good.

(A: You see. These ones that Sunstein works for in the government, they all are there to protect the common good, for goodness sake, not to slaughter the economies on behalf of the World Economic Forum's great reset, the global reset, no, no, which is Agenda 21, hm, by destroying the economy of the planet into poverty, and rationing, and a managed system for now until the end of time. I'm not kidding about that. If it was all on the up and up and they can verify everything they're putting out there, you wouldn't need these characters to come out and try to brainwash you. You wouldn't need them at all. Truth would stand for itself. They probably wouldn't understand the truth, would they?)

Some of this would be accomplished by sending undercover agents, or government-paid third parties, into "online social networks or even real space groups."

(A: They've been doing this for years, folks. He was doing this in 2008. I did the talks too in the last few years on the Behavioral Insights Teams, they've already been working to prompt you not, don't look at this on the Internet, look at this. You know? Etc. I did the [Alan chuckles.] the 77th Brigade in Britain, part of the Department of Defense, ttthousands of them employed to do this kind of stuff and attack you. Your government is attacking you for having a different opinion on things, and not doing what you're told. You little child you. I thought we were adults. No, we're children again, you see. That's how elitists see you, you're just children, children should do what you're told. You're naughty, you see.)

…government-paid third parties, into "online social networks or even real space groups."

(A: That's all been done. Also, Canada's got them too, we've got all groups of them doing it too, paid by the government, our tax money.)

Sunstein also advocated in 2008 that the government pay "independent experts" to publicly advocate on the government’s behalf, whether on television or social media. He says this is effective because people don’t trust the government as much as they trust people they believe are “independent.”

(A: I wonder why, eh, why would they do that?)

WHO (A: World Health Organization.) has already contracted the public relations firm, Hill + Knowlton. The PR giant, (A: Public relations, PR. Now remember, PR means propaganda, that's what it came from, but public relations sounds better, that's why they changed it under Bernays.) best known for its role in manufacturing false testimonies in support of the Gulf War,

(A: Oh, that makes me feel better. Isn't that better, hm. [Alan chuckles.] That’s who they’ve on it.)

best known for its role in manufacturing false testimonies in support of the Gulf War,

(A: The links are here of the false testimonies as well, from the Guardian newspaper. I bet they wish that was retracted.)

was hired by WHO to “ensure the science and public health credibility of the WHO in order to ensure WHO’s advice and guidance is followed.”

(A: Does that make you feel better, eh, false testimonies, that’s what they did before, the same public relations company.)

WHO paid Hill + Knowlton $135,000 to identify micro-influencers, macro-influencers and “hidden heroes” who could covertly promote WHO’s advice and messaging on social media, and also protect and promote the organization’s image as a COVID-19 authority.

(A: There ya go!)

There’s no evidence that WHO has yet implemented any “cognitive infiltration” policies similar to what Sunstein advocated in 2008. (A: No kidding, eh?!) If the organization were to adopt such a strategy, and use it to convince hesitant populations to take a COVID vaccine, it would raise questions of legality.

(A: I don’t think they’d bother about legality, these days, you know, in this day and age.)

As put forward in a report by the Congressional Research Service (A: The link is here too.), illegal “publicity or propaganda” is defined by the U.S. Government Accountability Office (GAO) to mean either (1) self-aggrandizement by public officials; (2) purely partisan activity; or (3) “covert propaganda.” By covert propaganda, GAO means information which originates from the government but is unattributed and made to appear as though it came from a third party.

(A: Don’t forget too, under Obama’s reign they, he then allowed the CIA and other organizations, military organizations too, to start using propaganda on the public of America, on their own citizens. Remember that?)

Because WHO is a multinational organization (A: Hhhch, and a good part financed by Bill Gates by the way. Articles are out there how much money he gives them as well.) and not a U.S. Government agency, covert “cognitive infiltration” policies could fall into a gray area, or even be considered legal.

(A: Hm.)

Dr. Margaret Chan, former general-director of WHO, once stated that the organization’s policies are “driven by what [she called] donor interests.”

(A: Well that’s, I guess she’s meaning Bill Gates, eh. [Alan chuckles.] Small world really, small clique at the top really.)

According to a 2012 article in Foreign Affairs (A: That’s the CFR’s magazine.), “few policy initiatives or normative standards set by the WHO are announced before they have been casually, unofficially vetted by Gates Foundation staff.” (A: There you go, this is in the article here. And it’s got the link to the actual article for it here, you see.) Or, as other sources told Politico in 2017, “Gates’ priorities have become the WHO’s.”

(A: Well, there you are then, eh.)

WHO’s current general director, Ghebreyesus, was previously on the board of two organizations that Gates founded, provided seed money for and continues to fund to this day: GAVI, the Vaccine Alliance, a public–private global health partnership focused on increased access to vaccines in poor countries, and the Global Fund, which says it aims to accelerate the “development, production and equitable global access to safe, quality, effective, and affordable COVID-19 diagnostics, therapeutics and vaccines.”

If, as Politico put it, “Gates priorities have become the WHO’s,” and if WHO’s policies are driven by “donor interests,” this raises questions as to what online groups, people and websites would be targeted by such covert programs.

(A: Good article this, eh? It’s got all the links on it too, you know.)

The idea of government agents carrying out psychological operations on social media is not far fetched.

(A: Oh, that’s been going on for years for goodness’ sake.)

Earlier this year the head of editorial for Twitter’s Middle East and Africa office was outed as an active officer in the British Army’s psychological warfare unit, known as the 77th brigade, (A: That’s a massive operation there.) which specializes in online behavioral change operations.

There ya go. Hm-hm-hm. Quite something, eh? But that's the world we’re in folks, as they try and, as they keep prattling on about democracy and rights and all that. No, unless you belong to a designated special interest group, which are really just front battering rams to destroy the rest of society, that's what they’re used for, because the right should be applicable to everybody. You all have the same rights, under a true system, which you don't have.

They've been taken over by these worms. They ate their way in, like the Cass Sunstein, eh. I did lots of talks on him before when his book came out. I also went into the behavioral insights teams and the different organizations that were at war with the public, and paid to be at war with the public, even before Covid came along. You have no idea what's going on. You live in a free society... It's one big system. It's one system.

Look at the European Union's meeting, or actually the documentary they put out on Vax, for vaccination and all that. They came out before this all happened saying they already had Facebook on board with them and all the newspapers on board with them, and how they'd totally drive the agenda and the narrative and override all opposing groups if a pandemic ever came out, for goodness’ sake. The documentary came out beforehand. But they said they had Facebook on board with them. They even had Mozilla, the CEO of Mozilla that folk think, well, really, it's a, you know, it's an open source organization. They had him on board too talking at it saying he would be on board with it too, they'd try and dissuade people from looking at certain sites.

Do they just get bribed off, that's what you often wonder. Or, does the one big system, the same system that buys off the WHO and so on, did they also buy off all these, or are these guys even fronts for the one big system themselves? Is everything, I often wonder when it comes to like say Silicon Valley, it's a massive part of the military-industrial complex. Massive. Of course it is. The military-industrial complex and the CIA have real organizations that really make things, even real factories across the world that really makes things, and electronics firms that really makes things for the jets and all the rest of it and military fighters and equipment, all that kind of thing. They really, they own them, though, you see. They're legitimate companies and they sound legitimate, but they're actually big parts of the military-industrial complex. Well, I'm really sure that all the big groups that run the Internet never had anything to do with the Internet. From the beginning.

We know that ARPA, then DARPA really is the, came out with the Internet for you. Military organization. I don't think it was ever meant as any real independent anything on it. They're all part of the one big corporation, as Bill Gates is too. He's a businessman, not an inventor. And many other folk too. Oh, you got Facebook, oh, Zuckerberg is just a genius. Really? Really? How many front folk have you seen in your own lifetime? How about Epstein, oh, by the time he's a multi millionaire, multibillionaire, turns out he owns really nothing himself. But we know who really did above him. [Alan chuckles.] That's how it works, folks. That's how it works.

And before this hour is up too, I'm going to say again, go into cuttingthroughthematrix.com. Take note of all my sites listed there, how to get the links of them and how to get them should any one of them go down. Because it's a war on the go. And it's a war for everything that's ever been, and is, right now. It's a complete total war on the world right now. On you. This is a war for the global reset, a whole new way of existing under a new system permanently, for perpetuity, on behalf of those who've decided they've got the right to rule the world, since they own pretty well most of it, at least all the things that you need to live on.

Yep. While you were sleeping, there's a song that says that, they took it all away. They can only do that, took it all the way, with a naïve society that really believed them. Well, it's our society, it's our country, it's our whatever, you know. It really is, isn't it, they took it all away.

Cuttingthroughthematrix.com, send a few bucks my way. PayPal. Cash. Personal checks. Even a bank check would do fine, you know, and it cost more money probably to even get a cheap bank check. And Money Gram I think too works. So there's ways to get cash to me if you want to. Again, you can buy books and discs from me as well if you want them. I've got a stack of other talks I’ve never put up, you know, there's a whole stack of them. Because they’re still on tape and it have to try and, ftt, make, run the, do a lot of work on the tapes to get them to sound better because it was taken off international radio shortwave, years ago, many years ago. I haven't put them anywhere yet, so, I've still got them. And that would take work to make them more coherent and to really understand them, they've got a lot of hissing and so on. But they were very interesting talks I think at the time.

I really hope the people, because this is total war and they're going after folk that are social influencers. They've got all these little terms for their targets. [Alan chuckles.] And they really mean business. Because as I say, this is total war, and I mean total war, and war ends up killing folk obviously. They will imprison initially, or arrange accidents for different folks too, or just wipe them out. They've already wiped a lot of people out of different platforms. That's your freedom. That's your new freedom, the new freedom that George Bush Junior mentioned around the time of Operation Iraqi Freedom, and they were going to bring democracy to Iraq. [Alan chuckles.] You have to wonder what planet they're on at times, don't you. But it was a good excuse at the time, we're bringing democracy to Iraq.

But anyway, he said, you got a new freedom, we're giving you a new freedom. And folk just listen to these little terms, these statements given, he’ll say New World Order, like his dad mentioned, I see the emergence of a new world order, you know, this bigger occultic declaration he was giving to everybody. And even the media didn't ask him what he meant by it. You know? He had a different way, you know, and a whole new way for the world in a whole new way of living and blah blah blah. Well, I guess that's what you're living in. This is their WEF, folks, [Alan chuckles.], where whole panels will decide what rights you got, right down to what you can think and what you mustn’t think. There's your new freedom too, you see. Isn't that wonderful?

I remember watching how they always grab children, Mao Tse Tung in China had his little red book for them. He'd wave it. You'd see them, always, this little, it's like a Bible, you see, that's really what it was to represent, it was their revolutionary Bible. Whereas the West, they always saw as the West, because they really didn't know much, a lot about the West, at least the common folk didn't in China. So they took it for granted what they were told. It was like Bible thumping crazy people always holding these black books, and so they'd have a red book in China. And Mao Tse Tung was their, is their chairman, Mao Tse Tung.

Chairman Mao, they called him. He had his cultural revolution where they killed millions of people. Because you see, they might have, still be contaminated with old ideas, even though they went through the revolution and all that. So he got the students, the sons and daughters to drag the parents and the teachers out of schools and stuff if they didn't go along with, the same sort of thing like, taking the knee, that's where all that stuff comes from, folks, or repeat after me this chant. Hm? Do you think it's all new, all the stuff you're seeing in the States right now? Oh no, it's all been done before. Techniques where you have to say, so-and-so matters, you see. And the revolution matters. And the young people, if the revolution matters, and then they'd drag, there's old clips that were taken, I don't know if they're still around, but you'd see them beating up and killing teachers and so on because they wouldn't go along with the parroting phrases, slogans. Lenin said the same thing, we shall win by slogans. It doesn't mean, they don't want people who think about things, they just want them to repeat the slogans.

So Mao Tse Tung did a culture revolution in his little red book. You would see these young children all quoting it off in unison as a Bible, by rote, you see. Every day they had to go through it all. And this is your future. This is where you're getting to where all thought must be policed. The UN actually called it that by the way, self policing, in the articles I read from the United Nations years ago on the air, where they would train the public to self police themselves. Using techniques in psychology and so on they would make you feel guilty if your thoughts strayed to a certain question, or thought, or even an opinion, or even around the edges of an opinion as you're inquiring into something, they would immediately recall you away from it in a Pavlovian way, conditioned response.

This is the future where all independent thought has to be utterly destroyed, so's your masters are in charge of you and feel safe. Remember, in a totalitarian tyranny every single person must be predictable. That's what the Internet is for and so on, and the Internet of Things, and your 5G network system, where you won't be able to go anywhere without them knowing exactly what you're doing, how you're looking, how you're walking, what you looked at, yada, yada, ya.

But now they want to have your thoughts in your home. And you all bought the hubs! This prune in Scotland that introduced this bill, hm, where literally they want to know what you're thinking and say... Going to charge you for... Well, how the heck are they going to... Hhhch, what happens if you talk in your sleep and you've got a bad dream or something? and your Alexa unit or whatever, the multitude of units there, as you've all been conditioned to take the spy into your house! What's wrong with you? What's wrong with you?

I can't see, I have no sympathy for folk who disregard common sense. They're gone, folks. They are gone. Now they want to police you in your own home, what you think and say? Even if you’re just having a joke... Or it's taken the wrong way or whatever, or whatever, or whatever. Who cares? The fact is, you buy your own chains. You really, really do. And there's no helping folk that do it, well, it's latest gadget, you know, it's the special hub, you know, it's... M-hm. Okay.

And there's Cass... You see, the facts I put out here, like Cass Sunstein, it makes no difference to you. To the folk who have gone, it doesn't make any difference to them at all. M-hm. It doesn't. I'll put this article up too. I'll always put the articles up that I mention and this is one of them. There's some good articles out there indeed. Here's another one too and it says...

How SAGE (A: Okay.) and the UK media created fear in the British public

evidencenotfear.com / 27 June 2020

(A: I did this article months ago but someone else has done it now too, and put in a good order. It’s quite good actually, it talks about…)

COVID-19 started registering with most of the British public around late February and early March. Many were concerned but not particularly afraid. Only weeks later people were terrified to leave their homes or go near other human beings. How did such a dramatic shift in public perception happen so quickly?

(A: Don't forget, it was pretty well over they said themselves by the end of April, that infection, you know. Hhhch. Phase 1. And again we know now Event 201 and you had the one came out from the Rockefeller foundation in 2010 as well, all these things. But you know how they're following it to the letter! As Plan A didn't work, that was convincing the public to give up all their rights and freedoms to save the world under climate change. So they pulled out the Plan B, you know.)

SAGE, SPI-B and applied psychology

SAGE is an advisory group to the UK government responsible for making sure decision makers have access to scientific advice. (A: Well, who's the scientists though? What corporations do they work for, or have shares in?) We are told that the advice provided by SAGE does not represent official government policy.

(A: That's what it says, why they say it is, so the government gets away, the slimy sods that they are, you know. [Alan chuckles.] Why do they use them if it doesn't represent official government policy? That's a little backdoor away out for them if anything really happens. And don't forget, SAGE is the one who got a subgroup that was trained to terrify the public. Literally. They said that, I put the articles out months and months ago.)

SAGE also relies on expert sub-groups for COVID-19 specific advice. These sub-groups include:

NERVTAG: New and Emerging Respiratory Virus Threats Advisory Group

SPI-M: Scientific Pandemic Influenza Group on Modelling

SPI-B: Independent Scientific Pandemic Influenza Group on Behaviours

The identity of individual committee members themselves were initially kept secret, purportedly due to national security. Some names were eventually released, largely due to efforts by UK businessman Simon Dolan and his legal challenge campaign. (A: The link for that is here too, for anybody that wants to find out who these characters are that's advising governments here.) Nevertheless, two members remain anonymous.

Psychological techniques for behavioural change

The document itself, titled Options for increasing adherence to social distancing measures, was drafted by SPI-B, the behavioural science sub-group for SAGE.

(A: That's the group that was meant to terrify the public, right, SPI-B. The link is here for that too. And the link is from government.uk, hhhch, Independent Scientific Pandemic Insights Group on Behaviours (SPI-B). So yeah, this is official stuff. It's not conspiracy stuff, right. It's the behavioral science subgroup for SAGE. It says…)

SPI-B highlighted nine broad ways of achieving behavioural change in the public:

Education (A: Right.)

Persuasion

Incentivisation

(A: Incentivization is awfully good because they can say, well you know if you take this shot, you might get a passport and then you can start moving around a bit, you know. All that kind of stuff works, giving little bribes, eh, to the animals. That's you.)

Coercion

(A: They can coerce you. Well, you can't go shopping either unless you do what you're told, wear a mask and social distance, and only do it straight there and straight back and yeah, yeah, and don't sit on a park bench or anything for a rest, or we'll have to fine you.)

Enablement

Training

(A: So they're going to train you like animals, eh.)

Restriction

Environmental restructuring

(A: [Alan chuckles.] I guess that’s putting you in these camps.)

Modelling (A: Right.)

In the document, SPI-B focused on the methods most relevant to their stated goals and set out ten options that were evaluated on six criteria.

The six criteria, under the acronym APEASE, were:

(A: They love this, don’t they! They said they would… I guess it makes millions of bucks just dreaming of these acronyms, eh. APEASE…)

Acceptability

Practicability

Effectiveness

Affordability

Spill-over effects

Equity

(A: Well, you lost equity from the taxpayers, that’s for sure, you know.)

Source: Options for increasing adherence to social distancing measures, 22 March 2020

(A: It’s also from the government, the UK government, right. [Alan chuckles.] Getting you to comply like your little animals, they can train you and persuade you and goad you, and you know, coerce you.

A substantial number of people still do not feel sufficiently personally threatened.

(A: That’s when they put out the thing, they put out, it’s called persuasion, eh…)

Government persuasion through fear

A key part of SPI-B’s behavioural change strategy that seems to have been adopted was to ‘persuade through fear.’ The Persuasion section of the document states:

(A: I remember I put that out there too, the whole document. The persuasion part says…)

> A substantial number of people still do not feel sufficiently personally threatened.

Clearly, the psychologists felt that, as of late March, the public was still not afraid of COVID-19. It therefore suggested that the government increase the level of fear:

(A: This is the one they put out to the reporters for the newspapers and to the television media and so on, to follow the guidelines, eh. That’s what it said to them, that the public are not scared enough, in other words, so they were told to increase emotional messaging, to increase the level of fear and anxiety to get the public to comply. Do you realize how you’re being managed, eh, by these government agencies, or employed by government, to terrify you into compliance!)

The perceived level of personal threat needs to be increased among those who are complacent, using hard-hitting emotional messaging.

(A: And yeah, I put all that stuff out months and months ago.)

Use media to increase sense of personal threat.

(A: Again, it’s got…)

Source: Options for increasing adherence to social distancing measures, 22 March 2020

(A: …from government.uk. Hm. There ya go.)

SPI-B recommendations to increase personal threat and use hard-hitting emotional messaging are on display with eerie imagery coupled with taglines such as:

“Anyone can get it. Anyone can spread it.“

“Don’t put your friends and family in danger.“

“Stay home for your family. Don’t put their lives in danger.“

“If you go out, you can spread it. People will die.“

(A: Hmmmm. Ftt. Hhhhh. And it’s got the sources too. That came from…)

Source: Reuters, 8 April 2020

Source: Sky News, 18 April 2020

(A: Sometimes I'm scared to put out these links, if I mentioned them, because they could be, they could be pulled before the show goes up, [Alan laughing.] or when it goes up. That happened last night with one of them, one of the articles last week. And…)

Hysterical news headlines

2020In Proportion2

(A: That's what it's called.)

During the first week of April 2020, the InProportion2 project noticed a change in the BBC headlines and posted the article, BBC: Informing or scaring?

The article compared hysterical BBC news headline from the first week of April 2020 with those from 2018, when mortality rates were peaking due to a bad flu season. It found no references to flu or excess mortality on the BBC home page during the 2018 peak. InProportion2 asked, “Do the headlines reflect the gravity of the situations in an equivalent way – or is additional fear being stirred up in 2020?”

(A: Well, of course it's more.)

Persuasion through shame and approval: (A: Hhhhh, there you are.)

Covidiots and heroes. (A: Oh dear, which one are you?)

SPI-B psychologists knew that fear on its own would not persuade everyone. Messaging needed to be tailored to take into account different ‘motivational levers.’

Some people will be more persuaded by appeals to play by the rules, some by duty to the community, and some to personal risk.

It therefore suggested using both social approval and disapproval,

(A: I remember doing these articles years ago on social approval and disapproval, not just on this, but waay before, other ways of behavioral modification. You're always being tampered with, and you don't know it. Hhhch. So this one here would use...)

It therefore suggested using both social approval and disapproval, with compulsion (legislation) as a backup:

Option 6: Use and promote social approval for desired behaviours

Option 7: Consider enacting legislation to compel required behaviours

Option 8: Consider use of social disapproval for failure to comply

(A: Hhhhh. The community is just unhappy with you. It's like when they use the term, that term as well, that, the global community, you know, they want this to happen and so the global community... [Alan laughing.] These stupid little tricks that they're always using on you to change what you think. They don't believe in independent thought. That's an enemy. The UN said that years ago, the enemy to their system that they plan for the world was the individual. As opposed to collectivism. The individual. Don't forget it's the individual who initially sees through things to begin with. Other people might follow but it always starts with an individual. It's the odd individual that seeks and digs in to find out truth. The collective DOESN'T. They accept what they accept, what everybody else accepts, that's why it's called the collective. Yep. So, social disapproval, the community is not happy with you! You're putting them all in danger, you know!)

We can see the obvious approval-disapproval dialectic with the ‘Heroes and Covidiots’ narrative that soon began to surface in the news. The term ‘Covidiot’ appeared around March with The Economist’s 1843 Magazine describing covidiots in this way:

(A: It’s got the link to that too, from the magazine itself, The Economist.)

Even in a pandemic, many of us are prone to judge others and find them wanting:

(A: Isn’t that hate speech? Having an opinion about others, oh, hateful person.)

the term “covidiot” describes any and every person behaving stupidly or irresponsibly as the epidemic spreads. Sometime in early March the word was born, and, almost as fast as the virus spread, so did instances of covidiotic behaviour.

(A: Hhhhh, what an awful person, hateful person to say that, eh, calling somebody Covidiot, eh. I wonder how much money they paid for that term, ha, to some PR company.)

(A: I'll rush through this one because it's got good articles, good parts of the same article in it too. He goes into how the government do it all.)

An incentivised media

These psychological techniques would… (A: …be used. And it did…)

Increased UK government media spending

(A: Your tax money pays the media to brainwash you, hm. So…)

Digiday, a media and marketing industry publication, reported in April that the government is becoming UK news publishers' most important client.

(A: There ya go. That's your tax money at work. I've got the link to that one too.)

In the 20 April 2020 article for Digiday, Lara O'Reilly wrote:

…the government is spending more than usual, judging by their bookings. The publishers also pointed out that the lack of activity from other advertisers in the current market means the government campaigns will have an outweighed share of voice compared with normal times.

Digiday Stay At Home campaign

(A: That was one they put out to the media, stay at home, you know. It's got the link to that one as well.)

Source: Digiday, 20 April 2020

Psychological techniques to change behaviour

(A: Behavior modification, you see.)

We can see that the UK Government has a public document outlining psychological techniques to change the behaviour of the population. We see a unified mass-media campaign that falls in line with these techniques. We then see a dramatic shift in public perception and behaviour.

What else can we call this but 'brainwashing'?

(A: Well, that's exactly what it is.)

Despite the open nature of what has transpired, it seems to have gained little coverage in the media.

(A: It’s got links for downloading the documents and so on.)

Download the document

The document is freely downloadable on the gov.uk website in a page titled, “Research and analysis – Options for increasing adherence to social distancing measures, 22 March 2020“.

(A: ...as an example, and so on.)

It's well worth looking up. Again, don't take my word for it, or don't even take the article’s. Everything you must check and check and check and counter check, you know, for yourselves. There's no doubt about it. Because remember what I read earlier from Cass Sunstein, they themselves will put out false stuff that you jump on. They might even create false news outlets by the way, so’s they can then hammer you for putting out fake news. You understand, this is war. This is complete war so you've got to be very careful and be able to check everything, and always make sure that if you can there's actually links to the actual article, the original articles themselves. Especially from government, that is your proof right there, it's from government itself.

And Global Research has...

Nine COVID Facts: A Pandemic of Fearmongering and Ignorance

ronpaulinstitute.org / 28 Oct 2020

(A: It goes into…)

1) The PCR test is practically useless

According to an article in the New York Times August 29th 2020 testing for the Covid-19 virus using the popular PCR method results in up to 90% of those tested showing positive results that are grossly misleading.

Officials in Massachusetts, New York and Nevada compiled testing data that revealed the PCR test can NOT determine the amount of virus in a sample (viral load). The amount of virus in up to 90% of positive results turned out to be so miniscule that the patient was asymptomatic and posed no threat to others. So the positive Covid-19 tests are virtually meaningless.

(A: It can't tell you if you've got it or not by the way. Even if it detects a few particles, it doesn't mean you've got a disease, the disease. This is important…)

2) A positive test is NOT a CASE

(A: You know, you see, the more that they're testing, they'll say well we've gone through so many million a day now, well, naturally they're going to get false positives. And if they stop testing you, believe you me, they'd have nothing to show you. Because they were guaranteed a lot of false positives by the more tests that they churn out there. That's the whole, this is the con of it. It's so beautiful, really, you know, and then you call them cases, oh we did another 500,000 today, guess what we found? You know? And it's a bit, oh they had 200,000 cases, or 100,000 cases… No, they're not diseased, you know, they're just particles, it doesn't mean they've got the disease or had the disease even.)

3) The Centers for Disease Control dramatically lowered the Covid-19 Death Count

(A: These links are here too, by the way. That was in Fox News, fox8.com.)

On August 30th the CDC released new data that showed only 6% (A: …6%!...) of the deaths previously attributed to Covid-19

(A: Right, after they terrified you right up until August, right, so they had to alter it and say that only 6% of the deaths…)

only 6% of the deaths previously attributed to Covid-19 were due exclusively to the virus. The vast majority, 94%, may have had exposure to Covid-19 (A: We all have by the way, or any, even a cold virus in fact, they're all covids.) but also had preexisting illnesses like heart disease, obesity, hypertension, cancer and various respiratory illnesses. While they died with Covid-19 they did NOT die exclusively from Covid-19. (A: That's what we do know.)

4) CDC reports Covid-19 Survival Rate over 99%

The CDC updated their “Current Best Estimate” for Covid-19 survival on September 10th showing that over 99% of people exposed to the virus survived. Another way to say this is that less than 1% of the exposures are potentially life threatening.

(A: I’ve seen three different articles about the same thing. Here it says that…)

According to the CDC the vast majority of deaths attributed to Covid-19 were concentrated in the population over age 70, close to normal life expectancy.

(A: There was an article come out the other day with, it says the average death was 82 years, that was dying of it, and then, were they dying OF it, you know.)

5) CDC reveals 85% of Positive Covid cases wore face masks Always or Often

(A: It’s their own testing stuff too. They get people who are compliant, or, you know, will do surveys.)

In September of 2020 the CDC (A: Centers for Disease Control) released the results of a study conducted in July where they discovered that 85% of the positive Covid test subjects reported wearing a cloth face mask always or often for two weeks prior to testing positive. The majority, 71% of the test subjects reported always wearing a cloth face mask and 14% reported often wearing a cloth face mask. The only rational conclusion from this study is that cloth face masks offer little if any protection from Covid-19 infection.

(A: I’ll put other articles up too on the different kinds of masks by the way, from the CDC and others. Long before Covid came along they were telling you these masks were pretty well useless for such small micron size viruses or particles. Another one…)

7) The US Death Rate is NOT spiking

If Covid-19 was the lethal killer it’s made out to be one would reasonably expect to see a significant spike in the one would reasonably expect to see a significant spike in the number of deaths reported. But that hasn't happened.

(A: You see, you understand if it's true, right, if it was the lethal killer that it's made out to be, by the media and so on…)

So, here's facts, right. And yet that's why they need the Cass Sunstein groups and all the rest of them to lie to you and to harass you, and maybe even arrest you eventually if you won't shut up. Because if things are all real you wouldn't need Cass Sunstein to convince you of anything, you would SEE it all for yourself! This is total war on the public. And the Sunstein's and the rest of them should be arrested!, folks, for terrifying the public. The groups that work with Sage in Britain and so on. Absolutely. Ha-hum, this is total war on you. These are war criminals. You wouldn't need them. The public are not stupid. If they knew folk were dropping dead and folks they know, they'd have no problem going along with this, folks. They wouldn't at all. You wouldn't need all these psychological units to convince you to go along with it, hm. So I'll put these articles up too.

It's true, all the young children and adults locked down too, eh, and healthy young people that should be working, everything's come to a complete halt, by design. The global, the great reset, hm? The World Economic great reset. This is IT, folks. Forever, by the way, they've mentioned that.

Singapore halts use of flu vaccines after 48 die in South Korea

telegraph.co.uk / 26 Oct 2020

(A: For... this is FLU vaccine, right. And it says...)

Singapore has temporarily halted the use of two influenza vaccines as a precaution after some people who received them in South Korea died, becoming among the first countries to publicly announce a halt of the vaccines' usage.

(A: They're probably, they're putting, they're dangerous to society admitting that they died because of it. They should have been good and said they died of something else for goodness' sake. For the good of the community. Sunstein would approve of that, you know. Hhhhh, dear, dear, dear.)

No deaths associated with influenza vaccination have been reported in Singapore to date, but the decision to halt the use of SKYCellflu Quadrivalent and VaxigripTetra was precautionary, the health ministry and the Health Sciences Authority (HAS) said in a statement on Sunday.

It's because South Korea has had the deaths, 48 people. That's just a fluke though, you know that, these things happen for goodness sake. Ftt, I'm telling you. If you notice too, the flu has disappeared. Because all the numbers are, [Alan chuckles.] and they admitted that at the CDC, they're not counting them now, they suspended counting them. Because all the flu ones are getting put down as Covid. That happened before, back in 2009 in Canada when they were padding the numbers, when the doctors were saying, put them all down with this particular flu, even though it was without tests and so on. Because, we can't test them all, they said. In other words, they couldn't get the numbers up.

Britain's BLEAK mid-winter:

(A: Remember, this is after Boris's, what was the big campaign he had to get so many thousands a day tested, per day, per day. So naturally you're going to get more folk. Because everybody's got little particles of viruses in there, bits and pieces of viruses in their nostrils. That's what your nose does, it filters them and catches them. I-yi. And it isn't, they're not live viruses. These are bits and pieces, folks, that the PCR test detects. And even then, it's not to be used for diagnostic, I keep saying it, you get fed up saying the same things, the inventor of it says it’s not to be, it was useless for diagnosing illness. The inventor. There's old videos out there of him talking about it saying that. It says, so Britain, their cases, oh, so the more you to test the more CASES you're going to get, the more folk had positive. Now, you'll, no, no.)

UK records 23,012 more Covid cases - up 2,482 from yesterday - as 'Professor Lockdown' warns 'people WILL catch virus and die'

(A: That’s very, the PR thing I mentioned earlier, you know, that campaign for propaganda by the psy-ops programs…)

if they are allowed to mix on Christmas Day

dailymail.co.uk / 24 Oct 2020

(A: OH, they’ll catch the virus and DIE!!! says the Daily Mail Online. Being faithful good little, I guess they were paid to say that. Now they’re getting paid to put these terrifying things out. Listen to this now, eh, yeah, this is October. It says...)

Meanwhile Professor Ferguson (A: This is the same guy…), whose modelling led to the original lockdown in March,

The guy who’s completely out to lunch on everything he’s ever done with computers. It’s all done with modeling computers. The same guy behind the culling off of the whole population of the meat, the livestock in Britain with the foot and mouth disease, that was this guy. This guy is a walking one-man war. He’s an arsenal of destruction. That’s why they got him. And that’s why he’s still working by the way, after being so wrong on everything else. This is astonishing, eh? What times you live in to witness this kind of thing! Hhhumph. I-yi. I tell ya. There ya go. Imagine him... Well, how would they...? Well again, they're getting paid to put this stuff out. Again, I've read that already, eh, the government's paying them.

Oregon health official dressed

(A: Listen, it’s bizarro…)

Oregon health official dressed as clown

(A: …this is the official dressed as a clown…)

while announcing coronavirus deaths independent.co.uk / 29 Oct 2020

(A: I guess it's supposed to be like, like, this is Halloween or something, is that the idea? So it says…)

A senior Oregon health official has gone viral after dressing as a clown during the state’s latest coronavirus announcement.

Doctor Claire Poche, a senior health adviser for the Oregon Health Authority, donned white and red clown makeup and a red tie with a polka dot shirt in the sombre clip.

In the bizarre video, Dr Poche announces statistics on recorded cases of the virus and deaths while wearing the costume and maintaining a straight face.

(A: What have I mentioned earlier about the straight faces of the old sci-fi movies. [Alan chuckles.] Now you're seeing all the politicians doing it now too.)

“As of today, there have been 38,160 cases of Covid-19

(A: In other words, not infections, not illnesses, but tests, you see.)

in Oregon, with 390 new cases being reported today,” she said.

(A: Well, if you put another few thousand tests out, you're going to find more, guaranteed, right. We know that. It doesn't mean they've got disease by the way or contagious or anything. But facts don't matter. A clown is telling you this here, right.)

She then goes on to discuss the state's death toll, adding: “Sadly, we are also reporting three deaths today, bringing the statewide total for Covid-19-related deaths to 608.”

(A: I guess that's when it all started. But again, they're putting everybody down as dying of it. If you have your, if your heart bursts with a massive infarction, and they then test you, ram a swab up your nostril and get a fragment of Covid, which lots of folk have got by the way, that doesn't mean you’re ill or sick, or even got it. Then they'll put you down as, we've been through all this before ad nauseum, but here's a clown telling you, right.)

The costume was actually part of a discussion on celebrating Halloween safely during the pandemic.

(A: Hhhhh.)

Another senior adviser Shimi Sharief later appears in the announcement dressed in a cuddly animal onesie from the film My Neighbor Totoro.

(A: What… is it, are, have they open the gates of the asylum or something? What is this?)

The clip, which aired on 14 October, went viral on Twitter after Oregonian journalist Samantha Swindler (A: Is this real? Samantha Swindler?) called the production choice an “absolute nightmare”.

What is that movie, was it Stephen King was it, or, did the one that was, was it It or something, the clown one? The horrific clown thing? M-hm. Maybe the psy-ops teams brought this out to terrify the public, hm. Because it puts your mind into cognitive dissidents when you, here's a clown telling you about deaths, and smiling and getting happy and stuff, eh. This goes on and on about it. But anyway that's... That's it. I mean, it's... You're... Ggghhaaaad, you thought the past was occasionally crazy. N-n. Fft. There you go.

This one too is…

Oxford coronavirus vaccine is to get approval ahead of Christmas so it can be used for medics and the elderly

(A: Let’s jab it into the elderly, right. [Alan chuckles.])

BEFORE final trials are finished, says professor who is leading the project - dailymail.co.uk / 25 Oct 2020

So there's Oxford again at it. They're all at it, eh, to get the vaccines out there and... Oh, they'll be living pretty for the rest of their lives, these characters, eh, outside this, out of this thing.

In Canada they're killing folk, eh, if you're not social distancing.

Man gunned down outside Toronto LCBO

(A: That's the Liquor Control Board, that's where you get your marijuana in Canada. You buy it, literally the government runs it, eh. So the government is your dope dealer and your liquor dealer. I'm not kidding you, this is real. The LCBO, that's where you go for your booze. And they have beer ones too, beer stores, but also have the liquor ones where it's all wine and scotch and so on. And marijuana, you know, that's where you buy it. That's where you go and get your Soma. So…)

Man gunned down outside Toronto LCBO after alleged social distancing dispute identified - ctvnews.ca / 25 Oct 2020

21-year-old man, eh? There ya go. It's an argument started off in the store because of social distancing. And maybe they were just in withdrawal for their drugs, maybe they needed the drugs badly or something, who knows, I mean that's... I tell you one thing though, every report I've read is amazing. The marijuana that's out now is really potent stuff compared to what it used to be, eh. There's definitely cases of psychosis from it, and I really mean that, you know, verified cases in some, with a lot of people now actually. It's getting worse. Getting worse with lockdown too as tempers fray. Here's another one…

Britain's BLEAK mid-winter: UK records 23,012 more Covid cases

(A: Remember Boris’s boast to get, oh, so many millions a day tested? So naturally you’re going to get this with these faulty tests, folks. Guaranteed. They can’t lose with these spot tests, can’t lose. They’re guaranteed to get the results that they want. But cases are not illnesses. They’re not infected either most of the people. And they’re not ill. Do you understand? This is not a case. A case used to be somebody who was, had signs and symptoms of an illness. They don’t. And again, it's, oh, the same thing, you're all going to DIE, oh my goodness, eh. Fft.)

Watch: 104-Year-Old Woman Locked Down in Care Home Begs to See Family breitbart.com / 24 Oct 2020

(A: I'm sure the elite are licking their chops with that one. They love it. And all the psychologists that are paid to brainwash you, they love this kind of stuff. They can stare at it, yeah, she actually looks like she's quivering there, you know, and all this, and let's see how the family across the way respond, between the barrier and all that. Psychopaths, psychopaths. There's more psychopaths in psychology by the way. Definitely in the behavioral department working for governments, more psychopaths, definite psychopaths working for them. No conscience at all. Hhhch.)

In a video shared on the Care Home Relatives Scotland group on Facebook, Mary Fowler says she is "very well looked after" at the Balfarg Care Home in Glenrothes, Scotland, but adds: "I want my family, though."

"This is my right. (A: You see, that tells you she's an old person with, she still believes she's got rights.) Please help. It's cutting me to bits," says the smartly dressed woman.

"I must see my kids. Time's getting on for me. I must see my children and make things like they used to be.

(A: And then she asks for help.)

Please help me, help me. Please, please help."

Mrs Fowler has so far "only been able to have brief window visits from one of her children," according to the Evening Express.

(A: They give you a video if you want to see it.)

And this... uuggghhhhh, this fishy character Nicholas Sturgeon...

First Minister in Scotland's left separatist devoted...

…left, far left. They're actually a front for the big world system. And they're well paid for it too. There's more money flowing into their paychecks, believe you me, then just from the country. Ooouuuuuuuuuuuugh. So anyway, Nicola Sturgeon, I won't even read their stuff, because she's another psychopath. So there ya go.

And ha, I keep coming back to hate crime laws in Scotland.

This new ‘hate crime’ law is even more pernicious and worrying than celebrity critics like Rowan Atkinson and John Cleese realise - rt.com / 20 Oct 2020

John Cleese is talking about it and Rowan Atkinson and different people too, how ridiculous it is, as they get into your heads, ole mister Sunstein and your... You understand, why would you vote for governments that are paying people, paying PSYCHOPATHS to brainwash you? If you have rights and freedoms, you have the freedom to think for YOURSELF, and to STATE what you think for yourself to others if you want to. Not to be brainwashed into compliance for a much bigger agenda, that’s using Covid as a front to bring it all in. And to destroy totally society and your way of life. And your ability to even feed yourself. That's what's going to go down. That's what it's supposed to. This is total war on the people.

Another one too, another article, I just want to say in Canada they just shoot you. There's another one, I mentioned this back in July or whenever it happened, during July. And it's south of me. It says…

Man fatally shot following mask dispute

(A: And of course after the police inquiry because the police do their own inquiries here...)

opened fire on OPP: Sources

torontosun.com / 17 July 2020

(A: Ontario Provincial Police it says.)

(A: Here's what it says at the top of it.)

“He was wearing camouflage and was heavily armed,” say sources.

(A: There’s no independent sources here, except the police. [Alan chuckles.])

(A: 73-year-old man, right. It says…)

It started over an argument about not wearing a mask in a grocery store, but a 73-year-old Haliburton-area man was later shot

(A: They followed him, you see, got his license plate numbers. By the way, all the stores now have got, they're taking your license plate numbers, for any probable disputes, or, and even for this fakery of contact tracing. They want you to get all trained that, so everybody's going to get the chance to say, you know, you don't know it yet, but you were in a place yesterday, we know you were there because we saw it on camera, and there's somebody, somebody in a 100 mile radius tested positive for Covid, so you've got to get locked down there for a couple of weeks. You're all going to get this. Not... To get trained. It's nothing to do with reality. You're all going to get trained, eh. Before… You see, they have regiments of troops, and they've got regiments of troops, the various people who were contact tracers, private corporations got billions dished out to them for this, and it was planned before the Covid came out. I did the articles before who was to get the contracts, and they were offered them LAST YEAR. [Alan chuckles.] So it's very tragic...)

"It's very tragic but this easily could have been worse," said a justice source. (A: That's the police or a judge or something, after shooting the old guy.) "We very easily could have had two dead police officers in this. It was that close. We are fortunate we don't."

Sources tell the Sun that after an incident inside and outside a grocery store in Minden, the man travelled to a property near Haliburton and was armed and waiting for the OPP

(A: It was his own home I think, you know. It's assuming the police showed up…)

to show up, engaging them with gunfire when they did.

"He was wearing camouflage

(A: Well, in the wooded areas down where he was by the way, I think half the population wears camo, all the age groups do. It's the greatest thing if you're actually out, live in the country, because it's a bit rougher and more rugged for wear in the bush, there's no doubt about it. Especially when you're, when anything is, you don't wear anything, you know, city clothes in the country, you just don't do it. Hhhch, because white doesn't go well with mud, [Alan chuckles.] things like that. So he’s wearing camouflage…)

and was heavily armed,” say sources.

(A: Hm. So there ya go. So they killed him.)

Valu-Mart (A: I guess that's one of the stores there.) employee Tianna Frances told CBC the man “just got angry and didn’t want to” comply with wearing a mask and was making the point “if we didn’t have to force him and tell him that he couldn’t come into the store, nothing would have happened, really. He would have got his groceries and went along with his day.”

HE’D STILL BE WEARING CAMO THOUGH. You know. I remember the previous article said he was an independent loner. Well, he bought his place outright himself. He had the right to privacy. And if he wants peace and quiet, that’s probably why he went to the country. Unfortunately the city had followed him there in a sense, didn’t it. So, there you go. That's what they do in Canada. So be careful in Canada because they don't bother just censoring you and stuff. Well, they can censor you kind of permanently I suppose. There you go.

Anyway, I'll put some of these up. [Alan laughing.] I seldom read Canadian news. It's so communistically awful. It really is. And it has been since Pierre Trudeau, the father of Justin. Or the, well, whatever. And it says here...

Canada's Trudeau predicts 'tough winter' and says pandemic 'sucks'

news.yahoo.com / 27 Oct 2020

Canada's Trudeau predicts 'tough winter,' deaths top 10,000

OTTAWA (Reuters) - Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau on Tuesday predicted a "tough winter" in the face of a second wave of COVID-19 infections

(A: It’s not. It’s not infections.)

engulfing much of the country, and he channeled public frustration saying, “The pandemic sucks.”

(A: He went to a good school.)

called it a horrific national tragedy.

(A: This is the guy who's, hhhch, like his dad wanted international communism. I'm not making that up. His dad literally was communist, you know. His dad led the Comintern group for Young Communists of Canada over to Moscow in 1952. That's why they made him Prime Minister of Canada eventually, because the future was to be communistic in a sense, using the Technotronic system for efficiency, for those who own you.)

Canada's case numbers have been rising triggering new restrictions to public gatherings, indoor activities in several provinces.

On Monday Canada recorded 4109 new cases.

(A: Because they're doing more testing, right. It says...)

"This sucks. It really, really does,"

(A: ...he says. Ttt. There you go, that's really good education, he says it twice. It really, really does, he says. Hm.)

A rare show of emotion and frustration from Trudeau.

Aggghh, I can't read anymore of that one, I'm sorry, you know. And let's see now. As I said before I'll put up the PDFs and that from the Scottish government and this prune, this Lord that they've got, this, his name is Campbell I think, Alastair Campbell who is putting this kind of stuff through on behalf of the guy who dreamed it up, a fella who I don't think he likes Scots very much. [Alan chuckles.] Who knows, eh?

It's so true, you know, I mean, when I applied to come to Canada the, it was a French-Canadian interviewed me in the console in Britain, in Scotland. They said to me, you know, he says, you know you people aren't as welcome in Canada as you used to be. And I never really, I said, what on earth, what do you mean? He just looked at me, eh. I thought, what happened that I didn't know about, eh? Of course, Pierre Trudeau had happened long before that, mind you, and they had changed the policies. I know they had changed the policies in Britain certainly, and at the United Nations, and they actually put a quota system of who was to get into Canada. Scotland was definitely on the very minuscule minority point for entrance, and that was a long time ago. But that's what he said to me, you know.

So I don't know if that would be classed as racism or not. But there ya go. It's depending who says things I suppose too, and who's judging it all, eh. That's why you can't have hate laws and things like that because it all depends on who's doing the judging. You might offend more folk who are real haters that are judging you, you see. That's how things work, eh, in this awful system that we’re under. It's pretty disgusting, it really is, what's happening.

Once again too, I got to keep reminding myself, cuttingthroughthematrix.com. Get the books and discs or just straight donations. You'll find out how to do it on the website. Make a list of all the sites I have. Because the war is on, and they've already said it, they're not going to allow folk to have contrary opinions to the officials. Even though the officials keep changing their opinions. Even after the officials admit they were wrong and bring down Covid deaths, as opposed to, but then they go back up again and change their minds again. You see, this is the technique that's used, after 9/11 too, as I've said before, until they have so many different conflicting opinions out there or factoids that nobody can make any sense of anything. This is deliberate.

But again, use your own common sense and what you observe yourself. That's so important. Because this is an age, this is total warfare for different reasons than why they are telling you. Why would you lock down the world's... the WORLD'S economy? Hm? At the same time, stop all production, start rationing things, and eventually you'll have your rationing card. It might be electronic or whatever, but it's still a rationing card, what you're allowed to buy, when you buy it and all that. Where you can go. Look at Ireland right now with the lockdown. Look at England. The curfews and everything. Total warfare scenario. Total warfare scenario.

HOW DARE they do that to adults, eh! Curfews?! I guess the virus just, it might be more virile and will attack you more in the dark, maybe that's the whole thing, eh. You won't see it coming. [Alan laughing.] Utter bizarre nonsense.

Because you see, the intent of this after a year or two, or three or four, because this is to be on for years, you understand that? This is to be for years. This is not temporary. This is a whole agenda, a long-planned agenda that's being implemented, a total change of the entire structure of society.

I'm hearing in the distance by the way, hhhch, Chinook helicopters. I've mentioned it before, and this happened Friday, and then Saturday, in the middle of Saturday night, and then now. Chinook helicopters that are going to the north of me. They’re army ones actually. Stacks of them, back and forth, back and forth. And I've told you before about the trains, they're taking... Most of the stores are either shut or bankrupt and closed, or forced to close, and empty. So the trains that go by every 10-15 minutes, these massive heavy trains night and day for the last few months are not going to the stores to restock them. Apart from that, there's very little north of me anyway. This is for massive bases for NORAD, etc. to the north and for continuity of government and so on. A few other ones they've got as well, that's what it's for. Massive stockpiles of food for years, actually, obviously. For them.

Hhhhh, well, there you go. That's a little bit of mentioning, remember, cuttingthroughthematrix.com, send a few bucks my way. It helps me tick along and I'll keep going, hopefully. Because things are going to get worse, and you really need some connection to what's really happening and think for yourself. And don't just give up and be terrified. It's good to feel a bit of anger here and there, about these swine, they are swine that are causing this and bringing it on, and the psychological operations units that are just psychopaths getting paid by our tax money. Why would you vote for governments that are doing this to you? How DARE they do that! And yet they're doing it. Because they've made war on you. They've declared total war on you. I hope you understand that. Right down to hate speech and what you can think in your home. Hhhhh! Yoi-yoi-yoi. Welcome 5G and Alexa and all the rest of it, eh. [Alan laughing.] You fools buy it all. GET RID OF THEM, folks. GET RID OF THEM! I'm telling you. There's other articles too, that other appliances are listening to you as well. But they've been doing that for years.

Half of Canadian small biz losing money daily in COVID second wave

torontosun.com / 29 Oct 2020

(A: It’s just… second wave... Who’s dropping, who’s dropping dead here?)

Just when you thought it couldn’t get any worse for small businesses during the pandemic.

A new survey by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business (CFIB) found the second wave of COVID-19 is hitting them harder still with new drops in sales.

(A: Well, no one’s allowed to go out and get stuff, eh! And folk don’t have the money, they haven’t been working since about… February.)

As many as 51% say they are losing money every day and in places like Toronto and Peel Region, which are under new provincial restrictions,

(A: Again, they're doing this roaming kind of lockdown, so they get you, everybody gets a chance of getting locked down. To make you, convince you that you're all part of something BIG, you see. That's why they make you wear facemasks. If you didn't wear facemasks, you'd just forget it very quickly. You'd see the expressions on the people's faces. They're not sinister anymore. They don't see you as sinister. You can read the expressions and you read people and things are okay. But you forget about Covid, eh.)

it's as high as 70% who are suffering on a daily basis. (A: …of their income.)

In particular, hospitality businesses like restaurants and hotels (76%) or arts and recreation businesses like gyms and venues (69%) were more likely to report further lowered sales.

"Small businesses still haven't recovered from the first wave of COVID-19 lockdown measures. In fact, 37% of all businesses across Canada report they are actually losing money every day they are open," CFIB president Dan Kelly said in a statement.

(A: It's not meant to. They're supposed to go out of business.)

(A: That's the way it's going to be, folks.)

"The new round of restrictions in several regions are already proving to be devastating to them, especially as new supports from government remain in the development stage," he said.

What support is government going to give you? Supposedly it's all borrowed money they dish out. You understand, have you ever thought about where it all comes? Do folks think it's just [Alan sings] pennies from heaven, eh, that comes out of nowhere? Where d'you think government, whose lending what, really, to governments to give to you? Because they're not coming out with big, big, big trucks and armored vehicles for live cash to the government. Where… these moneylenders, what do they really give them, just blips on a computer screen? Because that's what it is, folks. But regardless, you see, it's to put you further and further and further in debt as you have to pay it all off for the government. Real or not real YOU'LL be forced to pay the not-reals off. [Alan chuckles.] Yep. Total, total, this is to be like a total war or, as though a bomb had been dropped, the atomic bomb or something, the kind of devastation they want, like, a PERMANENT CHANGE.

Belgium Health Experts Demand Investigation Of WHO For Faking Coronavirus Pandemic

greatgameindia.com / 24 Sept 2020

(A: I mentioned this one I think last week too.)

Medical Doctors and Health Professionals of Belgium have written an open letter to authorities demanding the investigation of WHO for creating coronavirus infodemic faking the pandemic. The following letter has made an impact on public health authorities not only in Belgium but around the world. The text could pertain to any case in which states locked down their citizens rather than allow people freedom and permit medical professionals to bear the primary job of disease mitigation.

(A: Remember too, and it's so true, here they have all the psychological warfare teams going to attack anyone who puts out evidence to the contrary of this, of the propaganda that's getting lumped out by the media, that the media's getting paid by the government to put out. [Alan chuckles.] Remember this article, remember it, when the WHO, the WHO...)

When WHO Faked a Pandemic

Earlier, it was revealed that a Pornstar…

(A: …and I remember reading it…)

…a Pornstar and a Sci-Fi Writer influenced WHO policies on Hydroxychloroquine with fake data.

(A: Remember they were putting it out?)

An obscure US healthcare analytics company has come under sharp scrutiny for the integrity of its key studies that were published in some of the world’s most prestigious medical journals.

(A: Remember, I think even the Lancet I think used it.)

World Health Organization and several national governments changed their COVID-19 policies and treatment based on the faulty data provided by the company with a pornstar and a sci-fi writer on their payroll.

(A: [Alan chuckles.] Well, I guess they were happy at their work, eh?)

An exclusive report by GreatGameIndia revealed how in 2009 WHO prematurely declared ‘swine flu’ (A: …as well…) a pandemic (A: …back then. Remember that one? It’s, oh my God, you’ve all got to get your shots, and that fizzled out itself as well. And they were ticked off. That’s why they demanded we all buy their vaccines, eh. Which, we didn’t. And didn’t want.)

which resulted in a surge of vaccine orders. (A: …back then in 2009.) The rich and affluent nations were quick to purchase the vaccines for their people. Ironically, most deaths occurred not in Europe but in Africa and Southeast Asia.

(A: It fizzled out, that one too, the swine flu, eh. But anyway, this actually mentions here that Stewart Blume, this other author here...)

…Stuart Blume discloses that many of the most influential advisers, at both World Health Organisation (WHO) and national levels (A: …and national levels, right…), are paid consultants to the vaccine industry

(A: So they’re, the organizations that are pushing it all for you all to be very afraid and be terrified, are paid consultants to the vaccine industry. They’re fronts.)

raising a very serious question – that the WHO might be working for the vaccine industry’s interests and not the people – the reason why 10 years ago WHO faked a pandemic.

(A: …the swine flu one. And they did too. It really fizzled out by itself without the vaccine getting used. I think it was also a test to see what they could improve with their terrifying, their war of terror and propaganda that they’re using now. Anyway…)

OPEN LETTER

We, Belgian doctors and health professionals, wish to express our serious concern about the evolution of the situation in the recent months surrounding the outbreak of the SARS-CoV-2 virus. We call on politicians to be independently and critically informed in the decision-making process …

(A: …etc. etc.)

…there is no medical justification for any emergency policy anymore.

There you go, Belgian doctors. Facts don't matter, right enough, because this is the world, this is, a war has been declared upon the entire planet. Obviously. And yeah, you could start prosecuting the members of, say an example, the WHO and also the World Economic Forum. The WEF isn't just a little form that meets once a year. It's a massive enterprise with its own bureaucracy and everything, folks. We don't vote for it. We didn't elect them. They just dictate policies and use the organizations like the CFR to sign it into law.

Now, I'm sure everybody's heard about...

FRANCE ATTACK: Church sexton in Nice had throat slit while preparing for Mass

torontosun.com / 29 Oct 2020

(A: The Notre Dame church again, eh.)

There were few people around; the first Mass of the day was not due to start for another two hours.

But by around 9 a.m., a man armed with a knife entered the church and slit the throat of the sexton, partially beheaded an elderly woman, and badly wounded a third woman, according to a police source.

M-hm. And that's all they say about it, you never see any condemnation of the people who do it, you know. But how does that even happen in this day and age? You find with most of these murders and so on, people have made comments and statements themselves on social media of what they plan to do. But why would they go after a Church sexton? Well, it doesn't matter, does it? And that will be forgotten pretty quickly now, you know, there'll be no inquiry into that. Fft.

I mentioned before too, in Great Britain, Great Britain that's [Alan chuckles.] still having boat people come in, everyday mind you from all over the world. Nice boats too, they're disposable, they just leave it. It must've cost a fortune to buy them, whoever bought them. And they're put up in expensive hotels. They're given priority medical care too by the way. Folk in Britain can't get that, you know, even during Covid. But facts don't matter, you know, because if you complain you're a nasty person. This is from The Star and it says...

'It's eat or heat' –

(A: I've mentioned this before, when the winter comes in, right, they accept now that folks die in their own home, the British people die in their own homes because they can't afford the fuel for winters. That's Great Britain, you know, the people who accept folk from all over the world, you know, there ya go, we're so nice. Because you're supposed to, again, the whole British island concept has been utterly, of just the people themselves, is to be demolished, completely demolished until there is not even a history to fall back on that will remind people in the future of who they were. I really mean this. I've read all their books and so on years ago. So…)

'It's eat or heat' – The Sheffield families on the breadline

thestar.co.uk / 29 Oct 2020

Families across Sheffield have told of their ongoing struggles to make ends meet after one generous city cafe provided them with hot meals and food hampers free of charge.

Butter Me Up on Queens Road is normally a 'greasy spoon cafe' according to staff member of three years Rachael Dawson, 44. But, over half term staff have been in the kitchen juggling the usual orders alongside preparing free school meals and packing hampers.

Mum-of-three Rachael had a personal reason for wanting to help. She said: "I have been on my (A: …something rather, I don't know what it could be, it begins with an a…) a. I've got a little girl who's four and two older kids and I know parents are going to be in a worse situation than I'm in.

"I've gone without food myself so the kids are fed. We've sat with quilts and hot water bottles because it was eat or heat."

(A: There you go, there’s Great Britain.)

Rachael’s daughter Caitlan, 20, a university student who works part-time at Butter Me Up, added: “I’ve been for a shower at my friend’s house and been round for tea [to save money].”

The cafe has donated 22 food hampers full of essential items and non-perishables as well as household cleaning products.

They have also cooked 32 hot meals to be delivered to 12 families across the city on Wednesday. On Thursday, they will cook another 42 and a further 32 on Friday.

Rachael, from Meersbrook, said: "As a society we have got to stop this stigma about using a food bank or relying on someone to help.

(A: Isn’t it sad the British folk, you see, feel ashamed having to go to a food bank. And yet they read the papers of what it’s costing them to bring folk into the country all the time and put them up and so on. But they themselves are ashamed, and when they’re hungry, to go to a food bank. There’s psychological warfare, it even makes you ashamed, you see. Do you see that? Yep.)

“I keep seeing posts saying don’t have kids if you can’t afford them.

(A: You see, this is your WEF idea, you see, and the Club of Rome.)

I was financially stable with my own house. I ended up broke and I was working 40 hours a week struggling with child care.”

She added: "It’s usually those without kids who have no idea what a struggle it is.”

Rachael's boss and Butter Me Up owner of three years Lisa Wheedon, 53, from Chesterfield, said: “With Rachel working here we’ve got the facility to do it. I think it’s brilliant.”

Rachael said: “Everybody contacting us is saying ‘I’m so embarrassed, I’ve never done this before’. I’ve said please don’t be.

It's the same thing I remember too, when the 2007/8 crash happened. Suddenly you had big documentaries made about the tent cities that were happening because the folks lost their homes. Thousands and thousands and thousands of them. With the extravagance of the banks and the cons they were doing with the mortgages, flipping mortgages as though they were other commodities. Literally flipping them they were, 5, 6, 10 times a day per house. Until folk literally, all, they knew it was going to collapse, it was a greed frenzy, like a shark frenzy. Then the people themselves that had been enticed into these low-income mortgage loans and so on, all lost everything. Everything. Ended up in tent cities. Then you saw all these people too that were, as I say, businesses went under too and you saw these folk literally ending up at food banks utterly ashamed. Poor souls, you know. Yep.

Well, the same in Britain, you know. I was reading about one guy who had come into Britain years ago and it cost 500,000 pounds of taxpayers money to defend him against some crime that he had committed. Yyyyyyy........ Things are absurd now. But the folk in the country literally can't eat, a lot of them. They can't eat! Who cares about them?! Nobody does. Unless you start caring yourselves, and then you should start, again, like the Scots and all the rest of them, getting some gumption back, and some pride, and, you know, back in their humanity as humans instead of that shame, shame, shame stuff you've been brainwashed with for years. How disgusting that they can pick and choose who they want to make, to make to feel inferior and to destroy them. How disgusting.

Total war. You've got to stop this stuff and go after the folk that are doing this. Start arresting them. These are war crimes.

So hhhhh, it's rather sad what's happening. I've got more stories of people who had to go to the bank and so on, eh. So there you go anyway. Glenn Greenwald, the guy who, he helped Snowden the whistleblower a few years ago with the story I think and did a documentary. I think he may even be in the documentary too, not quite sure. But it says...

Intercept co-founder Glenn Greenwald resigns from the website (A: ...that he helped start up.) with scathing essay claiming editors 'violated his editorial freedom' by 'censoring' an article he wrote criticizing Joe Biden

dailymail.co.uk / 29 Oct 2020

(A: I guess it was so much stuff came out on Biden’s family, or the son anyway, that he came out with what's being put out supposedly as fact so far. But yeah, they're clamping down on anybody mentioning the money situation flooding into the Biden family through deals and so on. So yeah, he literally resigned from the Intercept.)

Glenn Greenwald has resigned from The Intercept…

…after an editorial that he wrote about Biden was censored supposedly. We'll see what happens there. It shows you that this censorship thing is never going to end either, it's going to get worse and worse. And it is astonishing, isn't it, that… Well it's not really astonishing, it's only astonishing if you believe the media was ever real. It's always been owned by big powerful interests, you know. As I say, people used to know that when I grew up, the elder folk knew that. They could tell them all, the moguls who owned the different newspapers, as an example in Britain. Even the miners, you wouldn't think, no. They were up on it all. They know who was who and what they were all part of, the establishment, and what you could believe or not trust or be suspicious of.

Because that's what you're supposed to do, be suspicious of things, as a sentient human being in a world where there's all these power plays going on all the time. And you know, the whole idea of the Sunstein idea didn't start with Sunstein. It was long before him. It's been on the go with, it was propaganda. Propaganda is an amazing thing. Governments run by using propaganda, and teams of propagandists and psychologists, etc. Yeah, we're here folks.

More so now with the Internet age. They can hire these miscellaneous faceless people by the thousands to, and train them all, who to attack and who to go after and how, and then other ones to convince the public. You could get 500 emails a day if they want to try and sway your opinion, with these independent people. You'll think, maybe they're right sending you this and sending you that. You don't realize it's all from like an outfit, a section of an outfit that's paid to do this kind of thing, that's their job, that's what they're assigned to do is alter your opinions on things.

If you're an influencer, as they call it, you know, social influencer…. It's a bad name, eh? In other wars they would call you a quisling or something, you know, or you're on board with another nation, or a quisling type, oh, a subversive, a traitor even. But no, now if you don't go along with the propaganda, you're a social influencer. Hhhhh! They go after social influencers which are not on board with them. They'll attack them ruthlessly of course and constantly through many, many, many different ways. This is war, you see, waged upon the public, and they're using your tax money to wage war upon you. This is like a foreign entity doing this, really, when you think about it. It's nothing to do with what you think your country is all about or what you pay your money for your taxes for.

Because it's a different agenda, a completely different agenda than the average person who live in the country will think about, or even understand sometimes. And they never hear of the agenda [Alan chuckles.] and the fact is that you're supposed to have no nation at all eventually. And the same organizations that then also put out social influencers, well-financed, the heroes of the opposition, which you will join, you see, and you follow them. This is old techniques of course; they've always done this. They heavily, heavily promote them. They'll sell the same things you're putting out there, but then they start bending the truth off into a particular direction, or back into the ridiculousness of politics as it stands today.

That's how you're neutralized. I've seen it happening over the last, over 20 years, the big changes in the promotion of different ones, to take over what used to be opposition to the system. That's how it's done, they go after opposition, and they create opposition, hhhch, their own opposition that appears to be yours, they speak for you, you understand. And they're heavily financed, and that's one of the little telltale signs about them too. So be very careful what you do. I always say this, you're given your Pied Piper's to follow. And they must put out legitimate stuff, information, to get you to start to follow. It's a little bit like rat poisoning, you know, 90 odd % of the rat poison, 85%, or 80% in fact they say is corn, and that little bit extra is the poison. That's how they sway you, for being the Pied Piper. So be careful what you do, who you… You shouldn't really follow people so much as think for yourself.

That's the whole point. That's why you're here, hhhch, is to think for yourself.

When you realize that 99.999% of everything in the world is there to dominate you, and dominate your thoughts, not, so that you can't even have your own thoughts, you know. Look at how much media is put out there to make sure you can't have your own original thought... unless you switch everything off in a day and start thinking for yourself. Not even, don't even look at a newspaper, nothing at all, and think about that, you see. LOOK at the billions of dollars across the world spent daily to try and make sure that you [Alan chuckles.] never get a thought of your own in that whole day. That's quite a program of war, I'd say. It's like I've said before, for every penny you earn, there's a thousand companies want it. That's why they do all this advertising.

But it's the same thing about thinking. For every minute of your day that you could be doing your own thinking, for yourself, you've got thousands of other organizations the newspapers and media of all kinds, and entertainment, trying to grasp your attention for that one minute. They want it. That's a massive war indeed, isn't it.

I love this article, it's, I can't stand Fauci, [Alan laughing.] I really can't stand the man. Because his eyes now, you can see he's getting nervous with his lies. Because he's just, you know, he's up to his eyes in collusion with corporations and industries that are profiting off this mightily. And he's been in the, he's been a bureaucrat for 50 years, you understand, eh. I-yi-yi. M-hm. So...

US Might Not See Life Get "Back To Normal"

(A: This is the guy who told you back in February that life would never go back to normal, but he says, it won't get back to normal…)

Until 2022, Dr. Fauci Warns

(A: …he says in his latest declaration, you know, to the cattle down beneath him.)

zerohedge.com / 29 Oct 2020

So anyway, he's…. And you can't even believe that too. It's never to end. They've already said, the same man has said it too, the same man who told you not to wear a mask initially, and then demanded you wear a mask, and who said initially too that it probably wouldn't even effect America, and then he says it's going to devastate America. This guy, and again, the guy who literally is [Alan laughing.], really, I mean if you want collusion with corporations, you just look at this character here. Fft. Ahh. But yeah, it's a few weeks here and a few weeks there… Oh, another few weeks, and, oh, a few months here and there. And then… You're getting… You're… It's like putting the Judas goat down in front of the rest, eh, and you all follow the Judas goat. And they all pause a bit, and say, I guess we're okay now. It'll turn off the to the side, and then you end up going into the slaughterhouse. That's how they play you, eh, they put a Judas goat in front of you. So, Fauci, just a few weeks more, a few months more, oh a few years more, you know. Along you go, you see. And the same man that's already told you that vaccines probably won't stop you from getting it. Well, why are they going to mandate that you have it?

Let's think of it as a potentially possibly life-threatening thing, hm, a vaccine, that may kill you, that's what they said too, remember, that's what Bill Gates said, that thousands across the world might die of side effects and so on and so on. It was months ago he said, but he said it, he's on video saying it. But that's acceptable, you know. To him obviously. But not the people who are going to die. But I guess they don't matter.

But here's Fauci telling you too, you've got to take a vaccine, and you won't get out of your homes without a vaccine, you can't go any where without a vaccine. And then he tells you too that you'll need a whole bunch of these vaccines, not just one. Then you need frequent ones and boosters, etc. They want to give you all kinds of perpetual boosters for every vaccine out there by the way that's on the, that'll be your vaccine passport. Don't you get it? I remember years ago giving the talk on that very thing, when they talked about this, we really need some kind of, and I said one day you'll walk into grocery stores, this is like I don't know 1998 or 1999. I said you'll walk into grocery stores and alarms will go off because you haven't had your latest vaccine that's electronically monitored, because they're going to be monitored. I said that back then, and here you are now, digital passports could be on the go, without that alarms will go off, woo-woo. [Alan chuckles.]

It could, can people really believe, go along with this, you know... Oh, just a little bit more, and they tickle the cow's neck, you know, just a little bit more, and then they go WHACK on the backside with a big stick, and back to the neck again, and a little bit more, come on. Hhhhh. N-n-n.

And...

German Pfizer vaccine

(A: Remember, there was one of the guys who was the head of the research department, was it, was it the last week or the week before, from Pfizer, said he wouldn’t take the vaccine. [Alan laughing.] But here’s the company anyway…)

could be ready before Oxford-AstraZeneca injection and be given to Brits before Christmas

There’s a good Christmas present for you. Since you’re going to be locked down anyway, and you can’t get out of your homes, it’s illegal, you know, by your masters, you know. Your master’s voice. Remember, they used to have ‘His Master’s Voice’ record company at one point, gramophones, record players and things like that. I think in my home we had one and it was called His Master’s Voice, windup type gramophone records, record players. But they kept that logo and they put it on later players, eh, record players. But it was sitting there listening, so that bighorn that went to the dog’s dear, well, that’s what the media is to us.

That’s what the government is to us now, you see. They’re paying the media to lie and brainwash you. I read the articles tonight for goodness’ sake, [Alan chuckles.] That’s what basically it’s telling you. Hm? His Master’s Voice is telling you right to your ear hole to obey and do what you’re told, eh, and don’t have more than this. It really is, it’s absurd declarations they’re putting out there, and orders. It really is. It’s almost like, maybe four people can gather in your home on a Friday afternoon as long as you only wear one slipper, you know, etc. This is how, and they're trying to see how much mental illness that they can cause. I’m not kidding you. Massive studies going on right now on how you'll comply, compliance can work, how they can make you do all kinds of bad things. Really.

Oh, this is again, to show you the predictive programming that's really lumped into all kinds of programs. This is how you get most of your brainwashing, and HOW to comply, and HOW to do things and how to copy and emulate and so on culture differences and changes. It's predictive programming. I came out with the term many, many years ago. This is, I've told you before, this Songbird movie trailer it says…

‘Songbird’ movie trailer about pandemic ‘COVID-23’ slammed by critics: ‘Cashing in on human suffering’

foxnews.com / 30 Oct 2020

The apocalyptic film follows a couple in 2024 that tries to meet during the pandemic

(A: Hhhhh. Poor souls, eh. This is from Fox news.)

[Alan speaking with increasing intensity.]

… "the mortality rate is over 50 percent and the virus kills at an accelerated rate" and "infected Americans are forced from their homes and into quarantine camps," according to Entertainment Weekly.

(A: Hhhhh, hhhhh, hhhhh, hhh, you see. You see how you're getting trained into this rubbish? Hm? So, it's being hammered. But it's probably getting funded, I bet it's funding from and our tax money going into that too.)

[Alan speaking with increasing intensity.]

"It's a dystopian, scary world, but it's a romantic movie about two people who want to be together, but they can't,"

(A: Hhhhhh. There you go. It says…)

"Talk about pure bad taste."

(A: But that's what they do in it. This is how you're brainwashed, folks, always using entertainment. They said that at the European meeting on vaccinations that they had, and I put the link up there too. They discussed that, how they would use all the media and put all the different Covid ideas into, and behavioral changes into fictional dramas and so on, just insert them in like they normally do. Like they normally do. [Alan laughing.] Taking, you know, taking for granted they've got these agreements with them all. They pay for these inserts. They did that with Coronation Street, that was the greatest predictive programming system. Everything that was going to happen and planned for Britain they did it in fictional form in front of the public. And here's how Bear would adapt to this, or not adapt, and here's how his wife would adapt, and who would win on whatever the disagreement was going to be, and you know, that's how it's done. It also says here…)

AS CORONAVIRUS SPREADS, THESE LATE-NIGHT SHOWS ARE RECORDING WITHOUT AN AUDIENCE

Another person added: "This is quite possibly one of the s----iest (A: I don't know what they mean, they keep doing these strange things, and that woman who talked about sitting on her a--, I don’t know what that, and this guy is on about the s---, s---iest…) attempts at cashing in on human suffering.

(A: Maybe he means silliest, eh?! It must be silliest, I’m a nice person. And it says…)

Whoever makes this movie should be ashamed. This isn't needed, nor wanted.”

It's not meant for that. It's meant to indoctrinate you, and to terrify you, folks. Where fiction becomes your reality. When you hear Covid, oh my, you'll think of the movie, hhhhh, hhhhh, hhhhh, half the folk are dying, oh my God, eh. Yep. I tell ya.

So that's one of them. And then you have, remember this one too, it was...

24 (TV series)

en.wikipedia.org

24 is an American action drama television series created by Joel Surnow and Robert Cochran for Fox. The series stars Kiefer Sutherland as counter-terrorist agent Jack Bauer. Each season covers 24 consecutive hours in Bauer's life using the real time method of narration.

The show came out in 2001, you see, for after 9/11, eh. Oh, antiterrorism, oh my, these, look at all these government guys running, selfless, never sleeping, hunting down terrorists everywhere. But also got you used to the idea of no rights and citizens being monitored and so on. It was normalized through fiction. Hm? In Canada they came out with…

The Border (TV series)

en.wikipedia.org

(A: Taxpayers' money again, eh. CBC television, the Communist Broadcasting Corporation, the government run. It had a few shows and says...)

The first season had a total budget of 20 million dollars, with about 1.5 million dollars per episode.

...of absolute farcical scenarios. Suddenly everything was terrorism, we had a war on terror, hhhhh!, because the terrorists are creating a terror in the world. After 9/11. They even had one episode, the only one that I saw clips of, because I never watch TV and I was in someone else's place. But I saw clips and they had these Canadian jet fighters attacking the bridge that crosses into the US border there in Ontario, and STRAFING the bridge, that was in it too, to fight these awful terrorists that were just, you know, flooding over from the Middle East. That's what they were obviously portraying, oh, they're everywhere, everywhere they are, oh my God, yeah. Hhhhh!

Again too, they desensitize the public that torture was okay, to get the truth out to save the rest of the people. Torture was fine. I remember one of the US ones they had the, they showed a guy and a leg, because they had to get the truth out of him before something exploded in the States. That was okay, go and torture them and shoot them and stuff like that. Fft. There you are. The Border.

So they always bring these propaganda things out when they're at war with us all, you see, and they want us to believe certain things and so on.

The West Wing (TV series)

en.wikipedia.org

The West Wing is an American serial political drama television series created by Aaron Sorkin

Yeah. Hm. Fft. That aired from 1999. You see, they knew what was coming. As I've said, in 1998 in Canada we had Allan Rock's Omnibus crime bill, which was an antiterrorism crime Bill. Nothing had happened. Getting all ready for it, eh? And of course after 9/11 they just went into real-time, my God, eh, they saved the world. Well, the reason that they've saved us all is because you're not hearing so much of the terrorism now. You see, the drama has obviously worked, eh? [Alan laughing.]

Here's again what they put out, right. Again, a little bit of information is how they do it. Don't forget, the BBC again is getting money, and that's mainly funded by the government of Britain. It's a propaganda tool, the BBC, it always was. That's why it was created initially, you know.

Covid: Antibodies 'fall rapidly after infection'

bbc.com / 27 Oct 2020

(A: …it says, eh. There ya go. So it goes on about…)

Antibodies are a key part of our immune defences and stop the virus from getting inside the body's cells.

(A: So again, that wonderful Imperial College of London, [Alan laughing.]…)

The Imperial College London team found the number of people testing positive for antibodies has fallen by 26% between June and September.

(A: Now, are they actually really testing the blood for antibodies? There's the first question you should ask, you know.)

They say (A: They say, they SAY… This is all scientific.) immunity appears to be fading and there is a risk of catching the virus multiple times.

The news comes as figures from the Office for National Statistics

(A: The same statistics I guess that Neil Ferguson worked for as well [Alan chuckles.] that gave you all the bogus stuff before with a whole bunch of disasters that have never happened before, even the mad cow disease.)

show that the number of Covid-19 deaths in the UK rose by 60% in the week of 16 October.

(A: Really? Really!? No, no. In October in Britain everybody with an upper respiratory infection who was elderly will get a chance, most of us will go this way by the way, always have done in the past, it's these kind of things that finish you off, when winter starts to come in, that's the bad time, the cold damp weather, especially in Britain. And they know this at the top, they can't fail with the game they're playing here, they'll just lump it in as Covid, you see.)

So the whole idea is, you see, antibodies aren't going to last that long, right. It's to get you ready for another vaccination. Not that that's going to last any longer either by the way. But reality’s got nothing to do with it. The fact is, as was mentioned already, your T cells, there's different ones that actually keep like almost pretty well blueprints of antibodies, and they'll fade off after a while, unless they keep getting stimulated with being near the infection somewhere, you see. And you immediately start producing it, so you don't even get ill with it, you don't even know you’ve, you don't even know what most of your body is doing most of the time. Of course you don't. So it's normal. That's normal.

Or else you'd be choked up, as I say, with thousands of different kinds of antibodies that you're, because you're getting, there's thousands out there of viruses, and if the antibodies were perpetual, for instance, your blood would be clogged with them, instead of, you know, red blood cells, etc. So they switched them off to an extent, do you see what I'm saying? But they the keep the blueprint of how to immediately mass-produce them, the antibodies, for that particular problem. That's how it works. That's all I'm saying about that particular article.

Another one too is interesting, this article here, because it’s in quite a few of the medical magazines. It says…

Use of adenovirus type-5 vectored vaccines: a cautionary tale

thelancet.com / 31 Oct 2020

We are writing to express concern about the use of a recombinant adenovirus type-5 (Ad5) vector for a COVID-19 phase 1 vaccine study, and subsequent advanced trials. Over a decade ago, we completed the Step and Phambili phase 2b studies that evaluated an Ad5 vectored HIV-1 vaccine administered in three immunisations for efficacy against HIV-1 acquisition. Both international studies found an increased risk of HIV-1 acquisition among vaccinated men. The Step trial found that men who were Ad5 seropositive and uncircumcised on entry into the trial were at elevated risk of HIV-1 acquisition during the first 18 months of follow-up. The hazard ratios were particularly high among men who were uncircumcised and Ad5 seropositive, and who reported unprotected insertive anal sex with a partner who was HIV-1 seropositive or had unknown serostatus at baseline, suggesting the potential for increased risk of penile acquisition of HIV-1.

So this goes on to actually say that a particular type of, um, Covid 19 phase 1 vaccine study might make them more prone to acquiring HIV. M-m-m. Because I guess these things go into the CCR5-positive CD4 T cells, and affects them, affects them apparently, apparently here. I'll have to really look through this whole article here. I've got a few on this and haven't really gone into it. It's pretty recent.

Another one too, one of the doctors who came out against what's happening, the total lockdown, was Professor Sunetra Gupta. I think she was part of the Great Barrington group, I'm not quite sure, not quite certain about that. This is the Daily Mail...

A contagion of hatred and hysteria: Oxford epidemiologist PROFESSOR SUNETRA GUPTA tells how she has been intimidated and shamed

(A: Again, this goes right back to the Sunstein group and the 77th Brigade and so on, how they'd shame you, you see…)

for backing shielding instead of lockdown

dailymail.co.uk / 30 Oct 2020

(A: They make you feel bad, BAD. Total war against the people, eh.)

Lockdown is a blunt, indiscriminate policy that forces the poorest and most vulnerable people to bear the brunt of the fight against coronavirus. As an infectious diseases epidemiologist, I believe there has to be a better way.

That is why, earlier this month, with two other international scientists, I co-authored a proposal for an alternative approach — one that shields those most at risk while enabling the rest of the population to resume their ordinary lives to some extent.

I expected debate and disagreement about our ideas, published as the Great Barrington Declaration.

As a scientist, I would welcome that. After all, science progresses through its ideas and counter-ideas.

But I was utterly unprepared for the onslaught of insults, personal criticism, intimidation and threats that met our proposal.

(A: Now, this is what the government's putting out against these folk, this is what's happening. The government is at war with the people, I hope you understand that.)

The level of vitriol and hostility, not just from members of the public online but from journalists and academics, has horrified me.

I am not a politician. The hurly-burly of political life and being in the eye of the media do not appeal to me at all.

I am first and foremost a scientist; one who is far more comfortable sitting in my office or laboratory than in front of a television camera.

(A: So she admits that she’s actually left-wing…)

Of course, I do have deeply held political ideals — ones that I would describe as inherently Left-wing. I would not, it is fair to say, normally align myself with the Daily Mail.

I have strong views about the distribution of wealth, about the importance of the Welfare State…

(A: …yada, yada, ya.)

But Covid-19 is not a political phenomenon. It is a public health issue

(A: No, it’s not. It is a political phenomenon that’s getting pushed by politics, government funding for warfare departments of all kinds including psychological war. That’s definitely political.)

At the heart of our proposal is the recognition that mass lockdowns cause enormous damage.

(A: Well, we know all that stuff, right. What she does mention is that…)

The results — to name just a few — include lower childhood vaccination rates, worsening cardiovascular disease outcomes (A: …and that’s true.), fewer cancer screenings (A: …and there’s actually fewer cancer, remember the article last week, folk are dying at home in agony, and they can’t even get pain medication, never mind get into hospital.) and deteriorating mental health.

Such pitfalls of national lockdowns must not be ignored, especially when it is the working class and younger members of society who carry the heaviest burden.

(A: Well, they are to have no future as we know. Anyway, that's what you don't know yet. But she does go on to mention that the newspapers, even the Guardian, you know, the Guardian newspaper, which pretends to be left-wing, used to be a bad paper, but again, changed ownership again, I think, I think, I'm not certain on that, just a few years ago just completely changed. She mentions here that the Guardian…)

…The Guardian, which has repeatedly published opinion pieces making factually incorrect and scientifically flawed statements, as well as borderline defamatory comments about me, while refusing to give our side of the debate an opportunity to present our view.

I am surprised, given the importance of the issues at stake — not least the principle of fair, balanced journalism — that The Guardian would not want to present all the evidence to its readers.

Well, they're getting paid to go after anybody who is against the authorized opinion. That's just it, isn't it. Isn't that really what it's all about? I've already mentioned that they're getting paid, the government is paying them too, well, LIE. Never forget these times, folks. Never go, if some miracle happens and you go back to any semblance, including with the newspapers, of what used to be, don't ever forget the now, what's happening now. When you read any of these papers, don't ever forget IT. But it's not intended to ever go back to what you're used to. Never, ever. It's a whole new way. The great reset is the reset of how you live, even if you will live, according to who's going to run your world for you.

Another one too is…

Has Covid killed off the flu? Experts pose the intriguing question as influenza cases nosedive by 98% across the globe

dailymail.co.uk / 25 Oct 2020

(A: It's almost disappeared, eh? And the surveillance data that they collect for the cases of flu, [Alan chuckles.] actually folk who have got the flu, right, not the ones that, oh, [inaudible], actually got it. So the surveillance is collected by the World Health Organization...)

'Surveillance' data collected by WHO shows how flu cases plummeted globally

That’s from the Mail on Sunday it says here. But I guess they'll just tack them all into padding, you know, like they did before with the swine flu one, put them all down as flu, hm. They did that, I did the articles at the time on the radio, when I was doing the radio shows, and they actually said that, put them all down, you know, anybody coming into doctors with the sniffle or whatever, put them down as this particular flu. Allergies, eh, didn't matter. [Alan chuckles.]

Another one too…

N95 Respirators vs Medical Masks for Preventing Influenza Among Health Care Personnel: A Randomized Clinical Trial - pubmed.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov / 3 Sept 2019

It's a good article actually. You can go on and on with these tests on these particular masks and so on. That's from the PMC articles. I'll put this one up too for those who want to waste their life looking at what you already know. They're pretty well no use. Actually, they're dangerous, we know that too. Never mind the fact they can help suffocate you if it gets steamed up with your breath, eh.

How Google is 'SPYING' on you: Firm's voice assistant records and keeps conversations you're having around your phone when you least expect it

dailymail.co.uk / 14 Nov 2017

(A: Well, you should know all that anyway, eh. It says…)

It lets users talk to their gadgets to search the web and interact with apps

(A: Well, use your hands and fingers for God’s sake people. I mean, you’re… Well, you can’t help folk, they just fall into it, eh.)

Background chatter could be enough to trigger this recording process

(A: They do the same with your laptops and that. They came out years ago admitting, the government and the NSA actually go into your laptops and turn them on occasionally to listen to what you’re talking about in your homes. This is… Do you still believe you had any privacy at all? Do you believe you're Andy of Mayberry, you know, everything is just wonderful and goody-two-shoes? Wake up, folks, and get rid of these, get rid of this stuff that's shackling you. Hm?!)

Visit Google's My Activity

Because they've all got their different types of ways of spying on you. That's what the computers are all about. That's what your cell phone is for too. They count on you all having cell phones so they can track and trace you, that's also going to be your passport and everything else. Don't leave home without it. Or you'll be arrested. And again another one, another one of the same thing I mentioned earlier…

New CDC Study Finds Majority of Those Infected with COVID-19 'Always' Wore Masks - californiaglobe.com / 13 Oct 2020

…ALWAYS wore masks. I'll put this one up too, this article here as well. That's from the California Globe.

US troops ready to take on China over disputed Senkaku Islands

thetimes.co.uk / 30 Oct 2020

(A: Do you know about that one too, eh? It's hyped up a bit. I don't really worry about it.)

American troops in Japan are ready to land on the disputed Senkaku Islands to fight off a Chinese invasion, a senior general has said, in the most explicit US commitment so far to defending the territory.

I'll put this one article up. And there's another article too, if I can find it, I'll put it up as well, where the Chinese general is saying, they're not going to take it anymore and blah blah blah, and did a bit of swaggering, etc. As they all flex their muscles. Because remember, China is supposed to take over from the US as the policeman of the world, that's what it was set up to do. And it was SET UP to do, folks, by outsiders. [Alan chuckles.] And as the US goes down, well, they have to take over, you see. N-n-n.

Also, again, they're doing their shopping early, Christmas in Philadelphia.

Philadelphia sees second night of riots, looting in response to police shooting - nypost.com / 27 Oct 2020

And it's not a response to it. You don't go looting because someone gets shot. You know?

And,

Trump Offers To Send National Guard.

Well, he always offers and offers and offers. And,

The Police Union, the Cops Had No Choice in Shooting an Armed Black Man

… it says. I think he had a knife, I don't know.

What's interesting to me is what they loot, you see. They already know what they're going for and who they're going to rob and all that. Like they have with previous ones, you know. And…

Looters Can Be Seen Lifting The Store's Metal Gate For All Others To Enter And Leave, Some With Arms Full of Shoeboxes.

Now, they did a shoe store too with these Footlocker popular, I guess, sneakers, whatever they are, I have no idea. But you used to, you know, this is nothing like communism looting at one time where they could rile folk up, because they didn't have food to eat, so they get them riled up. Communists used to go after charities that tried to feed the poor, and they'd actually brutally assault them and break their arms and heads and everything else. Because they wanted to intensify the misery to get the folk to be the people's army that they could use, you see. You always get used by communism, this idea of communism, and this other big front group, you always get used, folks.

So, helping folk was taboo. And you had to attack folk that were helping, that might alleviate their hunger pain or whatever. But in this day and age, I remember reading too, that they would never have the old-fashioned communist revolutions where folk wanted heat, like the one I read in Sheffield, and food and so on, just basic stuff. Now they want… they want… [Alan chuckles.] they want the brand name logo stuff, you know, and the fancy shoes that are the latest in things, and their sneakers, and their big, massive TV sets and stuff. That's what they're stealing.

So it's a different kind, isn't it? Ah, I'm protesting, I'm going to take this big massive television set out there and, they bring a U-Haul up in fact, [Alan chuckles.] where they planned in advance to have U-Hauls come up to the stores, and they can refurnish their homes I guess. So they use the protests for their early Christmas shopping I guess, eh. I'll put this one up too for those who don't even know what's going on.

And also, I'm going to put up the CDC, Centers for Disease Control and Prevention…

U.S. Influenza Surveillance System: Purpose and Methods - cdc.gov

They actually show you it here, the actual purpose and methods. If you really dig deep into their declarations recently you find that they admit that they've stopped even monitoring [Alan chuckles.] the flu... because it's all getting lumped in obviously with the Covid.

Another thing to watch for with the vaccinations, it's called…

Transverse myelitis

mayoclinic.org

(A: Because it's already broken out with some of the test subjects for the Covid shots, eh. You remember the woman with the spine, she had become paralyzed and so on.)

Overview

Transverse myelitis is an inflammation of both sides of one section of the spinal cord. This neurological disorder often damages the insulating material covering nerve cell fibers (myelin). (A: …the myelin sheath.)

Transverse myelitis interrupts the messages that the spinal cord nerves send throughout the body. This can cause pain, muscle weakness, paralysis, sensory problems, or bladder and bowel dysfunction.

There are many different causes of transverse myelitis,

(A: The favorite cause they put down these days is, as things increase, they put it down as multiple sclerosis, you know, that's a good way of getting around anything else that caused it. But they do admit that after vaccination some folk get it, you know. It can leave you with major, sometimes with major disabilities and so on. Nasty thing indeed.)

Pain. Abnormal sensations. Weakness in the arms and legs. Bladder and bowel problems.

(A: Etc. This is from the Mayo Clinic by the way, you know, this article. And they always put down at very, very end, after all the other things, you know…)

can happen after vaccinations.

Fft. Yep.   Well, there ya go. But it doesn't matter. I mean, they can do that with the vaccinations, and they've all got immunity from prosecution or getting sued. Isn't that wonderful. M-hm.

Dementia, I was thinking again, Sean Connery, 90, you know, dying there. And his wife I think said that, you know, he died peacefully in his sleep. And she kind of gave the impression that he was, what he really wanted, you know, he didn't want to go the way he was going with it. Because again, he had dementia to an extent, I don't know how bad it was. I was thinking about that too at the time. But here's a bit of dementia patients here, this article. Again, they've got bioethics coming into it and how they're going to treat society now. They're doing it already of course.

Dementia patients 'are being given "archaic and dangerous" anti-psychotic drugs to keep them sedated during lockdown putting them at risk of early death', as grandmother, 86, dies six weeks after starting medication

dailymail.co.uk / 26 Oct 2020

(A: It gives you the woman and so on and what happened to her.)

Experts say the medication carries risks of premature death and is used to treat behaviour and symptoms including aggression and agitation.

Until this year the use of the drugs had fallen over fears over whether their dangers outweighed any benefits.

But the coronavirus pandemic has seen prescriptions for the treatments rise as medics have looked to keep some patients sedate during the crisis.

They used to always do that too, once you got into the old folks' homes would put them on heavy-heavy duty antipsychotics, in fact. They would just sit there in their, they would strap them into one of those chairs, you know, with the little table bit that slots in. They would be drooling, you know, with, haloperidol used to be a popular one for drugging them, and eventually they get inhalation pneumonia, you know, because that's what happens, your reflex, swallow reflexes go a bit weird and you inhale anything you drink or even your own saliva into the lungs, and in comes bacteria with it naturally, and you die. Of course today they'd probably put it down as Covid.

But these things have been happening. You know, you'd better start looking at what's been happening to humanity, folks. You've got to start doing it. Because eventually it's going to be your turn. And what kind of world are you leaving for others to live in and to get born into? A hell on earth, hm.

So, once again I'll put up a little bit on Sean Connery, and an era gone by, you know. It's all fiction of course, and I would say it was easy enough acting really, to say a line here, stand here, say this, blah blah blah, good cash for that, he was at the right place, right time. And good luck to him. But it's an era gone by.

From bricklayer to 007: Sean Connery enjoyed 50 year film career but he will undoubtedly be remembered as the first – and some say definitive – James Bond - dailymail.co.uk / 31 Oct 2020

So anyway, what I'm saying to you is, you've got to start looking after yourselves and speak, you've got to speak out. A hell on earth is coming down fast, drastically.

Drastic plan by folk who've decided that they are your betters. The Club of Rome remember, and I've read their articles even from their own books too, like The First Global Revolution, and other articles that would, even the recent ones too, but they've always said that their purpose was to replace society with a different system. Because democracy didn't work, they couldn't get big things done for progress when they had to cater to individual rights and such. That's technocracy, you see. And now they're dancing, the CEOs are dancing about the fact that, and don't forget the CEOs and all these characters in this Club of Rome all also belong to the WEF, World Economic Forum, and the United Nations. It's one big club, same folks.

The CEO of the Club of Rome said that, she said, we can get all these, like the sustainable agenda through under Covid, she says, we won't let businesses open up unless they are going to be green and sustainable, etc. And essential. Well, here you go. Your betters planned a whole different future for you, and they didn't even have to consult you. Because they're using terror under a pandemic to do it for them. They've got all these psycho warrior organizations, psy-ops really, there to attack all of you when you try to put facts out there. There's democracy in action. And this is just the start of it.

Once again, remember folks you'd better really start getting a little coterie's of, if you've got family, make up your differences with them. If you've got friends, make up your differences. Because you're all going to need each other shortly to get through the hell that's coming down. And don't forget, this lockdown is the next part, nothing to do with reality, that the reality is, it's total war on you for compliance into the new system. But they've said that this is going to be worse than the first one. Step-by-step, conditioning, acceptance, conditioning, acceptance, and you keep going into the next and the next and the next, you see. It's going to be a lot worse.

So you'd better have little groups to help each other out to get around, the little ways and so on, to make sure you can get what you need for even basic survival. I really mean that. Because they want to introduce rationing. Not just curfews and so but rationing. That's the real plan, folks. Complete war scenario as though as they say the atomic bomb had dropped across major cities, to bring you onto your knees until things are going to be hard to get, and you will praise them, and you'll obey them and you get your little apps on your phone so that you can get your rice crispies or whatever you eat, you know, [Alan chuckles.] your cornflakes of some kind or another regardless of brand. Yeah.

That's what they want, to train a whole new system into being. And they're going to force it one way or... Unless you fight back. And if you want to fight back, the first thing to do is start opening your mouth. It's kind of like V for Vendetta, the word didn't start off by just the crowds going towards parliament and saying no, we've had enough. It started with one person putting information out and the rest started following, and then you spread it by mouth to each other. That's how you do it. That's how, until, once enough folk do it, they can't stand, they have to give up. Eventually.

That's in the manuals by the way for Antifa revolution. [Alan chuckles.] To take over they must undermine all the agencies of society. The idea is also to get the populace to be passive and do nothing, and to try to win over some of the police and some of the military, etc. Because the whole battle is over, who's going to control the populace, you see. But they actually admit to different things, if you can't get control of the populace, or if the populace won't comply one day, it's like the Stasi in East Germany, they just have to just give up.

If everybody's going to say screw you, what are you going to do? You can't arrest them all. There's no where to put them all. You can't use the excuse that you're serving the people when the people don't want you. You see? So remember all of this. They always say small things happen, you know, that end up into be giant things. That's how you start.

And spread the word because you've got to spread the word. And be careful too. Don't lose your temper with folks. And don't expect everybody to agree with you either. Because if you do that, d'you have an idea of democracy, hhhch? But folk who don't, who will listen to no other opinion except authority, are gone. They're goners. And they will go along and be the ones who, um, the little quislings that turn everybody else in, you see. You should arrest so-and-so, they've got wrong think, yeah, they're putting out fake stories. You know? They said that the flu cases are down, oh yeah, where did they get that from? The CDC. Oh really? Hm? Fft.

[Alan chuckles.] You see, it's not meant, in the propaganda war it's not meant that you win when they run it all, you see. That's what I'm saying, facts don't matter and eventually there's no point in arguing the facts when they've declared total war. The World Economic Forum has said it, this is the global reset. This is the whole agenda for the 21st century, Agenda 21. You had agenda 2015, that's one part of it, every 15 years or so, and then 2030 is the next one. But it's all segments of what must be accomplished step-by-step right up through this entire century. The end of the family unit. All the old communist ideas. The end of private housing, ownership. The end of private vehicles. A vegetarian society by the way. But for the general you, general public, no meat for you, no high protein for you. Nope. Austerity for you. I gave talks on Agenda 21 yeeears and years ago from their own website and with their publications. I said too, they'll use all their communistic techniques to have you comply in a collectivist society.

When they tell you to turn out for your community, I'm sure there's guys like Cass Sunstein saying you're a bad citizen if you don't turn up for the, for today, for the special rights for the whatever it happens to be that day. You have to turn up. That's what they did in the Soviet system. George Orwell had it, you know, you had to join the crowd to go and watch the prisoners getting caught, and say, hang them, hang them. When you're told to you have to attend meetings to show you're a good citizen, you see. As they screw with your brains.

So, it's up to you, they've declared war on you. The media is all getting paid to go along with it, and call everybody else fake, as they employ professional liars and psychologists and mind tinkerers to go after people to defame them, etc. When they've got evidence of facts which are contrary to the war that's on them, that's been waged on them by their own governments. Quite an amazing time, you've got to admit it, to watch these agendas being forced in under a guise. Amazing times to live in. Or to exist in.

Every generation gets its war that they're forced into and forced to go off and fight and get killed for. Or else, have banks collapsed, you know, and reduce to utter poverty. Or else something like this, you see, a Covid idea for the great reset, the reset of everything right down to the definitions of who will rule you, should bioethicists decide when you should die, or if they even need you for society's sake and the betterment of society, or the detriment, depending on your personality, etc. This is astonishing stuff getting churned out by the foundations, and Harvard and Princeton and all these big universities on board with them all, getting paid by the same donors, you know, the GATEkeepers, [Alan chuckles.] etc.

Quite amazing, isn't it? And folk think they're in a free democratic system. Even if it's Republican, the States, which it's supposed to be. But again, you know, you should read The Hard Road To World Order by the guy in the Council on Foreign Relations from years ago, I keep putting up that one. When he talked about the way to get around the Constitution, and they'd just ignore it. Rather than hit it head-on and they argued legal points with them, just ignore it, go around and over it, make new laws and regulations that are similar, almost the same, until the folk forget you've got the original one written, and they'll start to adopt the new ones that are changed bit by bit until literally, they've literally tossed it to the side like, again, say once again, Bush Junior said, well it's just a piece of paper. Eh? Here you go.

The great reset, eh. It's up to you people. But the first thing is always, don't wait for government to help you. You'd better start organizing to help yourselves to get through this. Because they really mean bringing you into complete austerity, which is poverty. And folk when they're hungry will tend to do whatever they're told eventually. And they know the segments of society that will comply first and foremost, they aim their ads at them, they admit that too, the ones who want safety more than others. They know what genders will do that too. They've got it all worked out, folks, by the mind war specialists, you see, the psychopaths that your government is paying to terrify you.

Well, that's it for me tonight. Remember, cuttingthroughthematrix.com, send a few bucks my way. And stay well, as best you can. Don't be terrified, folks, you're not out of the action just yet. But you've got to help each other. And get ready with basic stuff if you can. And if you've got things that other people need, that you know that they need and folk need them, help them out now. Start helping them out now. It's a good idea. Do what you can.

Because you're all going to need each other shortly. You will. Again, you have to set up your own little organizations, too, watch out for government spies. Hhhch. Do you think these tracers are just tracing? No, they're spies, folks. These are not, if this disease would supposedly end tomorrow, they're not going to abandon these things. These operations are here to stay. These tracers are going to be out in society all over the place. Just like, this is, don't get confused by the names they give them. It's the same scenario as you had through communism, and Stasi. The Stasi had thousands, millions of them actually in employment of the Stasi, honest civilians. They could have other jobs too, but they would get paid extra to spy on other people. It's all here. It's all here.

So question people. Be careful. Don't take everybody at face value. But for basic decency, common decency, help each other out. And they will help you out when times get really, really tough.

Hopefully. Some won't, you know. People are people, but that's the only way to get through bad times.

For myself from a very cold, and I mean my temperatures for the last few nights has been, I think on Friday night it, well actually it was on Saturday morning, it was 10°F. That was my temperature. It's already here, the winter. So it's not going to be a pleasant winter at all. My chipmunks left early. They were the first, it's almost like an agreement, they all went into the holes at the same time and that was them, gone for, that's them in for winter. That was about maybe almost 2 weeks ago. It's just so sudden, they'd all agreed, that's it then. They knew what was coming, [Alan chuckles.] the first frost and so on. Well not the first but maybe the hardest ones. But as I say, it was 10° the other night there. And it will probably just rain on and off with cold freezing rain until the snow comes in. That's how it often happens here.

So as I say, stay warm, those who've got warmth. Think about it too, there's folk in places like Britain who've paid into their pensions and everything, who died because they can't afford heating. As they get lambasted for being nasty people, you know, they've got to just give up their culture altogether, eh, by the brainwashing experts. Hmmmmm.

I-yi-yi. Help each other out because you're going to need it. Eventually it will be your turn to get help too. This is a long haul here, folks.

For myself Alan Watt from Ontario, Canada, it's good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

"Cutting Through the Matrix" with Alan Watt

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on November 8, 2020. And time, I just can't get over how time flies. I think, with me anyway, it reminds me of school. School, I hated school. It was boring. I think a lot of children thought the same way too. And so much of your history and all that was to do with another country [Alan chuckles.] and it had nothing to do with you really, except you were in subjugation at one point. I hate to even say country because it's not a country. We're ruled by a central city, that they call London, the City of London. And so is the rest of England too and Wales and Northern Ireland. All ruled from this amazing sovereign city, eh, with its own laws and regulations. Even the Queen supposedly has to get permission to go in to visit, because it is a sovereign power, with its Egyptian obelisk that was brought over there and planted beside the four main banks.

But again, I was thinking there too, though, it's like school, right? Because on Friday you felt great, because school came out and you'd rush off with your homework somewhere, go out and play or whatever, and you had a whole, in those days too remember, time lasted a long time, because so much that you saw was fascinating to you. You're constantly learning outside of school, that's where you did all of your learning really. If you lived anywhere near the country you can go into the country areas and climb trees or jump over little streams, great fun, or go fishing, things like that. And the day would really take a long time to pass, it was terrific, you know. That's what life is supposed to be about, is like that.

But the thing is, you would get Saturday. And it was still okay on Saturday, it was wonderful. And you'd get that little bit of trepidation when it was getting towards evening, you know, and you think of, oh, tomorrow's Sunday and that means the next day will be Monday and you're back at school. And sure enough on Sunday, once it came to Sunday night there, you were uuuuuuuugh, you'd try to make that, you'd stretch out the hours as best, before you fell asleep. Because you knew when you woke up you'd have to go to school.

That's what it's like now, isn't it, and to do with everything that happens with the Covid, lockdowns, all preplanned of course. You can see their old scripts already which they had published years ago on how they'd manage it all and all this kind of thing. I always say, you're living through scripts anyway. I said at the beginning of this Covid idea that this would be permanent basically, and it was written in stone. I said, it's chiseled in stone, nothing's going to change it, the whole world is to be on board with it. And that's what's happening.

You can't get in a real, any real situation you could never get 100% of the nations on board with it, with all the same so-called leaders and their democracies as they like to call them, on board with it, and their health advisors all on board with it. You would always get other dissenting opinions in higher places, but that's not happening. Which tells you that they were all placed in the right places initially for this thing to happen, and they could take it over and all run it in unison, lockstep as they call it, across the world.

Because it's to change the world, isn't it? The great reset from Klaus Schwab at the World Economic Forum, who told us, you'd be quite happy living, you know, living with far less material goods and so on. You know, they've already decided where they're going to take you, you understand, for the great reset. They were giving us all the clues for years and years and years under the guise of climate change, and you've got to cut back and go into austerity. I gave these talks yeears… it's like déjà vu, it's like repetition, repetition, it's literally Groundhog Day over and over and over for me. Because even the immunity passport idea, I came out with that back in the 90s as well, I says, eventually you won't go anywhere without your, some kind of identification to show you've had all your vaccinations up-to-date and electronic tagging and so on. I said, you'll go into grocery stores to get food, because you all need food, and alarms will go all off if it recognizes that you don't have your valid up-to-date passport or your vaccinations.

It's all here. You're living through a script. And you are living through a script. This is, if you look at the League of Nations, 1919, formed at the end of World War I, or after World War I, again under the, everything's done for your good and benefit, to stop another major war, they said, right. They had same institutions all set up, like a health authority for the world and all that. You have to look at, and I read this stuff years ago on a radio show, they had lots of ideas about the coming vaccines schedules they'd have all, everybody, children right through adulthood, birth to death. Back in 1919-1920 they came out with this kind of stuff and they've been trying ever since to get the public to be pincushions and the recipients of mandated corporate vaccinations.

Private business, eh. Which is a great business to be and if government, a true fascist government is on board with it. And you can call it fascist or communism, they're both fascist really, both socialist, meaning government and big corporations work together under the pretense of helping you for your own good. But if they mandate that you must take their product, and you government mandates it, by law or imprisonment and fines and all that, then that's no free society at all. So yeah, they had already, they actually said that they'd have lifelong vaccinations and boosters and all that down through time. And here we are.

And of course, but again, the greatest tyrannies are always presented under saving you, we're here to save you. That's what they called the tyrants of Rome, sometimes you had tyrants that were pretty decent at what they did, eh. Because a tyrant didn't have a really bad, bad name. Some were bad, but a lot weren't bad. But the idea was, here's the Republic of Rome, hm, and it's gone so far off kilter as a Republic by power-hungry freaks in the Senate and so on, who were grabbing land for themselves by disenfranchising farmers and so on, that occasionally they'd have to bring in, a general would stand up and say to his army, we're taking over Rome because it's lawless now. If you don't follow the law that you're supposed to be under, then it's not what you think it is after all, it's not the Republic anymore. The same as the US, you know.

Hhhhh, and they would bring a tyrant. He would rule like a dictator and you'd better obey him or else, this is Marshall law time. He'd try to get things back on kilter. Some of them were pretty good, as I say. They would actually grab the land back from all the Senators that had stolen it from the farmers, and dealt with the Senators in the proper fashion. And kind of restore law and order to an extent, back to a working system again. When those at the top don't follow the laws, hhhch, you see, you're in an unlawful society, and anything goes then. We're seeing that today. We've been seeing it for a long time actually.

It just gets worse and worse and worse and worse. But under the guidance of it's for your own good, sometimes you get a bad tyrant who would come in, who was really just in it for the power for himself. But it's always the technique that's used. Many top philosophers from long, long ago and up to the recent time too, top philosophers mentioned it too: if tyranny ever comes it will be under the guise of saving you from something, and it's to help you, you understand. That's the only way you can give up rights is when you're terrified and they say we're here to help you, right. It's quite easy, isn't it?

If you have enough people on board together, which isn't hard when you have a corrupt system worldwide where everybody has turned everything else out the window, every law, every religion, basically the tenant of religion out the window and you're living in a materialistic society for such a long time where greed is good, like Milton Friedman said, he taught that greed is good, then all the barriers, you couple that with Nietzsche, and you say, well all the barriers that kept totalitarian systems coming forward and creating a living hell are out the window. You can do anything you want, you see, once you have no moral guidance to go by. In fact, the old religions which were pretty much the same when you look at the rights of the people down through time, and that were fought hard for by the people by the way, even in religious societies they had to fight to get those rights.

But now they've been replaced by front people. The persuaders. You understand you're persuaded to do everything and give up your rights and freedoms. So you do it by giving them fancy titles, and little courses at University and you call them ethics experts and bioethics experts as well. They then interpret what's good for the humans, because they use scientific principles, you see. Of course they're all funded and paid for by the big global corporations that run universities to decide what kind of culture they want to be taught to future leaders. That's what universities are really for today, they give a culture to train… That's not new. I mean, Elihu Yale, I think it was Yale, in his, when he founded Yale University said that really the purpose of it was to ensure the proper values would be taught to future leaders, etc. That's what it's always really been, you know. Of course now you have the Skull and Bones as well [Alan laughing.] which is rather telling with its own war room.

Yeah, you're dealing with a system that's very old. Sometimes if the politicians, who are naturally corrupt, I personally believe that, I think that only really corrupt people go into politics, psychopathic types. They're up for the highest bidder too today, it's very evident, of the big corporations that fund them to run in politics. And before they go into politics, many of them, especially in the higher realms of medicine and food, etc. and all that, and chemical companies, were heads of the boards, they were on the boards, sometimes the CEOs, the chairman of some of these corporations, then they'd take seats in the FDA, Food and Drug Administration in the States and other things, and the equivalents in other countries too. They're back and forth like musical chairs making laws that the corporations, that they work for, can easily pass under the wire basically. So it's very corrupt, and openly corrupt.

And the lobbying, I mean, governments, as I say, is just there for money. It gets your money, takes your money from you. Government doesn't produce money, it takes money from the people that it pretends to represent. And it's a very thin pretense these days, and for a long time actually. Then it also dishes out money and grants to universities, then work for public/private enterprise, investigative science, research and development, for the big corporations, then they hand all their findings over to the corporations, including the big Pharma corporations and the vaccine companies at times too, in genetics and all that kind of stuff, and hand it over and they get it for pretty well nothing. You know, they put the patent on it, the universities have all been paid off, and no doubt there's big gifts given to professors and so on. I think everything is so openly corrupt, really, in this day and age. I really think it is.

With the top goes the bottom because the people at the bottom always accept that kind of corruption, if they don't complain about it then it means that they themselves at the bottom are corrupt as well. So things at the top get worse and worse and worse. That's how, they used to say, that's how you tolerate corruption, it depends how corrupt the people at the bottom become. And the more you become, the less indignant you'll be naturally, and you'll hear it often said, well if I was up there, I'd be doing the same, eh, I'd be filling my pockets too, that's what you'll hear. So there's no hope for that kind of society. You know?

So for a long, long time we've been living under the scientific tyranny and it's getting more and more evident now. Under the pretenses of science too, because the computer's a fantastic tool. They've trained everybody that somehow the computer doesn't lie, and that it's got a better brain, you know, metaphorically speaking, than humans because they can't tell lies. But all it can do is spout off the info that's fed into it. They used to give demonstrations of that years ago, according to the kind of data they wanted for the climate, for the climate agreement, they had what they wanted to spew into it and the terrifying things that were coming. Oh my God, the world will be dry as a bone by the year 2020 and we'd all be dying of thirst and so on. Of course Al Gore and the rest of them would use these kind of statistics. He said years ago too that eventually, I can't remember the year he said it would be, it was long past, but he said that children will wonder what snow was, you'd have to tell them what snow was, they wouldn't, can't imagine it because there would be no more snow.

I can tell them, that's an untruth, that's the terms they use, the untruth, not lies, because every winter here it's got heavier and heavier for the last few winters in fact, there's no lack of snow anywhere. Not up here in northern Ontario. But again, it's fantastic when you can get someone, with the white, I don't why they have white coats on when they stand next to computers, you know. Because you're brainwashed to believe that's what the expert wears. He'll stand there and tell you what their computer's spewed and why you must follow its predictions, you see, it can't lie. As they have this little cheesy grin on their faces as they tell you.

But that’s the kind of system we live in, it’s corrupt. The agenda, even for the climate change, was always to reduce the population numbers of the world and bring in again what Bertrand Russell and others would refer to sometimes as the Technotronic society, and technocratic society. Technotronic too was a term that Brzezinski used, Zbigniew Brzezinski, the Technotronic Era, again, run by experts and all the high-tech wizardry, they could literally alter people’s brain wave patterns, as he said in his book Between Two Ages and the chapter is called the Technotronic Era. So in the 1970s when he wrote his book the testing had already been done on a lot of the kind of standing wave and extremely low frequency technology. They found that very low intensity signals would affect the human brain very efficiently. He said they could actually make people, alter their behavior through Technotronic means and blanket whole continents with these waves, eh. It had been tested out in different areas and well understood.

You had that with the technocratic society where you’ve got people being told to obey, obey, obey and obey. The true socialist kind of society, the kind of society that HG Wells and George Bernard Shaw envisaged, where you'd have a hierarchy of, again, specialists. You’ll do away with religion, and you do away with religious morality. Again, replace it with ethicists, you know, out of universities, who’ll work with law to see how they can change the law to bring in their regimes of the new ethics which would tend to justify what the elite were doing in the corporate level. So it is a fantastic way to justify tyranny, you know, it’s very persuasive, you see.

That's how you manage the general public, you don't have to hit them head on and say just obey, obey. You can bring forth lots of newly qualified people with new kinds of degrees who will give you a lot of gobbledygook, be really impressive, and get you to submit voluntarily, you know. There was a guy in Britain, I mentioned him before, I can't remember his name. I know his face actually, hhhch, because you used to get him on television now and then and he would be presented as Professor so-and-so of, and whatever topic it was he was THE professor.

He would come on and he would literally be asked the question by the interview, the comedic interview about whatever it was, the big topic of the day, and he would just give a lot of very, very persuasive technological jargon, the gobbledygook, back. He made up lots of new terms and words and so on but sounded very impressive. So much so you would like this guy. You see, you've got to like the people who tell you, especially if it's a tyrannical system they're pushing, you've got to like them and say, well, it's not too bad, you know. Maybe he wants to take more rights away, but he has to do it to help us and save us. And this guy was awfully persuasive. They used to have him on the occasional comedy show as well to do this little act.

But that's what you have today, you have all these bioethicists and ethicists coming forth who have already worked, and some of them have got law degrees as well, you see, so that on behalf of the corporations and the government agencies that work in a global government agency, I'm concerned, you know, and they have for a long time. But they all work together and on the same agenda that was written long ago, to gradually do away, like the Club of Rome said, with the idea of democracy, too inefficient, can't get things done because you have to cater to individual rights. It's much better to have a collectivist society where you just tell them what's going to happen and that's it, or else.

And train them into it. You can be trained into any kind of living, you see. Again, Bertrand Russell was a classic orator on the global society. He worked with five different major agencies that he claimed were given permission to re-create the kind of, a new kind of culture for the West. In stages. Right up to the present day. You're still living through some of those stages that these agencies set out, through the fashion industry, even the miniskirt they came out with the idea. And the promotion of sexual promiscuity, which would lead to the dissolution of the family unit, and the fallout for massive sexuality with lots of unwanted children, or pregnancies. You would create an abortion industry, that would tie right in with Julian Huxley's position at UNESCO where he said he would have to devalue people's ability to discern themselves as being the pinnacle of life on the planet, and take them off their pedestal and bring them down into lower realms, until human life itself is diminished. And that's what they did. Very efficiently.

During it all the people, the youngsters, we all did it, that follow the changes step-by-step every few years, rapidly, rapid succession, all went in through this whole system thinking it was their system, thinking the culture was theirs, thinking they were somehow the cutting edge, and they were creating the sexual revolution, they feel, and they start the women's rights and so on, very quickly morphed into the abortion rights and so on. So step-by-step they fulfilled the whole agenda that was written back in the 1940s that Bertrand Russell touched upon. Quite fascinating really, to me anyway, when you realize that's how the world is run.

We're still living through it. Things don't happen just by themselves on any level. Like Plato said, they can't, you can't allow it to happen spontaneously, if it's not authorized, whatever changes might be. In fact, Plato wanted even musicians, not just actors and playwrights and dramas to be licensed, but musicians as well. He said, because music, even then, could be used to stir the warlike abilities innate within especially young males. The music had always been used for warlike purposes, it gets the blood up and you get your happy warlike songs on the go and away you go.

But also you could create discontent through anything that would attract the youth. It's hard to get the youth to sit and say, let's have a... Here they are on a nice island, eh, one of the Grecian island, eh, and there's a school of philosophy. They've got beautiful weather, right. You've got lovely blue skies, and the deep blue greenish azure, they call it the azure color, I guess they call it, of the sea, and a nice warm breeze, eh. You’re having a great time yourself, if you're wealthy. And there's this philosophy school and your dad wants you to go there, you see, and he's paid this philosopher X amount of bucks. Because I mean that's where school comes from, the word is from a Greek word meaning leisure. So you need leisure to go to school. The rest of the folk were too busy keeping the wealthy elite in comfort so they didn't have time to go to school.

But here you are as they say, here's this philosophy school saying yada, yada, yada, you know, and let's, don't just, what's the meaning of life, eh? And then it breaks off into a thousand different ideas, and everybody's arguing, and they get dialectics going and all this kind of stuff. You could either sit for it all day waiting for it, or, have you heard someone playing a fancy little instrument, something, maybe a harp, eh, and singing some song that would get the foot tapping. Well, I guarantee you, any little boys and girls there would suddenly be over, especially if it were someone their own age, you see. It doesn't matter if someone's created them as an idol to follow, as they always do it in the music business, but as long as they think it’s theirs, and they're talking about, yeah, yeah, we're going to have our, it's our, talking about our generation, right, hhhch, [Alan chuckles.] and rebellion tapped in it.

So sure, you can actually... So what are they going to choose? What are you going to do, listen to some boring old philosopher? …or go and listen to this guy singing about the injustices of life and all the things that he'd love to, and how angry he was, because his hormones are jumping and he doesn't know how to control things, so he's angry about everything and yada, yada ya. So they can all kind of relate to that and away they go. Well that technique has always been used and Plato talked about it, that it should actually be licensed because it was a dangerous thing to society, for the stability of society.

Quite amazing really, eh, when you think about it, even way back then, that Plato himself had to flee Greece and Athens, eh, he had to flee for quite a few years after Socrates died. Socrates was his mentor, you know, he was a mentor to quite a few philosophers actually and Aristotle too. But Socrates was often put across to the public as being someone that they just picked on, he was just too bright for them, you know, and, he had these outrageous ideas and so on and blah blah blah. But it was much, much, and then he was asked to drink the hemlock, that was his sentence, that was his punishment. Well his punishment actually if you look into the records, hhhch, that they talked about, was that he himself with teaching people, or the students to become, like almost like an army to, for insurrection against their parents. Old techniques are still getting used today. And in your face today actually, very open. The students don't know it but anybody else outside that's watching can see it.

So Socrates died and Plato and a bunch of them fled in case they got hunted down. Because the ideas that they had been taught, and the techniques that they had been taught of recruitment, training and so on were dangerous to the establishment of Greece at the time, or Athens. You've got to think about it, I think that was probably a common thing that would happen in different countries actually, the more advanced the more it would happen at the time. But Plato did understand, that's why he talked about licensing, afterwards when he came back and he was, he got a good position of power himself. He understood what he had been taught himself, the power of art, music, and some poetry, and stage plays, hm. Fascinating stuff really when you think about it. So nothing really changes. It's very powerful. Powerful, powerful tool.

I remember going to high school and the first week I was there some of the younger teachers there, some of these guys over there, just before class started, they were in, there was two or three of them in the class just meeting I guess before the bell went off, we were all sitting there waiting for the bell to go off, but they were chatting about music at the time. They were having a debate about who the best female vocalists were at the time and who was getting pushed. They were having a kind of little spat about who the best female vocalists were. But when I listened to them, it wasn't so much how good they were, it was they knew they were very left wing and they knew that the techniques that they were going to push in the songs, and had been put across in their songs, were kind of revolutionary type songs. They understood that they wanted to change everything, always for a socialist cause, supposedly for this equality idea, you know, this strange idea of equality… that's never existed, even in the communist countries.

But again, people who are that same age, you know, they were the right age, young, you know, even though they were teachers, and they still thought that everything was wrong. And no doubt about it, a lot was wrong. But they didn't know the reason for things all being wrong. They didn't know they themselves were getting programmed by a system that already controlled the culture industry. Very important. Like Gramsci said too, Gramsci was the communist who taught some of the big, big communists actually, and he said... And communism, really is a very, very old, an old idea, especially the type that proliferated eventually in the 1800s, but it sort of preexisted for quite some time. But Gramsci said and wrote about as to how to take over cultures, step, very slowly, step-by-step, very Fabian in a sense, until the culture IS yours, you see, you've conquered it without them even realizing it. That's the most powerful one of all.

Now, with all the universities you've got, and through the 20th century into the present century, teaching this kind of thing. Some of the higher courses too, that go into politics and social sciences. But they go into the Leninist idea and also the Marxist ideas, and the helpers, and they were all cognizant of Gramsci's teachings. Which mean that they understood, they obviously understood that a lot of what he had taught had already happened, and they were all for it. Because the socialistic values, or the Marxist values permeated all strata eventually of society. Eventually when the upper elite come down with it too, they pretty well won. That's when you see society breaking down because the old values, the things that kept folks strong and weary against outsiders, or ANY philosophy coming in, to destroy as a weapon of war, you'd spot them. Well, those folk were gone then, you see, their own offspring had become so softened that they now were defenseless as well. That's what you're seeing across a lot of the US at the moment as well, and the folk don't know it. But it was well planned and orchestrated.

But yeah, I think about Plato at times, it's quite fascinating to look into the ancient times and realize that some of these schools were teaching the overthrow of the parents. And again, some of the schools that Socrates had and other ones had too, in this kind of loose brotherhood you might call it, were all teaching the same thing. They brought young females in too. Some of them became almost like agents of modern spy agencies. They literally were told how to eventually, how to seduce the older politicians, if you like, and important nobility of ancient Greece, and maybe even get hitched up to them, but definitely to influence them, hm, into a certain direction.

I mean, it's fascinating really to see how nefarious society has always been in a way… hhhch, and the human mind, eh, especially when it comes to power and politics the human mind knows no bounds. But today you have corporations that are like countries. They are. The corporations unfortunately also took over all businesses, until they are the business, and the country is almost a tool for their labor and for their products, you know. That's how bad it is now with corporations.

I gave the talks many years ago on that too, when Quigley, and Quigley by the way gave lectures as well and I don't know if they're still out there or if you can find them. But Carol Quigley who was all for the agenda, he was an elitist himself, and he didn't believe in democracy for the people. He was all for the CFR agenda, you know, the Council on Foreign Relations, and he was all for them creating wars to get their objectives achieved, you know. Quigley did say in Tragedy and Hope and other short notes he put out too, not that Tragedy and Hope is a short note, hhhch! But he did say in it that the corporations would eventually will be the governmental system of the world and the CEOs of corporations, he says, it'll be a new feudal system where the CEOs are the new feudal overlords over the peoples of the world.

Well, if you look at Facebook and all the other social media platforms, and Google and all the rest, from the beginning as far as I was concerned, I didn't want a computer, I knew what they were going to be for. I even did talk shows at the time on radio, where I still have it in my computer, and I said what it was for. I says, these things aren't spontaneous, it's not self-made people that come out and just have these big organizations. There're all fronts. That's how the world is really run. And I said, they'll be used against you eventually. And sure enough, that's what you've got. So Quigley's predictions came true because he was in-the-know on a lot of it too. He knew the folk that worked at ARPA that became DARPA and he knew the high-tech experts and where they were going to take the world. But he did say that yeah, the feudal overlords would be the CEOs of corporations.

You think about it, you see, in a feudal system, you don't have democracy in a feudal system. It's a hierarchy of what used to be nobility at one time. You'd have your reeve, you know, of a town or little Hamlet or whatever it happened to be. And you'd have your sheriff as well, the sheriff as the shire reeve, that's where that supposedly comes from, but I've got my doubts about that too, I think maybe it's part way true but... So you'd have shire, and you'd have your reeve, the reeve of the shire, and that became sheriff supposedly as English started to change. But you also had that coming from their wars I think and the Crusades as well as far as I think there's a crossover between the two cultures there when it comes to some of the naming of these places and these people and positions.

But you're definitely witnessing an authoritarian system coming down the pike. Everybody I've mentioned before from years ago that were up there working and churning their books out at the CFR, it was a great source actually, because many of the members in the CFR have their books churned out for them. I'm sure they're ghostwritten, but they're written in the vein of how this person talks on their ideas and so on, that's how ghostwriters really work. But they told you an awful lot of truth of where they were going to take the world. Some of the ones actually, some of the best books were written during World War II by members that were traveling in the countries as they got so-called liberated. And before it too they met together in big panels in the US and in Britain on how to create a post-World War II Society for Europe, the European countries, and for Japan. In the US, I think it was Hopkins that Roosevelt appointed to be in charge of the committee to create, to CREATE a post-World War II culture for Germany and Japan before the wars were finished, you know.

I mean, you've got to understand, there were, we get simplified histories in school, eh? It just starts, bad man starts war, good countries go and fight bad man and then it's over, the end of it. Then you've got another enemy by that time, and a Cold War. Very simplistic stuff. You don't realize the MASSIVE organizations that were helped to spring up. Again, something that Quigley related to as well, he mentioned that you can get more done in five years of war in a social change kind of system where folks simply obey and actually their rights are suspended in war, you're under war powers act and you all pull together for the common good, we're all in it together, the terminology, slogans they churn out. And people put up with it, you see, rationing and everything else, and social changes. To change society.

Quigley also said that it doesn't matter what side you're on of combatants, you all change much the same because you're adopting the same changes throughout the war in order to survive. So that's why they like war, you see, or the threat of war, or the threat of mass extinction, like Covid [Alan laughing.] and that kind of thing. Because you can get so much done. The World Economic Forum is doing exactly the same thing, as you well know with its great reset, and all these organizations, none of which you get to vote for, the United Nations as an example, the World Health Organization that also takes funding from Bill Gates. [Alan laughing.] So it's not compromised, is it, eh?

It goes on and on this kind of system. So yeah, you're living through a massive, massive plan. I wasn't even planning to go here tonight but there you go. That's just the way it happens as my thoughts start to take off by themselves. But you're living through agendas. The whole point is, you're living through agendas. Things aren't just spontaneous. Some of these agendas take many years to plan, and further years to refine, and then more years to game it to see, if we do this what would happen, and they go through all these different simulations of what might happen that could throw it off and they try to eliminate things that might interfere. All in the game stage basically and the debating stage before they introduce it.

That's why they don't really feel... That's also why you see that no country is backing off that's signed on to the agreements with the WHO and the various agreements after the, about 2004 they all signed onto the same, really their own national agreements, it's all the same agreement to do with dealing with pandemics and martial law type scenarios. They're all on board EXACTLY, pretty well, except maybe Sweden and a of couple of other ones. But otherwise, they're on board exactly with the same propaganda in fact, using the same figures that they keep spouting out, and it doesn't matter the country, the same figures and the same nonsense, and using the same psychological warfare divisions by the way that give you your fear.

Like the SAGE group that Britain that has got a subgroup attached to them that comes up with the ideas on how to terrify you. And literally actually said that, if the folk won't comply then the media, and this is a handout for the media telling them to increase the story, exaggerated stories on how severe it was, to scare them, to create more anxiety, and scaring them into compliance. Well, I don't know about you, but I would never ever, ever, ever vote for any government that did that to me. I don't care what excuse they give for it. Never, I would never do that. This is all managed fear and terror.

But when you couple that, and I'll touch on it tonight too perhaps, if you couple that with the incredible suicide rates going up and up and up. Officially. They're really watching, this is how great an experiment you're under right now as you're all studied. And statistics, everything is statistics and how to control people, stats, stats, stats, isn't it? And there’s machines and computers that predict more things and more things are going to happen, blah blah blah. But the suicide rate is definitely going up. Definite age groups, but including young people, when they're about 20, 21 to 24. Quite astonishing really. And some stories of really decent young people who just can't see their friends and so on and they kill themselves.

How tragic, eh? It could all have been avoided, because as I say, this is the first lockdown in the history of the planet where the healthy folk are locked down, quarantined, [Alan chuckles.] and businesses plummeted to the bottom, because it's meant to almost disappear and you’re supposed to go through the hardships of the great reset, the stuff they've been talking about for years, that I was talking about for years parroting their articles, and I've got so much from the articles saved over many, many years on this and I gave talks on it. To me, as I say, it's like Groundhog Day, I'm just repeating myself because I knew it would come to this. Not because I wanted it to come to this.

But they didn't beat around the bush, you know. They talked about the fact that the people were ignoring their scary scenarios. They call them scary scenarios for climate change. I've got the articles from the big front groups that they use, Friends of the Earth and so on, well-funded front groups that are meant to make the people think that, oh, there's thousands of people agreeing with them. No, they're all getting funded, all the leaders get funded, like everything else, and the followers are just disposable, they do their job and they're disposed of.

They talked about the people aren't listening to us and they aren't cutting back on their consumption and blah blah blah, and a lot of them are still eating meat and so on and so on. It's a huge agenda, meatless society, long before they came upon the idea of doing away with animals altogether, eh, they had already planned a vegetarian type society. But again it will be mainly the vegetables owned and patented by the big genetically engineered companies, genetic engineering, and the pesticide and herbicide industry, chemical industry. Because all these corporations survive on us. So it's much better and efficient to get the government to sign into law that you must eat their food, you see. [Alan chuckles.] Beautiful fascism, isn't it? Where a government actually complies quite happily with them.

The same with the vaccinations and everything else. Vaccinations can take years to show you what's wrong with side effects. It doesn't matter, they say, they want to mandate it. Even though you still have the Nuremberg laws that came out from the Nuremberg trials, that human beings were not to be experimented with, and they couldn't do anything to them, put anything in their body without their consent. Well, consent is supposed to be informed consent. You don't just say, oh this is the flu shot or this is a Covid shot and it's good for you, and you're supposed to just obey, and some nurse is going to grit their teeth because you won't comply and they get angry, you know. No, that's not medicine. That's not medicine at all.

Like everything, it's supposed to go through legal, legalities, and you can't put anything in someone's body without their consent. Everything else you put in their body without their consent, you'd have them up on charges. If someone stuck heroin into someone's body and they didn't want it, I mean... the government itself would be hammering them for it, you know. But when it's, oh, it's for this corporation that we've signed this, we've signed, you know, we've given them money, your government has given them money. [Alan laughing.] Oh, dear, dear. Yep. Fascism, fascism.

And they've got to get rid of their products, eh, or... Because they want that ongoing. It's like light bulbs, the light bulbs went down and down and down with the life expectancy of light bulbs, with international meetings of the manufacturers, years ago, planned obsolescence. Because one or two companies were making bulbs that lasted for years, years and years, so they said, we can't make a profit like this. We could actually make bulbs that would last for the life of the person, but if you do that then no one needs them, no more bulbs eventually, or very few, and the companies go down. So you just make life of it just a bit shorter and shorter.

The same with vaccines, they want guaranteed business. It's a good... Because they've got all the shareholders, eh, and the shares go up and up enough and more folk want to get shares, the more contracts that they have with government, with the companies. So they, yeah, it's great business. But they want pretty well predictable shares, and predictable levels of income, so they want like annual vaccinations, of all kinds, all through the people's lives. Yep. There you go, eh.

But that's not fascism, it's to keep you safe and healthy... Even though you can get the viral interference and problems when even after vaccinations if you hit the actual wild virus, as they like to call it, or even something that's similar, in the wild, and you get a cytokine storm, and that's you, you'll be dead pretty quickly without treatment, you know. This is all understood, but you're supposed to just accept these vaccinations because someone looks at you like you're an idiot, you're an idiot, you see, what do you know, and they want to just pump it into you.

You see, that's what society has come down to. At one time folk had rights. Folks did have rights. And if they're not terrified they'll exert their rights. But when they are terrified, a lot will cave-in, oh, save me, save me. Because they watch TV every day, hm, the greatest propaganda tool ever devised. M-hm. What can you do? But yeah, and again, now they've got their bioethics and their ethicists and, oh, we've studied the law and you know it's quite legitimate to terrify the people to make them comply. This is what they're telling us now, I've got some articles like that. And I thought, my goodness, here we go, eh. Yep.

And it is interesting, if you just stand outside the box, and outside yourself even look at it all, hm, from the outside. You look at the tyrannies. How long did you even have, even in Britain, this idea of democracy? It was a pretty recent thing, wasn't it? Because up into the 20th century it certainly wasn't Democratic. And even at World War I, you hear about suffragettes, suffragettes. But they never tell you that most of the men didn't have the vote either, because they didn't have property.

History is such an awful liar, because you get authorized history, and everything is politicized for the present. So they talked about suffragettes, a lot of whom by the way were from wealthy families [Alan chuckles.] of revolutionaries who went over to Moscow after the Bolshevik revolution. You can actually trace some of them. But facts don't matter, eh, when you've got big agendas to carry out and so on. Yeah, most folk didn't have the vote. Even in the US, I've mentioned before, after the war of independence they had debates about that. They didn't even want to give them… what they did give the people to vote, the right to vote, they still wanted it to be landowners. And then even then they argued about how much land you should own, they wanted big chunks of it, you know.

So anyway, democracy, this idea of having... I mean, in the US, on paper, it was the first nation to give everyone rights. On paper. But what's the point of having them if you don't stand up for them? Jefferson mentioned it a few times. So did Franklin, you know, what kind of government have you given us? He says, A republic if you can keep it. So yeah, Bush Junior said it too, well what about the Constitution, when they were signing the Patriot Act and so on, when he told them to sign it, to all the Congress, which I'm sure they were all quite happy to do, all the representative signed it in the Congress without looking at it. He says, just sign it, you won't be patriotic unless you sign it, so if you want to actually look at it, you're not patriotic. So, they all signed it. That's the official version, eh, that goes down in history. And you vote these prunes in. Ftt.

Britain again is no better. It had all the, I've mentioned this before, just like today if you look into all the demands that are tacked to loans from the US government and the World Bank – all based in the US I think, at least the groups involved in them – and you look at all what they demand to do to change their cultures, which is just the same as the West, you see, which has changed again, [Alan chuckles.] and you must sign it, before you get the culture, and pass this law and change it here and change it there and all the rest of it. That never used to be done, at least we're told that anyway. But I think it's always been here.

Today look at the money that's being dished out to the people, and they're supposedly, governments are, you know, they're supposedly borrowing like from the Bank of England billions of pounds, millions and then billions of pounds. Well you see, they're all with stipulations, and now that you're into the post pretense Democratic system, in Britain for instance and in a lot of Europe, then you have all these different conditions on compliance. And the compliance is going to do with electronic monitoring, passports, IDs, ID 2020 is one of them, eh, and again, a post Democratic system where you obey experts, continuously all through your life, into an austerity type of living. It's all come to pass. They planned it this way, they wrote books and books and books about it, they taught it. And here you are.

Maurice Strong said it too, that he wouldn't be happy until they had dismantled all the industrial factories and so on and industry left in the West, he wouldn't be happy until it was all completely dismantled. Well, did anybody vote for Maurice Strong? Nope. Do you vote for the United Nations? Nope. Do you vote for the World Health Organization? Nope. You vote for the World Economic Forum? Nope. …that gives you the great reset, you see? Nope. You don't get to vote for ANY of these organizations, but they, like one big gang at the top, because their members often are the same members that belong to all organizations, some of the top ones you see. They've decided with their massive think tanks and their advice of their think tanks and so on of the world on how it's to be, and it's the one that they want, with their smarts cities which they control and everybody, and it is controlled and actually owned by them.

Because getting back to the money that the banks are supposedly dishing out to pay people to stay at home under the guise of Covid. It is a universal basic income, and along with that come all the conditions! You see, not initially but it's going to be within, maybe before Christmas they'll start coming out with kind of, you've got to take these vaccinations, number one. You've got to get immunity passports, number two. But if you don't have all that, you've got to check in with some counselors, you see, every, maybe twice a week or something like that. This is the new system, using a martial law type scenario to get it all through.

But yeah, the new system, it's not going to be free money for everybody so you can buy and play yourselves. It's to manage you all and to have you controlled and obedient as slaves. Go back into ancient times and read about how, what slaves were, the ownership of slaves, THROUGH DEBT. That was, that's written, that's in the Old Testaments too if you care to read through it. If you were, if you go into debt, you know, you have to give yourself, your own body there as a servant, a slave, and work for the master until it's paid off. If you can pay it off, with compound interest you never pay it off, it's not meant to be paid off. But also, any children that you had while you were a slave belong to the master as well.

It's quite amazing, this stuff. And you can, people will get into arguments of who's to blame and blah blah blah, and point fingers. But here's the reality of it. It wouldn't matter who's doing it because it's all the same. You don't have to say, your children will be mine because you’re in debt. But the children will be theirs anyway, the corporations and banks anyway because your children are borrowing too, you see. And you're borrowing on behalf of the children.

So you've got all the stipulations coming down the pike, and folk, a lot of young folk think it's going to be great. Well, we won't have to do any work, you know, we can sit and play with their phones all day and whatever else they want to do. That's what they think, eh. Meanwhile you have to go down into austerity, and I'm talking about radical austerity. Under the guise of saving the planet.

Did you notice, did you notice that as soon as Biden supposedly was in the lead, regardless of nefarious means and all the rest of it, it doesn't matter. It really doesn't matter. Immediately all the different mainstream that was all for Biden, because deep state again as they call it, immediately started saying, oh good he'll get us back on track with the climate change agreements and back into the Paris Accord and the Conference of Parties that were meeting again, and they'll be cutting back on folks ability to live in the country and all that kind of stuff, you know. All right back on track, this is what they're saying, you know. That's what the CIA wanted. That's what the global intelligence agencies wanted. Because they are all one. And that's what the top corporations all want too, they're on board with it completely. Again, CEOs of big corporations are the new feudal overlords.

And just like feudal overlords, as I say, they can censor you until you can't say anything. They own everything, you see, so they are overlords. You can't use their platforms. You can't do this; you can't do that. If you speak out against anything that they deem taboo, and if not yet they might declare some new taboo thing tomorrow, but you're not allowed to give your opinion on anything. You'll be called a social influencer, and only their own social influencers are allowed in the big traditional corporations, that have been living on the tax money for years, called news organizations, because no one was interested in the garbage they've been churning out for the last 30, 40 years, hhhch, really. Yeah.

But they are vital to have a unified propaganda outlet with the same propaganda unified, you know, news across the world. So whatever you look at, you get the same stories, you're seeing the same things with the same opinions, you see. That's what, that's how you control people. People can't think to themselves, they can't believe that anyone would go to this length to deceive them or control them. And that's why it works, it's because you don't think that. [Alan laughing.] Because you're probably decent people, you see.

But psychopaths have no problem doing that. Most folk who are bioethics, and in the bioethics field and the ethics field, a new ethics field for humanity, this is what replaces religion, you see. It's a mixture of law and social sciences, mixed with corporate agendas. You know there's just too many people, why don't you just hit 65, die, don't claim any money that you've paid into for pensions and let the government use that money on needful things, you see. I'm not making this up. That came out from an Australian professor a few years back, who got ALL the coverage in the world, eh, from all the Western media too. Oh, he actually said it. Of course he said, because he was chosen to say it. That's how these things are put across to the general public. But yeah, what you're living through right now is just the beginning of it all.

Now remember, that's one hour passed already, I haven't even started. Go into cuttingthroughthematrix.com, my website. You'll notice the other official websites I have listed on that .com site, make note of them so if you can't get me some day if I'm cut off or whatever on the .com site you'll have these other sites, hopefully, that are still up that you can go and get the latest from me. These are all my official sites listed on cuttingthroughthematrix.com. Other people upload my talks and then refer it back to me for anything else. But on my own website remember you've got all the links to the talks I give. I don't just talk off the top of my hat at times when I'm talking about the actual, I hate it when they call it news stories. They're called stories, eh? Well said too, stories, because that's what they are, eh. You can do the checking of these things for yourself, the verifications of them because it's important to do so. If you're serious about things.

We've now reached the stage I talked about, phew, back in the 90s we’d reach, with some kind of health passport with you at all times to get into any store and so on. That's all pretty well here, eh? This week too, and last week I noticed too, I didn't even bother reading them it was about the new apps from different companies. Again, they all got their hands out to make... All paid by our tax money, eh, to put shackles on us and manacles on us. Tracking and tracing.

Sovereign and independent, supposedly, humans... You're SOVEREIGN if you're born, eh. If you're BORN. You're not born… Well, again, getting back to the slavery idea, they'll debate that, well, you're born into slavery because, you know, your nation and you own pre-existing debts from previous generations. That's how they're wording it today. That's why no generation should be born into paying back the debt from the previous generation. Thomas Jefferson said that too. They all knew this stuff long before we came along. Because it's been done before, you see. And they had a good education back then. They didn't get heads full of nonsense and different Marxist philosophies. They were taught the facts of history, what had been done, why things had been, what worked, what didn't work and so on.

But here it is again, yeah, you're born into debt, and so he said that, if you're born to pay off the debt of a previous, previous generation you are a defacto slave. That's what he said. And that hasn't changed. It hasn't changed [Alan chuckles.] because obviously those who control money and money systems of masses, you know, loans… This is not the average little bank on the street. These are the big international lenders that lends to nations to their central banks. Hhhch.

Yeah, you're born into slavery, eh. You're still paying off the debt from, that was accumulated from previous world wars. I've read three times from official newspapers in Britain that they'd just paid off the debt of World War I. So after this, when I read it the second time, years later, I thought, I thought they'd already done that. Because they keep lying to you. Hhhch. Well, you can, because they haven't really paid the debt off, they're still paying off the interest at times on the debt. That's weird, when they say balanced budgets, that's what they used to always tell the public, oh, we're going to balance the budget, and people would think, oh they're going to start paying off debt. No, no. They're paying the interest, trying to make interest payments on the debt. Kind of like Visa, you know, the credit cards they give people. They all, the MasterCard, they're all the same. But they can give you these very low rates of payment, and that's to suggest it, if you get the payment slip coming in and say you owe so and so. Your basic payment could be as low as 10 or 20 bucks, you know, whatever it happens to be. But you don't realize though that you never get away from it, it would take you years and years and years at that rate to pay it all off. And during that time they've added compound interest on, daily interest, and weekly interests and monthly interest, you see.

That's how money... Business is not there to serve the people. You know, the big business, they are really not. Never was. They will argue in fact that laissez-faire capitalism that they had in Britain and during its industrial area was to have a free hand. That was the idea of it, that you had terrible fallouts and children were dying every day of starvation and malnutrition and down the mines and the factories, and that didn't matter either. It was, why should they have a moral obligation to society? They actually debated all these things quite openly in their magazines because they had magazines for factory owners and so on.

They had meetings with parliamentarians, that also belonged to the factory group types and so on, who were voted in by them, but they would say that. So here, that was their moral, hhhch, debating point back then was, was it okay to make big, big profits and have a good part of the population living in starvation, on starvation wages, early death, malnutrition and so on? The said, well we can't help it, we have no obligation. They go into, am I my brother's keeper?, that old thing, you know. Which you can take a lot of ways as well. [Alan chuckles.]

I keep getting sidetracked, eh, because I'm prattling away. But I was thinking of my brother's keeper. Supposedly that's what Cain said when God says, where's your brother Able? or Abel. That's what he says, am I my brother's keeper? He says, it's his life and what happens to him, am I responsible for him. In other words, that's what it's saying. But you got to understand in the Bible names are very precise in a way. They depict the characters that's played at that particular point. And Abel is really, in Hebrew Abel would be, um, an unimportant person, you could say, it's got the notations of being not important, and transitory, you know. That's what it means. So that's his function. That's why there's no great crying over him. He's there to fulfill a role in the story that people are just somehow disposable. You know? And really, there's different ways to come out of it, because Cain survives, obviously, and Abel doesn't. [Alan chuckles.]

So is that right or wrong, you see? Is Cain the winner? Depends how you look at it. And that's how it comes down to ethics as well when it comes to laissez-faire capitalism. Money, where money itself becomes the profit motive, where you could actually play with money as the commodity. And then again as I've mentioned last week, I think maybe touched on it, what's the purpose of society, you know, and then, what's the purpose of economy? This is the endless debates that have been carried on for centuries, is, are the people there to service the economy, or is the economy there to serve the people? So that still goes on.

But again, they've kind of finished the idea. Because when Darwinism came along you have the validation of inferior types and superior types. That's what it's really, what a lot of it was about, again, trying to use a science, you see, a new science to validate what was popular amongst the nobility, the wealthy of the time. Well, we're wealthy because we're superior, you see. We marry properly into other successful families, so there’s something obviously superior to us than all those folk at the bottom. And that's how they judged it. So they used this idea of evolution, we have evolved further, you see, then all those little ragamuffins down below.

So science was used, this new science was used to justify the conditions of everybody else. Justify really why all of these very, hhhch, wealthy folk were living on the backs of all these little people at the bottom. Nothing much changes there in some way except you might have, today you have a welfare class in some countries that don't go on a Marxist rampage for food and clothing anymore just because they were threadbare or whole stick. You got them robbing for, [Alan laughing.] they show you as a statement on TV, eh, of the modern welfare state, where they’re robbing the footwear locker place think they said, was in Pennsylvania or somewhere because they want all these brand-name sneakers and all that. But also, they want the big, big, the biggest TV you can imagine. Even bring in vans up and U-Hauls and that to put them into. It's quite amazing how you can compare to modern, to today's revolutionary classes that are used, you know, not the ones who guide it all but the ones who definitely are used, as always, and what they actually go for, you know. That's interesting in itself.

But anyway, yeah, the whole idea of Darwinism really did, was set out to justify the superior classes. Right down to The Perfect American Societies of the Rockefellers, where they had a magazine which went into this and they showed you the better family of the month, or the best family of the month, or the week or whatever it happened to be. They photographed these people, go into their genealogical backgrounds, what they worked at today and their income and how superior they were. Big, it was way ahead, you know, World War I and World War II, this whole idea. It hasn't changed today by the way. Because they did say, you know, in the early days, and they've stuck to that pretty well in their arguments, that they decided when they set up the Cold Spring Harbor in the States as a big genealogical research center pretty well for eugenics and inbreeding, and breeding better types of people, using the Cattlemen's Association's records of how to breed cattle. And they bred better cattle. [Alan chuckles.] They actually used that.

But they actually had decided pretty well eventually that anyone, that we'd all evolved, everybody on the planet had evolved to a certain level at that time, whatever year that was, in the 1920s and 30s maybe, maybe in the 40s, where they decided that they couldn't breed any better. So the ones at the bottom that were still poor were defective and deranged and obviously mentally ill because they were poor. They classified mental illness as the reason for all poverty, you see. In other words, poverty was a mental illness. [Alan chuckles.] What else could it be, eh? It helped to rationalize the sterilization in the States and elsewhere too. But actually being poor was classified as a mental illness... There's nothing to stop you from getting to the top, you know, and all that nonsense, all those lies.

But they decided that no one would advance any higher really, maybe a little bit with, if experts chose the mates for them, you know, they said. HG Wells was a big campaigner for that too. But otherwise they would never get any better because the poor, the ones who had mental illness because they were poor, that's the proof of mental illness, would just marry the same kind and they could never evolve any higher. That's what they, they wrote screeds and screeds in books galore on that, they just churned them out. The factory owners all believed in it too, because it made them feel better. Well, it's not our fault they're dying young, and they can't help them anyway. That was the, that's the great kind of turn around, well you know, you can't help them anyway, they're inferior types and they'll marry their own kind, if they live long enough to get married, then even then they won't survive that long anyway, so…

The idea of rights and democracy was pretty well, it was born out of World War II, and World War I to an extent but World War II as well. It was meant to be temporary, which it has been. Hm. Very temporary. Because as always these big massive think tanks, some of them, if you could imagine, some are the size of bureaucracies in governments, some of these think tanks have bureaucracies of people working in different departments, on problems, with all their experts, and they're the size literally, these think tanks, some of them bureaucratic wise, of some small governments, you know, with multi-thousands of people working with them, on continuous problems, of how to manage us, and where to take the future and so on.

So it's astonishing really to witness it all. This unchanging, [Alan chuckles.] this unflinching and unchanging system of exploitation. Of course you're exploited. If your government is taking your tax money, funding research through universities, that are then given to the corporations that then patent them, and then demand that the government, hhhch, gives them permission to injected into you. Well, what would you call that, eh? Of course you're a slave.

They bring in all their, it's under the guise of, it's under science, you know. Once again, science will explain it, and the bioethics groups and the ethics groups will, well you know, there's, you know, we've decided looking at the law, you know, which they're constantly changing... Lawyers are good, their whole job is to get around the laws by understanding it, right. So that's what these ethics committees... I remember reading the one from the Rockefeller foundation put out in 2010, part of which is Lockstep inside of it, to do with the future and technology and all the rest of it. But they actually have it all in there. Then again, again this is 2020 here, they came out with all the recommendations for governments to take from the committees of bioethicists that they have working for them.

Well, again, I didn't vote for any university. Did you? But your government's happy to do what they're, aren't they, government's awfully happy to go, again, in lockstep with them. So, hhhch, the very systems that have knocked down any, ANY other gods before them, as they say, to put themselves up to Godhood, they eliminate all religions and then they come out as scientists, we're scientists now, we're bioethicists, it's scientific, yeah, and we will say what's moral and what's not moral, and it's not moral for you to want to live past 65, ftt, for goodness sakes, eh. What will you think of next?

So again, I didn't finish what I was telling. Cuttingthroughthematrix.com. Send me a few bucks to help me tick along. You'll find out how to do it @cuttingthroughthematrix.com. You can buy some discs or books if you want. I don't churn out lots of books. There's no point anymore. Because most folk don't read, you know, they don't read. They really don't read. And if they do read, they're so overwhelmed with the data by [design], and it's deliberate too, that's churned out for them to get, to follow, follow, follow, follow. They've got so many leaders to follow now in the alternate sites that your whole life gets taken up by it. That's intentional too. So you really think you're going through some kind of battle in real time. And you're not.

Back to cuttingthroughthematrix.com. Send me a few bucks, remember. Books and discs. Cash is fine. PayPal is fine. Personal checks are okay, at the moment until they ban it all. Paper money is fine too, you can send cash as well. It always gets here. I've never had cash get lost. Some folks send it that way and it's quite acceptable.

Getting back to what I'm talking about here, you've got to realize that you're not living in just real time. You're living through something that's preplanned step-by-step, and how you'll react to this step-by-step. The alternate media was taken over a long time ago, from very legitimate decent organizations that didn't live for profit either, by the way, or sensationalism. Who often were looked down upon because it was like dry monotonous unrolling of agendas, and what governments were doing, and what departments were lobbying governments to have more say in how governments should act and so on. That's what it used to be.

Awfully important because they came out with all the stuff from the United Nations. They had watchdogs watching everything. That was soo important. Today it's all personality, you've noticed, eh? That was deliberate, do away with all the other organizations. And everybody wants to be a star with their shtick, as they say. And some of them, I don't know how many of them but some of them are definitely paid agents that help put other people under, you know. After all, you see, after everything else, you eliminate competition, eh. If you're in the intelligence services, the same way if you're into counterintelligence, they put these characters out there to grab information that you're using and they'll say the same stuff, which will attract the same kind of audience, that's good, he's taking so and so's stuff and he's... But then there's a twist at the end as they twist it off into some other direction that gets you. You're being played, as they call it, you're being played. So be very careful.

You are overwhelmed with data. I used to read the articles from the NSA and the counterintelligence organizations, and they talked about dumping so much data on the public that the folk would go into, just shut down, you shut down your thoughts, too much can’t be assimilated. It was to be done deliberately, on a daily or even weekly level that folk couldn't comprehend, and it would just shut down, you see. Remember, most data, it doesn't mean it's the truth. It's just bits and bytes of data. A lot of articles you'll notice not too, even from the alternate sites, will have these grabber headlines, just like the mainstream have been doing for years. And you'll think, oh that'll be good. Then you go into it, you click-bait it, and it will take you in a circle and it's just speculation or something like that.

So you're almost at the end of an era where the information, I said this again back in the 90s talking about was coming. I said the Generation X alive now are the last ones who will be able to put it across succinctly, coherently, and factually and realistically. Because even then it was evident, and more so after 2000, it was about 2000 and past it, you saw the life going out of youngsters. Whatever happened to them, with their dead eyes, you know? And out comes all the different articles after 2000 as they got addicted to their phones as they were getting more popular. And the texting. Until, and all the surveys coming from universities, oh, isn't that interesting that the youngsters can't communicate with each other except through text, they can't look at, they don't know how to act next to someone in real life. The social skills that you have, the eye contact and so on are missing, they don't know how to do it.

Again, when something happens to the herd, we're all part of the herd here, you know, our owners, you know, like Charles Forte said, we're owned and we're farmed. When something happens you got to find out what's wrong. Unless you did it yourselves, as the owner… and then you as the owner will say, oh that's no crisis because we, I did that, you know. It's the same thing with infertility in the West. Oh, it's no crisis, no. It's just, we're curious, we like to continuously monitor it. As the sperm count drops in the males every year. But it's no crisis. No, no. No. It's only no crisis because they know what's doing it, [Alan chuckles.] that's why, and they want it to happen, you see. That's it. That's the other why, they want it to happen obviously.

Well it's the same with the youth. If you don't want a real, a really sharp youth, then you deal with them before they can be a problem. One thing that you do is you diminish the vocabulary until they can't, a lot of them can't communicate. They don't have the words to communicate. That's deliberate too. That's Orwell's linguistic minimalism as the dictionary gets thinner and thinner. Then you can't object or create a revolution if you can't convey the thoughts, eh, there's no words for it. It's very, very successful in some communities, more than others in fact. It's interesting. All deliberate.

But folks think that they're just living through it and things are happening. They think that all this stuff with Trump is all real at the moment, it's all just real, things are happening in real time at the moment, you know. And you've got the debate about, oh, there's vote-rigging and who knows, it's probably all true.

But you've just lived through, look at the year you've just lived through, you're almost at the end of this year. You can't have all these... It's like when they say, you can't have 130,000 votes dumped in the middle of the night supposedly in some voting station in the States, in one of the states, all for Biden but not for Trump. It can't happen, they say. And that would be true, there would be at least one, hhhch, maybe one or two for Trump, or whoever you know, but SOME for Trump, right. No matter how minimal or great it would be, regardless, you couldn't get them all for one person, or vice versa, all for Trump. But you're supposed to believe it's all true.

But regardless, look at the year you've lived through. And even before that, you had the massive, massive resistance and slanging since Trump got in, right. No matter what you think of the guy. You couldn't even keep up with the massive, the incredible name-calling and defamation, rather than just get to facts about something. They didn't. It was standard smearing and hate and so on. Then you find out all the Russia gate stuff that fell flat, eh, after the inquiry and millions of millions of dollars spent, taxpayers’ money.

Then they talk of deep state, and the deep state wanted the other party to get in, you see. They didn't want Trump. Even though they say, well you know, it still doesn't tally why they hate him so much. Because Trump played the game too. He says, you know, he wasn't going to go along with the climate change agreement and etc. But that didn't matter because years before I did the articles, they were published, where the provinces of Canada and the States had joined together, some of the different states, on the climate accord and sustainability accords and so on, regardless of the federal side. So they could do it all state-by-state without bringing the feds into it, so it didn't really matter what the feds said. They were passing it by the state, you see. So it's not that. It's not that that they hate him for, for the climate accord and coming out of that.

So what on earth is it, you see? I think it was just the fact that they got, if they had their own person in they can get things done faster, that's what it seems to be. Not the people at the bottom that were just, just taught to hate. I think it was much, much higher than that and that it was that if they got their own person in initially they could have rammed things through much faster.

The military-industrial complex has been ticked off because they wanted to, and they still want to, I've got the articles out now of course, where they're talking about, we still want the Assad regime in Syria to be toppled. In the CIA, you know, this demolition machine that goes around the world demolishing places, the CIA, they still want Assad out. They were really ticked off that after all the years using proxy armies with fancy little names that they kept changing to do the work for them and still failing, they wanted boots on the ground, American boots to go in and finish it off. I think with their surveys on the American people, for the last few years, showing you, there's a decline in what the Americans will do for agendas which they really have nothing, no interest in and they don't understand.

I agree with them. Why are they across the Middle East demolishing one country after another? You know? I don't think the Americans are in a state, a stage, a state to go on with it. At one time you were entertained to death. Deliberately. You still had some industry and lots of work at one time. That was all taken away by your own politicians. Again, this so-called deep state agenda that belongs to the CFR and Trilateral groups and so on, they'll belong to the same clubs. They all signed away your industry to China. China didn't steal it.

We funded China and we funded the corporations to set up in China after they uprooted from America and Canada. It was incredible through the late 80s watching this happen, factory after factory closing down and being uprooted and going off to China, and through the 90s. Then when it was admitted from official governments, when we all demanded, the ones that were still watching what was going on, the information. And STAR Chambers deciding at the World Trade Organization who would get the business, who wouldn't, and who would fund it. Well, we'd all fund it, all the taxpayers of the West would fund literally the companies to uproot physically, their operations, including their industry, and move to China. And send workers over to China to train the folks that would take over. We paid for it all.

You see, the real big things in history are pretty well hidden from the general public. You're taught to be asleep at the right time. It's like that, isn't it? Take Soma today. No, take it for a few years. You'll take Soma and watch ridiculous silly immature stuff on TV and be entertained to death. And you float through the whole time when your industry is gone, until everything you buy is made in China. Then suddenly you realize that you're in a service economy where you just import stuff to middleman that then pass it around to retailers at the bottom and then you buy it. But nothing is made. All those levels of production are gone. And the levels of taxation for all those levels are gone, for these companies.

So all the taxation then under free trade, by the way, is then dumped on the taxpayers. It's been moved from export/import to the taxpayers. So then you have general sales tax, and harmonized sales taxes and all this kind of nonsense. GST for some countries, and VAT for other ones. They wanted to call our GST in Canada initially VAT, value-added tax like they do in Britain and elsewhere. But oh no, we're not bringing that in, no, no, so they just changed the name and you got it anyway.

The folk don't even know what they're living through as they're living through it. They don't. But they still think when they get a little bit of crisis and they kind of snap, there's not enough Soma, you know. They hear a little bit, and they get, oh my goodness, this is terrible with the Covid idea, oh my goodness. And we're all going to be locked down and businesses are going to go bankrupt and yada, yada ya. They still think, they're still, they're not quite conscious, they think they're conscious. If they're really conscious they realize this was planned years ago as Event, you know, 201 was planned at least a year before, but they had other ones planned before that too. And Lockstep too, the Rockefellers in 2010 with their, the future etc. etc., and that one came from the Rockefeller foundation.

You're living through an agenda. But you always have been living through an agenda, that's just it, isn't it. That's what folk don't catch on to, you've always been living through an agenda. You're free because you could, you had ten doors in front of you, you could open everyone and walk in. If you went into these different doors, through the different doors and the different corridors you'd find that they all lead you back to the same little area of choices. You don't have a lot of choices at all. You really don't.

As they take away your rights and freedoms, do you think it's a coincidence, do you, that they legalized marijuana across Canada just in time for all this? [Alan laughing.] To get your Soma, eh. Nothing is a coincidence. Because as I say, they had this whole thing for this year planned long time ago. And then when you trace it back to find out when they were going to give themselves powers to, police state kind of powers and all that, and the meetings they had after the first SARS supposed outbreak, that fizzled out by itself without a vaccine, and when in 2004 they started having big meetings to do with, you know, just...

Because you see, the first SARS one was also a test. They studied the populations, eh, and they had, they could find it maybe in the Toronto area and just north of Toronto, but they were studying it too to see how the people were reacting to this, this horror, this horror called SARS when it first broke out in 2003 from China. They tried it then with, oh, we have the masks, it might help you save your life. So everybody started buying masks and all that kind of stuff. But it's fizzled out.

We're not supposed to remember that because they don't want you remembering that antibodies are created very quickly and most folk are quite resistant to these diseases very quickly, without vaccination. But you see, this Covid has come along, again in lockstep with the World Economic Forum. It's the main reason WEF and the Club of Rome will get their whole agendas through. This is the excuse for it. Obviously. You don't close down businesses and nations until they're all bankrupt. The government's borrowing trillions of dollars, you don't do that for something that isn't happening to a lot, a lot of people.

But they've done it. Across the world. This is the big global reset. Not just financial. It's the whole sustainability agenda for Agenda 21, the agenda for the whole of the 21st-century, that contain the 2015, 2030, and so on, every 15 years what they want achieved in stages all through the whole century. But the original is the blueprint for it, Agenda 21 for the 21st-century. Eventually no private cars. You won't need them. What was it Klaus Schwab said too, he says, well eventually, you know, you'll have a lot less, and maybe even nothing at all, but you'll be much happier. I'm glad he decided that for us. This private club, eh, the richest folk on the planet. The managerial class that manages the finances for mass investments and so on of the richest people in the world. The WEF, and backwards it's FEW, it's for the few. It certainly is, isn't it.

So here we are going through it all and the public just don’t, they still think it's all happening in real time, by the day. And I hate to say it, but no, it was planned. And it's written in stone. Nothing's going to change it. Nothing at all. No treatment that helps to subdue the effects of it that hasn't been authorized by Fauci is being allowed, as you know. He's the only one allowed to say who's going to get contracts, all these friends and so on, eh. The ones that preplanned, I mean, it seems like Moderna was set up years ago in preparation for this. It has done nothing up until now. That's how the world is really run, eh, you know, futuristic planning and long-term futuristic planning.

Therefore, you should always remind yourself how this year has been. You had the ongoing hate of Trump regardless by the mainstream press and so on. The far-left as they want to call it, they aren't even far left, I mean, they're all part of the same system really. They all worship international corporations. They're awfully well off, all of them are awfully well-off actually because of partly, regardless of your political income, money just comes your way, you just get richer. That's politics today. In every country it's the same thing.

But this all year, the hatred of Trump, right. The idea of impeachments. It all fell flat too. But you saw the involvement of what they're calling the deep state with FBI members even in the CIA colluding with members in the congressional party to bring Trump down. That's interesting, regardless of what you think, that's what I'm saying, of politicians themselves, any of them, or any side, it's interesting to see that amount of collusion to get somebody out, isn't it?

And at the same time, then you get this idea, the Covid, oh we're all going to die, we're all going to die. It's like the votes all getting found at night, thousands of them, all for Biden, none for Trump. Impossible, you see, with the laws of averages and so on and chance, and yada, yada, ya. You'll never get everybody on the same page, for that many, that amount, just appearing. But regardless, you get with Covid. There’s the hatred of Trump. The impeachments. You've got this idea of Covid, you know, and you're all going to die, you're all going to die. And they lock everybody down until folks start dying because there’s folk can't get treatments for hospital care and so on. Nevermind all the other scams that go along with it. Again, written in stone.

So the hatred of Trump. Trump. The Covid. Then you get organized, well, incredibly well-funded riots, that jumped on and piggybacked onto folk getting killed by police, you know, with the Antifa groups and so on. Well-financed. Well-planned. And businesses getting burned down, including the black businesses, black neighborhoods too, and their homes, hm. And then nothing being done to stop them, hhhch, by the government, either state or federal. Really, you know.

Again, other things on the go. You got this whole idea for the new system to come in. That robots will police the cities and things like that. It's all been tested out actually. They’re very advanced technologies for identifying folk in the riots. I said that would happen at the time too, I says, all the followers, the leaders won’t be touched, but you lot will be. And sure enough, they’re getting picked up one by one, some of them, through different kinds of techniques of identification. Even with their masks on. I said it too, all your phone messages have been heavily monitored by very advanced algorithms, and they know who everybody is and who did what and where and when and so on. So they're starting to go after them too. So you're seeing the new kind of policing, which it doesn't take sides either. It doesn't, it's completely impartial regardless of whose cause is the better cause, or who's the bad guys and good guys, it makes no difference, you see. Because everybody's getting played for a bigger agenda.

So yeah, hatred of Trump. The conclusion of the FBI, CIA members, congressional staff too and politicians. Then you have, as I say, the Covid. Then first demonstrations, then riots. But the riots are across the world too, which, so MASSIVE INTERNATIONAL color revolutions, managed again by the CIA. And the CIA is only part of the big intelligent system. They're all combined, have been for years. So then you're going to go back down into lockdown and poverty as businesses go under. And this is supposed to be for perpetuity. Forever. One after the other, oh, just another few more m... just a few more months. And, okay, take the vaccinations. Then you take the vaccinations, oh yeah, you still have to wear the mask. And the vaccinations, they'll tell you, won't stop you getting it eventually, you see. Well... Initially they'll play the game and they’ll say, well it could be some other virus but, eventually they’ll say, maybe next year, yeah, it's the same one and it's may be altered a little bit, a little bit so that you need more vaccines. So lockdown, lockdown, because you're supposed to have a perpetual passport for getting out of your HOUSE to go ANYWHERE for the REST of your life. That's it, folks.

And with everything else, if you're on government assisted money to get through the so called lockdowns or the fact that your business are going under or you're unemployed, they'll keep taking on more and more little demands to make you, and hoops to get you to jump through, to change your whole perception of what runs you, or your rights. You see, the more you jump through, the more you're getting trained that you really don't have rights, until you'll accept that. You'll accept that, hhhch, until… As long as you can keep jumping through the hoops, you accept it.

You're being trained, constantly trained to obey, obey, obey. And with the social credit system, which is all part of it, all these agendas coming into place, ID2020, at the same year, ha! What's the chances the hatred of Trump, CIA/FBI/congressional collusion, Covid, massive demonstrations, then the riots and looting and burning down places, and vaccination mandate, mandatory vaccinations coming, in comes the Covid again, it doesn't go away supposedly, and all the healthy are locked down until you comply and get your vaccine passport, all your vaccine apps and your testing apps, you see, permanent ones for the rest of your lives. You can't buy or sell anything without the apps, you see. You won't be allowed out of your home.

Then you take the vaccination. They've already said for the companies, it’s not guaranteed to stop any severe reaction of you getting Covid. It might, they said, it might make it less severe, or it might help deal with basic things like sniffles and that. Well, I can handle a common cold, can't you? Or just going out into the cold your nose will run in the wintertime, eh, without having a cold. But hey, here’s your… This is the whole agenda, ID 2020, all in the same year, hm. ALL IN THE SAME YEAR! N-n-n. And the folk think you're just living through something that's, everything is developing by itself, day by day. [Alan laughing.] Including this whole fracas with politics and dumping of multi-thousands of votes for Biden, Biden, in the middle of the night, they claim, eh. And then even workers coming out from the polling stations admitting incredible fraud that they're witnessing too. So that will be looked... And it really doesn't matter. It really doesn't. Because the same agenda is going to continue, just a little bit faster maybe.

They’re already, as their smacking their lips looking in Syria again. The CIA. Of course the military-industrial complex, the big producers of all the equipment and machinery of war are just jumping, happy with joy that they can get going again maybe. You know? The beauty of war and technology is that for every round, every bullet that's fired, every shot that's fired, every machine that carries the mounting of the equipment that fires the shells, hhhch, and on and on it goes, eh, all the way up to incredible costs for aircraft carriers. Have you noticed the costs of these things now? Never mind the aircraft themselves, these fighters. It's a fantastic business. Especially when everything has been made obsolete very quickly. Oh, that's burned out, that jet’s been, has flown so many thousand sorties and is five years old, so may be another $35,000,000 fighter jet there, maybe $40,000,000. It's costing millions now for the upgrades, like four times a year upgrades to the computer systems in the jets, eh. [Alan chuckles.] Great business. I'm telling you.

So if you want to know who rules the world, look at where the sharks are, you know, the big, big, big money. Where literally you've got to understand, the psychopaths have no problem debating conscience of any... Again getting back to the laissez-faire capitalism as they called it in the Industrial Revolution time/era. They have no problems with that at all. It doesn't enter their head to debate that at all. That's where you are with it all. It's still here, alive and well. And the psychopaths are living very, very well, high on the hog as they call it. And nothing's going to change it, in this system, nothing can change it.

Even though you saw months and months and months, well, almost, what, 8 months of, hhhhh, these burning down, these organized escapades that ended up in different cities and states, getting bussed all over the place some of them, just to scream and yell at people and burn places down. Even kill some folk. Don't think for a second it's because they don't have the cash to send out troops or anything like that. They've got the Insurrection Act and all the different things in place by the way, I mean, if you look through, there's nothing they couldn't have done already, IF they wanted to stop it.

But again, they're testing all of this new equipment for IDing people and what they've been up to. And they're going after them. They're picking them up one by one here and there. The cannon fodder as I call them because the followers are always, they're useful idiots they call them. The leaders are the ones, they know what they're doing. They're like agents, you know, they’re well-funded and well trained on how to get the following in the first place, how to use the followers and so on. But will know themselves that it's for a different agenda from the mantras that they prattle, the slogans, eh.

But don't think for a minute, even during all of, don't think the country's broke. Because money is made out of thin air, as you know. [Alan chuckles.] And if you had got close to changing the directed destiny, the scripted destiny of the US at the moment, if you had done something you would have seen the troops out and very, very quickly, if YOU tried to stop something you would have seen it immediately. Without hesitation. Something outside their wargames, you see, it would have been unleashed on you. So yeah, this is how it's done.

There's no shortage of mercenaries for the military today, you know. So it's not like a moral problem there. In peacetime that's what you become. And when the propaganda dies off, depression sets into the military, to the ordinary guys, the grunts, eh. You need good, a good culture to defend. You got to have some kind of valid excuse to stand up for it. Or you're just a mercenary. You know? And a mercenary doesn't care who he's sent to go and fight or anything, across the planet, when he doesn't even need propaganda actually. So that's, but yeah, they would have been let loose very quickly if something had happened that started to upset the apple cart, this whole agenda with its color revolutions. And there's no doubt at all the CIA has been involved in it, and it helps to organize it and fund a lot of it too.

Also you find the same thing with the delivering of paychecks to the leaders, to the organizers. It would be great TV for people I'm sure who would see these armies coming into their towns and cities and going for the cops. It was quite something. And again, it was meant to terrify the public in their homes, saying, oh my goodness is the country falling apart or whatever? The country is going to fall apart not because of that, hhhch, that will augment it. But it's because you can't close down all the businesses, and you can’t close down healthy folk. Unless you want…

You see, there is a war on all right, but it's a war on all the people. ALL the people. This is a war by those who own the governments, and it's not the people who own them. That's very evident. It's always really been that way though. But it's total war. For total destruction. In a war, what do you want? You want to change society in order to dominate it, what do you do? You've got to take over their food supply and ration it. Or even keep it, withhold it altogether. To get folk on their knees. How do you do that? You shut down industry. You destroy the industry. Just get rid of industry. All been done, you see. Service economy, easy, just cut off the sources of supply. Stop it coming in. Then you've got the rationing situation. All the war type scenarios, that's what you've got.

You have the characters at the top of the WEF boasting about their, THEIR World Economic Forum great reset for sustainability, etc. Whole new way of living. OR, existing as I prefer to call it. Because it's not going to be living, folks. It's existing. And not very pleasant either. With the new commissars appointed to every area. Isn't it interesting, you're actually seeing them all under the guise of Covid, as the government employees, thousands of these folks, armies of so-called contact tracers. It's like the new Stasi. That's what it IS. So they start off having one purpose, then you expand it to the next purpose, and then it's permanent, you see. That's all part of the great reset too.

They'll have ones in your areas where you have to go and get permission to do things from your commissar. I gave these talks in the 90s for goodness’ sake, and then after 9/11 I gave lots of them too. Because it was published where they'd like to take the world. And we were all thinking, well, how could they bring us? Well, it could be done by this method or that method, or a war scenario, etc. Well, this is a war scenario, you see.

A war. They even say that, it's a WAR against a virus. We're all in it together. Slogan, slogan, slogan. I tell ya. N-n. So how do you fight this kind of war? You see, you're used to conventional war. You know, you either wear a flower in your cap, or a color, a ribbon in your cap, and the enemy has a different color or flower in their cap. That's how it used to be, you see. Until you got uniforms. Once you get uniforms, they get little insignia to identify who's who. That's conventional warfare.

But then you get unconventional warfare, and you've been in that for most of your lives in fact. You don't even know it's being played upon you, it's unconventional warfare. That's what you're in today. You see, your minds can't perceive it, it seems to be invisible. Generally you never hear of it unless someone mentions it to you. But you float through again thinking that things are happening by the day. Oh my God, Covid just came out this year, oh my goodness we're all locked down, businesses are going bankrupt, folk are dying in their homes because they can't get in the hospital for treatment, oh, folk are rioting and or going burning and looting, and they're even killing folk because they're going to vote for Trump, yada, yada ya. Out it all comes, eh? The great reset, the great reset, oh my goodness the great reset. Into austerity. All planned that way. This is all unconventional warfare. That's the dominant type of warfare in this day and age.

So how do you fight? That's why they use it too, because how do you fight it? If you saw an enemy coming into your country to kill you all, you'd stop it, and you would recognize them, you see. But what do you do when your own governments will constantly deny they’re colluding with anybody, that's what politicians do, they’re born liars. They’re psychopaths. But they're obviously working on the same agenda and destroying the economy of the planet on behalf of somebody. They're not stupid enough and, well, we didn't realize we were destroying the economy of the planet. Of course they knew. [Alan chuckles.] And they're not the guys, the politicians are not in the think tanks, they just do what they're told by the big think tanks.

But what a coordination when they're all on board, eh. All on board. When all the other, the evidence, from the top too, comes out, when they bother to go through the figures, and you find out that the death rate is nothing like what they're telling you. And it never was. Now they're telling you too, there's folk with, they say, comorbidities. Folk die every, every winter, especially when you're going into winter, into winter and then the spring too, it's like the change in the climate gets you. If you're weakened at all that's when you, that's generally the time you exit the world, eh, with bronchial problems and respiratory viruses and pneumonias. That's standard stuff. That's when it hits you.

So the figures have all been juggled beyond belief. We've watched countless videos and clips of massive tent testing bases being set up, and these big tent hospital things, never used. Never used at all. But it looks SCARY when you pass it, oh my, look at the size of that place! And all it’s got in it is security guards, nobody else. [Alan laughing.]

War upon the people, eh. That's what it is, war upon the people. To change their whole way of living into what they call sustainability. Yep. You'd better start going into, if you can still get in there and buy some needle and thread, you're going to need it. You are going to need it. [Alan chuckles.] I'm not kidding about that either. This is the long haul. This is the big one. This is not to be, to go up...

And what they did tell you, the little clips that came out of this strange character Fauci. Here's a guy working for an agency, he's a bureaucrat really, with hands in different companies, mind you, you know, his fingers in different companies. But here he is, he told you right off the bat, this is not going to go away. He says, things will never go back to normal. This is in the early days, hm. He told you, he says, you won't be able to get out of your homes eventually without getting the vaccinations. In the early days. This was written in stone then. Hhhch. And he was in on that part of it. Which means he knows the big agenda. It's got nothing to do with Covid, really. But it just happens to fall in with the crash, the crash course in implementing the great reset, the new way of living into utter austerity. Rationing. Post-democratic society. Where eventually even private ownership, not just of vehicles but of pretty well anything, EVERYthing else will eventually go. Do you realize that? That's what it's meant to be.

There'll be big, big, a few moguls who will be the landlords of the world. They'll own cities for rental. That's where they're going to go with all of this. That will be farmed out, public-private partnerships as they love to call them. But it's not for all the landlords to jump on board. It's for the select few who are in on this thing before you even heard of it. Yeah. Everything is decided years in advance.

Even the ones who got the contact tracing, the company for the US, was done before you heard of Covid, who would get it. I read the article of when a bunch of them went to Africa for a meeting, that's where they sat and decided who was going to get the contract tracing for America, for the US, like a year or two years beforehand. This is not conspiracy stuff; it was in the major media at the time. But like most stuff, it's ignored at the time because it makes no sense, what are they talking about, contact tracing and that? Oh well it's, if anything actually happened, a the disease broke out, hm. Oh, okay, and you go back to sleep, you see. [Alan chuckles.] Quite something, eh?

I heard someone saying some time ago that we don't have democracies. He also had come to the same conclusions. He said we're a Banana Republic, he says. But we were going into that kind of scenario, a Banana Republic, kind of Third Worldism where you're ruled by warlords. That's what we have with the censorship going on, and everything's been taken over, the food supplies have been taken over by the few agribusinesses. I think it's reduced from five agribusinesses running everything to three, pretty well. Of the entire planet, hm? Remember, they took away the seeds… and replace them with modified seed that are patented, and you've got to buy it every year? So all the stuff that farmers could get through tough times with by collecting them, that's all gone now. Because they all fell for the big, oh, if you buy this stuff, you know, we'll give you deals and make sure that your corn or whatever else is sold, for you. M-hm.

Step-by-step, preparation is so important. And this revolution that's going on, it's not a revolution from the ground by Antifa or BLM. That's the front at the moment, the armies that are used, at the moment, for the streets. For the ones who already rule and own your governments, it's those, it's the elites' revolution, this is their next revolution. They had the last revolution; they also have this revolution. They're bringing us all into their new system, the next part of their new system, you see. The new normal, or the new-new normal. So there you are. That's where it's all going. They decided where it's all going to go. Otherwise, believe you me, if anything was going contrary to it, they'd nip it in the bud immediately. Everything has to be authorized and planned. Everything.

Getting back to Plato, where plays, he said, could be dangerous too. And plays, they had traveling plays even back then. Culture is so important, because through the plays you get your conditioning and your updates on what's politically correct for any new normal, hhhch, and trendy. And the do-gooders you see, the ones who have got more to lose, the people who stand and sip wine at parties, they never sit down, they always stand, sip the wine and chitty-chat, you see. They've always existed in every era, and in ancient times in Plato's day it's the same thing. The bureaucrats of his day would all be chatting away and talking trivia, you see. Polite trivia. They all know exactly what to say, what not to say. They'd have to have, see the latest play, that they would chat about the latest play by so-and-so that was traveling the ancient world, you see.

They would get advanced writeups on it, what it's about, and that would be vetted to see if it was suitable, before it came into the country. They might even demand some changes because it might affect revolutionary groups or the youth in some way or another. So they actually asked for a good summary of their play, what its intent was, what it showed and so on. Almost like the different ratings they would have, like parental guidance, or violence and so on. They maybe even asked for a private performance for leaders before it would be allowed to be shown.

That's how powerful the idea of entertainment happens to be. It has tremendous force on the public. And that's where you get your updates on what to copy. Because again, the bureaucratic types, standing they're having their sips of wine, are the first ones to adapt, you know. Because they know what's politically correct, and they know what's meant to be pushed in that little play they've just watched, and they'll immediately start using the terminology and adopting the opinions, because the leaders of their own nation want it so, right? [Alan chuckles.]

Look at it today with entertainment, it's just phenomenal, it's all predictive programming. It has been for years and years. Your values have changed gradually, it's given to you for new values, and modes of dress, modes of behavior. Terminology is incredibly unreal right now. I don't even bother trying to keep up with the new terms they come out with. There's no point, they'll be obsolete by a weeks’ time or two weeks’ time. But the whole idea of it is to make you give up, again, your ability to communicate properly in any rational coherent kind of form at all, as you adapt to these new nonsensical terminology and neologisms that they're churning out like crazy, you know.

But yeah, entertainment is a powerful, powerful thing. And folk don't just become stars today either. This is the big... Why do you think you pay someone who comes out, I mentioned Sean Connery, right, he died there and so on. But you think about it, it wouldn't matter who was playing the part really. Because the movies he was in, he had little one-liners here and there. It was nothing in-depth, like long conversations. So you'd have producers there, you'd have the different staff there, stand here. He'd stand there. Say this. Du-du-du-du-du-dut. Cut. Then they go off to the next scene. Literally, anybody could really do it, you see.

Why do you think they pay them so much, SO MUCH money for that kind of thing? It's because you follow the stars, you adopt their attitudes. You will read the nonsense that's all fiction generally printed up about them, whether it's a rock band or an actor or actress, and you'll, if you like them, you maybe follow their... Well, they're all for this so I'm for that too in that case. That's as much thought as you give why you want to be for or against something, [Alan chuckles.] I like so-and-so. And that's how it's done. That's why they pay them so much money.

Because they must be convincing to the public to have them believe that they're real, you know, and that they're very special. It's very simplistic stuff. I wouldn't mind getting a few million for each line I come out with, you know. Read this. Okay, blah blah blah blah blah blah. There's another million bucks right there. Stand over here. Blah blah blah blah blah blah. Another billion bucks. Stand with a swimsuit on there, in a diving, in scuba gear there, you know. And, okay. There's two million for that. Blah blah blah blah blah. You know. Not bad, eh? It's good work if you can get it. [Alan laughing.]

But it's very important the whole idea of the culture industry. There's no better, there used to be no better example of predictive programming than Britain. Britain was excellent at it. In all their awful dramas and plays they were showing you, and no matter what the play was about or drama or made-for-TV movie, since the 1970s at least, how every marriage was horrible. You couldn't watch anything without having them yelling and screaming and heading to divorce, that was message, you know. Because they wanted the end of the family unit, right. That's why you saw it. You just didn't see a happy family anywhere. And it was very evident as well.

So I think a lot of folk immigrated from Britain because they were depressed, you know. It's kind of like the French. The French are very similar in that respect. French movies often make no sense at all. That's what causes the depression. You watch something for two hours waiting for a punchline or a meaning at the end, there's nothing at all. And you're ready to kill yourself, oh my God, I'm so depressed. That's really how it goes.

But on the other hand too, if they give you something exciting and with chases and things like that and you're being hunted by bad people or monsters, they'll watch it. And even in there they flood them with politically correct updates on what you're supposed to, what the characters are supposed to say and think and do, so that you'll copy them. M-hm. Isn't that amazing, eh.

Isn't that amazing how they, and they admit it by the way in their own writing, even in the one about, as I've said before with, you can watch on the European Union members meeting to do with vaccination, in 2019 I think it was. They actually said that they can put all the politically correct updates into all dramas and so on, and they it said matter-of-factly because they are always doing that kind of stuff. So you get paid extra if you're writing plays or whatever and you're paid extra to embed these things in it. The same thing with children's books. They're completely brainwashed before they're six or seven by the children's stories that mommy's reading to them.

Ah! Well, there ya go. I mean, that's literally how it is. Most folk never, ever, ever catch on. A person, once they're brainwashed will fight back. Parents got concerned if their daughter or son had been really inducted into a cult and was losing their brain and their ability to even communicate to their parents. They would sometimes hire these guys who would kidnap them, take them to a place outside cities, like a cabin or something, and try and deprogram them. There's a technique to do it, over and over. Because the person, once they're brainwashed will fight back by all means and argue with them and so on. Until eventually common sense, this is the idea, eventually they'll get to a stage where common sense kicks in and they have to agree, well yeah that's true, up is up and down is down. That was the technique.

Well, that's what you would have to use with everybody in the public realm. Even if you train them and train them and give them screeds of information, official sources and books by the people involved in the big corporations that belong to the WEF and so on, you could show them all that evidence, but as soon as an election comes around, they're right back to square one thinking it's all completely real. All of it, you know. It's just astonishing how it works. It's incredibly astonishing how it works.

As I say, you had Covid to give us a reset of the world, right. A whole new different way of living. A whole new structure of global government, or governance as they like to call it. A new way of living from birth to death, being monitored, tracked, traced, ordered, you know, and you'd better obey them, with a new way of living, with representatives, commissars in your area, collectivism eh, that you have to obey. I even gave talks, I says, you know eventually you'll have to [Alan chuckles.] folks say, oh, that will never come here. I says collectivism, it's like the old Soviet system too, and Orwell showed it in 1984 in his book, where they'd have special little galas and festival days, or even prisoners days where you'd bring the enemy in and you boo them and hiss them or whatever. But you HAD TO attend.

You see, it's like being in the party, even the lower end, the lower spectrum of the party, and if you were ordered to come into your community for sustainability week or whatever, and you didn't go in there covered in green, you know, then you're a bad citizen obviously. Well, why didn't you come in, citizen?! You know? They always take away your individuality with calling you something like citizen, you know. Or comrade. It's always... in the French Revolution they called them citizen. Then after the Bolshevik revolution they called it comrade. So the first thing is to really diminish your ability to even say I'm an individual. You're now a citizen or a comrade, you're part of the collective. And you have to attend whatever meetings you're supposed to attend.

And there could be one a week, you know, eventually, to be a good citizen. And they'll have all these awards coming out, good citizen of the week for your community, and good this for, and good that. You know? Handing out little rewards, that's how they're going to train you all. I'm not kidding you. [Alan chuckles.]

They've already got the Stasi system where they've got the citizens literally, we used to call it clipeing, I don't know if you know what a clipe is? A clipe is somebody in school in the class that would go to the teacher and, so-and-so said this, and so-and-so is doing that. And the class would always hate these kind of people. Because you always knew who they were, you know. And in a Soviet type system they would be sent into your community and be the local spy eventually and pretend they’re just one of you, same kind of character.

But now you got folk, you've got citizens that, you always see the apple-for-the-teacher types, eh, and they become clipes. They're phoning up all the different agencies, do you know that so-and-so left their home there, and I saw them wiping their nose in a handkerchief, I think they've got Covid! You know? And so your local Stasi, you know, tracers say, well, have you approached them or whatever? I don't want to get too close, no. Because the dumber ones will say, yeah, I did, I got right up to them, and I told them. Well, you'd better, you'd better put yourself [Alan laughing.] into hibernation for two weeks now too, eh. [Alan laughing.] Oh really?

So that's the kind of fools that you get. But they're everywhere. And as the crisis is intensified deliberately, in real-time, the amount of study on us all in real time is phenomenal. They're spending billions of dollars, our money is getting dished out to all these different tech giants to study us and study us, even more than they've been doing up until now, to see how we're all adapting, and who's not adapting, and who's going to be vaccine hesitant is a big thing too. They've spent billions on how to convince the public to overcome their vaccine hesitancy. Not your natural wariness but your vaccine hesitancy.

Because they want you all to comply and obey, you see. And if you do, that's you, finished! You'll never have a right over your body again on anything. I hope you understand that. I hope you really understand where it's supposed to go if you just give in here. And most folk, most folk will probably, or a lot will definitely run to get the vaccine. And they won't even think, well, you see, it's good and it's effective, but what's in it? They won't even ask the questions, eh. You can't help those people.

You're supposed to have INFORMED consent, where you're supposed to say, they're supposed to tell you what it is. They're supposed to tell you it's a new type of vaccine that's going to alter your DNA and they just don't know what the long-term effects will be. But they won't, you see. So you're supposed to have the brains to ask them that, so they will tell you. Hm? Do you understand how it's going? And where it's supposed go?

But they always rely, in this so-called democracy, it could be called anything, it could be called the Soviet regime or democracy or socialism, it makes no difference, it's all the same. They count on a good chunk of the public, and they know the magic number, the tipping point as they always call it, of those who are for something or who will go and get it. And they'll say, well you know, they all took it, 60% took it, what's wrong with you? Well, I'm not part of the 60%, I'm an individual. I think for myself. If they want to jump off a cliff, it doesn't mean I want to do the same thing. You see? But this is what they try, these little games they play on you. And then try to shame you too, the Pavlovian type thing, the response and so on, and say, and they've already trained the public already, someone who doesn't get it could be a danger to the society. You know? That's how the classify you, a danger to society. It's the same after all revolutions, they used it in the Bolshevik revolution and the Soviet revolution. Same kind of thing. Enemy of the people! You're an enemy of the people, you're putting everybody at risk! Well how can you be if they've taken the vaccine and they're fine, they're safe now, eh? Well, that's got nothing to do with it! [Alan laughing.] I tell ya.

But yeah, they'll count on a lot of, you see, they tried it already when the H1N1 swine flu in about 2009, and they've got all these millions of doses ready, and they wanted the public to take some. But most of the folks said no when they heard bad reports coming out. Narcolepsy amongst children in Australia, New Zealand, and places like that. It kind of didn't do good to the image of this wonderful vaccine, that they really didn't need, because that faded away too, didn't it, by itself. But yeah, they don't want the same kind of things happening again. So they want as many folk as they can to take it right off the bat without waiting to see what's going to happen. And using the same excuses, well you're an enemy of the people! You're putting them all in danger for goodness’ sake! You know? And there you go. M-hm.

Then you say to them, informed consent, okay, will this do any harm to me? Well, I can't say that or not, I don't know. You don't know? And it's my life, not your life but my life, it's the only one I've got, and once I, if I get damage to it and I survive the damage, it may be permanent? Well that's possible, that's possible. But don't... Look on the bright side, and they'll pull out some book like, look at the sunny sky here, you know, look on the bright side of things, you know, some motivational book, you know, happy things. And you say, I don't want that silly book, I'm talking about reality, get back to the point here, will this hurt me or kill me? I don't know. And of course they've got blanket immunity so you can't even sue them if they kill you. Well, that's another stupid thing to do is accept that they want to pump highly, this is a private business, eventually, that wants to pump their products into you, this very expensive product that's going to be paid by your tax money, and they want blanket immunity for doing any harm to you?

Well, again, H1N1 the swine flu, 2009, they tried it then, as I say. Scare tactics again, oh my God, thousands will die! Then they showed you, again the scary scenarios. They got some of these big trailers, like tractor-trailer carriages that the big tractors pull on the road, the highway, they put maybe five abreast in the hospitals in London, in England. You never saw any bodies getting brought in or out. But they say, oh, they're full of bodies, there's thousands of them dying and the mortuary's overflowing. It was all made up stuff then too. To get folks to get the vaccination.

They terrified enough of the public back then too. They showed you lineups of people who were so petrified, and again they always put out, oh there could be shortages of vaccines, to scare the true believers even more so they rush off to get the vaccine, and they start fighting in the cues trying to get ahead of each other, literally physical fights. It's just amazing what happened then. And it's going to be even worse with this one. They will be fighting each other; you wait and see. I guarantee you. They're already saying, well you know, it could be not enough vaccines to go around right off the bat. So, the ones who are thoroughly terrified are going to go hysterical to try and get the vaccine. M-hm.

I tell ya. Dangerous times folks, eh? Very dangerous times. But we all knew it was coming, at least a lot of us did anyway. Getting back to the idea, it's like going to school, eh, until it's Sunday night, oh my goodness, have to go back to school tomorrow, and you stay up and you stay up until your eyes are just closing by themselves and oh, goodness me, that's it. Well, where you are now, you see. You're back at school and the weekend's gone, and the bad times are here. M-hm-hm.

And this is rather permanent, isn't it. I don't know if there's going to be another break from school. [Alan chuckles.] Because they play you like suckers, just like children, like simple little children, with the arrogance of them all, eh, doing this to you. And they say, oh let a few more weeks, oh, it's just a... it's just a re... what did they call the last one, a circuit breaker test, or have a reset in the test for the circuit breaker, eh. And just a few more.

But this, eh, this is to go on forever, folks. They've, Fauci already said it, afterwards you're still going to be wearing a mask even if you get a vaccination. M-hm. Nothing is ever going to be, what part of nothing’s ever going to be the same again don't you get? And if someone says that, even that position at the beginning of this whole thing, back in February or whatever it was, what on earth, why on earth would you believe anything this man says? He obviously knew the whole agenda then! To say something like, it will never be the same again, never back to normal, because there's no normal anymore in a post consumerist society with the great reset. You understand? He knew that. And that's the reason for the Covid.

I'm also going to put up some videos possibly, I don't know how many. But one of them is a fantastic one from England where they were having demonstrations against the lockdown that's really been, it's like, it's to be three times worse than the training exercise they gave you back in the spring. That was to get you used to the idea of it. And now you're going into three times worse they say, eh? More totalitarian, eh?

Ahhh, even though again the hospitals are pretty empty. Even Teresa May has made some comments about that, numbers being all bogus, and 4000 a day are not going to die at all, and haven't been dying, yada yada. She said that in parliament. That's the last Prime Minister that came out, she's still in the parliament. I'll put that link up too, to her little clip talking about it as well, talking about the bogusness of it all. As they all play their parts, you see. You've always got have someone speaking what the people themselves have noticed.

The former PM delivered a damning assessment of Boris Johnson's handling of the situation, saying a controversial claim that deaths could hit 4,000 a day by next month was 'wrong before it was even used'. - dailymail.co.uk / Nov 2020

I'll put up some videos of that one and the one of a nurse in Cornwall who literally says they're closing down pretty well all of Cornwall because of three cases of Covid, and none of them are ill or sick with it really. And the hospitals have been closed down, back to, like, emergencies, and she said that she was laid off for most of the summer, what do they call it, furloughed. In other words, it's like a mini pay or basic pay or something just to get you by. But lots of nurses were just put on this furlough idea because the hospital wards were all closed down. They're all waiting for this nonexistent rushing in of Covid patients that didn't materialize, and she says this too. So she tells you in the talk too she's quitting her job, she can't take the lies anymore.

Because you see, they're supposed to, they’re threatened by losing their jobs if they tell the public. That's your democracy for you, this farce of democracy. But again, we’re all treated like children. Absolute children, eh. Oh, just a few more weeks, oh, a few more months, oh, a few more years, and, oh, it's permanently here anyway. Now that you've got all the apps to go everywhere, and you’re used to using them, they'll just make it all permanent. Yep. Keep society safe that way, you know.

Another thing too I was going to mention is that I can remember a few years ago reading articles on the technologies and all the applications for your technologies and computers and cell phones. It was again, from the top, I don't know if it was the Club of Rome, but it was one of the organizations associated with it. A technology company talking about again postconsumer societies and that how they would alter your spending habits into non-tangible goods and that eventually… Of course most folk back then a few years ago would say, ah, that would never happen. Well it's already here, where folks literally are spending little fortunes on, and good parts of their income on applications. Non-tangible goods. There's nothing to resell. There's nothing for you to hold or... You see, so it's so cheap for the people who own the world to make all this stuff. There's no, there's nothing to get dumped into the garbage bins because there's nothing tangible. And they've all been trained, oh, I've got to get the latest app for so and so. Yep. I tell ya. They make it all happen, it's all been made to happen.

Of course Klaus Schwab is quite happy you won't need all these goods anymore, as they teach you to live very simply. And move you all, by the way, into your human habitat corridors so that you're not living in the country. Remember Agenda 21, no nonessential people to live in the country anymore. Are you starting to get the picture? You've all to get crammed into these cities, these existing cities. Well everything will be, that you need, will be in that city, you know, you won't have to, you won't need a car, you won't have to travel that far to get anything and so on and so on.

This is old stuff to me and some others, but that's where it's all going. It's planned that way, folks. Almost all here. It's all almost all here, really, isn't it. And they have been busy, oh, for the last 10 years or so, busy throwing up massive high-rises in depressed areas in the towns in Chicago and Detroit even in some places. They’re putting up these big skyscrapers. It's not for businesses. It's for humans to get moved into. Long-term planning, eh? They've already got the whole century planned, remember, the whole 21st century, hhhch, and a good part of the next one too I'm sure, where they want to be with society, and eventually the depopulation rates too.

So again, before I forget again, cuttingthroughthematrix.com. Send a few bucks my way. List all my other sites which are mentioned on that .com site. Don't put it off because one day, who knows, with the social credit thing they're going to go after everybody who just doesn't, who isn't, doesn't belong to a mainstream newspaper, put it that way, or news site. That's what's happening already and it's just to intensify as time goes on.

They want just a unified opinion, authorized opinion for every particular topic. That's what they want. And they're not, I'm not making this up. They've said it. [Alan chuckles.] They have their own sensors. These are the banana rep..., this is a banana republic as I've said before, where you've got future warlords, eh, your warlords who want your information, and everything, you just do what that warlords says. When he says that he's cutting you off or whatever, you're cut off. There's no appeals court, there's no court you can go to, it's done, and that's it.

AND YOU'RE IN IT. This is the feudal system that Quigley talked about. With your feudal overlords, CEOs of corporations. Yep. It's all here, isn't it. And he wrote Tragedy and Hope in, what, 1960s it was. Yeah. The man who literally was given access to the CFR archives, where they have their own version of real history, why things really happened, from the 1800s into the 20th century to the present. That says something right there, doesn't it? That's why he came out with his book, he said it was so important their involvement in steering the course of history that he thought the public should know. [Alan chuckles.] Well why are you still giving these trashy books for colleges and so on, oh, here's the official version, when you've got archives of the hidden histories? Hm? It's just amazing, isn't it. Just amazing.

What's even more amazing too, the CFR calls itself THE establishment. You know. Even, even… to get higher from it, you might get put up into some of the branches above it, the specialized areas like the Trilateral Commission and so on, but everybody that goes into the Council on Foreign Relations, you can't apply for it, you've got to be asked if you want to join, they've already vetted you pretty well. They put out their own video a few years ago claiming that they are THE establishment and chuckling about it and going through the scenario of young students that had all the right stuff in economics and so on, and if they were to join or not, why they should join it. They take you on a little guided tour to the Harold Pratt building they call it in New York, I think that's where it is anyway. He was the so-called founder on behalf of the organization back in England, he was the founder of the American branch which they then called the Council on Foreign Relations.

Quite boastful about their, and they have everybody in it, cCommunist, they've got dictators. Quigley said, we don't mind who we bring in, you know. They've got all kinds in it. And he said, we're often mistaken for being communist because our goals are often so similar to that of communism. It's because it's socialism, socialism, collectivism, a planned society run by experts, you see, technocrats. That's it right there.

It's interesting too, I think he said in his own writings that, he was brought into the archives section where they have this incredible, you know, battery of information of all the, across the whole world, their activities, changing governments, toppling governments, replacing governments, creating governments, creating wars, starting wars with ambitions, turning wars into different directions, all that kind of stuff, you know. He took over from Alfred Zimmerman. Alfred Zimmerman was the head of the communist newspaper actually; he was the editor of the communist newspaper for Britain for years. He was the head of it for Britain, the Royal Institute of International Affairs, the British branch, the head, the main branch. Again, even that, you think about it. As he said, we don't care who they are, communist, fascist, dictators, we have all kinds. So that was the person who showed him the archives [Alan chuckles.] and put him through the paces and helped him out and so on.

A completely different world and how it's run, isn't it, from the way you would get it from the daily newspapers, that are also owned by people and companies that are on the CFR, hhhch, their big moguls. M-hm. We live in fantasy, people. Just fantasy. And most folk can never get through that. They can never, they can't believe that the future is planned. They think, that's the strangest thing, because you have no option but to accept their own books at times where they tell you what they're doing, why they're doing it and when they expect to achieve this part or that part or whatever. Hm.

Just like it took years to prepare signing all the agreements for the GATT treaty, by the WTO, World Trade Organization, to get it ready for trade with China by setting up, even training the Chinese in the Western universities to be designers for manufacturing, and architects, engineers, and sending them back before they even had the factories to put them in. Then we give them all these Western factories. And we, the taxpayers fund it, as the taxpayers lose their jobs. [Alan chuckles.] That was amazing times really, and folk floated through it. You have to, they believe in the media so much, like Brzezinski said, they expect the media, that's how they've been trained, they expect the media to do their reasoning for them. That's what he said would happen. That already happened. And if the media doesn't tell you to be concerned or angry or happy about something, then folk won't be.

The media have done all the experiments to get them really riled up about, oh, so many girls in this part of Africa were used as slaves, sex slaves. And sure enough, you know, immediately you had all these, well that's terrible, and charities would open up, let's go and help these people out. They're really irate, and that's their chatter, that's what's studied is the chatter. How did it succeed? How did it work? What kind of folk got immediately emotive about it? and what it did do to them? What did it make them do? They study you, you see. That's how it's done. So simply. But when it comes to things that you should be told about, if the media doesn't tell you to think about it, worry about it, then you won't. And that's it.

How it was done in Canada with the genetically engineered vegetables, now, this wasn't just the old style of hybridization of plants. This is literally the alteration of genes, and inserting animal genes, insect genes and different things from different species into the vegetables for the first time ever. [Alan chuckles.]   Hm? And you wait and see what it does to you, hm? Because after all, if evolution has any validity at all, we've been living on the same kind of vegetables for thousands of years in some form or another, you know. And hybridization, where you use splicing of different vegetables, but not plants and animals into it. Well, now you've got plants and animals, in fact you might even some have some human ones in them now. You have no idea how it's going to affect you, so they're studying you as you go through it all. They watch your stomach ulcers happening all through society. And yeah, they knew what was going to happen and before they gave it to you, and how your body was going to tolerate it, or how it's going to work with the increased pesticides, etc. Then they watched the sperm count plummeting with phthalates and all that. Hhhhh. And the pesticides. And herbicides.

But how they did it and how they launched it in Canada, because Canadians didn't have a clue. They had no clue that they were the test guinea pigs for the modified vegetables. They had no clue that the government, the Canadian government that came out, after it was exposed, had made deals, secret, they said secret deals with Monsanto and other companies to test their products on the Canadian public, who would be studied, medically, without knowing about it. They had been on it for 10 years without being told. It was when Tony Blair in England, the Prime Minister when he was in, he wanted to bring in the modified food into Britain, that some of the organizations in Europe and in Britain came out with all the information about what had been happening to Canada. He says, well, look at... you know, like Canada, we hadn't a clue we'd been using it here. I saw the tests beds in some places, I didn't know they were actually growing it and then giving it to the people. But yeah, the NGOs in Britain says, we don't want it here. They've had mutations of, in some of the animals that fed on this kind of stuff and so on, what happened to them, cancers, stomach cancer, and intestinal problems and all kinds of things happening.

Tony Blair at the time, he wanted to pass it for the big companies to dump the genetically modified corn and foods on the British public. But he didn't want to have to eat it himself, or for the big, massive, they call it a cafeteria, it's like a massive luxury hotel restaurant where the politicians all go to, with the best of foods. That of course, the public pay for. It's all subsidized. He didn't want it to be, he wanted organic only for his own, for the politicians to eat at. But not for the public, no, they had to... This is the arrogance of those who believe they have the right to rule us. You see, there's a difference in governing people and ruling them. And the people never know, and eventually, when time goes on, they say, oh well, I've eaten that for years, and I'm okay then, so I'm not bothered about that. That's what they think at the time. Until they come down with all kinds of problems, eh. And even then, they won't put it down to that. [Alan chuckles.]

So how they introduced it in Canada after that happened in Britain, because there was a sudden outcry from people like me and others that were watching that, and says wait a minute here, this is terrible! So the CBC, I think it was the CBC Canada, or BBC TV, came out with a little clip in their news to show you a girl on the roadside with two folding tables selling, the idea is she was selling corn by the roadside. This is how they played the people, eh, like idiots. They said, some people are concerned about corn being modified, and vegetables being modified, and what do you think of that? And she says, well I've got two kinds here, she said, I was given two kinds and she says, I don't see any difference, ah-ha-ha-ha-ha. And that's how they put it across to the public. That was it. Until myself and other folk got into it heavier and heavier and put more information out, they had to come out, again, and try to pacify the people, oh, it's okay, it's just normal, you know. Yep. Then they brought David Suzuki out to parrot, oh, it's okay, it's just science, science again. [Alan chuckles.] Like science the new God, eh, makes it okay.

This is a eugenicist/geneticist. [Alan chuckles.] Because all geneticists are eugenicists, eh. They'll get, that's the way they end up in their training. He talked about people being maggots, different kinds of maggots. It's maybe still up there, it was a YouTube clip from when he was teaching at University, a younger fella. You hear him talking about the different kinds. He says, yeah, the ones at the top just poop and the levels of maggots below them just eat that poop, and that's how they live, then they poop to the ones at the bottom, and the ones at the bottom eat the remaining poop that comes from the ones above. That's how he explained society. That's good enough for you, isn’t it, that's a good enough explanation.

So you're conned. Conned, conned, conned and lead up the garden path. And most folk never figure it out. Again too, you can't blame them because they’re hit with crisis after crisis, eh. You see, once again, I used to give the talks back in the 90s about, like cattle, and cowboys. It's nice, that old series on television, they call it Rawhide. The song would, I don't know if it was sung by Frankie Laine, that the song was Rawhide, you know, and roll 'em, roll 'em, and brand them, don't trying to understand them, keep them dogies of cattle moving, rawhide. You see? And you picture it too, all these stampeding cattle, and you keep them all... And you see these frenzied eyes, you know, the wide eyes as they're in their frenzy and they’re panicking during the filming of all these things. And the cowboys are right alongside them and they could, they start going up the outside near the head of them, and they’re firing their guns to make them turn to the right, so they go to the left of the cattle to make them go to the right, you see, away from the noise, or vice versa. That's how they manage the cattle.

The thing is too, as I gave the talks I said, it's like people, that's how they talk about us as people. We're in the fields chewing the cud, you know. And it's nice cud, it's good, nice green cud. And it's nice weather. And you're munching away, you know, it's just nothing much to get upset about. You don't want to be moved to another field if the farmer, he says, oh for goodness’ sake, you know, he's coming along with that stick to try and prod us in, or whack us into the next field there, and I'm quite happy where I am. Because really, why should you move when you've got good food where you are, eh?

So they have to find ways to get you to move. So here they go again. Bang, bang, bang. Or they can get sheepdogs or other kind of animals that will bark away at you and end up at your heels, things like that to get you moving. But the thing is, once you get them going into the new field, the cattle, they are kind of like people. We share things in common. We've got a bit of common sense, in that we don't want to move when we're prodded, you know. So you get into the field, and you say, oh well, okay and you start munching away, and you're testing the flavor of that, the new grass and say, aaaaa, it's not too bad. But then the farmer might decide to get you going into the third or fourth field, you see. Then you're getting really fed up. So they've got to really panic you and make you terrified and get you stampeding. Once you're stampeding, they can keep you going so far away from where you started, changing direction many times, until you drop, and maybe even die. That's what can all happen, you see.

So that's the trick with humans too. You don't give them the breathing space. Long, long terms of breathing space make you feel comfortable, and you start you get, as a human being you start to feel, I've got rights, I don't need to move from here, I'm quite happy where I am, you know. And that really ticks off those that believe they have the right to rule you. In fact, they own you as far as they're concerned. You are simple creatures, you understand, you're nowhere nearly evolved as the ones that are managing you, who get their little certificates from university, you know. So the idea for massive rapid change is to keep it rapid, rapid change, until you don't, you can never be sure of anything, you even doubt your own sensibilities.

That's where they want to bring you with the Covid and the lockdowns and the continuous testing, for the rest of your lives, for all kinds of things, and a whole new way of living. I mean, that's what it's all about, folks, keep you off guard all the time. Off kilter until you don't know what's up and down, until you will never ever question what you're being told, because you will not trust your own senses anymore. That's where they're trying to get you. That's what you do with the cattle. Keep them terrified.

They use all kinds of massive psychological warfare. It's for the greater good. It's to save us all. Oh, you're an enemy of the people if you don't do what you're told. You're going to endanger the people if you don't do what you're told, etc. etc. This is from governments. They've already killed enough people. The reports are still coming in, it's awful, of folk who couldn't get into hospital during all this period because they were told to stay at home and they were told that hospitals were overcrowded. When hospital wards all over the world were being shut down [Alan chuckles.] in reality.

But it won't stop them, they're going to keep you panicked and panicked and panicked. Until you won't go, it's bad enough not leaving your home without your papers, like in an occupied country, but now you've got to have your apps on your phones, and hopefully they work right, and, your numbers please, you know, rut-dut-dut-dut-dut. For everything. Yep. That's what you're going to see, folks. And it was all tried, remember, all this whole application things for the phone was all tested out already in China in the spring.

I remember doing the stories at the time where you'd see the color coding on their phones light up according to what the authorities said about you at the time. If you go into a store with that thing and it was green, you're okay, and yada ya. If it went red, and you go into a store, or any store or any shop or whatever, or even on the street, and it went red, it automatically notified the authorities who came, and the police, and they grabbed you. That's all here now, folks. That's it.

Yet there's folks who are going to snap up these apps. Well, I want to be safe. I want to be allowed out. Well if that, then, once you've signed onto it, when that thing goes red, [Alan chuckles.] just wait for the cuffs coming [Alan chuckles.] because you're going to get snatched if you don't drive right to the police station or whatever it is you're supposed to drive and get closed in there, eh. It's all coming down the pike. As per plan, eh.

And that's so sad. It's so incredibly sad that it's all happening, and the folk just go along with it. Well, they might let up one day, you know. [Alan chuckles.] Back to Fauci, it's never going to be normal again. Never. What part of never... Why would he even say never, unless he meant never be normal again, eh? It's so atrocious, even the years setting up the companies that would get all the contracts, that have been sitting waiting before this was even heard of.

Now in Britain, or in England they have someone appointed as the kind of spokesperson for the treasury, or the, they call it the H checker, you know for the government. And right now it's a guy called Rishi Sunak. He says in this article…

Rishi Sunak to extend furlough scheme beyond December as Bank of England pumps £150bn into economy - thesun.co.uk / 5 Nov 2020

Right? Now the Bank of England doesn’t take gold or silver and transport it anywhere. I guess it’s just, it’s like the US Federal Reserve, it just says okay and someone punches into your computer, the government’s computer, the number and that's it. That’s how they create money. [Alan laughing.] I suppose. Because I mean literally, how much has the Bank of England supposedly pumped in already, hm, with all the lockdowns and so on from the spring to the present? Never mind the billions that every country's throwing out to their pals that have corporations for all kinds of things, apps and chains for the public, electronic chains of all kinds, and testing systems and all kinds of vaccine companies that have got their hands out. Billions and billions and billions.

Trillions actually in the States too because they had to, each time they cover the people to stay at home, because they can't work obviously if you're told to stay home and all that and the businesses are shut, then, and they have a different term for it too in England from the one they have in the States, but it's the same thing. It's amazing as well too, it really is, the universal credit system really to be paid by the government to stay home. Isn't it? It all ties in with the great reset. You see, you're in the great reset as I've said before.

But in England, so you've got the Chancellor of the H checker, you know. And I always laugh about when I hear about that, when the Chancellor of the H checker, and everybody says, what is the H, even folk in Britain say what is the H checker? It's amazing how many folk never asked. But if you go down into the proper old Knights Templars areas of London, and you'll find it, it's behind one of their buildings where the temple was, and the temple barrister not far where the lawyers all come out of nowadays. That's what they call Temple bar and all that. But behind the building is a big square, they called it a square, where they would sit with these long poles, and it was, and I've seen it actually, they use to...

This used to be a common thing at one time apparently before TV sets and all that, where guys would go into park areas, like a local park areas, and your little pitch is set out there, like a check board, or a chessboard, but a checkerboard really. They would use these things which were kept in the big park seats, they're like boxes, and you’d bring out these big checker pieces and you’d place them all and they’d play the game there with these poles, and that's how they did it.

Well, the H checker was set up, it was set up by the Knights Templar organization. Because they were the big money lenders remember in their day. They were the first real bankers to give substitutes for gold and silver. They would give you written script and you could take that even to the Middle East, and during the Crusades and different times and cash it in there for what you wanted. It was an international banking organization really. [Alan chuckles.] It's quite interesting, a long history to it.

But anyway, sticking to what I'm talking about right now, was the H checker. So they literally had a figure of an H, the H, a kind of checkerboard, and they used the big poles again, and that's where they worked out their loans and what was due to get paid back and interest and so on, on that particular board. It was an H shape. It's still there. And that was, so he's still called today, and they never explain that to the public, the Chancellor of the H checker. The Templars, using this technique of using checkers basically for debt and profit and all the rest of it, and loans, used paper transactions as well, and that's where the word checks comes from, your paper check. Which really is a note in a sense, like a banknote but it's actually just a guarantee by the bank itself, or the Templars at the time, to refund whatever you wanted in specie, which is silver, or the coin of the realm basically. But that's where the word comes from, checkers, and H checkers and a check. [Alan chuckles.] So that's the story of that one. Who thinks that the same con game is likely to disappear over time?

So anyway, this Rishi Sunak...

Rishi Sunak to extend furlough scheme beyond December as Bank of England pumps £150bn into economy

thesun.co.uk / 5 Nov 2020

(Alan: What economy? [Alan laughing.] What economy is he talking about?)

And Rishi Sunak will make it a double bazooka by promising to keep the Government’s latest Covid bailout schemes in place even after the lockdown ends on December 2.

(A: Well, it's not going to end on December 2. It will be another month, and another two months, and another few months. And that's why because they can continue it. It's not going to stop, folks. Even after the vaccinations, they said that, you know. So it's an...)

...80 per cent wage subsidy scheme will be on offer for specific regions hit by Covid restrictions

The Chancellor is expected to announce the 80% furlough scheme will continue to be on offer in any area of the UK that faces the highest level of Covid restrictions - including Tier 3 areas of England.

(A: I love this tier stuff, it's like Amber, it's like Star Trek used to have Amber alerts and yellow alerts even, what was it, red alerts, and maybe orange, I don't know. But there's all these different color-coded, and people have been trained into it step-by-step, eh.)

The £150billion boost to the Bank of England's programme of quantitative easing (A: I love that quantitative easing, eh, inflation...) is on top of the £100billion cash injection it agreed on in June.

(A: [Alan laughing.] Ah, perpetual slavery, eh?)

It takes its mammoth quantitative easing (QE) bond-buying programme for the Covid crisis to £875billion.

(A: I mean, you can't get your mind around these figures now, can you, eh? It's not meant that you ever pay this off. You are slaves now, eh. Yeah, you're bonds people, you're bonded to the system of debt. And your governments have happily signed you down to pay it, like how many generations? It's perpetual, folks, because you'll never pay it off, not with compound interest from the Bank of England.)

The Bank's economic forecasts are even gloomier than expected too, (A: I wonder why?) as it slashed its predictions of recovery amid fears the new lockdown will push the UK economy into a double-dip recession.

(A: Hhhhh! Ohhhhhhhhh, I love these experts, eh. That's why they get big money, you know, to see things like the bazookas and double-dip recessions and so on.)

What is quantitative easing?

QUANTITATIVE easing is a process that allows the Bank of England to print more money.

(A: It means that the more that they print, you see, not that it's backed by anything, that's the con, they keep pretending, they still work it as though it were backed by something, you see, but it means the value, the purchasing power is less and less with every pound printed, or created, or blipped onto a computer screen. Because, and that's why, I read recently, it was, oh, I love, I like to look at the old books and old stories on people who made a lot of money in say the early 1900s, 1920s and 30s. There was one that literally, some inventor of something important, that he got about a million and a half or maybe a million, or maybe 2 million pounds or something at the beginning of the 20th century, and it said that would be about 180,000,000 pounds in today's value, you would need 180,000,000 to buy the same amount as you could buy with his 1.5 - 2,000,000 back then, you see. Because your currency is devalued so much, because it's all debts based, it's backed by nothing. And for everything that you printed, every pound or dollar, it's the same thing with dollars, that's printed, they've got, a whack is already off it for interest to the ones who created it. [Alan chuckles.] So anyway, so they're trying to say what is quantitative easing?)

QUANTITATIVE easing is a process that allows the Bank of England to print more money.

(A: Yep.)

The process sees the Bank buy government bonds from investors, (A: ...who also make money off debt again, eh.) pumping money into the economy in the process.

(A: How does it help?)

It does this to help keep inflation low, (A: Hhhch!)

which in turn should encourage people to spend if prices are low, (A: How can you spend if you're locked down in your homes and the stores are all closing down, eh? Ach, let's not get bothered about with facts here.)

which should result in more money flowing to businesses and through the economy.

(A: The businesses are going under. Except for the big multinational corporations that are allowed to continue. Isn't that amazing, eh, they're allowed but nobody else is allowed. And they don't even pretend to answer that dilemma there, that paradox, eh?)

QE also tends to make it cheaper for households and businesses to borrow money by indirectly causing interest rates to fall, which again encourages spending.

(A: So borrow money, get into more debt, so's you can spend it, right.)

The Bank will keep interest rates at 0.1 per cent - holding off from taking the unprecedented move of negative interest rates for now.

(A: Meaning, charging you for having any money at all in the bank.)

Mr Sunak will lay out how the furlough scheme, which was extended until December 2 to pay 80 per cent of wages, will continue to be on offer for future lockdowns in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland - even if the measures aren’t replicated in England.

(A: You see, that's how they do it in Britain. Why would you even bother having these characters, when it's already written what they're going to say?)

And he is also expected to announce that the 80% wage subsidy scheme will be on offer for specific regions hit by Covid restrictions.

So there you go. Money, money, money, eh, must be funny in a rich man’s world. And this other one, this other article here, it says…

AT A GLANCE: HOW VALLANCE AND WHITTY DEFENDED THE LOCKDOWN

Dailymail.co.uk / 4 Nov 2020

The pair admitted what one MP called the 'avalanche of data' they presented in Saturday's briefing may have been too much to handle for the public.

(A: Yeah, we're just too simple and stupid, aren't we, eh.)

Sir Patrick said: 'I would always like to get things simpler than they were and clearer than they were... clearly some of those slides were quite complicated.'

Commenting on one spreadsheet that showed how some hospitals are already seeing more patients than they did in the spring,

(A: Well, you always get patients coming in with bronchial, as soon as it gets cold, especially in Britain with the dampness and so on. But that's, and they've already, a lot of doctors have already said that this is normal.)

Professor Whitty admitted it 'wasn't an ideal slide'. (A: Hm.)

But Sir Patrick defended the use of the now-infamous graph that showed a possible 4,000 deaths per day by December (A: Hhhhhh!) said it was scientifically valid and was not 'discredited' despite recent days' backlash.

(A: Oh. Oooh. So we're still sticking to it even though it's been completely, not just laughed at but completely discredited. And Teresa May came out with the figures and went over it to give you the real results of what it worked out to be. Nowhere near 4000 people. I tell ya.)

And don't forget getting back to the spring, when this prune Matthew Hancock who was the politician that was put in charge of health, even though I don't think he's got any qualifications in health. He's kind of like Bill Gates that way. But Hancock back in the spring, when they were talking about death rates and so on, and he says, don't forget, 10,000 people in England die every month anyway. And it's true. You see, folk forget. Because nobody died before Covid came along! That's how they've trained us very quickly. What do you think happened to old folk all down through time? You'll be there one day. It will be your turn as well. Very possibly in the wintertime as well, that's when the weather really gets you, when you're old, you know, dampness, cold, all kinds of bronchial problems.

But again, let’s not get into, I’m getting back into facts, for goodness’ sake, and it's an awful nuisance, that habit, eh. I really am trying to stop myself from doing that, eh, so I can be good, good-good-good, and the authorities will say then that's a nice lad there, he's doing what he's told. You see. Because at the moment, [Alan chuckles.] I'm telling you, [Alan chuckles.] I get my computer, my computer and my server and so on, it cuts me down, it slows everything down. I had on the phone a few days ago someone who had called me, I just mentioned something, and during the sentence, it was an important thing I was saying, immediately the phone just went dead, ftt, cut right off, you know. And you know it's getting tampered with because I've had that too often, that kind of thing as well. That's what really happens. Again, a banana type republic with warlords running everything. And you have no comeback. Who do you complain to? And that's what they do to their citizenry, that's standard stuff, folks. And we've been living through that for a while now, hm?

So anyway, this is the two characters in Britain who are still defending the lockdown, right. He says…

'The communities in the North and Midlands in particular... have responded remarkably to this. And because of that, I am confident the rates are substantially lower than they would've been if this had not happened.

D’you hear the rubbish? Eh? Uuuugh. I tell you, and they’re still going along with it. They’ve got that same, uuuuuuugh character that was in before with giving us the bad, bad computer data, remember, back in the spring? He isn't fired, you know, he's back at work… with his computer spewing out predictions of big numbers and stuff. That's what I'm saying, here's the guy I want, that Neil Ferguson, I really want him if ever, I want him in charge of the lotto, the winning the lotto thing, and if I ever win the lotto and he is in charge of it, I'll get about a thousand times more than I thought I’d get. Because his computer is good at that, you know. So that's what we’ll get there.

So yeah, they're, and don't forget too that they admit too they're giving you scary scenarios. There's quite a few articles about them admitting that. Once again, it scared… I said before, when do you believe liars? You had it all exposed in the summer as people had their breath to go back and look at everything and say, that was wrong, that was lies, this is lies, they even admitted they lied to get the folk to comply. And here they're doing it again. When do you start believing liars? NEVER.

That's the answer, NEVER. You would train children not to believe liars like that. But this is all aimed at you as supposed adults? Oiy-yoi-yoi.

I'll put up the one with Teresa May the last Prime Minister who is still in I guess the House of Lords and giving her talks. She goes through this fake 4000 and comes down to reality with it and tells you about that too and speaking out against the lockdown. [Alan chuckles.]

We didn't mean to scare you: Chris Whitty and Sir Patrick Vallance defend their '4,000 deaths a day' lockdown dossier and admit three-tier system WAS working - but not quickly enough to stop NHS running out of space by November 20 - dailymail.co.uk / 4 Nov 2020

And then…

The moment Boris lost his battle against lockdown: How PM was told dead bodies would be stored on ice rinks in second wave and NHS chief warned of 4,000 deaths - as aides say 'I could have wept, it was so awful' (A: Oh, ttt. Aa, dear. It brings tears to your eyes that, eh, doesn't it. Hm?)

dailymail.co.uk / 1 Nov 2020

(A: Tears to your eyes. Ice rinks would store them... They tried that in the spring, that same scary scenario. They actually pay these guys to dream up these lies. Big money too. Big, big money. I remember I read the articles before, and they handed out from that firm, that company that was hired by SAGE, you know the SAGE group that runs all this for the British government, admitting that they were told, they put out leaflets around to all media outlets and they put stuff into their websites telling them how to put it across to the public, to terrify the public, to increase anxiety so they'd comply. They should all be, at the very least, put in the slammer and put on trial for what they've done. Hhhhhh. But anyway, back to the ice rinks and stuff, I tell ya. My mind goes into odd places I don't want to even go right now. But it said that…)

…doomsday predictions from the Government's SAGE committee of scientific advisers

(A: Again, a bunch of liars, the whole lot of them.)

PM fought 'valiant battle' to keep the country open (A: …which is another lie.), 'arguing with himself' and endorsing many of his Chancellor's hawkish warnings about the economic carnage it would entail

Scientists (A: Hhhch.), Matt Hancock

(A: …that was put in charge, Member of Parliament over… Matt Hancock literally, you know, he doesn't, he didn't know that, this is the guy they put in charge of the supposed, all the medical departments for Britain. He's not a doctor, he's a politician, eh. They put him in charge. He didn’t even know that malaria was spread by mosquitoes. This is the… hhhch, [Alan chuckles. Speaking with a low voice…] This is the man, [Alan chuckles.] that they put in charge of that, eh. You feel safer now, don’t you? Anyway…)

and Michael Gove warned that the Covid-19 death rate will be worse than in April

Quad heard that at the current rate of infections, hospitals would soon be overrun in every part of England, with the death toll hitting between 3,000 and 4,000 a day by Christmas

(A: Ttt. Hhhhh, oh dear, that’s just horrifying. And then this article gives you the key points in Covid lockdown mark 2, it’s called, mark 2. Hhhhh. I tell ya. N-n-n.)

D'you realize if they tried this stuff into the generations prior to World War II they would've been laughed out of parliament. Because folk had common sense back then. And this video one with Teresa May it says,

Johnson scuttles out of house as May leads assault on lockdown plans -

dailymail.co.uk / 4 Nov 2020

The former PM delivered a damning assessment of Boris Johnson's handling of the situation, saying a controversial claim that deaths could hit 4,000 a day by next month was 'wrong before it was even used'. - dailymail.co.uk / 4 Nov 2020 him

Prime Minister Johnson, you know, scuttles out of House as May, that's Teresa May the last Prime Minister, leads assault on the lockdown plans. I'll put that video up and you can hear her take on, she saying everything that's factual but she's playing her part as well, you see. They always give you someone to say what you already know yourselves. To make you think that there's still some legitimacy to government, that's what it's for obviously. I'm sure if she was in at the moment, she would be saying exactly what Boris Johnson is doing, you see, what he is saying. I'll put that up too.

And also, I'll put up all the politicians, a list of them who have voted to lockdown the country. And the ones that said no. This is for England, I guess. And here it tells you a lot just with the numbers, right.

Here is the voting list from yesterday's decision to plunge Britain into another suicidal panic.

hitchensblog.mailonsunday.co.uk / 5 Nov 2020

The ayes, as they say, that voted to lockdown:

Ayes - 516 And Noes - 38

There ya go. I wonder, I wonder, I wonder who's in touch with all these ayes, you know. What kind of, do they get little free holidays or something? I mean, what is it they get out of it? Well, I guess their careers will go up. They all know that, politicians know that, to do what you're told from superiors, that's how you get into it, you learn not to ask questions. Then if you do all the right things that you're told to do you go up the ladder. It's based on faith, you know, nothing to do with morality. Heaven forbid. But it's interesting to see all the ayes in it too, the names of them. N-n. Yep.

Then we've got this one here. They tried this in the spring too, eh, from SAGE again, the group that manages the fear tactics for Britain.

The SAGE files: Papers presented to Government claim Covid-19 is mutating,

(A: You see, all viruses mutate, folks. I think back in February or March China already made, there was about five different versions, and it was still going. That happens, most of them are harmless actually, a lot of them are harmless, a lot of them mutate into harmless versions. Which is good because then you get the harmless version and you get immunity, which gives you immunity to the more dangerous type. That's normally what they say. Anyway it says...)

London ISN'T seeing a spike in cases but patients are dying FASTER in the second wave than they did in the first

dailymail.co.uk / 29 Oct 2020

(A: Oh my goodness, so you're dying faster. Oh, ttt, oh my goodness, me, eh. I guess that's because the folk are scared to death, literally. But it says, again because of what they've done, they've avoided a second wave, and its tragedy, it says. You see, no, they're finding out that folk aren't dying right now. At least not many of them. There's still folk dying with other things of course, naturally, as they do when their time is up pretty well, you know.)

Scientific advisers have been warned that the coronavirus is mutating and could become more infectious, according to SAGE papers published today.

(A: Again, these liars at SAGE.)

The New and Emerging Respiratory Virus Threats Advisory Group

(A: That's...)

(NERVTAG)

The New and Emerging Respiratory Virus Threats Advisory Group

(A: So I guess this is going to be another permanent one.)

said the UK did not have the capability to research these mutations in depth and whether they would be harmful.

(A: Hhhhh!)

It's one of a number of papers released by the Government today that give an insight into how scientists are steering the pandemic.

(A: Well they certainly are steering it. I guess they steer it for the steers, getting back to Rawhide.)

The idea was explored in a scientific report handed to the Scientific Advisory Group for Emergencies (SAGE) (A: You see, so you've got NERVTAG and SAGE. [Alan laughing.]), which then presents the findings to the Government to help inform public health policy.

Another document shows how scientists have found that London has so far avoided a 'second wave' on the scale of those happening in other major cities in England, such as Liverpool and Manchester.

Experts speculate this is because more of the capital's population has some form of immunity to the coronavirus after having it already, compared to the North West, which did not have infections as high as London in the first wave.

(A: So this is what, this is very scientific, and experts speculate… [Alan laughing.]

Experts speculate this is because more of the capital's population has some form of immunity

(A: So that's natural herd immunity, you've got your own antibodies. That's how you, if you get the thing, obviously you don't get sick or stay sick, if you survive it meant means you've got antibodies, or you would be dead! Right? That's always the same with viruses. So folk, most folk never, didn't even know they had anything, and they've already got antibodies anyway.)

(A: The idea of lockdown, it was the first time in history. Because you want them to get herd immunity, hhhch, that's what you want folk to, and most folk never gets sick with these things, you see. So you stall it for reasons of your own, ftt, ftt, nefarious ideology perhaps, by stopping it, herd immunity, by keeping folk lockdown and apart from each other, eh. Even then, again, the countless articles come out talking about lockdowns, masks versus no masks, yada, yada, and saying it doesn't make any difference. From the countries that didn't do any lockdowns, eh, etc, and their data. Actually, the lockdowns are, again, this is the reset, this is the great reset technique, you see. And…)

SAGE also attempted to end the debate about a segregated approach to lockdowns, whereby the most vulnerable are shielded and the young return to normality.

(A: That would be the normal way they do it, you see. Like some doctors have come out and mentioned this already. I think Gupta was one of them, I think. So, SAGE attempted to end the debate, they don't want folk to just lockdown the vulnerable and shield the elderly and so on and let the young folk go. Because they don't want business to go back to normal. Obviously. Obviously. They've never done this in history before, where you lock up the healthy and crash the economy.)

It said the approach, which the Health Secretary has also shutdown a 'flawed' option, could lead to an 'uncontrolled epidemic' in the young while also causing mental health problems in those forced to shield for longer.

(A: Hhhhh, uncontrolled epidemic in the young. Well, that’s just not happening. I’ll put this article up too.)

Data reveals hospitalised Covid-19 patients are dying quicker than they were before - in a week, rather than two.

(A: But they’ve got the reasons for that too, eh. They’re saying that maybe it’s because they’re getting better treatment now. They actually say that in another article, because of better treatment that they’re dying quicker. [Alan laughing.] I’m not kidding you. [Alan laughing.] I’ll see if I can get to it. Anyway the same article goes on to say…)

IS THE UK'S OUTBREAK SLOWING?

An array of statistics revealed cases are no longer growing as quickly as they once were, although the epidemic is still growing.

(A: Above it, it just tells you that folk are dying quicker.)

Government scientists today claimed the crucial R rate has dropped slightly. SAGE estimates the reproduction rate for the UK has fallen for the first time in a month

(A: It's standard wartime stuff where they give you the propaganda. It's like 1984 in the movie versions, and you hear them talking about the governments declarations by using statistics. That you know, INGSOC, or whatever it was, is in Eurasia and East Asia and we've put out 10,000 new tanks today and mark number so and so, and such and such a caliber cannon on them and yada, yada ya. And the folk all cheered, yay. Well, it's the same kind of stuff, isn't it? Wartime scenarios just churning out statistics. It sounds like there's a battle going on, a real-life battle, and you can almost envision the troops there killing off viruses in the field, going through the mud getting get their white coats all dirty in the process, and charging it to the taxpayer, you know. But that's how it is, that's just how it is. So is the UK's outbreak slowing? [Alan chuckles.] I tell ya.)

(A: Just like a war scenario. Almost like a sports game too because that's how wargames are based, you know, like a sports game… and so and so's running up the field, they're carrying the ball there, and he jumps and he throws the ball, and he catches the ball, and he pushes the ball and kicks the ball... and he gets 10,000,000 pounds a week, or 10,000,000 a year as they say, yeah, for this grown adult. Yep. Okay. That's how they give you it here, eh...)

Speaking in a TV briefing alongside Prime Minister Boris Johnson, Sir Patrick said: 'There are some areas where we're beginning to see real effects of what's happening. There are some indications [that] amongst young people the rates are coming down or flattening off a bit due to the huge efforts that people have made to try to adhere to these changes in behaviours that we need to have in order to get this down.

(A: …down, you know, all these numbers down, you know, nobody's sick, or very few, but get the numbers down, right, we're fighting a BATTLE.)

Another one too…

Home Secretary Priti Patel (A: Hhhch, Priti Patel…) will order police to stop protests involving more than TWO people during lockdown - dailymail.co.uk / 3 Nov 2020

So the cops are getting ordered out again, eh. It's just disgusting, eh, these characters. You understand, the law's gone out the window. I'll put up another article tonight too from one of the top lawyers of Britain who was in the High Court, you know, Lord Sumption. Lord Sumption gives a talk on rule by decree as opposed to rule by law. I'll put up the link for that too.

Government by decree: 'Covid-19 and the Constitution' - Lord Sumption - pdf - resources.law.cam.ac.uk / 27 Oct 2020

Government by decree - Covid-19 and the Constitution' - Lord Sumption - youtube.com / 27 Oct 2020

I think if I find it, it might be on the Peter Hitchens blog where he talks about Lord Sumption and there's a link to a video with Lord Sumption reading his own take on the illegal type of, they're not laws really, they're decrees, as they say, by government, which is unlawful. But who cares in this day and age, eh?, as the new system takes over. So I'll put them up and you'll enjoy them, I'm sure. He goes through this long talk, it's interesting, it's a video clip where he goes through the fact that this is not, they're not following the law on anything here, and this is the sort of stuff you see again in Third World countries where they just make up the laws as they go along. Because they're not laws. If they're not passed as laws, they're not laws at all. And the cops don't have the right to do what they're doing. And the politicians don't have the right to order them to do what they are telling them to do. He goes through it all, literally line by line and destroys it. It doesn't make any difference, but that's what he's doing. He does a good job of it.

Now, the two-people idea is for protest, right, for Priti Patel. But it will but depend on who you are, eh? I guess if you got the right uniform on and the right colored mask on and so on, and you could have as many as you want obviously, and go as close… In fact!, you can go as close as you want and don't bother with social distancing, and that will be okay. Like it was already. It made a complete mockery of what they were doing with their going after individual folk [Alan chuckles.] who would have a seat in the park and things and beat them up and grab them. But when it came to these riots and all that, but that was okay, you know.

So there you go. So it depends who you are. So I would just wear black or something, all wear all black and black masks and all that, and tell them, you know, we've got the right to do what we want to do because we belong to blah blah blah, and that's it, you get away with it. It all depends who you are, isn't it? Obviously. It made a farce of their whole lockdown measurements and harassing individuals as they were doing.

And...

Huge changes coming to thousands of pubs within weeks as Gladys Berejiklian warns her 'patience is wearing thin' with coronavirus rule breakers – and they now face $1,000 fines

dailymail.co.uk / 2 Nov 2020

(A: So that's going too, in other countries, you've got that happening as well. And New South Wales Australia, eh...)

NSW premier Gladys Berejiklian warned her 'patience is wearing thin' with Sydney venues that continuously break the rules at a press conference on Monday.

(A: Hhhhh, hhh. It’s really bad with Australia, I tell ya. It's really sad how they're just putting up, well, they've got no option. You see, where do you complain to when you find your whole government is in on the big agenda? You see, your government's beyond compromised, BEYOND, long ago actually, before Covid came along, and that's what you're seeing today. So what do you do now?)

(A: As I've said before, the old conventional war is when you see folk coming in with uniforms going to eliminate you and you fought back without question. You didn't have to ask for rights or anything else, you just went and did it. But when you've got unconventional warfare like this, you suddenly turn around and well, who do you complain to? I gave this talk again in the 90s because you'll find other organizations that you think are there to help and protect you, and for you to go to with problems, they really don't exist. At least not in the state that you have been trained to believe they exist, or for the reasons that you think they exist.)

(A: They're completely… Everything is different. Your countries were gone long ago. So there's another woman who is kind of like the Clinton syndrome and [Alan speaking with a scolding tone] she's getting rather ticked off about all you characters, you know, not just obeying and doing what you're told! And this is the new democracy, you see. It's really technocracy.)

(A: They really love communism too because then they tell you, and if you didn't do what you were told they just sent the troops on you, you see. They really admired them, they all admire China, they say they admire China too, eh. They all say that. That's what Justin Trudeau said too, that he admired China, back in the spring, because they don't have to, they can get things done very efficiently, they don't have to bother to cater about individual rights and things and democratic rights, they can get things done and under control quickly, you see. That's how he put it across. They really salivate at the thought of having a Chinese type system, and a population that can't really complain, or else, you know.)

(A: That's what they want, isn't it. Little robots. You see, Winston Churchill used to play with, um, toy soldiers. He did, he had this big collection. He did the wargames, you know, battlefield collections and so on. I've met some of these characters like that, they're pretty, they really are fanatical, they can really get into it, like it's all real. But Winston Churchill did that, and so it’s no real big deal when World War II came along and he just kind of saw, he kind of saw the troops like toys in a sense, you know, like wargames and all that. And I think that's how people like Justin Trudeau and all the rest of them see us today, like little toys.)

(A: This woman too, in New South Wales, who's saying, they should just obey, you know, just obey, like little clockwork windup toys or something. They obviously don't see you as individual people with human rights and democratic rights, etc. They don't, do they? They really don't. We are in dangerous, dangerous times, which I knew would come, and all that it would need was the right spark to make it happen, which they planned the spark long ago too. So this New South Wales premier Gladys says that...)

It comes after health authorities struggled to contact trace diners

(A: So they’ve got contact tracers, you see.)

at Jasmins1 Lebanese restaurant in Liverpool, where there was no electronic customer sign-in system before a staff member tested positive to coronavirus.

(A: Well, was it a fragment that they had? Of a dead one? Was it many little fragments? Well, what was the scale of the positive? Did you try a second test and see? Were they ill with it? Were they not ill with it? Did they have any symptoms, fevers, anything like that? So she's really ticked off, you know, about it all… because they couldn't trace some of the diners at the restaurant, eh. And then this leads right into, continuous, and it says…)

Ms Berejiklian said 'I want to make very clear the government's intention' about potentially making QR codes compulsory.

(A: So here's the real aim of it all, eh, for big corporations again, for more money off the taxpayer.)

'We don't have any room for complacency and as I foreshadowed last week, mandatory QR codes are still on the table for NSW, so I just want to make that very, very clear,' Ms Berejiklian said.

(A: Hm, ftt, well, my goodness. Well at least she didn't say a Hillary though, she could have said, you know, we came, we saw, he's dead, or, we killed him, you know, when she was talking about Qaddafi. So here's what Gladys will be doing, she says…)

Businesses that do not have an electronic sign-in system (A: Now, this is going to be permanent, folks.) will be fined $1,000 on the spot if they are caught without one.

(A: There you go, an electronic sign in system. Hhhhh!)

COVID-19 marshals (A: There you go, marshals, eh…) would also stand by the venue entrance to make sure customers have checked in

If the government makes QR codes mandatory, all cafés, restaurants, bars and pubs would need some form of electronic customer sign-in system.

It’s EVERYTHING, folks. They already lined up the companies that would get all these apps YEARS ago. [Alan chuckles.] And they all get funded by your money, once again. So, there's $1000 on the spot, eh, wow. On the spot. My goodness me. Ftt. There you be. So the restaurant, because one staff member tested positive, it will close today and remained so until further notice. There you go. That will teach 'em, eh. Ftt. Hhhhh. Gladys, Gladys, n-n-n.

There’s another one with GPs, general practitioners…

GPs preparing to give Covid vaccine 'to over 85s (A: That's the over 85-year-olds I guess.) and NHS staff next month'

thesun.co.uk / 3 Nov 2020

At present there is no vaccine for the virus and scientists are racing

(A: You see, again, it’s that war scenario, there they are running through muddy fields in Flanders and that and Mons and all these places, and getting covered in mud, selfless, out of breath trying to save you all, eh, they’re RACING, you see, they’re racing towards it all…)

to find a suitable jab that can be rolled out in order to protect people from the killer bug.

(A: …you see, this is a KILLER bug.)

You understand, very few folk die, and can’t even know if they died OF it or with it. You see? Because lots of folk will be, will have it as well, you don’t know you’ve got it, and even then it depends on how much sample. It’s fragments, that’s what they test with the PCR test, and they go through a system of multiplication to try and find out if it’s maybe an actual infection or if it’s just fragments from old viruses. It’s so, that’s what they can’t lose with the iffy testing and all the rest of it, eh.

So it tells you about the two types of vaccines which they've got, they're preparing for release and all the rest of it. They're also wanting to also go into care homes as well, as they call it. So they keep getting you ready for it, you know, and ready, that's part of the programming is getting you ready for it, oh my God, they can't get it just yet, but it will soon be here! That's the whole idea.

I don't think folk realize how many organizations are at work right now playing this game getting you all conditioned for, coming out with predictive programming, step by step by step. It's all worked out with propaganda pieces. And I'm not making this up by the way, I got lots of articles where they actually admit the companies they employed make up the pieces, the propaganda pieces to get you conditioned to accepting things, you know. And the folk who don't want it, they've got other programs and they find ways to get around your vaccine hesitancy as they want to call it, you see. Meaning, your common sense, your natural common sense… [Alan laughing.] You're not sticking that in me!

I mentioned last week about the military to be used in parts of Britain, and here you've got…

UK Brings In Army To Help With First 'China-Style' Mass COVID-19 Testing In Liverpool

zerohedge.com / 3 Nov 2020

Following in the footsteps of China and tiny Slovakia, the UK is embarking on its first "moonshot" mass-testing campaign in the city of Liverpool, known to most known to most people outside the UK as the hometown of the Beatles. (A: …eh?! Well, they also had Jerry Marsden and a whole bunch of folk long before, you know.) According to the Guardian, up to half a million people in the city are set to be tested this week, and if the system proves successful, it will be used again.

(A: You understand, hhhch, hhhch, with the testing system they’ve got, and even Teresa May touched on it, you know, they have, they’re not positively guarantee that they’ve actually got it. A lot of them are false positives, it’s guaranteed to get lots of false positives. That’s why they picked this one. Hhhch, I’m sure of it. Why else would they keep pushing it and calling it cases if they say, well I think that might be positive, you know. You see, it’s not the illness, you see. It’s different for a case. You’re not really, they didn’t used to call things cases unless you’re actually ill with something, hm. That doesn’t matter anymore. Anyway it says…)

if the system proves successful, it will be used again.

(A: Well, that’s perpetual.)

With the self-isolation period for those who test positive set to be reduced,

(A: No kidding, especially when a lot of them, who don’t have it, as false positives…)

up to half a million people are due to be tested in Liverpool in the government's first attempt at mass testing and tracing,

(A: …with the military. This is dangerous. D’you understand what you’re seeing here? Hm? For the folk who've got memories to remember the Soviet system, and the East German Stasi system, here's the military, you know. I remember last week I think I read one too where it says that some of these guys, these tracers, will be in plain clothes, for the military. These are military guys, for goodness’ sake. You don't use military on the public! You don't do that.)

The scheme is part of the government's attempt to meet the demands posed by local officials, who have demanded more money (A: [Alan chuckles.]) for both test-and-trace programs, as well as more funding for the government's furlough plan for workers.

To help carry out the program, the British army will be deployed for "logistical support".

(A: You don’t have to deploy the ARMY on the public. Period. Anyway it says…)

PM Boris Johnson recently rolled out a system of coronavirus restrictions with three standalone tiers. Liverpool and Greater Manchester are both in the third tier, which imposes harsh restrictions that mirror the springtime lockdown, with the main difference being school is still in session.

(A: No, school is perpetually in session because we’re all getting trained with this kind of stuff all the time.)

Although it's a favorites of epidemiologists

(A: Well, I don't vote for any epidemiologists.)

contact tracing has largely failed in the West as officials struggle with noncompliance in the US and Europe.

In the UK, the governments test and trace system has been a notable blemish for BoJo despite pouring more than $15.5 billion into it.

(A: That's Boris Johnson.)

(A: Well, who got the contracts, eh?)

Perhaps Bojo has finally discovered the secret for why these tactics were so effective in Asia. It's much easier to test and trace when mandatory means MANDATORY.

(A: Well again, this is why they are pushing this mandatory stuff, eh.)

Another one too, this is quite good...

Your age, ethnicity and wealth could decide whether you get the coronavirus vaccine first as experts (A: Oh, I love these priests, experts, eh.) consider using Oxford algorithm (A: So another, I wonder how much that cost us for this ALGORITHM, eh?!)

dailymail.co.uk / 1 Nov 2020

The Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation (JCVI), which is responsible for shaping the UK's vaccine strategy, has already produced an 11-tier priority list, (A: …already! Hhhhh! 11 tiers, eh?) according to the Telegraph. (A: This newspaper.)

BAME PEOPLE ARE NOT GENETICALLY MORE AT RISK OF DYING FROM COVID-19, STUDY SAYS

Black, Asian, and minority ethnic (BAME) (A: The people, they come up with these acronyms all day, what rubbish, eh.) people are not genetically more at-risk of dying from Covid-19, a study concluded last week.

(A: Well before that, the hype in the spring, oh my God they're more, oh my God, more at risk, blah blah blah. Well, no, they're not at risk, you see. That's how science, this conclusive science is so elastic.)

BAME communities are two to three times more likely to die from coronavirus than other members of the population, (A: Oh, well that makes it more easy to understand. They're not genetically more at risk, right, they're just three times more likely to die from coronavirus than other members of the population…) analysis of NHS data has previously revealed.

(A: And that's about, I think that, remember that was to do with the ACE2 receptors in the lungs and the epithelial tissue.)

However, scientists in Japan and the US found no differences in seven genes associated with viral entry of SARS-CoV-2 – the virus that causes Covid-19 – across ethnic groups.

(A: So there's no difference they say in seven genes that's the entry type genes.)

Pre-existing medical conditions and environmental factors are more likely to blame for people of ethnic minorities being more likely to die of the disease, they said.

(A: It could be due to their work and medical history.)

This is largely based on age but also considers a number of factors such as where individuals work and medical history.

(A: You see, here's your science, it's all speculation, isn't it? It's obviously a repeat of what they came out in the spring was, the same kind of article with the same kind of conclusions. They even actually, it's almost like a repetition, I'm sure it is, word for word, something that came out of this spring that they just recycle the same story, it might be because they're poor and so on. No, it's not that at all. They came out after that remember in the spring and says, it wasn't because they were poor. A lot of them had definitely other problems to do with diabetes type II and overweight and so on. And high blood pressure, that was another thing too. And men were more likely to die from Covid 19 they said as well.)

The report also discovered men were more likely to die from Covid-19, according to Office for National Statistics (ONS) data. (A: the ONS, the ons. There ya go.)

But it's really just a repeat of what they had out in the spring.

The Head of Operation Warp Speed and The Gates Foundation Are Pushing BioElectronics and Vaccine Patches

thelastamericanvagabond.com / 22 Oct 2020

Donald Trump announced he was appointing Dr. Moncef Slaoui, a former executive with vaccine manufacturer GlaxoSmithKline, to lead Operation Warp Speed, the public-private partnership launched by the Trump administration to rapidly develop and distribute a COVID-19 vaccine. Dr. Slaoui was a Professor of Immunology at the University of Mons, Belgium. Slaoui earned a Ph.D. in Molecular Biology and Immunology from the University Libre de Bruxelles, Belgium and completed postdoctoral studies at Harvard Medical School and Tufts University School of Medicine, Boston.

Following his education, Slaoui joined the pharmaceutical industry, serving on the board of Directors of GlaxoSmithKline between 2006 through 2015. Slaoui served in several senior research & development (R&D) roles with GlaxoSmithKline during his time with the company, including Chairman of Global Vaccines.

(A: So we're supposed to be awfully impressed. Are you impressed?)

More recently, Slaoui sits on the boards of several pharmaceutical companies and biotechnology organizations. In 2016, Slaoui was appointed to the Board of Directors of Moderna Therapeutics (A: ...that are going to get the big vaccine contract apparently.), a biotech company that is leading the way for messenger RNA (A: That's what they call…) (mRNA) therapeutics and vaccines. (A: This is the big stink that's going on with this type of vaccine.) Moderna is also developing one of the COVID-19 vaccines which might be administered to the public.

(A: That's the one that Fauci promoted, right. Isn't that something too? I mean, here's your dilemma. These supposed experts already work for the big, big vaccine manufacturers that are getting the contracts, so how can you appoint them, hm?, to be in charge of something, Operation Warp speed and so on? You can't have folk that are compromised already, that have got vested interests, at the very least vested, may be invested as well. You really can't, can you?)

When Slaoui was appointed to head Operation Warp Speed critics noted the conflicts of interest related to him leading the effort to develop a COVID-19 vaccine while holding stock in two of the leading vaccine manufacturers. Slaoui said he would sell his Moderna stock worth a reported $12 million and resign from the board of directors. However, in a recent interview Slaoui said he was keeping around $10 million of stock in his former company, GlaxoSmithKline, calling the shares his "retirement."

(A: And it goes on and on and on.)

Bioelectronics and Pharmacovigilance

The criticisms about Slaoui's involvement in OWS go well beyond financial conflicts of interest, however. One other area of concern is the fact that several of the companies connected to Slaoui are involved in the emerging field of bioelectronics. Slaoui is currently partner at MediciX investment firm, chairman of the board at Galvani Bioelectronics, chairman of the board at SutroVax and sits on the boards of Artisan Biosciences, Human Vaccines Project and the aforementioned Moderna Therapeutics.

(A: Oh boy, I tell ya. This is interesting too…)

Galvani Bioelectronics was formed out of an agreement with Verily Life Sciences LLC (formerly Google Life Sciences) (A: Isn't it, Google is everywhere too. It's a small world, isn't it?), an Alphabet company, and GSK. (A: That's GlaxoSmithKline.) The goal is to "enable the research, development and commercialisation of bioelectronic medicines." Bioelectronic medicine is a relatively new research field focused on tackling chronic diseases by using "miniaturised, implantable devices (A: [Alan chuckles.]) that can modify electrical signals that pass along nerves in the body, including irregular or altered impulses that occur in many illnesses". GSK has been active in this field since 2012 and has stated that chronic conditions such as arthritis, diabetes and asthma could potentially be treated using these devices.

It's… massive monopolies, isn't it. That depend on things like this Covid coming along. It's very, very conducive to their plans of controlling so much of the market, eh. [Alan chuckles.] Money will destroy us all too, isn't it. But again, if we are that herd they've got to have the farmers making money off us right down to the bitter end. Here's another one too…

Covid-19: Less haste, more safety - bmj.com / 30 Oct 2020

Five years imprisonment and/or a $66,600 fine for refusing coronavirus vaccination?

(A: Mmm, ftt. Isn't that true, eh? 666, they love these little jokes they put on the public, don't they? That's from the BMJ. They talk about...)

From Australia, I'm watching the fast-tracked development of coronavirus vaccines with mounting concern.

Under the Australian Biosecurity Act 2015,

(A: You see how they got it all worked around the same, every country about the same time. They had already planned all this kind of ways of managing pandemics and so on.)

refusers of coronavirus vaccination in Australia could be at risk of five years imprisonment (A: My goodness!) and/or a $66,600 fine.

(A: Which, there's nothing here legal about any of this stuff. According to the Lord that runs on the British system, which is also what Australia really runs on, it's all derived from this empirical British Commonwealth type system.)

This emergency power has been active since March 2020, and has been extended to December 2020, with the potential for unlimited extensions.

(A: There you go. So yeah, if you don't take your vaccination then you get…)

imprisonment and/or a huge fine, for a virus which is not a threat to most people under 70.

We need to talk about this...

(A: And they have all the different details of it here, links with the…)

www1.health.gov.au (A …for Australia. And…)

www.legislation.gov.au

(A: …etc. etc. It’s got all the links attached to it, to this actual article, in the article itself. I’ll put that up and you can read it, for those want to see where it’s supposed to go, you know.)

Quite something, eh, your democracy. Oh, I've got rights. Rights. And...

Canada introducing new mandatory COVID-19 rules for international travellers

globalnews.ca / 3 Nov 2020

Anyone entering Canada by air as of Nov. 21 will be required to submit a quarantine plan and a novel coronavirus “self-assessment” before getting on a flight, according to new rules released by the Public Health Agency of Canada on Monday.

(A: So they can assess themselves, eh? Hm.)

A news release from the health agency also said travellers entering Canada by land are “strongly encouraged” to do the same.

(A: So it’s the same old thing as they did before.)

Tens of thousands of passengers connect from international to domestic flights before quarantine

I'll put this one up too for anybody that cares about it. Canada's pretty predictable in most of the stuff. It's been socialist for a long, long time, you know, really Communist in a way, very communist too. I know people in the bureaucracies and civil service in Canada who are communists, no doubt about it, hard-core types too. Hhhhh. The Canadian Press put out this article here...

Trudeau, EU (A: That's the European Union.) leaders meet ahead of U.S. election (A: …just ahead of it…) to reinforce support of world order

cp24.com / 29 Oct 2020

OTTAWA - Prime Minister Justin Trudeau and the European Union's two top political leaders expressed faith in the American people Thursday ahead of (A: …the vote, and so on.)

The choice is up to the American people.

(A: That's a big joke.)

But it was clear the three leaders are at least eager for a reset of strained relations to help them cope with the major challenges of the day, including climate change,

(A: They're all on board. I mean as soon as, oh Biden probably won, you know, and immediately all the climate change agreements will all go back to what it was and blah blah blah blah blah, you know. That's sustainability, which is again the reset, which ties in with this so-called Covid 19 and so on and so on.)

Trudeau was asked how that was factoring into the government's plans and he referred to the 2000 presidential election in which the ultimate victor, George W. Bush, was declared a month after election day and a subsequent Supreme Court ruling. (A: …was held, you see, to make it happen. So it's not over yet, as they say.)

And these coding things for restaurants, again, they've got them in Canada too.

Canada's Helcim rolls out QR codes for restaurants

finextra.com / 3 Nov 2020

To give businesses more contactless and self-serve payment options, payments company Helcim has launched QR Code functionality for merchants using their Online Store, Hosted Payment Pages, and Online Food Ordering.

The easy-to-deploy QR codes give businesses more options to accept payments while following social distancing requirements.

I was wondering how you can do social distancing and eat at the same time, maybe if you order… Today, I was thinking of patenting something like a kind of Frisbee, you know, and you could turn it upside down, you see, a bit like a little dinner plate. You could order the stuff and so you wouldn't have to go so close to the people at the door of a restaurant or something for takeaway, they could just put it in, the food in the Frisbee, you see, and throw it at you, you know? And for small meals they have small ones that can fit right, they'll fit right into your mouth, and you just keep your mouth, you can practice in front of the mirror and extend your lips, you know, and so it can go straight in your mouth, and so even your hands don't have to touch it, you see? And for those who still have dogs and things, you can make, train your dog to catch it, but you have to have a dog that's not going to eat it at the same time, or you'll really be starving, won't you? You see, you've got to think of these things. And you might even get a grant to develop it properly, you see. Then you can live off the taxpayer too and be a good capitalists, hm. So there ya go. They're all after the money, aren't they, these cons and so on and so on and so on and so on. I-yi-yi, n-n-n.

This other one too goes into...

The Anatomy of a QR Code: How QR Codes Work

19 July 2019

(A: Hhhhh, I mean, you're just dying to know, aren't you? Well, I'll put the link up.)

QR codes, like the barcodes they enhance, convey information through a graphical code of black and white pixels. Where a barcode is one-dimensional, a QR code is two-dimensional. In this content it means that information is conveyed by reading both the horizontal and vertical locations

It means basically they can get all your data and your address and phone numbers and everything else too, a lot of stuff on it. So if you go into restaurants they'll know how to track and trace you and yada ya. You'll pay for it all, and it saves them having to chase you up, they'll actually know it's you, you see.

New COVID-19 Security Measures Will Make Health a Prerequisite for Travel

mintpressnews.com / 26 Oct 2020

(A: Hhhhh! There ya go. And for public health, eh.))

…it tightens the noose around civil liberties…

Imagine standing at a TSA security checkpoint on your way home for the holidays.

(A: I can’t afford the holidays.)

You’re getting ready to go through the awkward travel procedures instituted almost immediately after 9/11 (A: That’s when you lost a lot of your freedoms anyway.) when the Transportation and Security Administration (TSA) was created and air travel in the United States morphed into a search and seizure operation with the implied possibility of your detention and interrogation.

A new digital certificate called CommonPass, designed to serve as a clearance mechanism for passengers based on a health diagnosis underwent its first transatlantic test on October 21 under the watchful eye of the Centers for Disease Control (CDC)

(A: It's amazing too when you go into these characters who are on the board of it, and the companies they go back in and out of, private businesses, eh, [Alan chuckles.] and they're like musical chairs.)

and U.S. Customs and Border Protection (CBP) at Heathrow Airport in London. There, a group of select participants embarked on United flight 15 to Newark, New Jersey after being screened and tested for COVID-19 at the point of departure in a largely ceremonial exercise that included initiative co-founders, Paul Meyer and Bradley Perkins.

(A: Ah, dear-dear, I wonder how much money they get off the taxpayer too, eh?)

CommonPass Overview

(A: …another big PR piece, eh. I-yi-yi.)

Feudal revivalists

(A: This is the same article.)

In medieval times, the ‘commons’ denoted the de facto and collective ownership of land, which peasants used to plow, sow and harvest or raise sheep and cattle.

(A: Well, what it actually was, is strips of the worst land, because the Lord’s owned it all, you see. They had their tenant farmers getting all their crops, and for them, and often the farmworkers, the ones who worked on farms, had to grow their own stuff on the commons strips to get their own food just for themselves or their little animals and so on.)

The rise of the land-owning classes in post-Magna Carta Europe, and England in particular, slowly eviscerated this form of communal privilege (A: It wasn’t a privilege, it was right.) through the enclosure system, which redistributed the commons to the proto-capitalist class in partnership with the monarchies and create the system of oppressive labor exploitation known as feudalism.

Starting in 1604, the Enclosure Acts of England …

Today, that scene is being repeated as the Internet, an information ‘commons’ is being carved out by Big Tech and led by organizations like The Commons Project, which avails itself of a name that connotes the total opposite of its purpose.

Co-founders Paul Meyer and Bradley Perkins are the non-profit’s CEO and Chief Medical Officer, respectively. Perkins began his career over thirty years ago at the Center for Disease Control (A: Again, small world, eh?) and, for nearly a decade, worked at the RAND corporation’s health care policy division (A: Oooo. Hhhch.), RAND Health Advisory Board. Meyer, for his part, is a Yale law school graduate, who was writing President Clinton’s speeches years before receiving his graduation diploma from the storied institution.

In 2009, Perkins became the Chief Technology Officer for a publicly-traded cross-national operator of hospitals and clinics called Vanguard Health System (A: I’ve heard of them.) Vanguard had been established with funding from Morgan Stanley and controlled by the Blackstone Group since 2004, (A: M-m-m. I-yi, quite an article here, although it's too long for me to read to you.)

Before he was named Young Global Leader by the World Economic Forum (A: So he belongs to them too, you know.) or Henry Crown Fellow at the Aspen Institute (A: Again.), and even before becoming a Term Member of the Council on Foreign Relations (A: He's done all the right things, eh.) and receiving MIT's 2003 Humanitarian of the Year award, Paul Meyer found himself in war-torn Kosovo installing a new Internet infrastructure system to replace the one destroyed in the war, only days after NATO bombs had stopped shelling the Serbian people.

(A: M-m-m-m-m. That's a small world, with the same characters, eh?, in the same organizations everywhere you look, isn't it? I-yi-yi. N-n-n.)

I tell ya. But anyway I'll put this link up for those that want to read a longish link, you know. That's from Mint Press News, that one.

Again, the time is passing here, once again I got to keep reminding people, cuttingthroughthematrix.com my website. List all my other sites which are on cuttingthroughthematrix.com in case any of them go down, you see. You can buy the books and discs or give me straight donations, which are also welcome. You can use PayPal. Send cash. You can use personal checks still. Money Gram too, I think they're still doing that as well. Again, banks can still give you, write out checks for you, even smaller checks, if you can get access to them. As everything is changing naturally very quickly, until you'll have just the authorized media out there, you know, the cartel types that all belong to this, they'll have the same, exact same stories, same opinions on every single item. So help me out in keep me ticking along because we are going through as I say the biggest change of your lives, folks. And this is permanent.

Unless folks do get off their couches and start relearning that word called NO, the one that upsets people like Gladys I mentioned earlier in New South Wales, you know, that upsets them. They get awfully impatient when you say NO. [Alan chuckles.] That small little word, eh. It's a nuisance to them. This idea of democratic rights really gets up their nose, it really does. Uuugh, you just have to learn to obey, you know. And they make it harder and harder to do your own thing, until you can't move with all the different things they… They'll say, oh we're not stopping you from going there. You say, well I can't go anywhere without a coronavirus pass. I want to go to the store, you know. Well, you know, we're not stopping you, we're not stopping you from eating. We're not starving you to death. You could get this little thing here, and pay so much money, and get that little pass, and then go and get a test, and then go and get your Covid measuring thing at the store, and biomeasured through the stores' security cameras and equipment, and all that stuff. We're not stopping you, if you do that you can go and eat.

You know, that's a tyranny, folks. Oh, if you don't take the vaccine, oh you can't go anywhere now. But everybody's safe now because they've all had vaccination. Well um, ttt, that doesn't matter. [Alan laughing.]

So again as I've mentioned before, yep, the Common passport and all the rest of it is the way it's all going.

Coronavirus: Britons should be paid to take COVID-19 vaccine, (A: …here we go…) says Oxford professor

news.sky.com / 6 Nov 2020

(A: The same Oxford, it's always Oxford, Oxford, eh? That's another ethicist, you know, ethicist. That's where they go, they find ways to try to change laws or get around laws to make you obey people who pay them to do this and change the way that you think, you see. And if you allow them to decide what's moral for yourself, and let them do the thinking and the judging, you're finished, folks. You don't elect these characters, who just replaced religions. They are the new religions, you know. So here's what it says here, Sky News, eh...)

People should be paid to have a COVID-19 jab so the country reaches herd immunity as quickly as possible, a leading ethicist has suggested.

(A: Hhhhh! Ethicist! Expert, you see, in ethics. You don’t have any ethics yourself, you understand. They get trained to have ethics, so they can get around laws to change things to make you obey and stuff.)

Professor Julian Savulescu from the University of Oxford said incentives would help to overcome rising vaccine hesitancy due to perceived safety concerns.

(A: … PERCEIVED safety concerns. There ARE safety concerns, like folk getting paralyzed of the spine and stuff like that, you know. Never mind the long-term effects which they say nobody knows yet. Hhhhh. Never mind the permanent changes to your DNA from the RNA programming is going to get.)

People could either be given a financial inducement to have the jab

(A: …right. This is like animal management. Do you understand that this is animal management?...)

or they could be paid in kind, perhaps foregoing the need to wear a facemask in public, he writes in the Journal of Medical Ethics.

(A: You should, if you want to see psychopaths at work, you should read that, you know. The Journal of Medical… There's nothing ethical about it. Or moral.)

"The advantage of payment for risk is that people are choosing voluntarily to take it on," he says.

(A: So he's talking about legality. If you take money for, you see, you've done, it's a contract, then it's a legal contract. Anything that happens to you then, there's no way, even if you have a right to sue, there's no way you'd have it, a judge would throw it out, well, you got paid for it, you got paid for that, you know. These conmen… what EVIL characters, eh.)

"As long as we are accurate in conveying the limitations (A: …limitations, right…) in our confidence about the risks and benefits of a vaccine,

(A: I'll say that again for the hard of thinking…)

"As long as we are accurate in conveying the limitations in our confidence about the risks and benefits of a vaccine,

(A: So they don't know either, you see. They're supposed to tell you that before they give you a jab, we really don't know.)

then it is up to individuals to judge whether they are worth payment."

(A: You see that? It's up to you to decide. Hm?)

To achieve herd immunity, which would stop the coronavirus spreading and end the epidemic, somewhere between 50 and 80% of the population would have to be protected.

(A: You understand, if they had left it alone, and just really shielded the elderly, right, to start, we all know this, and lots of professors know this and doctors know that and epidemiologists know it, if they had done that then the spread would have been quick and fast, folk would have gotten sick, and they got over it, and they'd have herd immunity, BY MIXING. That's how you get it, by mixing. Not getting locked down and separated from each other. That's standard, what's always happened before. This is not meant to be factual and scientific. It's not. Or practical. It's for a PURPOSE. For a new way of existing. It's post prosperity of any kind, by the way, except for those who are getting all the money on all the programs that are going to manage you. Anyway...)

Coercion for the public good is already accepted in wearing seat belts and conscription during wartime.

(A: You see how they try to rationalize it, oh, you wear a seatbelt, you know…)

But he says mandatory vaccination would be unethical without first knowing a jab was completely safe.

"However, another way of looking at this

(A: This is what they always, look at it a different way, how can we get around this, eh? So…)

"However, another way of looking at this is that those at low risk are being asked to do a job which entails some risk, albeit a very low one," he argues.

"So they should be paid for the risk they are taking for the sake of providing a public good."

(A: Uuuuuuuuuuuughhhh, ooooooooooooo, uuuuuuuuuuuugh.)

Any vaccine will have been tested on tens of thousands of people before being rolled out. But rare side effects may remain.

(A: You can’t even say rare because they’re not completed yet, we don’t know if there’s even, if they’re even RARE. Hhhch. But there’s no long-term effects, kind of thing. And by the way, it’s not tens of thousands of people when you look at their actual test cases and so on and what they’re doing.)

"It may be those who are poorer may be more inclined to take the money and the risk,

(A: So there ya go for the poor, they'll take the money, they'll sell their blood even, you know.)

but this applies to all risky or unpleasant jobs in a market economy," he says.

(A: That's his ethics, total psychopathic, you see.)

"It is not necessarily exploitation if there are protections in place such as a minimum wage or a fair price is paid to take on risk."

What a PSYCHOPATH! I guess he got a degree in psychopathy now, that's what ethics is now. I prefer the old ethics and old morality of leaving it to religion and the person's own idea of them and God, what's right and wrong, you know. That's my take on things. I'm telling ya. N-N-N.

Julian Savulescu - en.wikipedia.org

By the way, I mean, we know already that certain folk go and riot and demonstrate and there's no, no one's going to arrest them. Right. For not social distancing. [Alan chuckles.] Everyone else is going to get big, big massive fines, which are unethical and unconstitutional. But...

The CDC said it was O.K. for COVID patients to vote in person? (A: Ahh.)

americanthinker.com / 4 Nov 2020

We are told we can't gather together even if we haven't tested positive for Thanksgiving or Christmas.

That's what the CDC and other state bureaucracies told us. The CDC carved out an exception for protestors and rioters.

(A: That’s true, that was okay, you see.)

We can't go to church if we have no symptoms and haven't tested positive, nor can we go to indoor dining or many other places

For months we have been told that even if we are asymptomatic, we can be spreading the disease.

We close down businesses, sporting events, schools, and other things if so much as one person has tested positive.

But if you have tested positive, the CDC says you can still vote in person.

(A: [Alan laughing.] …if you’ve tested positive you can vote in person, there ya go.)

They have to stay home for fourteen days unless they go to vote? (A: [Alan laughing.])

Meanwhile, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention said people who are in isolation after testing positive can still cast ballots in person.

Isn't that a danger that every polling place becomes a super-spreader when you send in people who are sick to stand in long lines next to other people?

(A: I tell ya. M-hm. [Alan laughing.] I tell ya, it’s quite something, eh?)

Now, I mentioned before too, that facial recognition is being used to identify people that were in riots and so on, and who assaulted people and so on. The follower types, not the leaders, eh. This says…

Facial recognition used to identify Lafayette Square protester accused of assault washingtonpost.com / 2 Nov 2020

The man grabbed another officer, before police caught up with him and attempted to make an arrest, authorities said. But the man wrestled free and vanished once again.

The protester might never have been identified, but an officer found an image of the man on Twitter and investigators fed it into a facial recognition system, court documents state. They found a match and made an arrest.

(A: Now, they're not telling you in here that they are also doing it through, I mean biometrics can still do it by measuring your eyes, the space between your eyes and so on and the shape of your skull and yada, yada, ya. Also too, at a distance they can, they've already pretty well got your biometrics all measured out, and types of iris and the whole bit. Then they have, eh, but they also have got all your chatter on your phones, including all the ones that the folk that were in the riots, and the planned riots and demonstrations, thought they were safe from. Who do you think invented them? I mean, you had, um... that all came out with the big dumps that came out before on the programs that the CIA and the FBI and so on were all using inside, internally. They gave you the programs that you think are keeping you safe, hhhch, for the color revolutions, it's the CIA that invented them all. So they know all your chat before and after and during, and who's who, the voice recognition, etc., hm. But anyway it talks about...)

… and facial recognition experts said they were unaware of the existence of the National Capital Region Facial Recognition Investigative Leads System (NCRFRILS). Several (A: I guess that's the name of the person.) said the Lafayette Square case was the first time they had seen its use disclosed to a defendant despite thousands of searches in bank robberies, human trafficking and gang cases.

NCRFRILS has troubled activists and privacy advocates, who said it could have a chilling effect on First Amendment rights and leave defendants unable to challenge a match since its use is not disclosed in the vast majority of cases.

That's the Washington Post. I'll put that one up too for those who are interested in it. Also I'm going to put up too the report I mentioned before about the mental health, the fallout from the lockdowns, eh. It's the governments that are doing these studies on us all, us little animals...

Mental Health, Substance Use, and Suicidal Ideation During the COVID-19 Pandemic — United States, June 24–30, 2020

cdc.gov / June 2020

(A: It gives you the weekly reports, past volumes and so on, surveillance summaries, past volumes. It's an article on statistics on deaths, suicides and overdoses and all the rest of it, and mental health in general because of the pandemic and the lockdown. Not because of the disease, but because of the lockdown. They go through different adults, young folk, racial, ethnic, minorities, essential workers and so on, all the different groups, how it's affected different people. It's not a bad article actually. It says…)

40% of US adults,

(A: ...that's all adults...)

reported struggling with mental health or substance abuse.

40%, hm. Hm, wow, wow. And they have different levels of it too in this article. It's not a bad article actually. I'll put it up again too for anybody that wants to go through it.

Now here is an article to show you the insanity of it all, as you're lockdown and folk can't get into hospitals to get treatment to keep them alive for different things, so folk are dying because of it. And if that's not bad enough, right, hhhch, in Britain again, Matt Hancock minister in charge of so-called, he was appointed to be in charge of the health of the nation supposedly…

Health Secretary Matt Hancock says people can still travel abroad for assisted dying during the coronavirus lockdown as MPs call for the law to be changed in the UK

dailymail.co.uk / 5 Nov 2020

Matt Hancock today confirmed people are allowed to travel abroad for assisted dying during the second coronavirus lockdown.

(A: Isn't that nice of them? Remember the previous article too I mentioned with the suicide rate going up and up and up because of the lockdowns and so on. And folk who are dying at home, they can't get treatment, can't get painkillers some types. Hhhhhhhhhh, so, here you are, eh?)

MPs had expressed concerns (A: They're really concerned about the people.) the four-week

England-wide shutdown 'could deter' people from making such a journey because of the Government's stay-at-home message.

(A: So they’re going to allow you to go out to kill yourselves, eh.)

But the Health Secretary said the rules state that people leaving their home need a 'reasonable excuse' to do so (A: …I’m going to kill myself…) and 'travelling abroad for the purpose of assisted dying is a reasonable excuse'.

(A: It’s funny how they don’t see anything else as reasonable, eh? But as long as you’re getting topped off, you know, that’s fine.)

His comments came as MPs pressed for the Government to change domestic law on assisted dying.

(A: So this is the reason it’s in the paper, obviously. Because with all the chaos they’re causing, that the pain, physical pain the folk are getting when they’re getting really ill and they can’t get in and get operations and all the rest of it, they want to change the laws, a good time to change the laws so they can kill you at home, eh? Assisted dying, eh? Apart from that too, you’re stuck at home watching the same old BBC repeats, and that’s enough to drive you to it too.)

Assisted dying is currently outlawed in the UK but it is legal for people to travel abroad for that purpose as long as it is allowed in the country they go to.

(A: Isn’t that nice of them?)

But that’s what they want to do, you see, bring in this law to help bump you off. And save money, you see, because you're into a new system, this great reset. It's a system of when you die, and how much they should spend on you and what's your value to society and so on. For those who haven't quite caught onto it all yet. So there you go.

Operation Warp Speed is Using a CIA-Linked Contractor to Keep Covid-19 Vaccine Contracts Secret

unlimitedhangout.com / 6 Oct 2020

(A: There's your democracy, in this great [Alan chuckles.] corrupt system we live in, eh. Oh sorry, democracy, sorry, I thought it was a... democracy, that's right.)

$6 billion in Covid-19 vaccine contracts awarded by Operation Warp Speed have been doled out by a secretive government contractor with deep ties to the CIA and DHS (A Department of Homeland Security.), escaping regulatory scrutiny and beyond the reach of FOIA requests.

(A: This was published in The Last American Vagabond, originally, but it mentions…)

NPR quietly reported (A: …last Tuesday.) that the US government’s “Operation Warp Speed,” a public-private partnership launched by the Trump administration to rapidly develop and distribute a Covid-19 vaccine, had taken the unusual step of awarding contracts to vaccine companies, not directly, but through a secretive defense contractor.

Though NPR named the defense contractor – South Carolina-based Advanced Technology International (ATI) – they declined to explore the company’s deep ties to the CIA, DHS and the Department of Defense and how ATI is helping to lead those agencies’ efforts to militarize healthcare and create an all-encompassing surveillance Panopticon that not only monitors the world around us, but our physiology, as well.

It'ssss..... This is your future, folks, of military surveillance. I mentioned it years ago, I said, your big eating machine in the military you've done across the world comes back home and it will be eating you too. And you will not be pleased. And here we are, years and years later, with all the technologies. I read the articles from the 90s and even 80s where they said, in a more peaceful world with fewer wars the military-industrial complex has to have outlets, it would go into total surveillance systems of all kinds. I did that talk years and years and years ago and here we are when it all comes to pass, eh. That will be their income, you see. We ARE the business. M-hm. I'll put that article up too.

Operation Warp Speed is Using a CIA-Linked Contractor to Keep Covid-19 Vaccine Contracts Secret (alternate site) - thelastamericanvagabond.com / 10 Nov 2020

You see, everything’s public-private. They dished it out, all the things that government agencies should be doing, they're dished out, are farmed out to private agencies. That's contained in this article too if you want to look at it.

Another article too, which I've read through before I think, or similar ones...

COVID testing: We've been duped

americanthinker.com / 4 Nov 2020

Lost in this whole pandemic hysteria are some key considerations that when carefully analyzed place the whole COVID-19 narrative in a highly questionable light. The gatekeepers of information dissemination are manufacturing consent at an alarming rate, but their fatigue is setting in, and their masks are falling off. What better, albeit unlikely, source to go for some much needed illumination than the New York Times?

During a considerably quieter time, back in 2007, the New York Times featured a very interesting exposé on molecular diagnostic testing (A: This is the PCR test.) — specifically, the inadequacy of the polymerase chain reaction (PCR) test in achieving reliable results. The most significant concern highlighted in the Times report is how molecular tests, most notably the PCR, are highly sensitive and prone to false positives. At the center of the controversy was a potential outbreak in a hospital in New Hampshire that proved to be nothing more than "ordinary respiratory diseases like the common cold." Unfortunately, the results wrought by the PCR told a different story.

(A: I put that one out a while too, remember, where the thousands of workers were furloughed and there was all a big panic….)

Thankfully, a faux epidemic was avoided but not before thousands of workers were furloughed and given antibiotics and ultimately a vaccine, and hospital beds (including some in intensive care) were taken out of commission. Eight months later, what was thought to be an epidemic was deemed a non-malicious hoax. (A: It was just false.)

The culprit? According to "epidemiologists and infectious disease specialists ... too much faith in a quick and highly sensitive molecular test .. led them astray." (A: That’s your PCR.) At the time, such tests were "coming into increasing use" as maybe "the only way to get a quick answer in diagnosing diseases like ... SARS, and deciding whether an epidemic is under way."

(A: It can’t really tell you if you’ve actually got an active one or not. The inventor, remember, of the PCR test said it shouldn’t be used for diagnosing, it’s for use in the laboratory, only for what they do there, but not for diagnosing disease. Anyway it goes into, the rest of the article says…)

"Your Coronavirus Test Is Positive; Maybe It Shouldn't Be," according to NYT reporter Apoorva Mandavilli.

(A: I'll put that article up too, I've got a couple, few articles from India, from the Times, and the Economic Times too.)

"The PCR test amplifies genetic matter (A: …that's bits and pieces, right…) from the virus in cycles; the fewer cycles required, the greater the amount of virus, or viral load, in the sample . .. the more likely the patient is to be contagious."

(A: That's how it works. And it depends what lab you go to according to the result they give you.)

Unfortunately, the "cycle threshold" has been ramped up. What happens when it's ramped up? Basically, "huge numbers of people who may be carrying relatively insignificant amounts of the virus" (A: …or particles of it, not even contagious, right.) are deemed infected. However, the severity of the infection is never quantified, which essentially amounts to a false positive. Their level of contagion is essentially nil.

(A: That's why I'm sure they picked this, this, hhhch, I'm sure that's why they picked this particular test. They can't lose, you understand, if you want to ramp up fear. It goes on and on and on and talks about...)

…the PCR, are highly sensitive and prone to false positives.

(A: And it mentions that...)

....potential outbreak in a hospital in New Hampshire that proved to be nothing more than "ordinary respiratory diseases like the common cold." Unfortunately, the results wrought by the PCR told a different story.

(A: It was false.)

Thankfully, a faux epidemic was avoided (A: ...back then.) but not before thousands of workers were furloughed and given antibiotics and ultimately a vaccine, and hospital beds...

(A: But it was all false.)

I'll put it up anyway for those who want to see it.

Gl himobal biometrics market forecast to surpass $82B by 2027 despite pandemic

biometricupdate.com / 14 Oct 2020

(A: Well, it's because of it, I'm sure. Biometrics, eh.)

The global biometrics market is forecast to reach $82.8 billion by 2027, growing at a 19.3 percent.

The 176-page ‘Biometrics – Global Market Trajectory & Analytics’ report says non-AFIS systems will reach $34.7 billion, but AFIS systems are also expected to grow at a 20.6 percent CAGR over the next seven years.

(A: It’s mobile biometrics and so on, yep.)

The mobile biometrics market … with an increasing number of mobile payment transactions as banks rapidly digitize, a new Technavio report suggests.

(A: We ARE the business, eh. And also, they're putting voice recognition into it too. So you've got…).

The global market for voice biometrics will grow by $2.6 billion, or 19 percent CAGR from 2020 to 2024, driven in large part by law enforcement, BFSI and health care applications, Technavio writes in another report.

(A: …E-commerce and so on.)

Government ID cards

COVID-19 has driven down the global market for government-issued smart ID cards by 11 percent, according to ABI Research.

We are the business, we are the business. Peter Hitchens has some good articles up now too in England. This one here it says…

Britons are being sentenced to a slow, agonising death... by No 10's (A: That's Downing Street.) panic squad, (A: And they have a panic squad to terrify you, right.)

writes PETER HITCHENS

hitchensblog.mailonsunday.co.uk / 17 Oct 2020

One of the filthiest tactics of the Panic Merchants is to claim that anyone who opposes their strangling of the country is callous and cares only about money, not life.

(A: It's all psychology, eh.)

Dissenters have been pelted with slime of this kind by Johnson (A: …the Prime Minister.), the man who ruined Britain, and by his dense sidekick, Hancock – perhaps the first Health Secretary in history who does not know that malaria is spread by mosquitoes.

Well, Johnson and Hancock, if you care so much about lives, get in touch with Lisa King, as I did. Ask her to tell you about how her husband Peter, a retired taxi driver aged 62, died.

(A: This is important because, last week I read the articles to you from the mainstream, again of lots of people who are dying of cancer in their homes and so on, they couldn't even get medication, died in utter agony because of this farce. So here's Peter, right…)

Peter, a retired taxi driver aged 62, died.

It is a horrible, upsetting story, involving a grown man screaming in agony. And in my view it is an absolutely direct consequence of Hancock's conversion of the NHS into a National Covid Service which treats everything else as a nuisance.

(A: And isn't that true. When they stopped operations, stopped cancer treatments, stop everything. And emergency surgeries of all kinds, all just, poof, stopped, stay home and die. You can't even get in to see a doctor, right.)

Peter King was grudgingly granted (as so many now are) a remote session with a GP (A: … a general practitioner, right. Again, it's all tele conferences or just on the phone or whatever.) who, unable to meet him (A: Because of Covid, right…), and apparently ignorant of his records (A: Because they don't know anything about you, right.), diagnosed his severe chest discomfort (A: …this is remotely…) as reflux. (A: Like acid reflux.) I am not especially interested in blaming this doctor. Under the conditions created by Hancock, he was presumably doing his best.

(A: I don't think so because they shouldn't, there's definite clues as to what's chest discomfort, or heart attack, or reflux, or something more serious. I mean, more serious than your gut, you know. And this says…)

But it was not good enough. (A: Right.) Actually the trouble was far more serious – a stone (A …a gall stone, right…) trapped in his gall bladder – and the resulting delay meant he was overcome with indescribable pain a few days later.

(A: Because the bell can't get through, you see. And the hepatic duct, you see, comes out of there, is shared by the same one where the bell goes through, is your pancreas, that also, it isn't just for insulin, it has other enzymes it secretes as well, and they both go into that duct and when the stone gets it blocked then things back up. And if you get pancreatitis, it can be lethal, and ABSOLUTE agony too, you know. Anyway, so this doctor diagnosed it remotely, a guy who didn't know him, but he couldn't get into see his own doctor and so on because of the lockdown. So he says, oh it's reflux, hhhch, probably acid, right. So he had massive pain a few days later.)

Peter was given emergency surgery (A: …eventually, right…) to reduce the agony, but needed a more radical operation.

(A: So, days went by, you see.)

He was put on the urgent list for it.

(A: Okay? Put on a LIST.   You really need an immediate operation for that, eh. He was put on a list, that's Britain for you…)

But this was still too late. He fell terribly ill again and despite the heroic efforts of paramedics, he died. The many years of happy life which Peter and Lisa King might otherwise have had were wiped out for ever.

(A: That was utterly needless, and avoidable.)

This is not just some isolated case. Something like 25 million appointments with GPs (A: …general practitioners, that's your local doctors.) have been lost as a result of the Johnson Government's panic (not as a result of Covid, as the hopelessly pro-Government BBC always says. The Government had a choice over how to respond, and took the wrong path).

(A: Well, they're doing it because they are all bought and paid for. They're OWNED, your governments are OWNED, folks.)

Millions have not had referrals for diagnoses including cancer and heart disease. Some of them will have been scythed down as Peter King was. Others will have been needlessly damaged in smaller, slower ways.

But this is what Johnson and Hancock have let rip – needless pain, needless death. Let them never again dare to pretend that their original bungle, and the later months in which they have tried to save themselves from deserved disgrace, were the only way to save lives.

I suspect their panic may well in the end kill more than Covid ever did or could have done. We are in the hands of fools who will not admit they have made a terrible mistake.

(A: Then he gives other parts and instances too…)

Those still taken in by the cuddly, caring 'Boris' image of Prime Minister Johnson (A: You know, it's this big act he puts on.) may wish to study his impatient, callous response to a distressing question in the Commons last week (A …the House of Commons.) about the absurd cladding rules which are preventing thousands from moving home, often at horrible personal cost.

Dulwich MP Helen Hayes asked about a constituent, Luke Thomas, recently diagnosed with terminal cancer. He urgently needs to move closer to his family for support (A: That would be physical support too.) but cannot sell his flat as it does not have the accursed EWS1 form (A: Hhhch, that's socialism.) (mentioned here last week) which is pointlessly blocking so many from moving.

Mr Thomas has no time to wait for relief. Ms Hayes asked: 'When will the Prime Minister end this scandal?' He brushed this off, referring her to an equally useless answer he gave earlier. If he cares, it does not show.

So there you go, it's... That's happening in all the countries where this lockdown is happening, folks. And the hospitals are pretty well almost empty because they closed all the different wards down and so on, and lay off staff. Yep.

NHS hospitals have four times more empty beds than normal

hsj.co.uk / 13 April 2020

(A: Didn't they say that 4000 today were going to die? Four times more empty beds than normal... And fft, this one here is, let me see here, this is a medical site here with, for staff and so on, it would seem to be. Yeah, it's where they actually have, it's a magazine for the health workers, doctors and nurses and staff and so on. So there you are, that's from them.)

Official figures state 40.9 per cent of acute beds unoccupied — about four times the normal number.

Follow major efforts to discharge patients, (A: That's what they're doing, discharging patients, getting ready for the 4000 a day!) and sharp drop in admissions.

Critical care in hotspots at more than normal total capacity, especially in Birmingham and the Black Country, and thousands on oxygen.

Tens of thousands of NHS hospital beds remain unoccupied amid the coronavirus crisis — about four times the normal number — due to huge ongoing efforts to free up space, and a slowdown in admissions from other causes.

Figures from the national NHS operational dashboard, seen by HSJ, show that 40.9 per cent of NHS general acute beds were unoccupied as of the weekend — 37,500 of the total 91,600 relevant beds recorded in the data. That is 4,500 more than the 33,000 the NHS said had been freed up on 27 March, and nearly four times the normal amount of free acute beds at this time of year.

(A: At this, you see, this is the normal time of year, and it's four times the amount of free beds than normal. It goes into critical care as well and says…)

The dashboard confirms hospital pressure is concentrated on critical care. Across England, 3,228 patients were in critical care beds — representing 78 per cent of the total of 4,122 critical care beds which were available in February. More have since been opened, but it is not known how many.

(A: So they have more than normal at critical care capacity empty beds. [Alan chuckles.] So I'll put that one too.)

Another one too is…

Boris Johnson and NHS boss claim Covid-19 hospitals admissions ARE rising quickly — despite experts saying health service is NO busier than normal…

dailymail.co.uk / 6 Nov 2020

(A: [Alan chuckles.] Well, don't believe the people who work there and run the hospitals, believe Boris Johnson, right. There you go. And Mr. Hancock. I tell you. Isn't that amazing. This is a must-be agenda, you see. Facts don't matter. Reality doesn't matter. So the Daily Mail Online says…)

Top experts earlier fumed that No10 (A: Downing Street.) has only hit the lockdown panic button because it was backed into a corner by its 'gloomster' scientific advisers, who don't want to deal with the same scrutiny that was hurled their way during the first wave.

Hours before the press conference, Health Secretary Matt Hancock warned the health service could collapse and seriously ill non-Covid patients could be turned away (A: [Alan chuckles.]) unless Covid-19's resurgence is nipped in the bud.

(A: So, here you are, you know. If you're ill, don't come and don't even think you're going to get treated. You know. Because they're not going to treat you. If you need an operation for an emergency operation, it's not going to happen, obviously, you know. I tell you, quite amazing. It's quite amazing. It says…)

NHS England has about 140,000 beds at its disposal (A: …right…) - including capacity at the seven Nightingales built during the first wave (A: …which weren't used, by the way, eh.) and thousands of beds commandeered from the private sector - and currently there are just shy of 10,500 Covid-19 patients in its hospitals.

(A: Now, that doesn't mean that's why they went in, in the hospital, right. It's just another little trick they play.)

It means people with the disease are occupying fewer than 10 per cent of the health service's overall capacity.

(A: And they could be in for other reasons too, you see.)

Leaked documents suggest the NHS on a national scale is actually treating fewer patients than it was last year.

(A: This is before Covid, right.)

Just 84 per cent of all hospital beds were occupied across the country on Tuesday, according to the document, which is lower than the 92 per cent recorded over the autumn of 2019.

Both Professor Sikora and Professor Heneghan claimed the health service is put under pressure every winter from other seasonal illnesses - due to having the lowest bed capacity per population in Europe

(A: You see, it happens every year, folks.)

You see, how many folk are being sacrificed for the great reset, eh? Because they couldn't get the great reset through without some kind of wartime, war type scenario. Oh, we're all going to die. Yep. Another one too is…

How Likely is a Second wave?

lockdownsceptics.org / 7 Sept 2020

(A: That was September.)

Paul Kirkham, Professor of cell Biology and Head of Respiratory Disease Research Group at Wolverhampton University

(A: He gives his evidence to say it's pretty well burned itself out in reality. Yep. He says there's less and less happening with Covid. It says…)

This has occurred because the level of infection required to introduce enough immunity into the population to reduce the reproduction number (R) permanently below 1 occurred at markedly lower infection rates and loss of life than had been initially anticipated.

Current mass testing using the PCR test is inappropriate in its current form.

It is recommended that a greater focus be placed on evidence-based medicine rather than highly sensitive theoretical modelling (A: Hhhch, computer modeling.) based on assumptions and unknowns.

(A: Isn’t that true. But facts don’t matter when there’s a big agenda, eh.)

And again…

Digital identity apps to outnumber cards by 2023 - biometricupdate.com / 27 Oct 2020

BIG BUSINESS, folks. Jump on board, get rich. Yep. Throw it all on a prison. Another article too from the Spectator…

Was the NHS (A: National Health Service.) overrun by Covid during lockdown?

spectator.co.uk / 25 Oct 2020

(A: Hhhch. Again, what they're claiming here is that it did terrify I guess the government of Britain, by seeing...)

...the appalling scenes from Lombardy, where hospitals were overrun and dying patients left in corridors. In London, ministers were terrified by the prospect of the same happening here.

(A: No, they weren't. All those ministers that voted yea for the lockdown, you'll find they have connections to other organizations much bigger than themselves.)

Today's Sunday Times has published a long investigation from its Insight team looking at the Covid disruption in hospitals, which makes for disturbing reading. The NHS, it says, faced "an unmanageable deluge of patients" during lockdown, and it offers several examples of things going badly wrong.

(A: Well, I don’t think they had an unmanageable deluge of them during lockdown. In fact, folks couldn’t get in. Anyway, I’ll put these articles up.)

Scotland Digital Identity Service plans advance with supplier day planned for October 6

biometricupdate.com / 24 Aug 2020

(A: So I guess they've got it now, eh. So they put out the bidding, you know, for the contract for…)

… a Prior Information Notice (PIN) to invite the participation of potential bidders.

...and for digital identity Scotland. There you go. Scotland is so far under the SNP and all the rest of it, it's so far left, international, it's like no borders. Why get an SNP party after all these years when you're trying to do away with your borders? [Alan chuckles.] What's the point of it all? Conquered, conquered and they don't even know it.

And of course everyone forgets about ID 2020, stuff I talked about years ago they plan to bring in. It’s just coincidence it was 2020, you see. Of course it is.

Healthcare assistant who publicly resigned claiming she had 'no work to do for three weeks' at peak of the pandemic

(A: Because they closed the other hospitals around.)

says claim the NHS (A: the National Health Service.) is overrun is 'all lies'

dailymail.co.uk / 5 Nov 2020

Shelley Tasker, 43, from Camborne, Cornwall, resigned from Treliske hospital

(A: You see her on the video talking about it, her last day there.)

...revealed what's been going on behind closed doors of NHS hospitals

A viral Facebook video shows Shelley Tasker, 43 - a healthcare assistant at Treliske hospital, which is part of the Royal Cornwall Hospitals NHS Trust - telling members of the public what is 'really going on' behind closed doors in NHS hospitals.

In the clip filmed outside Truro Cathedral with a crowd gathering, Shelley, who is a mother and part-time photographer from Camborne, Cornwall, takes to a microphone and says: 'As much as I've always loved our NHS, it's no longer our NHS. It's run by the corrupt government and the people running this company.

(A: And that's the truth of it, you see, it's public-private partnership deals and so on, often owned by the big Pharma companies.)

'We no longer have health care, we can't see dentists. I can tell you now when I was working at the height of the pandemic I had no work for three weeks because there were no patients. We have a particular Covid ward. None of the wards were overflowing with Covid patients and they're not now.'

She went on to claim that the flu and Covid cases are now recorded as 'the same thing' on death certificates.

(A: Have you noticed too, there is almost no flu this year. Hhhch, it's because they're lumping them all in with Covid, you see. That's official too. I'm not making it up, I've got the articles here on it.)

In response to cheers from the crowd, she continues: 'I can tell you on Friday in Treliske there were three people in with Covid. No extra deaths, three - and that covers Treliske, West Cornwall and Hayle hospital.

'The total deaths from these three hospitals in seven months,

(A: That's total deaths, right…)

'The total deaths from these three hospitals in seven months, is 76 people –

(A: That doesn't mean that it's from Covid.)

'The total deaths from these three hospitals in seven months, is 76 people – that's about ten people a month over the last seven months, and we have locked down.

NHS figures show that 67 people died from Covid-19 at Treliske hospital between March and September,

(A: And again, here’s the thing too. We’ve already been through the scams where they put them down and as died from it or with it, you see. And if you’ve died with it, and something else kill you, they’ll put you down as Covid killed you, you know. That’s all been revealed too and admitted to in some countries including Britain at one point, but never by The Square[?]one.

and official data seems to back up her point - there were just four people with the virus receiving care at the Royal Cornwall Hospitals NHS Trust on October 29.

'It's all lies. We've closed all of Cornwall down for three people in hospital.

There you go. That's says it all, you see, that this is a big agenda for a different purpose, the great reset, eh. And out of that will come the massive destruction of the economy, what's left of it. Oooh, you've got massive debt, oooh, total austerity, high taxation to pay it off, you know. Which is never going to happen. Perpetual for ever, ever, ever generation, generation, generation pay off debt, that's what it's for, you know. So I'll put this article up and the video and you can all see it for yourselves.

Again, getting back to ID 2020.

The Coronavirus COVID-19 Pandemic: The Real Danger is “Agenda ID2020” - globalresearch.ca / 12 March 2020

What is the infamous ID2020? It is an alliance of public-private partners, including UN agencies and civil society. It’s an electronic ID program that uses generalized vaccination as a platform for digital identity.

England's top Catholic Cardinal Vincent Nichols blasts lockdown ban on church services saying it is 'not supported by any scientific evidence' and demands ministers U-turn 'as soon as possible'

dailymail.co.uk / 5 Nov 2020

…particular aspect of the decision by the Government is not supported by any scientific evidence and clearly shows a misunderstanding of the importance of religious faith.

No, they KNOW the importance of it. They don't want any opposition to their obedience programs. They want obedience, and if you're going to obey a religion or a God, then that's a nuisance, you see, you're not going to have that, no way. They've taken centuries to try to get rid of that. Yep, that's the whole point of it, isn't it. HG Wells mentioned it, it's much better, once religion's all gone, he said, then government can talk right down to you, when the family is destroyed as well, there'll be nobody to stand up around you to help you, back you up or anything else, and you'll just have to do what you're told. He was all for it. I'll put that one up as well.

Vote rigging: How to spot the tell-tale signs

bbc.com / 2 Sept 2016

(A: Which you normally do with Third World countries and so on. They give you what to look out for. It says…)

Too many voters

(A: Watch out for more than you’ve got on the list. That’s what they had in the States, some of the US states, they had way more voters than they have on the register for voting. And dead folk as well, they had that the last time too I remember. Don’t forget, you know in this day and age, I mean, dead folk are people too, right, they have the right to vote. There you are.)

You never get a 98% or 99% turnout in an honest election. You just don't. (A: Okay.)

Voting is compulsory in Gabon, but it is not enforced; even in Australia where it is enforced, where you can vote by post or online and can be fined for not voting, turnout only reaches 90-95%.

The main reason that a full turnout is practically impossible is that electoral registers, even if they are recently compiled, can rarely be 100% up-to-date.

Even if no-one gets sick or has to travel, people still die. And when a register is updated, new voters are keen to add themselves to the list.

(A: And so on and so on, eh.)

I once reported on an election in the Niger Delta where some areas had a turnout of more than 120%.

(A: [Alan laughing.] That’s quite good, eh.)

"They're very healthy people round here, and very civic-minded," a local official assured me.

But a turnout of more than 100%, in an area or an individual polling station, is a major red flag and a reason to cancel the result and re-run the election.

A high turnout in specific areas

Large numbers of invalid votes

Keep an eye on the number of votes excluded as invalid. Even in countries with low literacy rates this isn't normally above 5%.

High numbers of invalid votes can mean that officials are disqualifying ballots for the slightest imperfection, even when the voter's intention is perfectly clear, in an attempt to depress votes for their opponents.

More votes than ballot papers issued

(A: I tell you, it's, this is old, old stuff, isn't it. So it's not like it's new stuff that's going on in the States recently too. Another thing too is...)

If there is a discrepancy, something is wrong. And if there are more papers in the boxes than were issued by the polling staff, it is highly likely that someone has been doing some "stuffing".

(A: They call it stuffing, right, that happened in the States too.)

Results that don't match

Mobile phones have made elections much more transparent.

It is now standard practice to allow party agents, observers and sometimes even voters to watch the counting process and take photographs of the results sheet with their phones.

But then again, that’s come out too about the programs that have been out since about the 90s anyway, electronic voting, where they can have, they call it the glitches in the States, but you can get 5000 glitches at a time that can win or lose an election.

I can remember seeing that in Canada when Preston Manning was running in Canada. Literally in real time on TV you saw his, underneath the picture you saw his tally in real time and he was way in the lead, and the one underneath him, it had their tally there as well, much lower. Exact it was, it was absolutely exact, and when you blinked your eye, they had reversed them, absolutely the same numbers but reversed. He got the lesser one and the one that was losing got the higher one, instantly. That happened in real time. And folk don't trust their eyes then. But luckily, I saw it and a few other people saw that too so... But it didn't make any difference, they stuck to the glitch. [Alan chuckles.] M-hm.

Now, talk about the deep state and oh, there's no such thing as the deep state, eh, and all that, oh, it's just conspiracy theory, eh, and that, you know it's just conspiracy theory, for goodness sakes. This article here is from the Washington Examiner. It says…

‘Thank God for the deep state’: Former CIA chief says anti-Trump forces ‘responding to a higher call washingtonexaminer.com / 1 Nov 2020

(A: Meaning, there's definitely a, hhhch, there's this embedded deep state, right, with a different idea of government and what should happen than the people. And that's what he said, thank God for the deep state.)

Former CIA acting Director John McLaughlin expressed his gratitude for the "deep state" and their effort to get President Trump impeached.

McLaughlin, who was the acting director in 2004, embraced the idea of a "deep state" with the intent of ending the Trump presidency at an event on Wednesday hosted by the Hayden Center.

“There is something unique you have to agree that now the impeachment inquiry is underway, (A: That was the one that fell through remember, last year. It was November 2019 this article was put out there.) sparked by a complaint from someone within the intelligence community, it feeds the president’s concern, an often-used term about a ‘deep state’ being there to take him out,” Margaret Brennan, the moderator for the event hosted, asked McLaughlin.

“Thank God for the ‘deep state,'” he responded.

McLaughlin went on to praise the intelligence community whistleblower who came forward to file a complaint regarding Trump's July 25 phone call with Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky, which led to the impeachment proceedings.

(A: It’s so amazing too, I mean the scandal, hhhch, that’s happened with the folk in the Democratic Party who were actually involved, hhhch, in the Ukraine, isn’t it. It’s all, the scandals have been out there, you all know what I’m talking about. And they always project it on to someone else, eh? So here’s an ex-CIA, well, former CIA, he’d still be CIA, but director John McLaughlin, eh, saying that, thank God for the deep state. M-hm.)

Former National Security Council chief of staff Fred Fleitz acknowledged his work with McLaughlin and called him "a brilliant guy," but also said, "I don't think you realize how much damage you did to the [intelligence community]." (A: …by saying, thank God for the deep state.)

He added, "Your comment confirmed the fears by many Americans that the IC (A: …intelligence community.) is actively working against [President Trump]."

Which of course it was. I'm not into politics or anything, it's all stage play to me. But there's different levels of it and different layers of it, isn't there? I'm also going to put up...

Law Enforcement Facial Recognition Use Case Catalog - cdn.ymaws.com / March 2019 – pdf

(A: …for those who want to peruse it, you know.)

The IJIS Institute and the International Association of Chiefs of Police (IACP)

(A: ...under the UN, by the way, all your police chiefs across Canada and a lot in the States are members of this club basically. And they...) would like to thank the following contributors for supporting the creation of this document:

They go through it all and mention a lot of these police chiefs and where they are. And folk in the military too, colonels and so on. Yep. Quite the paramilitary organization you might say. And so they're pushing facial recognition.

I noticed that even in the Sudbury, the small Sudbury there with its smaller police force, it got a big grant there too for all its higher tech equipment to go in for the surveillance society as well. I don't know if there's anywhere at all in Canada you can go now to get any peace, you know. The way it's going down, they don't want you to, and we talked about this back in the 90s, you know, that we'd get to the stage where there would be nowhere left to go.

Then from the University of Minnesota, I think it's from Minnesota at least. Anyway it talks about a study they did on...

Study: Bacterial pneumonia was main killer in 1918 flu pandemic - cidrap.umn.edu / 22 Aug 2008

They did have antibiotics back then, remember. And after bad viral outbreaks you often get bacteria setting and after the virus, you see. Any little crack at all in the mucosal lining or and the alveolar tissue of the lungs and in it goes and you've got a bacterial infection. So that was really a terrible thing that happened in the 1918 flu pandemic. Not the virus much of itself of course. And the folk again didn't, a lot of folk were pretty malnourished back then as well by the way. And they had that world war on the go. Yep, that's how it goes, eh.

For those who don't know this...

Archbishop Vigano warns President Trump about 'Great Reset' in an Open Letter catholic.org / 31 Oct 2020

(A: Archbishop Vigano who's come out before about what's happening in the States, and he's written to President Trump and so on. But he did write another letter to Trump, and it says, about the great reset in an open letter. I'll put it up for anybody who's interested in reading it. But I like the context, the terminology.)

'This historical moment sees the forces of Evil aligned in a battle without quarter against the forces of Good.'

I can’t disagree with him there. You know? Because it's certainly, I mean, when you see them all, all, pretty well almost all governments completely on board, scared to talk to the public at all because they know they're sitting on a bogus pile of nothing. But yeah, they're all towing the line here. Well, who really is their boss, eh? Hm? Who really is their boss? I wonder?

Here is Helena Handbasket, where we’re all heading of course, from the Irish news, the Irish Sentinel.

The Collapse Isn’t Coming… It’s Already Here (A: Of course is it.)

theirishsentinel.com / Posted by Helena Handbasket / Nov 4, 2020

For those who still believe that there’s a pandemic ravaging the world, that a virus that has never been found has changed the world landscape all by itself, that a virus with a mortality rate less than an annual flu, even without a dubious vaccine, is a ‘pandemic’, that a virus that barely anyone has suffered from and that flu has virtually disappeared (A: …at the same time, right.), coincidently, for the first time in history, that politicians and media have suddenly become concerned about you and would never lie to you about such things…. (A: If you believe all of that then…) YOU ARE A FOOL!

This is nothing less than an orchestrated and long term plan to destroy the global economy, bring down so called Western civilisation to the level of barely subsistence living and to control every human on the planet in a technocratic Hell on Earth.

(A: It certainly is here, isn’t it. It goes on and on to talk about the folk who warned for years and so on what was coming…)

You were warned for decades of this coming nightmare but you chose to ignore and ridicule those who had finally accepted reality for what it was and pulled back the curtain of illusion to reveal the real horror of our created global paradigm.

If you didn’t listen then, what now?

If so, shame on you as you watch your children, grandchildren, extended family and friends sleepwalking their way into the gulag. You deserve what’s coming to you.

(A: And so on. And it is coming, isn't it. Because it is a plan. This is a real orchestrated agenda, massive agenda. It's the humanist manifesto. It's the Club of Rome. It's the whole thing tied into their one big agenda here. It also gives at the bottom of the page... He mentions too, by the way, before I get into the bottom, he mentions...)

The World Economic Forum – The Great Reset.

(A: You'll own nothing, and you will be happy. You know, that's been hinted at by Mr. Schwab.)

The Collapse is Here and Now….

1. Victoria's Secret declared bankruptcy.

(A: Of course that was really a big moneymaking front for bigger operations too, mind you. [Alan chuckles.])

2. Zara closed 1,200 stores. (A: I'm not sure what Zara is.)

3. La Chapelle withdrew 4391 stores.

4. Chanel is discontinued. (A: That stinks, eh?!)

5. Hermes is discontinued.

6. Patek Philippe (A: A watchmaker too, I think one of these hoity-toity ones.)

discontinued production. (A: I guess they'll get them made in Third World countries, that's why.)

7. Rolex discontinued production. (A: Same thing.)

8. The world's luxury industry has crumpled. (A: So all the luxury stuff.)

9. Nike has a total of $23 billion US dollars preparing for the second stage of layoffs.

10. Gold's gym filed for bankruptcy

11. The founder of AirBnb (A: Airbus?, I'm not sure what that is.) said that because of pandemic, 12 years of efforts were destroyed in 6 weeks.

(A: Well, this is the planned takedown of much of the economy, you know. This is just a sample here.)

12. Even Starbucks also announced to permanently close their 400 stores.

13. WeWork isn't in a great spot either

The list goes on & on

See the US economy landscape :

Nissan Motor Co. may close down in USA

1. Biggest Car Rental company (Hertz) filed for bankruptcy – they also own Thrifty and Dollar (A: Is that the Dollar Store, I'm not quite sure.)

2. Biggest Trucking company (Comcar) filed for bankruptcy – they have 4000 trucks

3. Oldest retail company (JC Penny) filed for bankruptcy – to be acquired by Amazon for pennies

4. Biggest investor in the world (Warren Buffet) lost $50B (A: That's probably from his back pocket.) in the last 2 months (A: And he has plenty of pockets left.)

5. Biggest investment company in the world (BlackRock) is signalling disaster in the world economy – they manage over $7 Trillion

6. Biggest mall in America (Mall of America) stopped paying mortgage payments

(A: No point in paying it if no one's coming in, and everything's shut down.)

7. Most reputable airline in the world (Emirates) laying off 30% of its employees

8. US Treasury printing trillions to try to keep the economy on life support

9. Estimated no. of retail stores closing in 2020 – 12,000 to 15,000. The following are big retailers that have announced closing:

– J. Crew

– Gap

– Victoria’s Secret

– Bath & Body Works

– Forever 21

– Sears

– Walgreens

– GameStop

– Pier 1 Imports

– Nordstrom

– Papyrus

– Chico’s

– Destination Maternity

– Modell’s

– A.C. Moore

– Macy’s

– Bose

– Art Van Furniture

– Olympia Sports

– K Mart

– Specialty Cafe & Bakery

And many, many more

Unemployment claims reached an all-time high of 38+ million – unemployment is over 25% (out of 160 million of work force, close to 40 million are jobless). With no income, consumer demand is falling drastically and the economy will go into a free fall. This is just USA…

By the way, they also go into many other companies too, at least some other companies as well. But here's the thing, this is supposed to happen this way, this is the reset where they, you go into a post consumerist society. You'll be living on bare essentials shortly. That's what they mean by austerity. This is what they plan to take the country down with, the world down with, austerity measures. Great austerity measures. Forced austerity. It's all literally here. They're getting their way.

Remember too, again, just before I go, I'll mention, send a few bucks my way @cuttingthroughthematrix.com. Remember folks, buy the books and discs or at least send cash for some donations. Hopefully I can keep all my sites going in this time of, hhhch, futile overlordship as we have these oligarchies that are warlords. They are warlords now aren't they, what you can say, think, do.

And they haven't finished, they're just starting now with their social credit system of how you have to obey, obey. Once you have the cards in place and it's totally cashless, Bertrand Russell will have his way. He said that, a credit system, in the 1940s and 50s he says, where government will dish it out to the people, a token system that will replace money. And they'll just cut you off if you're deemed, you've committed an antisocial crime. Meaning you said something, thought something, did something... And you'll suffer, you'll get on your knees and suffer until you plead forgiveness and they'll turn on the tokens again. You can't save the tokens up he said, it's interesting, if you don't use them in a month it will start at the same amount every month. For everybody. And we're going into it.

You think things are just evolving day by day? This was yeears and years ago, folks. Long time ago. [Alan chuckles.] Punishment and reward, self-censorship, self-policing, etc. etc., eh. Carrot and stick, eh? There you go.

And...

"Bipartisan" Washington Insiders Reveal Their Plan for Chaos if Trump Wins the Election

unlimitedhangout.com / 3 Sept 2020

(A: I'm sure of that too, after giving you months and months of supposed rioting and all that kind of stuff to make you think there's a big army inside ready to go to war. But they did talk about the TIP, and I mentioned before…)

the Transition Integrity Project (TIP),

(A: …where they went through the scenario, like a war scenario of what would happen if Trump won or lost the election and refused, or lost and refused to leave office. The link to the TIP here and the characters involved in the writing it up are all there too.)

…according to TIP's own documents, even their simulations involving a "clear win" for Trump in the upcoming election resulted in a constitutional crisis, as they predicted that the Biden campaign would make bold moves aimed at securing the presidency, regardless of the election result.

(A: Well, you already had Pelosi and others saying, don't ever back down no matter what the score is at the end of it all and so on.)

You see, the whole point of it is, this whole demonstration and show is to bring in a post democratic society. Are you getting the picture? And so you lose faith completely in your system of government. This was, I remember being on talk shows 20 years ago and since then too where we discussed this whole scenario, they would make you so sick of politics and sickened with what they do, with corruption and all the rest of it, that you'd almost want a new kind of system to be introduced. That's what's going to happen, you see. They're all playing their parts of course.

That's exactly what the Club of Rome, who have said in all their writings that democracy doesn't work, they can't get things done, it's too slow because of people's rights and so on. Also the World Economic Forum, they want efficiency as well, technocracy. They get things done. [Spoken with a deep voice.] We make this app, you use it or else. That's it, you know, obey. [Alan chuckles.] So I'll put these article is up for folks who care to see it.

And I'm not pleading complete, sitting in complete misery here. I'm just telling you to get, like always, you've got to start standing up for yourself and stop just obeying. Once you start obeying, you'll be walking backwards forever, for your whole life long.

I'll put up that article too and the talk by the Lord, that British Lord who literally knows his stuff. I mean he was on the high court for a long time. He says what's happening is unconstitutional in Britain, and the lockdowns using police and so on, that you cannot, that's not lawful at all by any means or stretch. The government politicians cannot simply decree of what the police start to do. You have to, you either make laws, but you can't make rules. Well, that's their new rule. You've got to make it a law or not, eh? And if you change the laws, you change the system altogether of what your government is. So he makes his case.

And I don't fall for that either. I mean, a guy at his level has to know that this whole thing is part of the World Economic Forum, the great reset and that everything, their whole future that they've planned for the world hinges on us buckling under and destroying the economy and that with Covid. Or the idea of Covid, eh. He must know that. You couldn't not know that at his level and in the milieu that he mixes in. That's the way it is.

So remember folks, bad times are coming regardless. They're not going to let up with this. Again, how much tyranny you accept is how much tyranny they're going to do to you, it depends how much tyranny you're going to accept. And they will push and push. They've got all these behavioral insights teams and nudge units and so on working to see how far to push you. They're going to ease off a little bit, and then pushed back again even more and more and more. Your tax money is funding all these psychopaths that are on board with this system.

You personally have no right apparently to decide your own future. And that's a big statement. I think you should all be rather ticked off about that. Really. I really think you should be. At least a little, eh? [Alan chuckles.] Just to put it mildly. [Alan chuckles.] You have no say in it. Just obey, it's all been decided for you by your betters, by all the specialists, these ethicist psychopaths, you know, degrees in ethics, eh? For goodness sakes. But this had to happen. It had to get to this stage anyway because it was planned a long, long time ago.

As I say, morality goes down the tube when you toss out religions, which were developed over thousands of years remember, of caring for people, rights of people, the laws of people. And people don't realize it, and they really don't, they really, really don't realize it. Because they've been trained to hate anything, the word Christianity, very clever too, they have a long, long program to make you hate and distrust and be distrustful of it.

But don't forget, that Christianity was the first religion really that came out to give you individual rights. Rights from God, not from government. And government's hated that ever since. HATED it. Because so many governments in the past have tried to get around all the different rights that religion gave you, eh. Where the people would either have something to say, well it's written right here so, and it doesn't matter what you believe, I'm telling you folks, that it's written right there, right. For generations they've put that down as what you follow, you follow the deity and not the government on certain areas.

That's been an awful bane to them all this time. They HATE it. That's why they've been shutting down all these Christian churches by the way. Literally, yeah. [Alan chuckles.] They won’t go into certain other people's holy places because they are terrified of losing their jobs, getting demoted, because you know, it's too sensitive. But yeah, the churches, the Christian churches are fine, you know.

Right now you should literally be getting rid of all your politicians and replacing them with more decent people. The same with all the police who have gone against their own population. That's a dangerous army, a paramilitary force when they do that. It's like wartime. Regardless of wartime in fact, in the military in the Geneva code and so on, but soldiers who are told to do something that they find is abhorrent, and illegal, have the right to say no without being shot against the wall. You should remember that. So do police, they have that right to say no. Well, if they don't say it, meaning they're all for it, so they are the enemy of the people. That's what it boils down to, you see. And if they're working for the people, they have to treat all the people's the same. But they don't. [Alan chuckles.] Everything's so politicized now that they daren't, daren't, daren’t. M-hm. So they pick the easy targets.

You are seeing the system take its toll, a planned toll, mind you, of taking you into a post Democratic, post productive, postindustrial, and to an extent a post-consumer society, as they bring you into the global reset poverty scenario.

Help each other out. You've got to have friends. You've got you. Don't just bottle yourself up and isolate yourself. I get emails from lots and lots and lots of people and I try to get back to so many people. But to me the real people, they are real people, you know, they're not just numbers or names. And you get little insights into folks lives and so on. And it's meaningful, very meaningful. So don't feel you're lost and forgotten by any means at all. I like to know how folk are doing. Especially across the world because it's good to see how it's happening in different countries, what's happening, and what folk personally are experiencing.

This is important information. History is being made, and your emails about that are all part of the history, you know that as well. Not the authorized version of, oh a dangerous disease slaughtering 4000 a day and in England alone and all that nonsense. Which they get all red-faced about when they're challenged with it in politics. It's just astonishing that.

So anyway as I say, don't forget, you're not alone and you can get in touch with me and so on. And even if I can't get back to you, believe you me, I've read them all. I know who is who. It's very important.

Again, send me a buck or two here @cuttingthroughthematrix.com and we'll hopefully keep going on for a bit longer, until they literally cut everything off. Because there is no redress to anything anymore when you have overlords and warlords running all media organizations, social media and everything, where there's no comeback. There's no court system here. You're going into the banana republic, eh. [Alan chuckles.] That's where we're going. And by intent, the planned post democratic society.

So for myself Alan Watt from Ontario, Canada, it's good night and may your God or your gods go with you.

Nov. 15, 2020 (#1803)

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on November 15, 2020. I hope you're all managing to hang on, with your fingernails probably, to this idea of reality. Which is rapidly losing its credibility, this reality. Because we truly are in an amazing system, a massive psychological warfare program.

Unfortunately, most of the public are unaware. They can't imagine anything being worldwide on the scale that it is, and it's almost overwhelmingly all mainstream news. It's really, well, you don't even have to look into mainstream news anymore, and it's been like that for many years mind you. You can look into one radio or television station and get exactly the same news articles, read in the same way, scripted, one to the other. They all get it from the same one or two sources. That's a lot of power when you think of maybe one or two sources, that are probably just one source really, giving all the articles out across the world for... to shape your minds. Because that's what it is, isn't it, it's news, it's just data, and it's planned data though, it's not incidental. Except for their little trivialities of local things that happen and they have no real relevance to the future.

But the big things are all planned that way. You truly are living in a psychological operation like never before. It's been on the go for a long time, especially at this level. Because it went into force before 9/11 happened in 2001, when all the countries, I've mentioned this so many times, it's so relevant because all the countries went into the same mode at the same time. Even changing the uniform of local police and national police into, they're all wearing the same black clad military outfits with the pants tucked into the boots, combat boots and so on. That was a big, big shift getting you prepared for a different kind of society, where you'll be obedient.

Black uniforms traditionally are associated with the hangman, or the axman, the state registered axman. That's what they represent, something that's done in the dark, you see, and is covered by the dark and so on. So really, it's nefarious in other words, it's ominous, and it's meant to be, it strikes fear into people. It's much easier to go up to a cop when he's got a kind of a white or light blue shirt on, you know, and he doesn't have the combat gear and etc., he looks a bit more human. And he's more approachable by the public, which they're supposed to be because they're supposed to be there to represent the public and be approachable for that reason. But you can't just walk up to someone who dresses like someone who's just going into a raid by the SAS. As I say, it puts people off from approaching them. It's not a friendly type of attitude to have and appearance to have. So it's all intentional, that's what I'm saying.

That was happening in the late 90s getting everybody prepared for the 9/11 coming along down the pike. Including Omnibus crime bills that Canada passed and other countries passed too, that literally were really arrest without trial, long-term detention, etc. Which are really antiterrorist bills. So they knew what they were going to do before 9/11 came along, as far as I'm concerned anyway.

They even put displays on in the newspapers at the time of getting you used to these new kinds of policeman. They had a few initially from the main cities in Canada where they'd show you maybe five or six, or seven, or maybe eight maximum, grinning, always grinning police, you know, almost like models – who could be actually models that they used for it – dressed in combat gear. Initially they had them dressed in army green type combat fatigues, then we said, well what's this for? Well it's for if you need them, get them into the cities, SWAT teams. Well, they already had SWAT teams and they weren't dressed for combat. And why wear green combat in the city, hm? That's not even urban combat camouflage. So they change their mind on that one. But they had these, they said, oh they were called last night and gave these photo ops, all staged photo ops. These guys really posed, you know, just like models. To get you used to it. So there's their happy guys dressed in military fatigues.

Eventually they just decided on the black outfits, you know, because they knew they were going to bring in a more authoritarian society, and that people would become the enemy obviously. That's what you get in authoritarian societies. Therefore they, they even had articles then, even in the little towns, around Ontario at least, and I saw the guys. I actually saw the guys, like four people walking up the streets, and I thought, these are like the models in the newspapers of the last few months, only they're wearing the black outfits now. But they're still smiling, you see, and look friendly and smiled at passersby. So it was a PR, and sure enough, they admitted it was a PR stunt in the local newspapers to get you used to the new fashion, you know, where grim was in as far as I'm concerned. That's how they put it out across to the people. Now, literally, it's kind of like Robocop, the movies, the way that they're dressed. The black, black, black. Why would they have their pants tucked into their boots? That's combat. That's not police. That's not peaceke… that's literally combat officers.

And we take these things for granted because you, people adapt very quickly if they're not told to worry or think about something by the big media. Brzezinski was quite right, they did all their tests way before he wrote his book in the 1970s. He said that the media will, well, the people will expect the media to do their reasoning for them. And that's exactly what happened, even when he wrote his book, before obviously it was all tested, they understood that with surveys and so on the people would not get worried about anything unless the media told them to. Now, if the media, and especially their anchor people, the newscasters that were there for years, suddenly came out and told them you should be very, very worried about, then they would be. They would be. They would be. But otherwise it wouldn't be.

That's what I noticed at the time, I thought, my goodness, it's gone this far, that people literally wait to be told when to worry. Then you've got a lot of fake things coming out too as they tested it out. Even before the Internet was widespread for the public that is, they did all these surveys and, yeah, they would put out fake things too and tell you to worry. And sure enough, you would see letters to the editors in the newspaper and so on, jumping on board with something. Oh, that's terrible what they're doing to those young girls in Nigeria and so on! A lot of the stuff actually was testing, they were testing it out on the public to see, using emotive type articles to get them on board with something and for some reason telling them you should really worry about that, you know.

So you’re constantly being experimented upon. That’s what the public unfortunately don’t know. They think that government is this fiction where you just vote somebody in and other people come in who are voted in to serve on cabinets and they just decide things as they go along all by their little selves. And nothing… nothing… It’s such a FICTION, that’s an incredible fiction because politicians literally don’t know anything about the positions they get appointed over. That’s why the civil servants are so important because they’re there for life and they have specialists in each department and know exactly what their department does. So, the politicians are supposedly appointed over them in order to be a kind of gatekeeper to the public, so they’re an intermediary between the civil service government and the public supposedly. That’s the farce of what they tell you is reality.

Nothing is further from the truth. It’s very hard to get a hold of an MP, the actual MP themselves. They’re too busy watching and receiving lobbyists, you see. So that’s, yeah, that’s a fiction in itself. But that’s what it’s supposed to be, so that civil services couldn’t do whatever they wanted to without oversight by a system over them, represented by the politician appointed to them, the Department of Health or Department of whatever. That’s long gone obviously. And in most countries, it’s probably long gone. I don’t think there’s any real Democratic countries left.

Not that you ever really achieved real democracy because along with democracy you have an open door for corruption. Because mainly psychopaths go into politics anyway. Especially today. You don’t have the states people that are there to be kind of on guard watching and so on, on behalf of the public. There really isn’t an ombudsman, as they used to call it, that was supposed to look over all these different positions that the politicians filled on behalf of the public. They would warn the public, and supposedly at least warn some of the politicians that were going too far with their departments.

So it's kind of all gone. And quite rightly so in a sense from their point of view because you're not supposed to be living in a democracy, hhhch, even the countries that pretend that they are. It's not democracy at all. It's fragmented special interest groups, you know, that's what they've created deliberately. This is the substitute for democracy for it all, you see. Therefore you can't have unification of the public on any real matter at all. That was all done deliberately, divide, divide, divide, divide, divide and conquer. Then you appointed leaders for each special interest group and, that even the followers that it supposedly represents are scratching their heads, well are they really representing us or not? Well of course they're not. You're conquered unfortunately. The experiments of democracy were short-lived anyway. They were gone long ago as far as I can really see.

I really do think that the agencies that work behind the scenes, the ones that, as an example, there are many of them, but as an example, the histories put out by Carol Quigley certainly give you a good inkling into the ambitions of the private institutions which really governed the British Empire. It wasn't just the British Empire, it was the American Empire as well. They handed the baton over to America to take over as Britain was financially exhausted with all the debt that wars incur.

Winston Churchill himself, there's a book called The Whispering Gallery, I think it was, written by high-level bureaucrats and high-level civil servants. They were very important as they say because they really keep things going. They all have their real in-depth knowledge of what their department does and how to fix things and so on. Whereas the politicians can get moved around and appointed. Britain is famous for it, it's like musical chairs, they just appointed so-and-so, and then they have a reshuffling of the cabinet, they call it, and they'll move them around. You're now in charge of the Ministry of blah blah blah, instead of the Ministry of Health or whatever it is. They keep shuffling them around.

All they do is get their reading cards basically drafted up for them for speeches by the civil servants in charge of the department that they're put over. Most of the politicians really, I really mean it, hhhch, I don’t think they care what department their put over, hhhch. I don't think they've got a real care to know even what they're supposed to be doing. Because it's all schedules. It's all written for them. It's just like public relations exercises and photo ops for politicians. When they put them in well in advance, you know, requisitions to visit this town or whatever and give a little talk or do some ceremony opening of whatever. We used to open bridges and things. We don't have that anymore because we're all going broke. But they would have these things, or even opening malls and big stores, and that's all kind of gone too. There's only a few select big stores that are allowed to operate now, in this democracy of course that we’re living in.

But, everything's written for them, as I say, even the speeches at those opening ceremonies. And they must, they're guided by a whole coterie of security experts and so on, and camera and public relations experts who travel with them. Just like the military. The military is, anything to do with big governmental institutions has its own propaganda department. Big. For themselves. I'm not talking about just for using against the public, which they certainly do. But they have, hhhch, ones for, um, all under military intelligence but really it's part of prop... PR I should say, for the public, public relations, which is just the newer term for propaganda.

They have their film teams and scriptwriters and things like that. They've had them for an awful long time. I think General MacArthur, I think, he used, he was always known for different quotes, they quote him all the time for actual return and things like that, you know, and he looks very resolute there with his pipe, and he was going to return. Apparently, they did a few takes of that, him on the landing craft coming off it, or going up, one of the two, he was either coming on it or coming off the landing craft. They brought him back in and out a few times to get the perfect shot for the statement and all that.

So everything is pretty well rigged, you know, when it comes to what's dished out to the public. And the reasons, again, are almost clandestine reasons. It's all clandestine work, isn't it? You're not supposed to really know the truth on anything. Because you might object. Just like Roger Bacon. Not Roger but Francis Bacon. Francis Bacon, but Roger's another character too, mind you. But Francis Bacon, he gave a resume, basically, to royalty. That's what was like, it's like Machiavelli. Machiavelli's book is basically a resume of how clever he was, for conning populations and lying to populations. I mean, he was a one-man band, Machiavelli. He didn't invent the techniques of deception and control and manipulation. It's an art, and obviously a very secretive art. It wasn't taught to everybody. But it was taught to courtiers and advisers to royalty across the world.

So that also tells you there's archives of the knowledge. You don't destroy knowledge works to do with power and accumulation and the wielding of power. It's never destroyed. In fact, in ancient times sometimes you'll find that countries like Rome, as I said before, would send their, the young off to be educated, just like they do today, but in countries that you would never think of had advanced universities. But they did. In those universities they found out the ways of the mind and how to control people, and how to deceive people, populations. Never telling the truth, as Francis Bacon said, they'll never understand, or if they understand they'll object. And if you want to manage folk you don't want them objecting to what you want to do with them.

It's very psychopathic in itself. But we're given a, for us, you know, the people, the general… we're all the scum and the flotsam, you see. We're not supposed to know the truth, and we're supposed to be quite content with the fairy stories of how wonderful it is. The old movies, the old black-and-white movies where they give you Lincoln, they elevate Abe Lincoln to a God in those old, old movies. I can't remember the one. They used to show all these old movies in Britain until you're, you see, from childhood, until your hair was going grey because they kept using the same old movies. Because I don't think they paid any royalties on all these old, old, old movies, in Britain, at the weekends, on the BBC, and STV. There was one main one where you see Lincoln, he's going to get back on the train for the campaign, you see. A little boy comes up to him and he says, Can anybody be president, Mr. Lincoln? And, Oh yes, my son, you know, you could be president if you wanted to be. That's the message to everybody that's got gullible stamped on their foreheads. And you're supposed to believe it, you see, that things just happen like that.

Just like you're supposed to believe everything else that you're given in reality. You're given all the output basically of the star making machinery for actors, actresses, musicians and bands, and all the fiction that goes along with the stories that are made up for them. You believe it, you know. And you're meant to believe it. And you have no reason not to believe it because you've been trained to be incredibly naïve from childhood. That's how you're run, you know, until eventually you have Madonna coming out and telling you what you should think about politics in a country, you know. She used to do other things with her hands on the stage, as opposed to, apart from just reading scripts and things to the public. But this is what they give you. And they're star making machines, that's what they are. There's nothing about their past life you can believe. It's all made up. That's standard, you know. It's show business. Show business, hm, it's a show. The public don't realize that at all.

You don't realize when you're maybe even 12 years old, hopefully, you know, you've grown up before you're 20. But a lot of folk don't. They still think right through that the groups and the bands and the singers that were put out there for them to follow were real and genuine, and really did all their own stuff, and always, and knew what they were doing. And the little bits where they would give you the group or the band, and they give you names of the guys or gals or whatever, and they’d make up histories for them, and the affairs they were having and heartbreaking all that rubbish. It's all fiction. Y'know. That's part of the... So they aren't really selling you the music. They're selling you an idea, an impression and a complete fantasy, a soap opera, that's what they sell you. They don't show you behind the scenes of the show, of this session musicians and the writers that write this stuff and do the work, you know, and arrange it all, and then put it together, and sometimes play it for them.

So that's part of the mythology too. But it's the same with everything else in your life. The star making machinery, and I've given talks on it before, some of the people that the Unabomber was going after because of, he claimed, the world that they, the guys, his targets, were bringing in was going to be hell on earth. That's what he claimed, eh. A good German documentary was put out about that in fact and exposed a lot of the reasons that he claimed he was doing what he was doing. But apart from just the outside of it, one of the guys he was after spoke on the documentary video that was done and he, his job was making the stars, making scientists into stars he said. With using all the star making machinery, and until you really believe everything this scientist says. So once he just goes off the topic of what his particular specialty is, people will still follow him. He's so bright and intelligent, so if he's telling us to vote for this or do that in our lives in society, we should do it. That's how easy it is to manipulate people.

Quite amazing, eh? It's kind of like calling people on the Ouija board or something like that, or a seance. Look at the history of the world. Look at the history of the world. And I'm not knocking that things don't happen. I do know that things do happen. What I'm saying is, how folk get entranced by memes that are put out there by, oh, Hollywood for instance in movies and all that. And folk will dive into the occult simply because they're becoming, it's made to be trendy. They don't realize they're being manipulated to go along with it and to actually follow and alter their behavior even or their thought patterns as they follow what's put out for them to follow.

Many, many years ago in Britain, and maybe the world, I don't know, there was a magazine put out. I think it was called Man, Man With Magic, I think. It was maybe a monthly issue, I'm not quite sure if it was weekly or monthly. But a lot of people, young folk, were snapping these things up. It was their little tidbits, little mousetraps they call it, that entice you in. You say, OH WOW, that wonder thing when you're young really grabs you and you want to know. And you do suspect there's something more to everything than just the dryness of politics, etc. It's a pity they drum that out of you too.

But anyway, they, Man With Magic, and I think they even sold books through it too and you can basically, they get you to get big folders and put all the magazines in until you've got a whole compendium of the volumes, as they called it. That really was a big changing point, getting ready for many years later to bring in the idea, through entertainment, of Wiccan-ism, as an example. You always get prepared before something comes out. You don't realize that, but you are. You are the generation they've picked for this, that or whatever it happens to be. And at that time, they'd already planned to sow the seeds, that people wouldn't realize the thoughts they were getting weren't really theirs. They knew how you would follow things, and it programs you. You do get programmed, you know.

Man With Magic was a big, big one for pushing it all. Then of course years later they bring out all the different things on TV for teenagers and for folk in their 20s, and maybe even 30s, on the occult, lots of programs on it. And they just dive right in. They're being programed in advance, you see. You don't know that, but that's how it's done.

Big committees in countries, I've seen some committees in Britain, I've seen the ones used to decide for the BBC, many, many, many years ago, really who the hits were going to be in music. It's nothing that you could imagine, you couldn't imagine it, the kind of panel you would see. It wasn't the disc jockeys that you would see, because they're all paid well for pushing whatever, and they know how to, they smell the wind of what's to get pushed, they're given little notes on who's to get pushed, and they're rewarded well for doing it. Because this is entertainment, right, you're thinking it's just entertainment.

You look into the panels that chose them, and these folk came in and they were, oh, maybe, maybe about 25 of them, and the big table and the whole thing. You wouldn't recognize pretty well any of them. They had the wealthy gear on, the clothing, you know, tweed suits, men and women. And wealthy. And old. That was the thing too, older, you know, much older than the teenagers that were going to buy all the stuff that they were going to promote. They would sit there and decide with nods and winks and little guffaws as they say, you don't just laugh, you have a kind of a bit of a guffaw occasionally when they're pushing something a bit silly. They would decide who would be top of this and that and the other, you know.

Even when that was exposed eventually, they kind of clammed up and tried to hide it even better. Because they don't like the public getting a peek behind the curtain or under the cover of the -tain, you know the -tainment. Even the word itself is interesting. You enter, you know, behind the cur-tain in a sense, almost like a tent type thing, a -tain. They don't want you… They want you in and to be mystified but never to figure out what's going on.

Because it affects your lives. So much of your behavior is predictive programming. That's what it is. You watch it, enact it, whatever it happens to be, on a social level, through dramas especially. They said, I remember many years ago that the Bernays types, these big associations of marketers and public relations outfits, and don't forget in Bernays time he called it propaganda, he had no problem calling it propaganda. Eventually they changed it to public relations when propaganda put, got a bad name for being bad, you know. Now it's a good name for being bad. Or, a bad name for being good. I don't know which is which. But anyway, it's quite fascinating to see how it all works together, programming you for all the different phases in your life. You don't know that do you? You really don't know how much programming you've had. Through fiction. Especially when you enjoy the fiction.

Especially if it's a series type thing, they like the series for television when you've got more time to get to know the characters as they develop the characters. They have departments within the writers that are doing it, different scriptwriters, but they also do character development as time goes on. They find out, again, in this day and age, through the Internet and likes and dislikes and all the rest of it and suggestions, they get an idea of what's working and what isn't. Very quickly they can add to the character, until you start to like the character, for whatever was lacking is now gone and they're a fulfilled character and you'll identify with them.

Such a character, then they can start writing where the script is to go off from a basic futuristic sci-fi, until now, the one that you like, is going to take the side of whatever oppressed group, or whatever it is that they're pushing in the political correctness at the time. That's how you get your mind changed. Because you like the characters. You identify with them. That's what you're meant to do, you're meant to identify with the characters. And as they change the strata of society, because there's different levels of society, and all age groups too, there's different levels of being, as they keep altering what were called all kinds of norms. So they start changing that too in the series, and you'll follow along with it too. If your main character, be it a male or female, you'll start to identify with the changes and, oh yeah, yeah, and they say, you'll start even parroting little terms that come from the shows. You know?

This is not just a happenstance occasional thing. This is almost through everything now. You have no idea how much of your tax money goes into entertaining you so that you get programed. You have no idea at all. Especially through TV series. But also, it's your big movies too. Why do you think every country has a Department of Culture? If you are the culture, why do you think you have a Department of Culture? And they all sprang up really around, during World War II, and then after it, the big, big handouts by the Department of Culture to all the, to novelists, to children's book writers, to screenwriters and so on. You get programed. There's big money because it's, there's an agenda. You not living… your life is already decided how it's going to be, you know, when you're born. You don't know that.

I used to at one time, not for long, but I used to wonder what Stalin was on about and so on in his writings, and also the people behind Stalin, the mass psychopaths. They are psychopaths, these characters, you know. You had Beria who was in charge at one time of the NKVD. A ruthless murderer, you know. They all were. But Beria used to host the meetings of the Comintern, the international Communist Parties that would send their delegates, delegations for, they had different youth brigades and that, that would get sent off for training in Moscow from all the countries. Canada was rather famous for sending off rather famous people [Alan chuckles.] to that.

But Beria long ago, back in I think the 1930s, gave that famous talk which stuck in my head when I read it. He talked about how it used to take a generation, now, he meant a real generation, like 70 years perhaps, threescore years and 10, to program changes in that would affect society, the culture in society and have people adapt and adopt to the changes, adopt the changes and adapt to them. And he said with techniques now, this is before you heard the term toolkits for teachers and all this kind of stuff. He said with techniques we have now we can change and program, basically programming changes in people, the youth, youngsters, from a very early age for major things that would happen in their lives. He didn't specify, hhhch, exactly what those changes would be. But if they wanted changes to be in their lives, they could say in 15 years time they could get a new intake of students at the age of five and then programs them so when that event happened 15 years down the road, they'd accept it quite naturally without thinking much about it. That's what he said, he says, we can literally alter the changes every 3 to 5 years, I think it was, or 4 to 5 years, and a whole string of changes that that person was going to experience in their life right through to the age of 50, 60, and it would keep, and they would never fight back to it because they would think it was quite natural, it was already programmed into them.

They were BIG in psychology, you know, the Communists. And behaviorism. M-hm. And so many of the things that were learned from the communist days were brought back by people who visited the Soviet bloc countries. You had your great admirers of the Soviet system, which puts paid to the nonsense that it was all straight-lined, them against us. Because why would you put all your scientists over there, and your top scientists over to meet their counterparts every year, maybe once or twice a year, for big meetings so that they could exchange and get to know each other and so on, and exchange views and knowledge? When ANY intelligent book would tell you, that the Cold War would be won through, by the nation that had the advanced scientific secrecy and so on and the secrets. Why would they? The last people you'd want to share with is your, hhhch, supposed enemy, and let them get access to friendly acquaintances with their counterparts in Soviet bloc countries.

So anyway, you really are living through a bit of a farce. And you always were living through bit of a farce. And you still are. It's even worse today than it was then with what you're told is truth and not truth, and untruth as the other side likes to call it. So you’re living through a script. Again, I go back, just before I get off this part, getting back to the idea of propaganda. That great series, a great long-running series, I call it great because I hated it. It was called Coronation Street. I don't know if it's still going or not. But generations I think grew up with that Coronation Street. Every possible thing that was going to hit Britain, from unemployment, austerity, hhh, all the social changes of divorces before divorces became normal, normalized, hhmph, and mass migration of all kinds, the reaction to mass migration, all the ways you’re supposed to behave and react to it were shown to you through drama scenes within the context with the characters in Coronation Street. So much so you were told how to react to different types of migrants coming in, different categories of them, and belief systems and so on, and how the youth would mix with your family, all that kind of stuff. All portrayed out in advance, you see. Quite amazing. And great detail too.

Eventually they admitted that Coronation Street was so heavily financed by the government and different agencies, and they also had, they had full-time psychologists working with them and behaviorists. They brought in social work departments, professionals, and counselors for divorce. All these things to make sure it was, to get the right context for the dramas that they would show on, in their fiction supposedly, that was going to happen. Before these even, the mass migrations happens they were showing you how to react, before things happen.

So, that was amazing predictive programming, you know. And sure enough, they know that, they even know if it's easier for men or women to be manipulated. That's always been the way too, because even Bernays talked about it that, and after Bernays too, about up into the 1970s and 80s, when magazines, there were hundreds and hundreds of magazines and most of them are aimed at women. Because they said that women were easier to change. And women too through psychological evaluations, they're more easy to program, in a sense, to try something different. Men are way more conservative in a social setting, by nature, they don't like change much. But women will try the change that's promoted. Oh, this is, this is going to be fun, this is good for you. And they will try it. So they have a great field day testing all these things out with women they say. And this is from the public relations books too, they still teach this yet, all the facts and the statistics, etc. of how things work.

It's astonishing. That's why the United Nations, by the way, has all these programs about, aimed at women across other countries. You know, how to start their businesses for women, how to give them funding for women. And the guys really don't exist as far as the UN is concerned. Very important because the UN is a front too for the big global organization that runs the world. One, the same organization that the WEF is on board with. They're all on board with the same direction of course, on every particular topic actually. Quite fascinating to see.

So you've got to realize the world that you live in is a fiction. No one's left behind, you know, because if you're alive you've been programed. [Alan chuckles.] You've all had your, and you're still getting programmed too. They used to have, I mentioned it before too, a bishop, I don't know if it was a bishop or an Archbishop in England in the 1940s. I remember just leafing through a book that he put out there. He was called The Red Bishop because he was communistic, hm. He talked about this term of, that shortly people would have lifelong training, and he called it, lifelong education. And if you, everything's written in doublespeak in a sense, or different levels of meaning, that's how things are generally put out by people who are in-the-know talking to their own group, you see, or their own level or class if you like. He said that you would literally have lifelong learning, and of course, that you would just pick this up and read it all, I guess he was talking about… why would you do lifelong education, like he's talking?

No, he's talking about literally programming the people. And that's what's been advocated with the United Nations since its inception, this technique of lifelong training, constantly training the people to, for each phase of change. So they'd make you feel guilty or whatever if you don't jump into the next phase. Oh, you're a bad person because of this, that or the other, or you've got biases or whatever it happens to be. Then once you adapt into it, you see, that might only last five years or maybe 10 at the most and now you must retrain you to the next phase of your, the world that you're going to live in, you know. And it's lifelong training, step-by-step, 5-year plans, 10-year plans, 15-year plans, 20-year plans, which the communists used, and the United Nations still uses. So that's how incredibly precise things are.

Yet we go through our lives, eh – and up until we're all locked down with this phase of it, which was planned years ago too – and we used to just, people would come home from work and flop out in front of the TV, and they might get a beer or something, a lot of folk did that and they zonked out, because the stress of jobs, and boring jobs too mainly, you know, has its wear and tear on you. It zonks you out. You didn't probably want anything to really be interested in, you know, if you're tired, and so you want something to be lighthearted and realistic. And even that they knew about you.

So everything was catered to, different groups of people and segments of groups. That's why there's so many TV stations that came out, and sure enough, you'll find your niche, you know, according to your personality type and so on. They'll flood your mind with what appears to be meaningless trivia and lighthearted stuff, or even silly stuff or very amateurish stuff, it didn't matter. Because in amongst it, just for you and your type, you see, they've got the programming in there for you as well. And that's how it is.

There's nothing you'll see in a set on TV with the scene, you know, the set, even in a room, that doesn't have a panel of people discussing it. That little flower on the table over there, you know, and what color should it be? What type of holder should be for that flower and what? That's all discussed. M-hm. The visual understanding of things is a science. Because the visual is like hearing, is a language. And you don't realize that if you look at a particular scene in a set, you'll be directing them, as you're listening to the characters maybe talking, you know, maybe two people talking in a room, as an example, or outside the house or whatever it happens to be. You're seeing it. You don't realize as it zooms in to the two characters before they start, your eye's already seeing certain things placed there to cue you into that, and then something will move over to the right or the left, and your eyes will wander to that, as they're talking. You don't realize there's different languages getting put across there at the same time, and your subconscious picks it up. And it will influence you. You won't even know it's happening. Now with the Internet, or put it this way, the artificial intelligence being in the visualizations on television in the scenes in the movies, it's, boomph, it's a field day for programming people.

I've mentioned before that for every penny you make there's thousands of companies out there competing to get it off you. That's the system. That's what advertising is for. But it's the same thing with reality. When you try to find what your own mind happens to be, you know, and you want to think for yourself and get an original thought for yourself that's not an opinion from someone else, then there's like a million companies out there, and agencies, and government agencies, and they're farmed out, there's more farmed-out agencies than ever before so that they're not technically responsible to the people or to politics, you know. But yeah, there's a million companies out there trying to get that thought from you, to bend it again and so you'll take theirs, and reject it so they can put their thoughts back into you. That's how it's done. It's so important, isn't it, eh?

And folk never, it's almost inconceivable, again, this can't happen. Without, again, some big declaration from the voice out there, listen to what's going on here. You can't imagine it, it's such a massive scale. Everything is clandestine. Everything is covert. You're not supposed to know what's going on. Why do you think they have whole departments and levels of departments that classify, reclassify secret documents for governments, and all the different agencies, and all of the agencies that they farm out their responsibilities to? It's not for public consumption. You pay for it all. It's all about you, hhhch, and how to use you and manipulate you, and what they want the public to believe. But you can't see it. And you think you're free! And folks will argue with you that they're free! It's astonishing really isn't it, eh. Truly astonishing.

The right to think for yourself is so important. But most folk can't. Especially today. Because truly with the weaponization of mass media, and entertainment, and the Internet, you don't have much of a chance if you're going to use all these different tools that are put out there, that you're supposed to use, that enslave you and open you up to complete surveillance, hm. They dissect every thought that you have. They don't have to have 100 folk working on you. The algorithms do it all and they put you into pigeonholes. I gave these talk in the late 90s, they try to pigeonhole you. But they hate you if you don't fit into a pigeonhole, you know. What's your slot, you know? I don't know. Yep. It's quite something. That's what you’re living in.

But as I say, history is like that too. All through history you get bits and pieces of different realities all the time. Again, going back to Machiavelli, The Prince, and the writings of Bacon as well to do with his, you know, to royalty telling them how clever he was basically at deceiving people on behalf of royalty, hhhch. It's something you've got to take into account. What he did and what they did was done right up until the so-called advent of parliamentary systems where you pretend to elect someone that's going to pretend to represent you and he goes after parliament. Yeah, it's quite fantastic to understand that kind of thing.

Even going back, I did, I was going to mention earlier too, that's what I was thinking about and I had that little slip with Roger Bacon. Well, Roger Bacon was way before Francis Bacon, remember. It was about the 11th or 12th century, Franciscan monk, you know, who had his own laboratory. And you say, what on earth is, is it a sort of Cadfael [?] thing, Cadfael [?], remember, did that series, is that what it is? He's making potions to help the sick or...? No, he was working with gunpowder, you know, to create this thing called the canon. [Alan laughing.] So I mean, and no one's ever explained how he got permission to do that kind of thing, you know. But yeah, if you can stuff it in this tube here and, he had all his diagrams and testing. And he got funding, you know, to make the kind of canon, to do some experimentation. That changed history again. Hhhhh, so yeah, I don't know if he's in the same family lineage, but these characters were quite some characters indeed.

Remember too, cuttingthroughthematrix.com website. List my sites in case any of them go down. Because I mentioned it before, I mentioned it way back too in February and March, this agenda is written in stone, nothing is going to change it. It was obvious from the beginning. It's a big agenda for the WEF and the great reset, which is a complete sustainability program, Agenda 21. That's what it is, you see. I won't even argue that it's just so obvious, there's just too much there from the horse’s mouth themselves.

But in the different so-called lockdown phases, it really is to implement all the different parts that the SAGE group in Britain and other groups and the Event 201 talked about too, where they would also go after people who would speak out against it. It was to bring down social media, big time, and complete censorship of the Internet. Except for pornography, you could probably watch lots of pornography and that kind of stuff. But anything that would challenge any official statement out there, especially when the statement sounds so insincere or bogus, there's always a lot of retaliation by the public about it. Because we’re not completely morons yet, you know. Most of us anyway.

So they're going after people using the old-fashioned techniques of terrorizing people. And they said with the lockdowns, there's different stages, they would eventually start arresting people. That's what they do in a wartime scenario, as I say. This is a wartime scenario. This is what they came up with, a wartime scenario, to give themselves the pre-existing powers for total lockdown, of all kinds, and simply arresting folk, even though that you don't have a country opposing at the moment, you are the enemy. You see, the war now is you. You are the enemy. When they turn loose propaganda units from the military, and all countries are doing it now openly by the way, on their own people, you are then the enemy. You are the designated enemy, not some people over in Afghanistan, that have to have their minds altered and be persuaded into something. It's YOU now. In their own writings by the way. It's YOU.

Now, we're going into the psychological, we are in the psychological phase, we have been from the beginning of this whole thing. First you get coercion and persuasion, and the next time, then you get hammered, you know. There's people being hammered with disinformation to try to, if they fall for it, they can get banned too, you see. It's all prearranged. Including the dark web as they call it, that had lots of billboards put out there for them to fall into. Do you really think they just sit back and allow you to have a secret way of communication? [Alan laughing.] When you've got the makers basically, the whole Silicon Valley on board with this whole agenda?

Because everything in your world, all the media is on board with this. All media is completely saturated with CIA and other agencies, all, this umbrella group, all, they're all connected. You know. This worldwide group, MI6, GCHQ, MI5, the Mossad, you know, and many other organizations across the world... are all one, you know. And with of course with the Five Eyes, as they call it, it's actually six. They always share the same information. They have done since even before 9/11 happened. So you're living in a completely fiction already if you think you're still free and everything's on the up and up, etc. Nothing's further from the truth.

An agenda HAD to be fulfilled. The elite who are the globalists, the same elite that wrote about bringing a world, a European Union in, back in the early 1900s… the same group that talked about eventually a unified America's… and a far Eastern bloc that would be unified too… and who set up the organizations to bring it into force... the same organizations that publish books about it, hhhch... do you think they're going to sit back and watch the supposed populism as they call the term now, eh, I love how they, the terms just come out of, you know, nowhere to the public, eh, and populism supposedly now is like nationalism, you see.

When I was young you really just had, inside a national nation, [Alan chuckles.] you had political parties, you had left-wing and right-wing, in-the-middle and all that. But it was still for the nation, as far as you would think it would be. But then as time went on you started to notice they talked about the left, and they talked about the radical right. You never got a right-wing anymore, it was always radical right. And then you realize they changed it again, the meaning, the definition, that if you still wanted a nation, and then you are right wing extremists. That's what is still is today, eh? It's got nothing to do with the Labor Party and the left, or anything like that anymore.

But when they saw the populism going for Europe too, and countries getting so fed up with that monolithic communistic or bloc of the EU parliament and so on, then they wanted out. Never mind the squandering of billions of pounds of money to the darn thing every year and getting nothing back. It's totally corrupt, of course. But they weren't going to let it happen. This is a dream they've had for so long.

By the way, getting back to cuttingthroughthematrix.com, take a list of the sites. Send a few bucks my way. PayPal is fine. Cash is fine by the way. The mail still works awfully well. Don't register anything. If you send anything by mail, ordinary mail is the best and it gets through faster. It does get through faster. If you start paying extra for this, everything gets checked in and then that's when stuff might go missing. But if you send things through ordinary mail, never a problem. That's how it works. So you can send cash, or you can send checks. Money Gram too I think still works. Or you can get something from the bank itself, they can write a check for you if you want or whatever to help me tick along here.

Because our days are becoming numbered. I know that. I knew this, aohhhh, a long time ago this would happen. Before I even came out to start talking about it, I knew pretty well accurately to the lifespan we'd have of communication via the Internet. In fact, the first few years I gave talks on radio shows I didn't even have a computer, I didn't want one. Because it certainly was not personal. I knew what its real purpose was. It was to collect all the data on you.

But send me a few bucks. You can buy the books and discs if you want to, or just straight donations are really welcome. Because we are going through the dark, dark times now. It's a new dark age in a sense. In fact, it's more appropriate to call it a dark age I think really because all reality is being closed off, shut out, and you're given this dark fake reality to stumble around in.

And you have no idea of the powers behind it all. None at all. How big it is. This didn't just happen overnight or within the last year. This has been being prepared for many, many years. So the same group as I say that wanted globalization, the same group that could give the speeches at the World Economic Forum about it all the time, again, the World Economic Forum is something you don't vote for. It just created itself. And yet it has all this power? An oligarchical tyranny is what it is. With the richest folk on the planet in it. Who have decided long ago that this was theirs, you know, all this is theirs, and you have become a nuisance.

I'm not kidding you. They've got about 100 different ways of convincing you you're bad and you shouldn't even be alive, you know. You're taking up the resources of their planet. They've been talking this way since the 1700s. I hope you understand that, that select groups have been prattling on about this. Even in the days of Malthus, he, who came as a front man, an economist, eh, who became an early economist for the big Bank of England group in the City of London, eh. And one day, you know, one day all these peasants will be breeding and there'll be too many of them, and we need them for wars and for the creation of a British Empire at the moment, but one day there'll be a problem, there'll be too many folk, and we don't need them. M-hm, there ya go. That's my summary of it.

It's all coming out now, you see. You've had years of indoctrination that you are to blame. Because you had to be the target. Always. If you want to have, if you want someone to be suicidal you just gaslight them for a long time. Until their mind is, you’re showing, you give them little glimpses into pathways they should follow, and they will, they'll follow these, but the ides [?] of logic, but you've really set it up, it’s all fake. You’ve set them up to fall. So it's a dead-end, every little corridor they go down. Then so eventually they say, yeah, oh I guess that, ahhhhhhh, I'm no use, you know, I can't do anything, I'm useless, I'm hopeless. So you just, when they say, well there's always euthanasia, it's legal now, euthanasia, you know, in some countries like Canada, you know, you could take a pill and get rid of that depression, like they do in Holland now, eh. And bingo, there you go.

Do you think I'm kidding about this?! The first… psychological warfare is to defeat an enemy, YOU’re the only enemy, before anything else happens. Persuasion. Look at the logos of the psyops units when they do this... They had really blatant ones before they changed it a couple of years ago in the States, on how to persuade and alter, basically behavior modification, eh. But they used to do influence and all the rest of it. To bring you to the proper conclusions on whatever they wanted you to come to, WITHOUT YOU BEING AWARE OF IT. A whole science in itself. Again, paid by your tax money. [Alan chuckles.] And you are the target. Isn't that amazing, eh, that most folk don't know that?

I can remember on a talk show back in the late 90s and a woman called in. She says, I'm free, what are you talking about we're not free? She says, I'm free, I can go shopping anywhere I want and buy whatever I want, she says. That was her idea of freedom. It isn't until you get that kind of comment made by someone, that you don't think was kidding, right, that you really do see how people have different ideas about what freedom even is. M-hm.

It really is, isn't it, what is freedom? You used to say, well, I've got the right to say and do what I want. Not anymore, you don't. Hhhch. Have you noticed? [Alan laughing.] And it's getting stepped up too with a whole bunch of... This isn't just about Covid. It's about everything, eh. It's the whole reset. It's all the whole sustainability agenda into a new post-democratic system. That's what it's for.

And you don't know that, do you? You can still put on the television and zonk out on silly dramas, movies or what they pretend are comedies. You can look at the speeches made by George Soros from his own website, The Open Society. He gave a talk at DAVOS in Switzerland, and other talks and other places too, the same kind of talks really, which are exactly the same as you would hear from anybody else at the United Nations, as an example, or the World Economic Forum. It's astonishing how they're all on board with exactly every facet of the same agenda. No difference at all actually. Which tells you there's a big organization that preexisted Soros's involvement 40 years ago. That's when he claims he set up his philanthropic organization.

In that speech he made about... the problem with populism basically, was a result of people voting to pull out of the EU, for Britain, you know, getting out of it, and dashing the dream that he had of a unified Europe. Now, remember too, you've got this strange thing with the European Parliament and things like that. They have that unfinished tower of Babel, eh, [Alan laughing.] quite amazing, which they had constructed there to look like the famous painting. That's no coincidence. That is no coincidence at all. It really is, as they would pooh-pooh any people with their ideas of conspiracy theory and so on, they give you all the symbols, and right in your face. Right down to very impractical buildings really that are meant to be highly symbolic of something, something that they're going to do, which is to rebuild the idea of a unified world, and become Gods in a sense.

That was the whole idea, the biblical idea of Babel, or Ba-bell [?], you know, where they would reach up into the heavens with the height of the tower and look down on God. That's pretty well how they kind of phrased it at the time in some of their writings. Of course the idea again was that God would send his sons out, the bene-Elohim as well, and down to destroy the tower and scatter the unified nations. And because they were all talking the same language, it isn't just the physical language, it's the ideas that conveys that too, you know, and scatter them, and confuse them, confound them, so that they would go back to talking their own languages and couldn't communicate, etc. etc.

Because unification would be bad, interesting concept really, it would be bad for the world and for everybody else in it. Because after all you see, if you want to become God, then you have to behave like a God, right. Most Gods in ancient times were pretty tyrannical. It wasn't until later they gave you Gods with complaints departments. Before that there was no complaints departments. The old idea of the Grecian God, it's really interesting, I like the Greek ones too, we all like the mythologies. They did put out good movies, a long time ago based on some of the mythologies, really well, really entertaining stories. It also gives you a glimpse into how... They didn't really see, I'm sure a lot of the Greeks didn't believe in it at all, you know, they kind of, it was a very lighthearted take on what God's were. They're more symbols of human, parts of human nature in a sense, you know. That's how it really was amongst the intellectual groups in Greece. As opposed to true belief in particular gods. Some people would, but most I think, I really think most folk didn't believe in them.

But yeah, the gods would play with humans, because they were bored, you see. They would set up humans like with little tests, little psychological tests that we would have now with psy ops done on us, you know. How would you react in this situation, you're going along in the country and a monster suddenly appears, and what are you going to do now? And that's how the Greeks, they enjoyed that kind of thing. The children I'm sure would love the stories too. Of course you had a God that had to have a wife, you see. She was also a Goddess, and then she had powers. Then she would have little skirmishes with her hubby, so he would pick someone to pick on, a human to pick on, she would go and help the human, that kind of stuff. It was really, really good, it was a human type idea of gods had human aspects to their natures.

So if you take the Babel, eh, or the tower of Babel, Ba-bell [?], and you look at what they constructed for the EU, eh. Right out of the famous painting, and the drawing. Highly symbolic of what they wanted to accomplish. And that's so interesting. You could probably write stacks of books on that alone in fact, you could, there's so much knowledge out there on all that.

Here's a guy like Soros talking about the same thing that they all talk about, as I say, exactly the same, too many folk, sustainability is the answer, climate change was the excuse to bring austerity in for sustainability for reprogramming the way that we live, climate change to save the planet, we're all going to die, terror, terror, fear. It was getting ignored. He pretty well mentions that too, with populism, as he says it, and he also refers to Trump not conceding to the European climate change group that met every year and put more restrictions on the populace, he calls that populism as well.

So you look at, I mean, who elected George Soros? Or any of these characters? You don't get to elect them, but they have such wealth and power they, they, this is the first time in history people with that kind of wealth can influence every single nation in the world, even one person like that can do it. And they do it with fingers in every pie. But they belong to a much higher organization obviously. There's no intelligence agency in the world that would let someone interfere with their fingers in different countries agendas. An upstart comes in and starts altering, without permission, no, they, your intelligence would deal with it. Which tells you it's part of an intelligence organization. The big one, you know. And the rest of them are too, obviously. Because they never disagree with each other. On anything. It's such a well laid out agenda, it has been for a long time, of how they're going to deal with the Third World countries. And how they introduce abortion rates across the world, to bring down the population. That's a priority with them all. And how to bring in a post-consumer society into an austere society where you'll have the bare minimum to live on. That's the agenda folks.

You've got to read George Soro's speeches. Don't talk about them or, you know, you'll be hammered for just talking about them. But his speeches are, I mean, it's his words [Alan chuckles.] at the big meetings, the WEF meetings and so on. You can read them for yourselves. He's quite open about the agenda, that he sees as the way we're all supposed to live and what we're supposed to do, and he speaks on behalf of the WEF and the United Nations.

It's interesting too, he called Donald Trump a con man, and he goes into, he was a narcissist and he wanted power and all that. Well, what do you think these folk are that want to bypass democracy and rule us as a technocratic society? Well, what's the difference? Come on here, you know. You know something, psychopaths have no insight into what they do themselves. [Alan chuckles.] They know how to manipulate others, but they really don't have much of an insight into their own motivations. That's why they're such hypocrites, they don't really see in themselves that they're accusing others of doing. So yeah, read the speeches by the people themselves. That's so important. And they publish the speeches, you know.

I get fed up with, for your whole life, it's like political talks on television. You always get some boring, used to get, and when I lived in Britain, and I think Canada too, they would give each candidate sometime on the air, generally late at night when you're ready to go to bed. Years ago that's how it was. But they're all given the same amount of time, I don't know how much time they gave each candidate but it's, you know, little slots to talk in. But when they came to the big elections, or the higher elections for presidents and prime ministers, and Britain was famous for it too, but they'd say it the same kind of way, portrayal. They would have the president or prime minister come out giving a speech, or the candidate, you know, and the different candidates. Then you'd have maybe 2 to 4 people in a panel that are experts on interpreting what these future leaders were saying. And yet you say, wait a minute, we heard what he said, eh? But they would tell you the most weird things, and they would go around in circles until it would be the opposite of what you thought that they meant at the time.

Eh, why would you need people, in a democracy, to explain what the candidates mean? I mean, isn't it supposedly plain enough talking to the public that the public can figure out what they mean? There's nothing straightforward in the society that's reality. Nothing at all. But what they do know, you see, is that different people like different interpreters, or specialists as they say, and they relate to them more and so their opinion is more important than the words you just heard from the candidate themselves. That's how it works. It's all psychology.

Everyone is playing with your head pretty well all the time. More so perhaps than ever before. It truly is a complete war on the people. It has been openly, I would say, more openly since 9/11 under the guise of antiterrorism. They actually had an article, I remember joking at the time years ago saying, you know, I says, you know, here you go with antiterrorism and how they had to have no privacy for the people, because you know, you had to check for terrorists. Of course they had again all the tax money that flowed into this new business, the big business of IT and all the different apps and technologies and algorithms and all the rest of it, to monitor the people, to make sure that your thoughts didn't stray into the realms of what might be considered terrorism, eh?

Unless you joke about that and say, so you get strip-searched at airports and everything now. They even had vans in New York, I remember reading the articles at the time on the radio, where they found vans, these white vans with the gadgets on top. They were actually x-raying people, the same kind of technologies they were using initially at the airports. And again, the lobbyists that got the contracts, oh, same old characters and so on, that obviously were, some of them came in at the head of Homeland Security and they would pass and push for, on behalf of lobbyists, to get these different screening technologies in the airports and places. But they also put them in these vans that were going just along the street and x-raying people. That's really safe, isn't it, eh?! [Alan laughing.] And then one of the top guys at Homeland Security left it and then joined the company that he lobbied for to get the listing. It's so corrupt, you know. It's so corrupt.

That's how the system really works, in this amazingly corrupt system. It's not corrupt from their point of view. They’re on board. They are a separate species, like Bertrand Russell said, you know. That's what he said, that the real elites who would breed properly, they would select their mates very carefully, along the lines that the Rockefellers and their Better Family type organizations would dictate that it should be. But he said eventually, and because they would raise their children with a different reality of how they ran the world, as opposed to the fiction they were teaching the people down below them to believe, then they would be technically almost like a separate species. That's what he said. And that's how it is.

So from their point of view, if they make you a star to be in front of the people, a Bill Gates type, you see, or a Zuckerberg, or any of these guys, hm, then they'll make sure you've got this big money backing you. Oh, no doubt about that. Epstein had a lot of money backing him. Didn't he? He didn't seem to be producing any, he just seemed to have it.

The stars are made in this world that you live in. The important folk that give you what are to be your opinions, or how you're supposed to live from now on according to what they've dictated, they're all made stars by a big organization, the big, big club, you know, up there. The so-called guardians of everything, the guardians of the universe. Hhhch, the guardians, the Prince Charles Olympians, the ones that decided, you know, public-private partnerships are the way to go where the public pay for everything and they run, the only corporations that you give it all to, you know. They know better how the world should be. And you should just mind your place. And pay up. And shut your mouth. And allow them to get on with it, you know. That's the new democracy, the new reality. The new governance, eh. Obey. Obedience is awfully handy to have if you're ruling people, without being elected, you know. And even if you've been elected, if you're really serving someone else, you want obedience amongst the people, over the people.

Because this is a clumsy thing, like the Club of Rome said, this clumsy thing, democracy, it's clumsy and you got, leaders have to cater to the rights of, it's such a nuisance, that, rights of the people. It slows things down, these big projects, you know. You've got to understand, you know. And the folk coming into the Club of Rome are ambitious young folk, you know, ambitious and they can't be bothered with these rights and stuff like that, for goodness’ sake, eh. They know what's to be done. I-yi-yi.

Unfortunately with the psy ops that are going on too, they're training the people that they're right... Well, you can't have all these rights during emergencies. So, efficiency has to take precedence, to save us all. So therefore, you do what you're told, or else. That's your new freedom. I used to, again, I gave the talks on it years ago, and Bush talking about the new freedom. I said, what does he mean, the new freedom? Well, it's nothing to do like the old freedom [Alan chuckles.] where you had the rights to say, think or even question things. Now it's a different kind of definition of the rights of freedom, until you don't have the rights that you used to have, obviously. For the good of all, eh. And for the safety of everybody. And the survivability of everybody. That's how it's phrased today. N-n, I'm telling ya. That's how it's done.

It's total war on the public, and it truly is total war. You're going to see it very quickly now as they go into the next phase of the lockdowns. That's the excuse to roll out the whole sustainability agenda, you know. But so many of the tests that are going on all the time, the public are generally unaware of any of them. The general public, again, they look to the mainstream and their daily newscaster on television to give them their reality. It doesn't dawn on them that these are all private institutions, affiliated with the big groups like the CIA. The CIA, it was exposed years ago, even in the 60s and 70s when they had to admit there's hundreds and hundreds, maybe even in the thousands now, of operatives IN ALL MEDIA, especially television and radio. That's how you control and manage and guide all public opinion obviously. They didn't give up back then, they got more embedded. Hhhch. They actually admit to it in some of the psy ops manuals and so on. Not just the CIA. They're all one group now as far as I can see.

I was thinking too about the predictive programming that we all live through. You get prepared, as I say, prepared for what's to come, step-by-step, different levels of true preparedness. They prepare you for changes you're going to experience. They get you almost ready beforehand to just accept it, without you knowing you've been programmed for it. Stacks of nature shows on television, they know, look at these poor animals and look dut-dut-dut and dut. And here's human encroachment, and you take their word for it. And you're already feeling guilty about it, even though you have nowhere near the animals you're encroaching. Of course, there's a whole different agenda on the go.

They're getting you ready for human corridors alongside the major highways. And not outside, no houses to be allowed outside. Eventually with the agenda for the 21st century, the whole century remember is for the century of change. So many parts of Agenda 21 have to be implemented every 15 years, accomplished. You'll be eventually crowded back into the cities. Then you die off in austerity. It's not to be… You're over. Hhhch, the old way of buying whatever you wanted is to get phased out, of commerce and so on. Yeah, this is what they're using all this for, this Covid idea.

I gave these talks years and years and years ago about it all and here you are watching it all come to fruition. Even the characters at the top admitting, hhhch, that this is a great opportunity to implement all the things to do with sustainability. Because the climate change had been installed, the agreements, right. But now that Biden supposedly is getting back in, he's already agreed to, naturally, his backers, to get back into the climate change agenda, sustainability, all the other parts of the agenda that had been put on hold during Trump's term.

So the global leaders are quite happy to... And even with Biden, I mean, come on. Do you really think all elections are real?! There's nothing more fake than elections these days. You've been hammered with Covid since, you know, February or so. Total lockdowns, like a wartime scenario, even beyond, way beyond warfare scenarios where everything closes down including all industry, all work, everything, pretty well everything, you know. And now it's just the training part for what's to come this winter. Which is to be 2 to 3 times more severe in lockdowns and laws and rules and so on.

So you get the Covid coming along. Then you get BLM. Then you get all the riots in the streets and burnings and Antifa. I don't know if they even stopped in Portland yet, I don't know. They're well organized, bussed around and the whole thing. All funded. Big money. So you've had this, almost like a Bolshevik type revolutionary scenario throughout the States, at least on TV, it looks much bigger than it is, to terrify the public. So Covid, got that going on. Terrify the public burning businesses down and so on.

The schizoid reaction that those who do even looting or protesting or whatever you want to call it, they can be shoulder to shoulder, that's okay, right. But other folk getting picked up and hammered, picked up, it's almost like wolf packs, they see someone not wearing a mask and the cops all pounce on them in some countries, it's worse in some countries than others. So they pick the easy targets. But they won't go near certain minority groups who don't give a darn about social distancing. And they won't go near the protesters, in fact, they say the protesters were okay, you know, to do what they did. They were somehow exempt. The virus I guess would realize it was for a good cause and wouldn't infect anybody.

So here's the schizoid attitude. So Covid, looting, burning, protesting, ah, and then everything shut down, right. And misery. And depression. And unemployment, like you wouldn't... I don't care what the department of statistics say, when everything is closed down and I know there's jobs getting laid off all over the place, you don't go with statistics, you go with what you know is happening. Everything is going bankrupt. It's meant to. Except the BIG organizations, you know, the 1%ers, eh. The same characters that run the WEF, and who fund the Club of Rome and the United Nations and all that. Yeah. M-hm. They've made massive profits. Because all competition has been DESTROYED. Hhhch. And your politicians are in bed with them obviously, to allow just them to open. This is called FASCISM. That's real fascism.

But getting back to, so d'you really think you're going to get honest elections? Covid, lockdowns, bankruptcies, threats by governments, attacking people for not wearing a mask and so on, riots, BLM, protests, yada, yada ya, all that stuff going on, and shooting, say folk, shooting people who just wore a MAGA hat. [Alan chuckles.] All happening in the streets. And you thought you were going to get fair elections at the end of all this?

There's been a massive operation on the go right from the get-go here. In a way, as I say, if you look into Soro's speech you get glimpses, hhhch, of his disappointment of what had happened with the cancellation of the US's participation in the climate agenda. Because the climate agenda was for their, was to put through the whole austerity program, under sustainability. So Covid has forced you into it, you see, same thing. A war type scenario where everything stops and you're all going to end up on rationing. You'll end up coming out of it under a whole new way of existing. I don't call it living, it's existing. Because you'll have no choices on anything pretty well. All planned that way. This is the great reset. You're living through the great reset right now, the early phases of the introduction of it. But the first thing you do in warfare is destroy a country's economy. That's what you try and do. First thing. I hope folk are figuring it out, for goodness’ sake.

Then, I'll read an article tonight where the psyop units of all the countries are at work, now they’re openly working against their own people. That's a dangerous, dangerous step. Believe you me. Because the next step is to have the military physically attacking their own people… That is, it's bad enough when they're attacking folk on the Internet for having other opinions and so on. That's bad enough. That's not Democratic by any... So what system are you in, folks? You'd better start thinking about this. But please stop saying you live in free societies. Don't. Don't. Don't use that nonsense. You're in very dangerous times.

Getting back to how you're programed, you know, how nothing is new and how you must convince the victim to almost commit suicide, or give up, eh. That's what you do in psychological warfare. Until literally the morals that kept them together, the zest they had to fight injustice against whatever is demolished and you say, oh maybe they're right after all. That's how it's done. This is all happening right now. It's been happening your whole life long in fact.

You think of these Hunger Games, after watching the street riots and so called lawlessness, eh. And I don't know what the last movie was called, but supposedly they go out and kill their enemies in one day of the year or something. I didn't see it. But you think this is all new, these ideas, eh? You see it here too with, I was looking up the different old dystopian movies. One was called The 10th Victim. A kind of silly, typically 60s type movie, 1965, with Ursula Andrus in it. Where this club existed where folk would take challenges to go and hunt different people down and kill them. You see, so this idea of hunting is not that new, really. You've had the idea floated and floated and floated, you know.

When it came to even eugenics, you know, in the 1920s and 30s with the Rockefellers in full swing and Cold Spring Harbor on the go to do with eugenics and attempted breeding better people, hhhch, is what it was for. Because you're all wrong, so they make you better, you see. But you had lots of musicals came out, that was the whole thing in the 20s and 30s, to change society then, by the way. It was generally again aimed at women to flood into cities as secretaries and to, you know, even sleep with the boss. This is in the 20s and 30s, and there are stacks of movies like that. Or you become a flapper, you know, or a hoofer sometimes they called it, the dancers on stage, like chorus girls. And just become, almost like the star of the day, like American Idol of the day. Anybody could make it, you know, that was the idea. But lots of them were aimed at working girls to go into the cities and basically prostitute themselves to bosses and things to work their way up.

They actually had one called I think it was, um, ah, it was the Boss’s Secretary's Wife or something, [Wife VS Secretary] because they take over from the real wife and they confide more in the Secretary. So even psychology was involved back then too. Until, was it the Department of decency or something took over and then started to check these films that were basically promoting cultural change, and they said, not for the better.

But also, there was a movie, I can't remember what it was called but it was, I remember they show you all these different people dancing on a table, making an arch with their legs, these women, stacks of them. And the two, the singer, the male and the female, behind, between them, at the bottom of the table. I think it was, you've got to be young and beautiful if you want to be loved. So the message was loud and clear that if you're young you're worth it, you know you've got worth if you want to be loved and so on. But folk who are older, or are past it, you're over the hill, you don't matter. Which we're getting told today, it's time to die, you know. Time to die. How many years have you lived? It's time to die. M-hm. And it's coming from your ethics committee, you know, bioethics and so on, eh. Yeah. The people you don't vote for, again, right. They just appear suddenly with schools of thoughts from university.

But I was thinking, yeah, you had that one, that movie, but the song was like, be young and beautiful if you want to be loved. Also you had a kind of comedy, it was called Just Imagine, 1930, the futuristic… I think it was to be set in 1980, but it was made in 1930, where they'd have flying vehicles, flying cars and things like that. But everybody would have a number, and this is a kind of comedy. But everybody would have a number. And you wouldn't have children the normal way, you would order one. It was like a... It was just three years before Brave New World came out, the book, two or three years before it. It was a science fiction fantasy, you know. So the child would be artificially created for you. And you had to get permission to get married. And you had to, if it was a man, you could try and pick the woman, if she wasn't attached. But you had to prove that you're a better, a good eugenic match, with financial income and all the rest of it, better family type thing under the Rockefellers standards, before you could marry. And judges would decide if you could or couldn't. Quite interesting.

But yeah, the idea has been floated out for a long time. Even through you get, so much actually is introduced through comedy. Right to the present. That's how they always push the limits, through comedy. It's quite amazing to see how far they go with comedy. You're kind of put off guard with that, aren't you? You're kind of laughing at something that, if it was a straight drama might make the hairs on your head just, the hackles of your head just stand up, you know. But with comedy you’re in like a click mode between two spaces, and you'll laugh. Again, massive psychology involved in all that too.

The point is, nothing is coincidental. Including at the right time putting out the Hunger Games. The title itself, hunger, games, right, who should live, who should die and so on. Again, we have the professionals coming out nowadays at universities, just all at the same time mind you, it's not planned or anything. Because that's how things really are introduced, always at the same time. That's what gives you the clues. Even what they want you to know at the same time. Like all the intelligence agencies now are gunning for you, that's all over the media, and in the same week. That's not coincidence.

Because it's coercion. It's to frighten folk off, to start with. That's part of psy op warfare, frighten them first. Terrify, then step it up to terrify you. Because these organizations terrified, they've been trained how to terrify populations in other countries. That's in their guidelines, eh, and their tuition manuals. They have pretty well accurate stats on how much in a population generally will cave in right off the bat and say, well I don't want any trouble.

So just before I finish this whole section, if you like, section, do you really think Covid, lockdowns, essential businesses, nonessential businesses, rationing in some areas, and eventually rationing off and cutting off non-essential products for sale, [Alan chuckles.] as a start, then these spontaneous riots and protests, eh, backed by governors and so on, right, burnings, lootings, and Antifa out in the open there, well-funded like you wouldn't believe, were just going to stop it all and allow a fair election? Did you really think that? What made you think that?

What do you make of it when the whole of the establishment media, the whole of the WEF, the whole of the all the different groups at the United Nations, is all completely all on board with getting Biden in? That's a massive intelligence operation. Obviously, folks. You don't have independent media there at the top. You really don't. That's why all the big-name media was, they must've been getting government funding for the last 20 years, more and more all the time. Because no one was reading their stuff. It was so boring. And obvious. Especially since the media went electronic, they had their, you know, the begging bowls out for years. No newspapers to sell, right? So where were they getting the money from? Hhhhh. Because they are the official authenticated outlets of news by governments. All of them. That's what they are.

But everybody was on board for this, right. So after all of that do you really think that most Americans, I know some, I don't care about politics. But do you really think that most Americans sat and watched, again, the Covid and the lockdown, the brutality by cops, and then Black Lives Matter, then Antifa and the burning down of areas, including black areas, black business areas and residences, all getting burned down, you know. Terrorize. This is a terror campaign. But again, you couldn't criticize it because the mainstream media were all for it. You know, they didn't come down, they're all just, they're just protests, you know, just protests. As they blatantly gaslighted you, for goodness' sake. All the voters saw this, what was going on, do you really think they were going to vote for the so-called left-wing party that was all on board with what they were going through? [Alan laughing.] including the riots and the burnings and lootings and so on? Do you really think they were going to vote...

At the time everybody knew way more folk would be swayed to vote for Trump whether they liked him or not, because they had no option. And yet Biden apparently got elected with a bigger turnout than any president in history according [Alan chuckles.] to what we're told. What a joke, eh?! He's to be in for a little while anyway. Because the whole point of it all is to get Kamala Harris in. He's just there to launch her, you know, then he'll drop out because of his health and so on. I said that ages ago. It's rather evident. And she'll take over.

They do want a woman in, in charge of the terror campaign. They do. It's just, it's an occultic thing. You'll see it if you study history. But yeah, it's interesting to see the kind of machinations that's going on and people think, are believing everything they're told, eh, about honest votes and things. What a joke, eh? After revolutions in the streets and the whole, on behalf of the big internationalists, [Alan chuckles.] the globalists. Quite amazing. Well, folks aren't that suicidal that they'd obviously vote for the organization that wants to turn you all into a communist nation, eh. Come on. Come on. Wake up.

As I say, you've never had such a great display of a one power system that runs the whole show. From the day that President Trump got in, bash, bash, bash, all, the whole way right through. Again, complete embedded CIA operatives EVERYWHERE, and I really mean that. In their own writings they admit that too by the way, you know. So I'm not surprised at all, by it at all. No. All on board. Unified information is so important for totalitarian regimes. That's the first thing you do, you unify all information. You have to be on board with it, you see. Remember the target of everything again is you, all of you. Everybody. That's what authoritarian systems, that's how they really rule. They don't want you to understand that you're getting ruled. They want you to think you're being democratically governed. You've been ruled your whole life long, and before you were born, in fact, you were ruled.

It's the same with population control. Population control has been practiced for an awful, awful long time. You can't please the people who put out all the different commands out there and be good and do what you're told and don't have many children. Then when you do it then they say, well there's not enough of you, then they flood Europe [with immigration]. So it's not meant that you can please the master.

That's another thing I meant to say too, you see, under totalitarian systems you can't please the Masters. To get along you can't please them. In fact they hate you for groveling on your knees to them. They really do hate you, the more you grovel the more they despise you. I remember giving the talk years ago. It's like if you could imagine a king on a throne, and they've got a bunch of steps going down to the, to where all the peasants are standing, coming out. And you have to go up there and you've been called up for some misdemeanor or whatever it happens to be. But you go in there, and you know that this person has the power of life and death, there's no appeals department here, and if he condemns you for something, that's you, finished. So people would fall on their knees, and they try and climb up the stairs to clutch the hem of the cloak of the great King or whatever and grovel. But the more that you grovel, the more they despise you because you grovel. So there's no pleasing them, as I've said.

I used to say, we're all crippled to an extent with the indoctrination we've had, and the circumstances in which, there's not been a generation that's had peace, you know. You get bank collapses at least twice a century, and a bunch of minor ones in between but at least twice a century you get at least a couple of good ones as they plunder your wealth and take it from you. And the money is devalued so whatever you had before, you've got maybe half of what you had before in real spending power, you see. This is how it works out. Then you have wars. Wars that you had no say in. Wars to go against people that you had no beef with at all. And here's your government trying to make you hate them, very quickly, until they'll go for you if you say, oh I'm sorry I just can't bring myself to really hate them, you know. Now you are an enemy. You see? Big forces at you. But you never get peace, you never, you just don't get an era of peace, do you? You don't get it.

It's quite amazing that, I watched, someone sent me a documentary. It was on economists who were connected with the WEF talking about the 2007/8 crash, and they were disappointed, they were DISAPPOINTED by the way, these characters who work with the United Nations and the WEF, they were disappointed that the consumption of people and the recovery after the last crash 2007/8 had happened, it was happening despite the policies of government to try to keep everything down. Because you were supposed to be in an age of austerity already after the 2007/8 collapsed, but a lot of small business helped them pull out of it. And they hated the idea. Well, guess who's all been closed down with this great reset? Do you think that's coincidence?

You see, the last 2007/8 crash, apart from a plundering job was also a reset. It doesn't mean just resetting the value of your currency. It was a way of living, postconsumer, sustainability, the same mantra you've heard for years, from the same people. That's the purpose of it. They were really ticked off that we weren't suffering, and more and more and more, and folk were still buying things and all that, and the economy was recovering, they hated that. Absolutely hated it.

You're supposed to get taxed into the ground with carbon taxes and so on, so you don't have any spare money. I gave the talks years ago on this from their own records and agendas, where they talked about sustainability and what it meant, that eventually all spending for extras would be gone because so much of your money would go into higher costs for all kinds of energy and basic foodstuffs and so on, until you have no money left, and that was sustainability. Everything extra was out the window. Well, here it is again, eh. [Alan chuckles.] Well, it's Covid, you know. And that's how things are done. The public never really catch on to the real goings-on.

Again, here's another thing too, there's no point just arguing everything you know about Covid. Folk are fixated on Covid 19. They're arguing again which are obvious contradictions from the mainstream and all the so-called experts, and what people who are working with the patients know that are coming out with, two totally different stories of the reality of Covid. You’re supposed to get involved in the argument, you see. They want you to. Because you can never win it. How can you win it when it doesn't matter who says what, it all comes down to facts don't matter, what is dictated and decreed by the top groups is what you'd better parrot or else. That's it. It's not meant that you win it, you see.

Again, facts don't matter. Even from the frontline doctors that have come out en mass in Germany and across the world, and in the States and elsewhere. The facts don't matter. This is a bigger program than anything you've ever been told. Or will be told. The whole future of their, the whole future of the past 50 years of planning to bring you to total austerity was almost tossed out the window until they came up with this. This is the great crash/reset. [Alan laughing.] This is it, to bring all the policies through. You're not supposed to go back to any kind of consumerism afterwards, what you had before. They've said that actually, they've actually said it at the Club of Rome. So it's not me making this up, you can read it yourselves if you want to.

So you have to think for yourselves, and it's not an easy thing to do when you are bombarded with again all these thousands of voices and psy-op operatives of various guises trying to grab your mind and get into your head and say, don't think your own thoughts for goodness sake, take my thoughts. Again, I'll get back to something I've never finished for a while. But I said, waking up for most folk, for the real daring people, you need a crash course in skydiving, you know. But again, it's like jumping out of a plane without a parachute. You have to be willing to accept that you're, if you go through reality, you'll get shock after shock after shock, and you might not be prepared for the shocks because a lot of things that you thought were true, you’ll question and you toss, and you might even go into shock just finding out all of that kind of stuff. Until you realize that things that you held to be dear and true were fake. Maybe they were real at one time, we’ll never really know. But definitely in your lifetime and probably your parents at least, it's been fake, and you might have to let them go, all the things that are dear to you. That's what, if you're really after truth, eh, you can't really, and we are all human, you say, well I like the truth, but I also like the idea that, you know, that this was real and so on. Well, that's the sad part about it. Because you have to toss a lot of the things out that you really liked. Yep.

I can remember when information was always filtered down to writers of music and songs. When the politically correct updates were getting put out by those who ran, I mean this is... The culture industry is a tightly controlled industry. It's a very important industry because that's how you shape society and control and keep a hold of society but guide the changes that you want implemented. There's hardly anything in it that's outside of the authority of it. That's drama, movies, music, everything, you know, arts, painting, all that. Years ago, about the 1970s, those who own the business, the world business for culture, because it truly is, there's a big club where they must all work together, fashion, music, as I say, the arts, the movies that you watch, novels that you read, it has to always be a kind of an understood repetitive agenda, you see, to get through that this is all quite natural. And it works together, there's no doubt about it.

Back in the 70s as I say, it comes down to the writers in the music area, and in the lyrics too as well as music though, and some were both of course. They were telling them they wouldn't purchase and use songs that would say he or she and so on or use first names of the genders and so on. That's how suddenly you had so-called love songs that wouldn't specify who you were singing to. [Alan chuckles.] It was pretty well banned in a sense, and no one could sell any songs if/unless they changed it to gender-neutral, neither he/she or whatever, and very amorphous in a sense.

That's how it is with the styles too as they went into it eventually, when they brought out rap for instance. It didn't happen by itself. You prepare a whole generation really for the 2020s where you're going to set them loose on the streets and kill cops and yada, yada ya. You prepare the ground and folk don't realize it. As they're living through it, they think it's still entertainment as they're being programed for what's to come down the road.

I've mentioned before that Albert Pike said it too, that you never start a premature revolution. Everything must be in place. You must have everything perfect, including the training of the people, and indoctrination of the people that you're going to use for the revolution. It takes years to prepare that too. It even takes years to prepare the teachers that will teach them. Again, with the culture industry they have to be prepared too, to be all on board together with the same agenda when it comes to big changes. So everything is done way, way ahead of time and for what's to happen down the road.

I always think of the Rolling Stone song Time is on my Side, you know, the tribute, that was the idea for old Nick you might say... All the time in the world to change society.

Foundations say it too, they can set off in the 1700s as foundations or philanthropic organizations as they call themselves, and they would eventually change the world. Because they could bypass parliaments. They don't have to get voted in and out by the citizenry. So they can get changes done. It might take them 100 years for some parts of the agenda, or 200 years. In that time they've brought in a few generations of employees working for them, by the thousands, mind you. They're big organizations, like massive civil service organizations in a sense. When you look at the big foundations, they have thousands of folk working in their offices. You've got to realize these are really what run, this is what runs the world.

The richest folk on the planet have always really run the world, and do you really think they're going to give the public this idea of equality and democracy? They use the term all the time to get armies they can use to destroy what was, but it's not meant that you get to this idea of equality and democracy. They'll give you the old Soviet system where, again, ruled by councils. They'll appoint leaders who will speak on behalf of you, if it's either color as they call it, color, or ethnic group, gender group, whatever, or ethnicity, whatever it happens to be they'll supply your leaders for you. But the rest of the people who follow it say, what happened, we thought we were going to have equality here and... Nah, it's not meant.

Power, why would power, hhhch, ever, ever give it's whole power, hhhch, away to you? [Alan chuckles.] Do you really believe that they really are philanthropic? [Alan laughing.] That's how it is. Everything runs this way in society. As I say, most of the management of society, the real management, and the thousands of nongovernmental organizations that are heavily funded by the big foundations, that's what really runs the world, you know.

There are also their own spy agencies too, they have them across the world. They're wonderful sounding names, and they're into every nation in the world. If you think those who own the foundations, the richest folk on the planet don't use them to go into nations, like they've always done, and look, get a hold of the resources, to help the people, you know, they can't do it themselves, they need help in organizing themselves, it's only right that experienced people should come in there and help them, you know, take the burden of all that potential wealth off their shoulders.

That's how things really work. Prepare the future by preparing the field. You've got to plow the field, take the weeds out of the field. You've got to harrow it, you know, disc it and harrow it and take the stones out of the field. Then supply it with extra fertilizer of all kinds, even natural, which is the best really. Dig it in and let it wait a year, until the bacteria is in the soil and everything is working, and the worms come in and aerate it too. Then you plant the seed, you see, at the right time again. You can't plant it at any time of the year, you have to plant it at the right time. Then you pretty well are guaranteed revolution you might say. That's how it's done.

Up and into the 1950s and early 60s most of the songs then were boy/girl, they were all natural things, you know, it just had always been that way, boy/girl, girl/boy, and teenybopper love as they called it, that kind of thing too. Because that's how all marriages started off, hhhch, or ended up, from teenybopper this and teenybopper that. The folk would sing the songs and they couldn't think that anything else was, anything was wrong with that at the time, naturally.

Getting married and having children seemed a natural thing to do. It was inevitable, actually, until the pill came along of course. It was heavily promoted then in some countries, especially Britain. That was another reason why the National Health Service came out, was for, to deal with abortion, as the abortion industry, and to dispense the medications to prevent births and so on. So now that they knew that they planned for a society where very few marriages would last, because you're going to flood the media, the television and so on and programming with basically sex, sex, sex. Which they did. Which got worse up into the present. Until it's quite normal now, isn't it? I don't know what is normal now on television sex wise but, it's not meant to make you happy or content.

TV is designed to make you discontented with everything. That's advertising too. If advertising, why do you think it's out there? It's out there to make you unhappy with what you have, whether it's a toothbrush or a comb or soap or whatever it is, it's to make you unhappy with what you have and you try this instead. Well it's the same with everything else on television. It's to guide you and shape you and alter you into what your masters want you to be, and to live that way too.

Yeah, there's a complete war on the old system, very quickly, as they hyper sexualized the 1960s, miniskirts, all that kind of stuff, and sex, sex, sex. So they could, and literally they mentioned it in some of these schools of thought that were out there, that they were attempting to separate the bonding process that occurred with people as they mated, you know, so that sex would be completely separate and there would be no bonding process. That's what they were working towards with mass, you know, promiscuity, that would develop it. They were quite open about it in their writings how they would achieve it. And it's been pretty well done, you know. And not for everybody but for an awful lot of people.

I really don't think that people had much of a chance, looking back, and looking at the present time, of having successful marriages if they have televisions in their homes. I really don't think so. They're weaponized, so weaponized. You can have all these professionals working on every program, and you think you're smart enough to avoid a lot of the indoctrination. No, you're not. So you have to avoid the weaponry. It's like a landmine there.

But getting back to reality and wanting to know the truth. As I say, yep, jump out of a plane without a parachute if you really want to know the truth. I used also to say it was like, because I knew that the groups today, hhhch, there's a lot of fake groups out there put out by intelligence agencies that are, supposedly speak for you by the way, in alternate media that folk don't know. I used to, I gave the history of that, some of the history of that many years ago to do with when they were fighting the cold war and using different groups to put up propaganda on, in the radio, worldwide radio, and the CIA was operating it. Well, they never really gave it up.

Now of course it's so, now it's really into the high-tech stuff and computerization, artificial intelligence. Whatever flavor of alternate media to fight the system that you might want they've already got it ready-made for you. For every type of person that you are they have one for every category. That come out well-funded and churning stuff out. As I've said before I know what it takes out of you to do it all yourself. If you're doing videos at the same time and documentaries, and daily talks, come on here. No, you're talking about teams of people behind it all.

So yeah, you're well, everybody's been well catered to. I gave this talk again back in the 90s. I said, you know, it's like if you were living underground, you know, we'll say you're asleep, hm, and you want, you've got an inkling there's some kind of life out there. You come up a big tunnel onto the surface and you see a field there, and maybe a couple hundred yards down the road there's a forest. You just know instinctively you should try and, you don't know, this field is a new thing to you, this space. And they have signs everywhere in the field of, the truth is here, come here, I've got the truth. There's billboards all over the place, you see. And other ones saying, oh no, don't go there, come here. So they all say they've got the truth. I said, your whole idea is to get out of that tunnel, get into that field and zigzag around everything and try to not get caught on your way to that forest, so you can get a breather once you're in the forest, you can kind of hide a little bit and sit and think. Because that's what it's really like, folks, trying to find the truth.

We are so well understood in this day and age, so well, and every area, and analyzed by the way, that they know how to put the grabbers out there. Have you noticed, it's just like all mainstream, they've always done it, they give you an amazing headline, and you'll say, oh I might get, oh, that's going to be interesting, and you look at it and there's just nothing in the story at all. It's what we used to call a fib, the people who did fibs, isn't it awful. That's what you've got. You find it all throughout alternate media too, a lot of fibs, eh? They pretend they've got some new stuff but it's not new at all. It's recycled. But they'll do these grabbers. The idea is to get you in and then bring you around, and maybe even get you off in a, there are many lanes that go nowhere, but at least they go away from where they want you to... They don't want you to go where you're going so they lead you off into all kinds of directions.

I can see it now too, I said years ago, they'll start pulling in the reins of the Internet, they'll give you everything free for about 20 years and then they'll start pulling in the reins and so you just have to pay for everything. Then it's monitoring you. Then it will start silencing you. Because they are private organizations. Although they are all intelligence operations, they're private. This is the legalities they set themselves up as, you see. Most intelligence agencies of today are farmed out to private institutions, but they're still intelligence agencies, eh, with all the powers of intelligence agencies too.

So they want you to not, don't go off in your own direction. They want to pull you off in the direction that they want. So they'll, I said that that will happen until, but I said eventually people will stick with it, as they take all your rights and freedoms from you. This is before you heard the term social credit system. I said, they'll take it all away, but most folk will stay on it because they get so used to it. They'll still stick on their Facebook's and the social programs and platforms and so on because they've gotten accustomed to it. That's what folk are, you become accustomed to things, even when it becomes bad for you, you see, or dangerous to you, you'll still, oh well, you know, and they'll continue with it. And I said that, and sure enough that's exactly what's happening now, isn't it? Absolutely.

You are your worst enemy if you're putting all your data up there and joining all these things and, well, we guarantee privacy. Oh come on here! Meanwhile you've got psy-op operations like the one, the Brigade 77 in Britain, the 77th Brigade who, and I've given the stuff out from their main talks that have been given by the leaders of it. They say they've got thousands of operatives for goodness' sake working at all… Well, what d'you think they're doing? They're cutting through your computers like you wouldn't believe, like knives through soft butter, warm butter. [Alan chuckles.] Yep. It doesn't matter how much encryption you have.

But, and compiling massive databanks on you. Have been all along before Covid came along, before 9/11 came along. But massive databanks because everyone must be, in this brave new world, must be completely predictable. That's why they know everything about you. You give up your daily data to your friends, and your likes and dislikes and all the rest of the things you do, and they add it to your personality profile. They even run simulations on the virtual you, I've mentioned this before, the Pentagon, I heard someone repeating that just the other day, they got it kind of wrong. [Alan chuckles.] Lots of my stuff is out there of so many years and folk just use it. But yeah, the Pentagon runs virtual programs and simulations on how you personally would react in different situations, in the virtual reality world. They say the outcome was pretty well what you'll do in real life, you know, you're so well understood.

So yeah, the Internet is not your friend. Never was. They could never pull any of this off by the way without the Internet and cell phone, you know. The cell phone, I had it from good authority years ago, from someone who was in-the-know in a certain level in the States that the cell phone would become your ID, you know. It already had actually. That's exactly what it is. You buy, pay big money for it. You're analyzed like you wouldn't believe with it. Most folk do all their stuff through their telephone now, their phone. And now that they're demanding, and they're just putting in the apps for the permanent, this is permanent tracing for Covid. And then after Covid, permanent this and permanent that and all the other things that are out there too. It's not going to stop, you see.

It's not my opinion. Fauci said himself that even with these jabs that are coming along, that might not stop it. Because it's not meant to stop it. Or stop anything. Well, at least not what they're telling you it's going to stop. He said too, you'll still have to wear masks and stuff and you'll still have lockdowns. This is permanent. And contact tracers as they want to call it, I just call them the Stasi. Because their goal is not just to find out who's been near who. That's just the start of the agenda, who's been near who, or whom. Because that's what you do in totalitarian societies. You have thousands of folk who follow people around and investigate folk without their knowledge, find out where they've been, who they've spoken to, etc. AND IT'S TO BE HERE PERMANENTLY. Are you starting to get the picture now?

This took years to plan. Hm? Years and years to plan. It's interesting too, I've always thought it interesting when you find out that operatives within the CIA and FBI and MI6 and so on, that they use as fronts for big ops, and they're allowed to make millions by the way, the selected few, you see. They do have real businesses, they can have real businesses under their command set up by the, that make real things, you know. Especially in the technology departments. But it's the most dangerous time in history because never has a power been given so much power as this over the public.

Used to have some semblance of departments that you could at least try and go and complain to. It might not work and generally didn't work. But you don't even have that today. You're seeing that your overlords are everywhere running everything. [Alan chuckles.] Everything, eh. It isn't just all media, and all artificial intelligence monitoring and so on, and censorship, etc. But they run your governments openly now. Your governments are all obedient little lackeys. OBVIOUSLY. They're not going to do anything to help you if you complain to them. They're all on board with the agenda because they know who is buttering their bread and how they, hhhch, got into power as well.

A very dangerous time.

Who do you complain to? You see, even when you had cold wars and so on, the tactic used to be, oh look at them over there, look at what they do, you know, how they repress their people. That's how your system, the people that ran your country, the owners of your country, would, they would tell you, the peasantry, you know, look at them over there doing, look how they treat this group or that group or whatever it is. And you're supposed to feel really bad about it, you see. That's how they get you to hate them eventually, oh, look what they're doing, oh that's terrible. As they create a new enemy. That's how you…

You must get the public to hate the enemy that you want them to hate before you attack that enemy, you see. They're awfully good at that. It can, sometimes it will take 20 years of building up. Because they've got patience, you see. But you've got to understand, it never stops. I should say, except now, this is when that old system stops. Because they don't need that enemy anymore. They'd have to, during the Cold War, here's another thing too, and folk don't like to admit this, you see, but the governments of the West had to listen to the mass demonstrations for more money by workers or unemployed and so on, like they had in the 1930s and 40s and 50s. Even the 60s too. And the unions, yeah, the unions were definitely getting built up big time, and often you had the communistic leaders in charge of them. It used to strike me as odd too, why would you need communists to be the leaders of the labor movement? Why couldn't you just have labor movement leaders for your own country? Yyyyyyyyou know, there's more things than meet the eye, you understand, who puts them in power and why. And who did it really serve, eh?

Getting back to the point of, the fact is, during the Cold War the West had to always say, look how free we are. You see. And they keep touting about, oh, that we've got the freedom of speech and freedom to do this and freedom to do that, that you don't have in those Communist bloc countries. But it was all a show, folks. Because as soon as the so-called communism fell, supposedly, in no time at all your countries are off to war across the Middle East. Like old term plans just waiting for the right moment. Away they went. And at the same time all your rights with [Alan chuckles.] labor unions and so on start falling apart. You don't need them anymore, we're too civilized now, employers are awfully good to their employees now, human nature has changed, you know. And you watched it all go down the tubes, eh, everything that folk thought that they'd fought for, for years, just vanished. [Alan chuckles.] That's how it was run.

So you've got to understand, you're always played. Always played. And basic natures never changes. Greed doesn't change either. Ambitious people, it doesn't change. And if someone wants to complain about the fact you're getting all populist and so on, and that they themselves they say have been working for 40 years changing the world, who is the tyrant here? That they want to make the world in their image? Well, who gave them that right, hm? Just think about that too. If you want to. [Alan chuckles.]

But yeah, we're living through amazing times now. That it’s never been so in-your-face. So who DO you complain to? There is literally no point. I really mean that. I said this back in February, I could tell right off the bat that this was the big agenda. The great reset idea was the big agenda before they really popularized it, the great reset, you know, and made it more commonly known what it was. It was obvious that they weren't going to sit back and allow people to pull out of the European Union. They weren't going to allow the US to back out of the climate accord. Because the US funds most of it, the taxpayers fund most of it. And the US also fights all the wars across the world too, eh, for the Empire, to make them all conform to this new system as well under...

Remember that Operation Iraqi Freedom with Bush Junior? Remember that one? And the farces as the troops tried, you saw these great propaganda pieces in the media. There's the soldier saying, you stupid effers, he says, we're bringing you democracy. That was the big photographs, you know, to the Iraqis. The Iraqis didn't want this thing called democracy, and the Iraqis said, well what is it, and how come you don't have it? You know? That took a while to drop too, that penny. But that's really what, everything is propaganda. Isn't it? Everything is truly propaganda. Yeah, but once the Cold War was over, yeah you didn't have to keep up the pretense of caring for the people or giving you something back for all the taxes that are plundered from you all the time.

So yep, we're not given much time at all, of much of a space in our lives for peace. You get cultural wars on the go to change society. You get economic warfare as I said before and big crashes where they plunder whole economies, and your savings, and devalue the currency itself. So wars, devaluation, and then many resets all through your life too, as they reset the system. But again, austerity, wars are good for austerity and rationing of course. In between that too, they've got threats of war, you see, oh, keep me safe. They're either going to save you or save the planet that you're going to destroy, or they're keeping you safe from war, you see. It's always keeping you safe and take your rights from you. The same with terror, take all your rights from you to keep you safe. And we go along with that, you know. It's the oldest trick in the book, keeping you safe and taking away your rights.

There's also a good documentary, it's interesting I should say. I don't know who put it out exactly, but it was, I think it was 1965 and it was called The War Game. It was a simulation leading up to nuclear war in Britain. Now, they love the other ones before too, they had Threads and so on, really good ones. This one went through the scenarios of what would happen and the statistics, how many folk they expected to die in every area where radiation, they had maps of the places they knew were definitely targeted for nuclear war if they went to war with Russia. It was interesting too, right down to exposing some of what they would actually do according to the plans that were on the books by the British authorities if anything happened. They had some negative things in it too where they actually had fake ministers or priests putting out ridiculous propaganda, being on board with having wars and so on. [Alan chuckles.] So you could tell it was very, very left-wing organizers. But regardless, they use professional actors at the time to do it all. They did show you what the step-by-step agenda would be for dealing with the fallout and people.

It reminded me of Covid actually. Because when Covid came out, out came the ethicists and the bioethics committees that I mentioned before, that already were working with governments. Because they were already working with Event 201 before it all happened anyway, hhhch, to decide on what they tell... Well, we wouldn't have enough medication to treat certain people, and we wouldn't have all the, even the ventilators and so on, so we'll have to really decide right off the bat who's going to live and die here, and who can be saved and who's not worth saving. And that's really what they mean is, who is not worth saving.

So again, this is your bioethics in command of things. WITH lawyers. A lot of those who take ethicist courses work with law, lawyers, to see how far they can push it, you see. So they even had that back in the 1960s, and 1965, The War Game scenario. But eventually at one stage, when the folk go into really bad radiation sickness, and they go through all the symptoms of it, what's to be expected and so on. This actually is so fascinating because at that time Britain really was still on rationing to an extent. Folk could not afford meat and so on. In fact, in the documentary they actually mentioned this little shelter you were able to build inside your own home. Get some plywood, make a little V-shaped in the side of it, and you try to, maybe 4 feet wide, 5 feet wide, to get a couple of people in there, and stock up a little bit of food and so on. And they actually said that, that they had already done surveys at that time, remember this is a time of austerity for Britain, right, high taxes, low wages, high expensive cost-of-living just for basic necessities, the things all the great reset wants to bring back by the way, exactly that, and they said that most folk couldn't even afford the plywood and all the things necessary to make it, to make this happen.

This is 1965. The era when they gave you, oh look, be happy for these four self-made guys, you know, called the Beatles, eh. [Alan chuckles.] Be happy for them. Meanwhile you're living under the threat of being annihilated and the folk couldn't afford basic necessities or even enough food to last a few weeks and so on. That was Great Britain, eh.

But they also showed you, just like getting back to who's going to get medication and who's not, where they issued the police eventually, and according to the agenda by the way, for the real thing, to the manual, they give the police revolvers and they would literally shoot, because they wouldn't have medications to even put folk out of their misery, or pain medication or opium or anything or morphine, so they would just literally shoot people. So that was their way of dealing with it.

Today of course it's different. We're more advanced now, where your government authorities already decided that, the age categories and who to save and who not to save, [Alan chuckles.] etc., and who's going to get medication, eh, as they train you, well I guess that's right, they won't have enough medication. Really? Really? Honestly? Oh well. Okay. You're getting trained into a whole bunch of new values here and folk don't realize it.

You can't trust anything they tell you, you understand. Everything is deception, that's how they rule you is by deception. That's how they get you to comply. It's to get you to start to accept things that you shouldn't be accepting, because you'll start to believe it's for the greater good.

M-hm. But when you start trusting governments, that's like Ronald Reagan said... I don't know who his speechwriters were, all these guys, I mean, they all are just front people too. The speechwriters are the ones who are all on board. I think they really study at the same university, this world university, because they all have the, they're on board with the same speeches across the planet, you know, at the same time, with the same things that they believe in. Ronald Reagan said it, the most frightening words that American citizens could hear is when, if people come to the door and say, we're from the government, we're here to help you. And that's the truth. More so in what's coming along the pike now. Isn't it?

I couldn't, it was really astonishing to see that they wanted to put the military around to give the vaccinations. That's not what the Army is there for. An army is a force. Think of the connotations of what an army is. An army is meant to go and kill people, the number one, think that, think that, eh, think that. The Event 201 and so on and all their documentation said they'd use the Army. They've already conditioned the Army that they can help with floods and things, so they've already conditioned us, you know, that's what they're there for. No, an Army is meant to kill people. But they're going to give you vaccinations. Hhhch. That sounds really good. Do you feel better now. [Alan laughing.]

Don't forget too, the blanket immunity that the governments have all signed onto to make sure that whoever gives vaccinations will be completely immune from prosecution for any ill effects or deaths that it caused. That's a right you can never give away, is to at least do that, sue. That's tyranny otherwise, folks. M-hm. Do no harm. The Nuremberg code as well promoted the same concept, you know. That no one has the right to experiment with you and your body, using any kind of medications or any techniques. You can't throw, you can't through these hard-earned rights out the window, hm. Can't do it, folks. You mustn't do it.

Because we live in technocratic times where, you know, and your masters will give you the experts to rule you, and you're too dumb and stupid to do it yourself for goodness' sake. And if they give you money and let you earn money, you're going go start buying things, eh. And they can't have that in a post consumerist society, for goodness sakes. Just spend money on apps and things that track and trace you, and never mind the cost of the phone and the programs themselves. But yeah, just, they want you to use that all the time. But don't buy real tangible goods, eh, don't do that. If you get tangible goods, you'll feel better, you see, gee, I earned money and I bought that, you know. You see? That might make you want to buy something else. Hhhhh! Can't have that, for goodness' sake, eh. N-n-n.

I've never seen a time where the whole agenda under one guise is being rammed through. Under the guise, under the, oh, necessities and non-necessities. Hhhhh, and essential and nonessential. Right down to probably the articles you've seen, were cops in Britain were searching in people's purses and things to see if they had bought anything that was nonessential in the stores. NO ONE would have seen the day of this happening. No way. Can you imagine if they did this during the Cold War scenario, where they, whoah, do you think they... You see, this is the problem. The field day, a supposed competitor, I don't call them enemies, they're all competing, a competitor would have aiming at your country, look what they're doing to their citizens there, they're going through and fining people and imprisoning folks for buying something they didn't need. Can you believe it?

You've got to bring this back into reality, folks. You've got to start doing it. Very quickly. And think for yourselves. Because you will not like austerity. Postconsumer. Where Maurice strong, you know, gave talks about it, and Friends of the Earth and all the other groups, all the funded armies, again, funded armies by the big foundations that really run everything, so that, you know, they're going to bring in a post consumerist society and dismantle all business and dismantle industry, completely, into preindustrial levels. And they mean it. [Alan chuckles.] For you that is, eh, not for themselves.

Once again, cuttingthroughthematrix.com. Throw a few bucks my way. Hopefully. You can buy the books and discs if you want, or you can just give, straight donations are awfully welcome. You're going to see how to do it, PayPal, sending cash is fine. Checks are fine. You could even get a check from the bank itself if you want. And Money Gram is still accepted as well. At the moment. That will help me tick along.

You've got to realize that you're on the cusp of horror right now. Literally they're going to go for people, they're going to start knocking them off one after the other. Right down to imprisonment they said that at their big meetings in the tests that they did leading up to the Covid, before Covid broke out. Hhhhch. They said they'd start eventually, eventually they would not just ban folk from media and fine them and so on, they'd eventually go and pick folk up and imprison them. Because you'll be an enemy of the state, you see, if you're against any part of their agenda that's for the common good, you know, and for a better tomorrow and so on.

That's how, tyranny never ever changes its appearance really of what it really is. It has camouflage outside, and a shimmering way that it projects something to the people. But you can see past the shimmering if you wake up and see it for what it is. And it's not pleasant. There are those who run the world who have decided in their big, big club that they have the right to decide how you're going to live, or exist. Right down to if they're going to even allow you to exist at all, or get born, you see. And this is not making stuff up. They've been so vocal about it, especially at the last climate change meeting where they talked about again this recycled idea, well we should issue licenses for the folk who should want to have children to see if they should have children or not. The whole Chinese model, remember, hm, is there.

I remember reading, I'm one of these oddballs that kind of, I get bored once in a while. But I'm also interested in finding out, what are they saying it these big meetings, when the head of China comes out and gives a big speech, to the West, you know. They’re long and windy and there was one a few years ago, maybe three or four years ago, maybe a bit more actually. He came out and he was talking to the West, like a representative of a country talking to the representatives of the other countries, like the West. He said, and we hold, we hold the countries of the West to our agreement regarding reducing population. I said, what is he talking about? What agreement was this?! ...that he is holding us to? Hm?!

Was it just abortion? Or sterilization? Definitely we're going infertile in the West, it's been known as a massively growing business is fertility clinics. It's been that way for a long time now. No one's bothered about the sperm count plummeting. As I say, a farmer, a farmer, believe you me, of animals knows everything about his animals. The stock, the genetics, the eugenical line it comes from, hhhch, even the names of the previous bulls and so on that the sperm comes from. They know all that stuff because they want to know, again, to be predictable, eh, and if anything happens and goes awry that he wants to know why, what's wrong. Immediately. He doesn't waste time; he gets the vet in or whatever it happens to be and specialists involved. Regardless of what it cost him, he's got to get it done because he'll lose more if he doesn't. That's the natural thing that happens, you see. He owns the stock, and he wants to know what's happened to his stock.

Well, we know that the sperm count's plummeting in the West. We know that. We know that there's more weird kinds of cancers developing and so on. You see, there's no CRISIS from our masters. And we do have masters. Why would the masters close you all down because of something they say is generally so mild you won't even know if you had it, this Covid? But they're not interested in finding out why you're all going sterile? Well it's because you see, they know why you're going sterile, [Alan chuckles.] and it's meant to happen, that's why it's not a crisis. Are you starting to get the picture here? You gotta start using logic, you know. They're terrified of you getting a sniffle, but they don't care if you're going sterile. M-hm. That's it. So there you go.

Again, cuttingthroughthematrix.com, sent a few bucks my way. And don't forget because people do forget as they get into these talks. Remember too, a lot of folk put them on MP3 or whatever or whatever player they’re using and they can listen to a bit at a time or when they're driving even some of them listen to it. A lot of people actually prefer the audio because it gives them, it's true enough, I find the same thing. An audiobook, actually, I find is interesting because it goes back to reading a book, right? Where you read a book, your own mind creates the pictures of what you're reading, in your mind, and audiobooks are the next best thing to that too. If you have work to do and you need your hands free to do whatever you're doing and so on, you don't want to sit and stare at the screen all the time if you’ve got other things to do. And so many people are doing that.

Don't forget, everybody's competing for your time in this day and age. Everybody. A lot of the horror shows, or terror shows I call them, that are well-funded fronts that end up being your mainstream, [Alan chuckles.] your mainstream alternative it might be, put it that way, rely on you, count on you tuning it every day in case you miss something. It's just like a horror movie, I might miss something that might save my life, if I hear some vital thing. It's like you're scared not to tune in that day. It's all psychology. Because you're always given your leaders meanwhile, your heroes and your zeros. That's how you run society.

Look at the, again, the 77th Brigade as they call it in Britain, you know, the massive psychological warfare department. We have operatives across the world, you know. Thousands and thousands. They can, they're all mobilized to attack people using algorithms, all the highest equipment possible and the programs and apps and so on, and they get access to all the back doors in all your devices, which are all pre-existing, they're all built-in, and they slow down your speed or whatever. They have all these ways of annoying you. They actually say in their own manuals that the techniques that they've used in Afghanistan and different places all come into use, using it now on their own population. This is your brave new world, eh, of, you know, new freedom. Hhhch. And you pay for it all. You pay for it all, eh. They love, live on good paychecks. They live very well off of you. As they take away your rights and put you under. You know? Amazing. And folk are going to accept this and just put up with it? N-n-n.

Now I'm going to touch on some articles here. This one here is about the New York Bar Association, the law, eh...

NY Bar Association Recommends Mandatory COVID-19 Vaccine With No Exemptions

zerohedge.com / 8 Nov 2020

(Alan: I'll put that one up there too. They said in it that…)

Mary Beth Morrisey NY Bar association Health Law Section Task Force chair, in a Saturday statement.

"In balancing the protection of the public's health and civil liberties, the Public Health Law recognizes that a person's health can and does affect others," she continued. "It may become necessary to require that certain individuals or communities be vaccinated, such as healthcare workers and students, to protect the public's health."

So yeah, your health does affect others, it says here, you see, it can and so on. Mind you, I think really, it's a good idea, what they could do is ban all the massive propaganda you get fed daily, and the noise it creates that's bad for your ears and stuff, and that does affect your health, and your mental health too, as they terrorize you all the time, eh? Just stop it all. Stop all the propaganda and all the fear and hype because that is bad for your health. I have no doubt about it. And I'm backed up by the suicide rate going up and so on and depression, etc. Ftt, there you go, eh.

I'll put that one up anyway. Also this article here, this next one goes into…

The laws the Australian Government could use to force coronavirus patients into lockdown

abc.net.au / 2 Mar 2020

(A: ... "and here's how" it says. I'll put this one up as well.)

The Attorney-General says Australians could be detained or forced into treatment in a last-ditch effort to halt the spread of coronavirus.

(A: It’s never been done in history, stopping viruses from spreading like that.)

To do so would mean activating rarely used Commonwealth laws that were introduced (A: Now, listen to this…)

To do so would mean activating rarely used Commonwealth laws (A: You’re thinking that must be like a really old law. It was only made up in 2015, [Alan chuckles.] probably in preparation for this.) that were introduced in 2015.

(A: [Alan chuckles.] Rarely used.)

Who could be detained?

The laws allowing people to be detained or forced to seek treatment are outlined in the Biosecurity Act 2015, (A: That’s just coincidence that was made up then.) allowing the nation's director of biosecurity (who is also the chief medical officer) (A: That’s just a coincidence too.) to put in place strict control measures.

Attorney-General Christian Porter said any orders would have to be "the most effective and least invasive means" of dealing with the situation, and be considered "justified and reasonable in all the circumstances".

(A: Well, define justified and reasonable. I mean, lawyers can play forever with that football field. Hhhch, that’s just how big it is, the spectrum of let’s just alter this meaning a little bit here and, you know. Very precise, right. Yeah. [Alan chuckles.] So anyway, yeah, this is all getting rammed through, folks.)

What does it mean if you're hit with a control order?

A person could be hit with a control order which would include a range of measures, including:

quarantining at home wearing protective equipment such as gowns or masks (A: It doesn’t say where.)

undergoing examination by health professionals giving samples for diagnosis forcing vaccinations or other treatments (A: There ya go.)

The control order can run for up to three months, or be revoked earlier if authorities decide to lift the restrictions.

What can be locked down?

Specific areas could be locked down or isolated in a bid to control the spread of the virus.

(A: I mean, they’ve already said that you can’t really stop it anyway, you know. N-n-n.)

"There could be the declaration of what are called 'human health response zones', and that could mean there are specific requirements for screening people going in and out of such a zone," Mr Porter said.

So anyway, that's the way it's going. As I say, there's no point in arguing the rights and wrongs of anything. Because it's just written in stone as I said way, way back, you know.

Christmas STILL at risk as Sage docs warn going back to tiers

(A: t-i-e-r-s, eh, I guess that’s a good song, eh. Maybe was it Tears for Fears, was it, the group, now it’s going to go back to tiers now, I guess it will be Tears for Tiers maybe.)

'will only reduce Covid rates to pre-lockdown levels'

thesun.co.uk / 13 Nov 2020

It leaves Brits' Christmas plans hanging in the balance while ministers attempt to drive down Covid infections.

(A: [Alan laughing.] The politicians, [Alan laughing.] I can't see the politicians driving down anything. Everything they do makes everything go up and up and up in the prices, you know, and the cost and so on. The most inefficient people on the planet are politicians, eh.)

In new documents released today, the Scientific Advisory Group for Emergencies (Sage) (A: That's the SAGE groups, you see.) warns that a localised lockdown approach could see transmission rise again.

(A: Ah dear, eh. So…)

Their gloomy forecast, dated November 4, warns: "If England returns to the same application of the tiering system in place before November 5, then transmission will return to the same rate of increase as today."

(A: Oh, they're really, really worried about everyone, eh? As I say, they don't mind you, hhhch, you're all going sterile and getting cancers, because they know what's happening there. M-hm.)

Here's another article too, and it's the Daily Mail Australia. It says…

'It's a global dictatorship!' The bizarre 1am email sent to the ENTIRE NSW police force questioning the state's 'oppressive' coronavirus lockdown

dailymail.co.uk / 8 Nov 2020

The six-page open letter was addressed to NSW Police Commissioner Mick Fuller

It was signed off by Senior Constable Alexander Cooney, a highway patrol officer

He claimed he sought to 'raise the alarm that a global dictatorship is occurring'

(A: Of course it is. You know, it's certainly not democracy of any kind, you know, so… And we've got the big organizations loaning it, you know, how they're so happy that the whole agenda for sustainability can get rammed through under Covid, eh.)

A disgruntled cop (A: He's disgruntled, you know, he's not just a man with a, he's a disgruntled person.) penned a six-page letter to the state's police commissioner laden with COVID-19 conspiracy theories and sent it to the entire NSW Police force at 1am.

Titled 'Open Letter to the Commissioner: Tyranny of Government, or Best Interests of the People?', the document was sent on October 26, five months after NSW came out of lockdown.

'Many members of the force are fed up with the approach to enforce oppressive rules

(A: That's right, because the cops in Australia have been brutal by order, right, to terrify the public. They don't mess around in Australia. Remember, it was a big penal institution there and a big colony there. That strangely enough, that, you must wonder if it's in the genes of the descendants or the forces that looked after the prisoners. How come they're just as oppressive?, on a dime they swing into action and start battering their own people? You know? You wonder what it is, eh? And you would think that the people themselves being descended from, you know, really penal convicts that were sent off for... That's how they, Britain, you don't realize the laws were changed in the 1700s and 1800s to increase the rate of crime by labeling the simplest thing a criminal act, even stealing a loaf of bread. During terrible times, eh? Not poverty. That's how they could literally get a whole population into Australia. They served their time there and then they were released, and they couldn't go back home or anything, so you're stuck there. So that's how you colonize a country for the flag, eh. That was part of what they did there. A unique story.)

(A: But you'd think people who were descended from that, and who through their old folk songs and histories of the sufferings that they had and the injustices they had out of it all, they succumb back down to it and start doing what they're told. And the cops are brutal again. It's just, you would hope things would change [Alan chuckles.] when they saw the same kind of, the monster rear its ugly, eh, and say, no way. You would hope so. You would really hope that. It's kind of sad to watch the cops going in.)

(A: So anyway, this cop here, he doesn't like it. I'm sure lots of cops don't like it too when they see what they're being told to do with the public, to terrify and terrorize them actually. So he goes through it all there. He says…)

'We feel a real calling to do our part to stop the oppression.'

Well, that's very, very much a conspiracy, eh. How dare he think that way for goodness' sake. So I'll put that one up there as well. Ah, you gotta laugh at Britain too. I mean, Britain, eh, the country that pulled out, or supposedly is trying to still pull out of BREXIT, right, from the European Union and become free. It's going around in circles, even Teresa May is banging away at Johnson for his prevarications and his nonsense and so on. It says…

100s Of UK Medics And Academics Urge Boris Johnson: COVID Data Is "Exaggerated" And Second Wave Talk Is "Misleading"

zerohedge.com / 9 Nov 2020

(A: I'll put this article up for those that want to, that's from Zerohedge, this is their article here.)

Almost 500 medics and academics have penned a letter to U.K. prime minister Boris Johnson - just hours after the U.S. election has been "decided" - informing him that official Covid data is being "exaggerated" and that talk of a second wave of Covid is "misleading".

The letter was critical of the government's handling of the virus and said that the response to the pandemic has been "disproportionate" relative to the risk, according to the Daily Mail.

(A: The link for the Daily Mail is here, that talks about that.)

I'll put this article up for those that want. Again, people should read through it if you got time and get an idea of what everyone is saying about what's going on here. Because it's important, isn't it, to realize what is being said. You're living, this is your life, you know, you don't get to fix it all afterwards. You get one go at everything in this world, eh, and what you do now really matters. Of course it does.

An article too...

Dentist Nataliia Nairn is jailed for skipping coronavirus quarantine to go to work

dailymail.co.uk / 9 Nov 2020

Ukrainian dentist Nataliia Nairn flew from Canberra to Perth via Sydney

(A: So it’s all within Australia.)

Instead of 14 days of isolation,

(A: Because you’ve got to isolate yourself, no matter, I think Canada’s trying to do the same thing too, if go outside of Ontario. Everything is uniform, I noticed that, across the world now. Yeah.)

she treated 41 patients over eight days

Jailed for two months with a further five months' suspended sentence

(A …for treating patients, eh.)

They didn't mention if she even had been tested for anything. I don't think so or they would've told you that if they had tested and found out that she was positive so... But that doesn't matter though, right. She didn't do what she was told and she got jailed for two months. She said she needed the money and so on but, that's like everybody else that really needs money, right. She might still have a massive loan for her education to pay off, I don't know. But regardless, you're not allowed to do what you're doing, even if it's for helping people out in dentistry or whatever, you know. Because everything is just out of whack now, isn't it. Really completely out of whack. It doesn't make any difference. Truth doesn't matter as I've said before. So there you go, that's one of many, eh, one of many articles.

Boris Johnson to meet Bill Gates

(A: This Bill Gates, this superhero, Bill Gates, that literally no one votes for, who's got a finger in all the pies, because he was created by the big massive agency that runs the world, right, that's why he's got this power and no one questions him.)

to plan national vaccine rollout with pharma giants

thesun.co.uk / 14 Nov 2020

The PM and the Microsoft co-founder will hold a roundtable this evening to tackle the coronavirus crisis and discuss future plans to (A: [Alan chuckles.]) stop the pandemic.

(A: It's like a comedy thing, isn't it. It's like Batman and Robin, you can just picture them with their little cloaks and so on.)

Mr Gates's foundation - the Bill and Melida Gates Foundation - has helped spearhead research into pandemics and ploughed £118million (A: So I guess that gives him the right to decide our futures, eh. Because he's bought off everything pretty well.)

There you go. But again, they are front people, folks. That's why they are allowed to get away with what they do. That's why people who are multibillionaires can throw money into countries to sink them, or, do whatever they want inside them, or color revolutions, and get away with it. It's because they're part of the big intelligence system. And there really is one. So, yep. I'll put this one up as well. So you feel better now that there's Boris Johnson [Alan chuckles.] a guy who loves his, he must get a special haircut to make it look all disheveled like that. It must cost a fortune. And Bill Gates, eh. M-hm.

This article too is the Daily Mail...

Biden's coronavirus adviser

(A: ...one that he's putting in, or will put in...)

Dr. Zeke Emanuel:

(A: …once argued, and this is your bioethics again and ethics committees, that you don't vote for, this new science, who decides who's going to live and die, who's worth saving, you know. In fact, who's worth keeping? You see, this is the real socialism. The REAL socialism was for the multibillionaires, folks, to run it all. Go back and listen again to that, I don't know if it's still up there, it was a little very early video, or movie reel of Bernard Shaw of the Fabian Society, one of the founders of the Fabian Society saying that when we get in, he says, you'll have to come to us and explain why we should keep you alive. You know? That's REAL socialism. Are you getting the picture now? Expert run society, you see. Everybody has to have a purpose to serve. And it's a tiered system up to the ones at the top, you see. You see, the classless society is the most [Alan chuckles.] classed society you've ever imagined. But just call it experts, you see. So there you are, Zeke Emanuel, the coronavirus advisor for Joe Biden…)

Biden's coronavirus adviser Dr. Zeke Emanuel:

"it's not worth living past 75" - despite president-elect being 77 - and suggested only 'younger people who are yet to live a complete life' should get a vaccine in a flu pandemic

dailymail.co.uk / 9 Nov 2020

(A: Eh?! There ya go. There you are. So using oncologists…)

Oncologist Dr. Ezekiel J. Emanuel was one of the 10 advisory board members appointed to Joe Biden’s coronavirus task force on Monday

In a 2014 article, he argued that life is not worth living beyond the age of 75

(A: But that will reduce and reduce. They already had the one in Australia came out a few years ago, remember the professor, when they all come out at the same time you know darn well they’re part of the same club, eh. The one in Australia there had said that folk to die at 65, you know, rather than collect their money that the state could use, their pensions and all that. Do the right thing old boy, you know.)

Joe Biden, who secured victory over Trump in the presidential election, is 77

Emanuel, now 63, wrote that he believed by 75, ‘creativity, originality and productivity are pretty much gone for the vast, vast majority of us'

(A: Hm, there ya go.)

He suggested that society, as well as family members, would be 'better off' if nature took 'its course swiftly and promptly'

Emanuel also stated that he would reject simple treatments such as flu shots

‘Certainly if there were to be a flu pandemic, a younger person who has yet to live a complete life ought to get the vaccine or any antiviral drugs,’ he wrote

By the way, that’s almost what Obama said when he ran the last time himself. Obama give a talk where he said that his grandmother, he went through, she was getting old and so was it really worth keeping her going, and the money that was spent on her. This is an agenda, folks! Are you getting the picture? Are you getting the picture! Back to Julian Huxley. UNESCO. Where Julian says, we have to knock people off their pedestal when they think they're the supreme being on the planet, he says, and train them that they're just another animal, basically, and that they themselves, the experts should rule. This is humanism. You've got different names for the same thing. Because the names are all parts of their agenda, you see. So there you are, you know. And I guess there's a whole bunch of experts too they put up there, that might be over that age as well or getting up there, they should just maybe do the same with them. Maybe they should lead by example, you know. You never really get that happening though, do you. It's always for YOU. [Alan laughing.]

German Doctors Letter to Chancellor Merkel, Put an End to the Covid “Fear Machine”

globalresearch.ca / 5 Nov 2020

(A: Well, that’s a good way of putting it. But they won't, you see, it's written in stone. It's not going to happen. I think it was Al Gore had An Inconvenient Truth, and today we have inconvenient facts. They don't matter, you see, and that's where we are with it all. So this article here is Global Research. They have the signatory, this document that was put out.)

Dear Chancellor Dr. Merkel,

We, the signatories, are doctors from all areas of healthcare, who have been serving people in practices and clinics for decades. During this time, we have witnessed more than one seasonal infection in Germany, most of them with far more severe conditions and significantly more deaths than since January 2020 from COVID infectious diseases. Together we serve approx. 70.000 people. (A: …these doctors say here. Now, these doctors, German Doctors say…)

The circumstances of the coronavirus wave in the FRG have been perceived differently than the media and the ongoing warnings of politics, which were unjustified in fact, presented to the public for months. Predictions of individual advisory virologists with millions of seriously ill and hundreds of thousands of deaths in Germany have not been true in any way.

(A: Right, boomph. Facts don’t matter. In fact if you were to push the idea you're going to get banned from everything. They've already said you're going to get banned, by the way, for saying that, you see. It doesn't matter if you're a specialist or not, and actually working in the hospitals, it makes no difference. It's a big agenda, much bigger than the facts, you see, will allow.)

In the practices, hardly any infected patients were infected and if, then with normal, mostly mild progressions of virus flu. (A: Most of them had the flu virus, you know, in the hospital.) The hospitals have been more empty than ever before. There was no overload of ICU. Doctors, doctors and nurses were skillful in short-term work. Initially, we found the wave of the virus running towards us to be threatening and were able to understand the infection protection measures. However, there are months of secured evidence and facts that this wave of the virus is only slightly more intense than an ordinary seasonal flu and must be considered much more harmless than, for example, influenza infection in 2017/2018 with 27.000 deaths in Germany. According to the data situation, there hasn’t been a threat to the German population from Covid-19 for months.

(A: So they go on with what they perceive to be their facts and so on. And they're really fed up with the fear and infection hysteria they say in their own words...)

– a life without restrictions, fear and infection hysteria.

That's what they want, to return to normal. M-hm. So but, nothing is going to change. This is literally chiseled in stone, folks. This is the big agenda by the ones who really run everything. The ones who, they own everything in the world, all resources, they own all the agribusinesses, a few corporations, you know. Everything you need to survive, the energy, they own it all. That's the sad part about this system is that they make sure they would own everything. And again, there's no complaints department, right. That's sad indeed.

Now they're, and every, I call it, I think they are just CROOKS! Sellout crooks! Because they're making so much money off of us, as usual. And don't forget supposedly the tab for the money that's going to pay them for all these apps and things, is borrowed money we're told. As we're all lockdown and folks can't earn money. But it's going to take money off you for the rest of your lives and probably three or four generations into the future, the cost of all of it. It's never going to go back to any kind of normal anyway. That's just the truth of it.

All the dystopian movies that you've seen before have to come into effect. That's why they were written, these particular novels and dystopian movies. Do you realize that you've got No Blade of Grass, again, that was one of them paid to terrify the public, you're destroying the planet and you'd end up in a dystopian future where everyone fell apart, and strange fungi or viruses again would break out by themselves, and it was Gaia would have its revenge, and you'd have mayhem, etc. Make Room, Make Room is the novel for Soylent Green. It was called Make Room, Make Room. That was the original title of the novel. The message was to be, there's too many of you, this is what it's going to come down to. It was to change, again, fiction is used primarily to change your thoughts on things. On behalf of your masters.

And here you have these characters now making money off of you for your, for the phones that you buy, hhhch, and the plans that you're on for paying them and so on. There's apps in there for everything, eh.

Smartphone app can hear in cough the difference between asthma or croup - 7news.com.au / 10 Nov 2020

Oh can it really? And when you really read it, it's not quite sure. But everybody's got that thing, oh we can get money for nothing now, money for nothing, eh? I think it was communism, wasn't it communism said that the West, the capitalists will sell us the rope with which we'll hang them. You can apply that and say, you know, as your governments borrow money, well, whoever's governments they are borrow money, [Alan chuckles.] that you will all have to pay off, you know, and they're dishing it out by the millions and billions to their pals and businesses that own the apps and so on. And here they go. Until we are totally in a straitjacket of no rights and freedoms, electronic prison, eh. Just to get a profit off of us all. Here, I'll put that there. So anyway, that's from the Medical Journal of Respiratory Research, this article.

MIT Working On App That Could Detect Coronavirus Based On Cough Sound - boston.cbslocal.com / 30 Oct 2020

I'm sure you've got to know that an app might detect it, you know. [Alan chuckles.]

The European Union…

EU mulls ways for police to access encrypted apps telegraph.co.uk / 9 Nov 2020

(A: It's almost like a repetition of something I read a few month ago. I knew that the EU, European Council, this, you know, is asking for input to make it easier because the security forces can't get through some of the encrypted data. They want to make it easier. Well they can, if they put more time or psy-op warriors on it, you know. Because these warriors are really specialists, and not just in how to screw with your brain and help you destroy yourself actually, or immobilize you, but they're also, a lot of them are specialists completely in IT itself, in hacking and all that.)

The European Council is asking for input to make it easier for security forces to access encrypted data

The European Union is calling on tech companies to make it easier for security services to access encrypted apps to meet terror threats.

(A: Terror threats, you understand, so it's all to do with terror threats. Hm?)

According to a leaked draft of an European Council memo, EU politicians want encrypted apps to provide “technical solutions… to enable authorities to use their investigative powers”.

(A: This article here is, the Telegraph I think it's from. But anyway it goes into how it's just a nuisance they can't get into everything you're sending to people and your personal chat and all that. It's just a nuisance. Because your masters, they've got to keep you safe, you know, from terror. You might wake up one day and be a terrorist. You might have a terrorist thought and say, dammit, I wish the government would get off my back… and that's enough to get you locked up right there, you see.)

(A: Just like you find in the Ministry of Love when Winston is brought in, he's pulled in there, and he meets his neighbor. So you're here too, he says to the neighbor. His neighbor says, yeah, it was my daughter that found out I was, you know, a wrong-think and own-think, and he had basically terrorist thoughts, you see. Because you see, he spoke in his sleep according to the daughter and so she turned him in, you know. And he says, thank God she did, he says, who knows where I might have ended up if she hadn't caught me.)

(A: Well, here you are, folks, it's all here. They're going to, they literally want to know everything you're saying and chatting about. Every darn thing. Because it's to keep you all safe, you might, YOU might... well, it's to stop terror, so obviously since it's all to do with YOU, you must be the terrorist, obviously. Ftt, hhhhh, it makes sense now, eh, you know.)

While EU politicians stopped short of advocating a ban or full backdoors that could hack into encrypted apps, the latest resolution will pile pressure on technology companies to stop adding end-to-end encryption to their apps.

(A: It says… hhhch… there ya go…) the work of police forces had been made “practically impossible despite the fact that the access to such data would be lawful” by encrypted apps. The European Council did not respond to a request for comment.

EU politicians called for the creation of a “better balance” between encryption and security against crime and terror. Him

Hhhhh. You know, I never realized, I really didn't, that there's thousands and thousands and thousands, just like Doctor Kildare, you know. Doctor Kildare, every woman would swoon him, you see, at the very least. He was made to be like a God that cared sso much. And he was a good-looking guy apparently and the women just went gaga you know. He represented so many of them that didn't sleep at night because they worried about you, they really worried about you. Hm? Such humane characters, caring people. And with this Covid stuff and everything that's going on, do you realize that governments, they must be up all night every night of the week, of these bureaucrats and civil servants and politicians, worrying about us, are we safe? Are we safe? Do we have enough cotton wool to wrap ourselves in in case we fall, eh?

Do we have enough distractions, since we don't have time to think things, which are bad things, own-think, eh? Which is bad-think, it's own-think. Which might lead to goodness knows where if you have your own-think. My God... Oh, thinking for yourself, eh? Hhhhh! Wow! So the police are worried, you know, that terrorist things can go on if they can’t hack into everybody's chat. Hhhhhhhhhh, I tell ya. Thank goodness, I've never felt so safe in my life. M-hm. I can see it when I'm online what they've been doing, because my connection will just break, break, break at times, you know, and I have to reconnect it so on. And you know they're into it. And they actually admit they're doing that in some of the articles I'll get to later by the way. So there you go, these folks just care about you. You didn't know they care that much. You used to think that politicians were shallow psychopathic people. And how wrong you are. Ttt.

Interesting, this little article here, it's the Irish Sentinel.

Polish nationalists (A: …right, are…) fired upon by police citing Covid-19 ban (A: That’s the excuse for it, when…) abortion marches allowed (A: Right.)

theirishsentinel.com / 13 Nov 2020

(A: Now, this was international day in Poland where they literally got a lot of their independence back again after World War I. So this is a kind of remembrance time day, you know. So…)

Police shot rubber bullets at Polish nationalists marching through Warsaw in celebration of the country’s Independence Day yesterday.

The violence came as police attempted to enforce a ban on public gatherings as part of nationwide Covid-19 restrictions, despite allowing pro-abortion demonstrators to gather throughout the country over the last three weeks.

(A: Well, it’s the same in the States with the demonstrations and riots as well, etc, as you know. So it’s a very political virus, as I say. And it should tell you too, NEVER forget what they can turn the police to do. NEVER forget that. The stuff that you used to read about, the Stasi and the KGB, the NKVD you know, in the Soviet countries, literally you’re seeing it all being implemented. You really are. You’re seeing the police behave the same way as they’ve always done. Even with invading countries, when they came into Europe in World War II, they'd immediately go to work for the invading power. It's the same. This is what they do. So here they are, yeah, everything else is allowed but, hhhch, but being proud of your nation and celebrating about happiness during all this is forbidden. There you go.)

“Several officers were injured” after being attacked by “hooligans”, the police said.

(A: Well, if they hadn’t started… If they had just stood back and let them have their day, like they’ve allowed everybody else to have their day, then, so what, you know?)

Same thing’s happening in Australia. Certain folk are allowed to have their big, big demonstrations, but nobody else. You're under tyranny obviously. It certainly isn't democracy where you have rights for all, eh. Supposedly. At least on paper.

I'll also put up the link to George Soros, who really is what he says himself, about how disappointed he is and what had been happening with populism as he calls it.

George Soros - Remarks delivered at the World Economic Forum - georgesoros.com / 23 Jan 2020

Matt Hancock (A: …the guy that literally didn’t know that mosquitos transmitted malaria, and they put [Alan chuckles.] in charge of the health for Britain. [Alan chuckles.] I guess he’s right in for the job, eh? So here he is…)

said health chiefs would be asked to be ready in as little as three weeks and get help from the Armed Forces - though a vaccine hasn't actually passed regulator approval yet

(A: Well, they want to fast-track everything as you know. There you go.)

Now, what's next here? We've got... This is important.

US – UK Intel Agencies Declare Cyber War on Independent Media

unlimitedhangout.com / 11 Nov 2020 / Whitney Webb

British and American state intelligence agencies are "weaponizing truth" to quash vaccine hesitancy (A: …it's called, eh?...) as both nations prepare for mass inoculations, in a recently announced "cyber war" to be commanded by (A: Artificial intelligence.) AI-powered arbiters of truth against information sources that challenge official narratives.

(A: It's put up by Whitney Webb. They've got quite a few here from different people and different sources, and the mainstream, you know.)

In just the past week, the national-security states of the United States and United Kingdom have discreetly let it be known

(A: …and they did obviously. You see, everything happens at the same time, that means it's released TO BE spoken about. [Alan chuckles.] It's a fact too. Because don't forget, part of cyber warfare, or psyops, is to terrify you into just complying before they do anything more to you. That's, you know, how it works.)

that the cyber tools and online tactics previously designed for use in the post-9/11 "war on terror" are now being repurposed for use against information sources promoting "vaccine hesitancy" and information related to Covid-19 that runs counter to their state narratives.

(A: Now, everything's psychological warfare including the terminology that's used. You see, deliberately they're putting out vaccine HESITANCY as opposed to vaccine… or, ANTI-vaccine, you know, or vaccine DENIAL, or vaccine CHOICE. You see, so they call it vaccine hesitancy, which means you're going to get it anyway and you're just hesitating a bit. They're not giving you an option NOT to, you see. This is all deliberate.)

A new cyber offensive was launched on Monday by the UK's signal intelligence agency, Government Communications Headquarters (GCHQ), which seeks to target websites that publish content deemed to be “propaganda” that raises concerns regarding state-sponsored Covid-19 vaccine development and the multi-national pharmaceutical corporations involved.

(A: [Alan laughing.] It’s not fascism, folks, NO. [Alan laughing.])

Similar efforts are underway in the United States, with the US military recently funding a CIA-backed firm—stuffed with former counterterrorism officials who were behind the occupation of Iraq and the rise of the so-called Islamic State—to develop an (A: …artificial intelligence…) AI algorithm aimed specifically at new websites promoting “suspected” disinformation related to the Covid-19 crisis and the US military–led Covid-19 vaccination effort known as Operation Warp Speed.

(A: Where’s Captain Kirk when you want warp speed, eh?)

Both countries are preparing to silence independent journalists who raise legitimate concerns over pharmaceutical industry corruption or the extreme secrecy surrounding state-sponsored Covid-19 vaccination efforts…

It continues too with some of the history of some of the drug companies and what they've been up to. But yeah, it's bad times when your country's using the systems they set up supposedly to attack other nations, hhhch, and they're doing it to their own people. This is a dangerous thing when your tax money is being used for psyops on their own people. This isn't just the ability to use propaganda on your people, like they did, again, when Obama was in I think they allowed, they passed a law in the States to allow their government and the agencies that work for the government to start using propaganda on their own people internally. That was the start of it really. Most countries do it anyway because we didn't have the rights the US used to have.

But here you go, when they're using weaponized organizations, with very, very effective efficient weaponization of the thought and techniques to disrupt thought, to create opinion, to destroy opinion, to destroy the people themselves by, and they have killed a lot of people through encouraging suicide and things like that. That's psyops. Using other countries is very effective, they know exactly what they are doing. These aren't little, these aren't little, little, little clubs. These are massive organizations with massive funding. With the top, again, CIA. It's typical techniques of alternate types of warfare where literally they've got CIA operatives who are psychologists and psychiatrists and behaviorists and neuroscientists and even doctors and so on, yeah, all through it. They admit that in their own documentation when you go into them.

So anyway, this all came out again last week or so, what's going on here with this kind of thing too. And the public have no idea really. But the public are quite safe. [Alan chuckles.] I have to tell you, it's very much like what they used to say about evil, you know, they would say that people who literally are ignorant of religion or don't care about it, right, Satan will leave alone, that's what they used to say, you know, a little quip, because they belong to him anyway, you see. Well, it's the same thing here. People who are ignorant of what's going on and they're obedient, nice, good little nice citizens, haven't got a clue, they'll be left alone by the psyops because they're just looking at pornography probably and little bits and pieces of things that excite them or keep them happy. But nothing to do with anything that really matters. Certainly not a choice to stand up for anything, you know. So they're quite safe, they'll be left alone.

It's only for people who are thinking and who are asking questions, like, what on earth is going on with our elected representatives and our democratic rights, etc.? …for countries that think they had some kind of democracy. Including a Republic, because a Republic really was a Democratic Republic, it still had the rights to vote, for instance, that's a democratic right. Democracy really doesn't have any real hard and fixed rules as to what a democracy really is, except to vote, you get the right to vote, that's it. What they do once they're in is kind of up to them.

Canadian military wants to establish new organization to use propaganda, other techniques to influence Canadians

ottawacitizen.com / 2 Nov 2020

(A: Why is the military going to use propaganda to influence Canadians? They're supposed to serve Canadians, not propagandize them.)

The Canadian Forces wants to establish a new organization that will use propaganda and other techniques to try to influence the attitudes, beliefs and behaviours of Canadians, according to documents obtained by this newspaper.

The plan comes on the heels of the Canadian Forces spending more than $1 million to train public affairs officers on behaviour modification techniques of the same sort used by the parent firm of Cambridge Analytica, as well as a controversial and bizarre propaganda training mission in which the military forged letters from the Nova Scotia government to warn the public that wolves were wandering in the province.

(A: It was a little exercise they did apparently, so far as we can make out. But this article is from the Ottawa Citizen, and it says…)

The new Defence Strategic Communication group will advance “national interests will advance “national interests by using defence activities to influence the attitudes, beliefs and behaviours of audiences,” according to the document dated October 2020. Target audiences for such an initiative would be the Canadian public as well as foreign populations in countries where military forces are sent.

(A: They’re going to advance national interests, eh…)

(A: Eh, there ya go. Dangerous times when they're doing that to the public, folks. This is a dangerous thing to do, the crossover with the military doing that. This isn't putting sandbanks up to stop flooding, you know. Working on techniques of brainwashing, hhhch, for destructive purposes, that's what these organizations do. They don't go in there just to say, let's make them a bit more left wing, you know. No, they'll look up leaders in different groups and so on and literally they'll have thousands of folk hammering them saying, pretending they're real citizens, like bots you know, and making them feel bad about themselves and things like that. These are dangerous organizations. They are part of the military WAR machine and now the war is on the public. Hm? N-n-n.)

The document is in a draft form, but work is already underway on some aspects of the plan (A: I know they’ve been using it already.) and some techniques have been already tested on the Canadian public. (A: So there ya go.)

But the office of Defence Minister Harjit Sajjan said Sunday that the plan, at least for now, is not authorized to proceed. (A: It’s been proceeding. They did it [Alan chuckles.] already.) Sajjan has raised concerns about some of the activities related to such influence and propaganda operations. “No such plan has been approved, nor will it be,” (A: Well, they’ll probably keep it secret.) Floriane Bonneville, Sajjan’s press secretary, (A: [Alan chuckles.] Everybody’s got a PR spokesman, to soften things, eh, or obfuscate what they’re trying to say.) said after being asked by this newspaper about the initiative.

But a series of town halls were already conducted last week for a number of military personnel on the strategies contained in the draft plan.

The report quotes Brig.-Gen. Jay Janzen, director general military public affairs, who stated, “The motto ‘who dares, wins’ (A: That’s from the SAS, you know.) is as applicable to strategic communication as it is to warfare.”

(A: I think you should remind him too, it says, we are the pilgrims, you know, Masters, we shall go, it’s supposed to be, over the land and sea and water and so on, but NOT in your own country, you know. You should just put out the rest of it out there.)

The initiative also proposes the creation of a new research capability established to analyze and collect information from the social media accounts of Canadians (A: There ya go. This is a war machine looking at you like it would look at people in different countries that they were going to go in and demolish. Hm?), non-governmental organizations, industry and the news media, according to the report.

(A: But this is with the sanction of your own government. And you're going to VOTE for this government? Hm?)

The Canadian Forces have already tested that capability earlier this year. This newspaper reported that a team assigned to a Canadian military intelligence unit monitored and collected information from people's social media accounts in Ontario, claiming such data-mining was needed to help troops who were to work in long-term care homes…

(A: [Alan chuckles.] You always put a psyops warfare team in to see how the public will look upon them going in and helping out long-term care homes, eh. That's what it was all for, you see. Taking all your personal details and stuff and getting into all your computers just to.... Aughhhh, the lies you get. But that's what psyops machines do, they're LIARS, folks. [Alan chuckles.])

That initiative, aimed at people's Facebook, Twitter and Instagram accounts, involved collecting comments made by the public about the provincial government's failure to take care of the elderly. (A: WHY were they using them for that, eh?) That data was then turned over to the Ontario government, with a warning from the team it represented a "negative" reaction from the public.

(A: Do you realize, did they also hand over the names of people who would complain about government, what they were saying? You see, if it goes a step forward, the next step into totalitarianism is to round these folk up because of their points of view. And then they disappear or go to the camps and gulags. I'm not kidding you, folks. That's where, you don't put the military into these organiz… on the public, don't set them loose on the public. I don't care what branch it is. You can't do that. The military is a WAR machine you understand, that's what its purpose is. So…)

Military officers see nothing wrong with such collection of data as it is already in the public domain on social media accounts.

(A: There you go. There's your justification/rationalization as he goes forward step-by-step. That's exactly how they do it.)

They concede the team should not have been assigned to military intelligence, but under the new plan it will be controlled by the military's public affairs branch.

(A: There ya go.)

But others have questioned how collecting information on the public's views concerning Ontario Premier Doug Ford was even relevant to how the Canadian Forces were to care for elderly residents.

(A: Exactly! What they're telling you is lies, folks. They're doing it for, hhhch, other purposes, obviously, you know. But if they're handing folks names over, and what they're using and so on, that's a dangerous, dangerous… This is where horror comes down the pike. It really does. This is the stuff that Solzhenitsyn warned you of, this kind of behavior. M-hm. So…)

Sajjan requested an investigation be done into the data collection and has also limited at least temporarily some of what the military calls influence activities.

(A: Why does the military got ANY influence activities on its population?)

The military, however, noted in the plan that it will consult the federal

(A: That's okay then. You see, here again is the stuff, how they rationalized it…)

it will consult the federal privacy commissioner before it launches its collection of Canadians' online information.

(A: [Alan laughing.] Oh, we'll talk to this Commissioner, who has no powers apparently, the commissioner.)

The public affairs enhancement plan

(A: Oh I like the term for that…)

The public affairs enhancement plan reflects the military leadership's view they can shape and direct the attitudes of Canadians if the right techniques are applied.

(A: Oh, it's an ENHANCEMENT, it's not brainwashing, it's an enhancement.)

"Defence StratCom will focus on effects and outcomes among key audiences and will provide clear direction on aligning actions, efforts and resources in pursuit of strategic objectives," the plan added.

(A: I wonder if they'll tell us what the plan, what the objectives are, though, eh.)

Some in the Canadian Forces already attempted to conduct a trial run of such techniques.

This newspaper reported in July the military had planned a propaganda campaign aimed at heading off civil disobedience by Canadians during the coronavirus pandemic.

(A: The military was getting put on this. Not just the police, and it's the military, right?)

That campaign was to use similar propaganda tactics to those employed against the Afghan population during the war in Afghanistan, including loudspeaker trucks to transmit government messages. The propaganda operation was halted after concerns were raised about the ethics behind such techniques.

(A: Well, I wonder who would object to that, for goodness' sake, eh.)

The public affairs enhancement plan also calls for harnessing the social media accounts of select Canadian Forces staff to push out pre-approved government and military messages to the public. Although the social media activity would be seen to be coming from the personal accounts of military personnel, it would actually be Canadian Forces public affairs officers behind the scenes crafting and coordinating the messages.

(A: In other words, you've already got your strata of lies and liars already in place doing the usual stuff, eh. This is what they do. This is what they're trained to do, eh.)

The enhancement plan also calls for improving links to military-friendly academics

(A: Actually they're all on board with CSIS in Canada which is like a kind of branch of the CIA, really, set up by I think it was Pierre Trudeau that got that one put in, the kind of private intelligence agency throughout Canada, and it's very secretive. Anyway…)

military-friendly academics

(A: And they have a lot of professors involved by the way.)

and retired senior military staff so they can be used to push out approved Canadian Forces messages either on social media or in their interactions with journalists.

Sajjan had originally approved the weaponization of public affairs initiative, started in 2015, along with a separate but significant expansion of military propaganda capabilities for various units. The Liberals outlined in their 2017 defence strategy policy the need for the Canadian military to become more involved in propaganda and information warfare.

(A: Well, we all thought it was going to be for abroad though.)

But attempts to influence the public haven't always worked out. Last year, the Department of National Defence and the Canadian Forces planned a public relations campaign to counter what bureaucrats and officers believed were false claims that the military had a problem with racists in the ranks. But that plan had to be scuttled after alleged racists and far-right sympathizers with links to military became involved in a series of high-profile incidents, undercutting the message of the PR scheme that the severity of the issue had been exaggerated.

(A: They've got everybody at each other's throats, you know that. They can stir up things. That's what they do, psyops get everybody, they get tribes fighting each other too, folks, across the world. This is what you do, you know, and they're using it on the public. And the folk will read these articles and say, oh my God, look at these racists and so on. They don't realize, no, their government’s creating it all. [Alan chuckles.])

As part of that PR effort, dossiers were created about journalists the military believed would cover the issue of racists in the ranks,

(A: You see, they’ve got their own embedded journalists. It’s not just someone who, they have them permanently in their own countries. That’s why you’ve got a unified media across Canada and the States, all the same stories, same points of view, same everything. The CIA, you know.)

including the CBC’s (A: That's the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.) Murray Brewster. The dossier about Brewster, who has since broken a number of stories about the far-right in the Canadian Forces, contained transcripts of his interviews with senior military staff and the warning, “He’s familiar with the defence system, and his reporting, while factual, often emphasizes the mistakes and shortcoming of DND (A: Department of National Defense.) and the CAF.”

Bonneville said the minister did not and will not authorize the creation of the dossiers on journalists. She did not, however, provide an explanation on why the files were created by Canadian Forces staff.

In addition, under Sajjan’s watch, an invitation-only Facebook page has been created where serving and retired military and DND public affairs staff share information about journalists. (A: There ya go. See. Hhhch, the first folk that you round up in totalitarian system are any journalists that are not on board with it. That’s what they do. That’s exactly what they do.)

under Sajjan’s watch, an invitation-only Facebook page has been created where serving and retired military and DND public affairs staff share information about journalists. There are more than 400 participants on the Facebook page, which is officially supported by the DND.

That's just one article from the Ottawa Citizen. I tell you, they won't be even pleased with that article. They're not supposed to… you're supposed to be dumb and ignorant, you know. M-hm. And here's one of the propaganda, it's thought to be one of the propaganda exercises they did, again, by the same journalist for the Ottawa Citizen. It says…

Forged letter warning about wolves on the loose part of Canadian Forces propaganda campaign that went awry

ottawacitizen.com / 14 Oct 2020

A letter from the Nova Scotia government sent out to residents to warn about a pack of wolves on the loose in the province was forged by Canadian military personnel as part of a propaganda training mission that went off the rails.

The letter told residents to be wary of wolves that had been reintroduced into the area by the provincial and federal governments and warned the animals were now roaming the Annapolis Valley. The letter, which later became public, sparked concern and questions among residents but was later branded as "fake" by the Nova Scotia government which didn't know the military was behind the deception.

(A: [Alan laughing.] Ahhhh, I tell ya. Oh what a wicked web we weave, when first we practice to deceive. There you go, eh. Hhhch…)

The training also involved using a loudspeaker

(A: No kidding, listen to this… You almost think it's fake news but this is what they put out, this is what they put out too. Psyops is astonishing when you read the things they've done in the past, and what they've made people believe and so on. And part of it is a terror campaign, like they did in selected areas where they'll terrify the public, like stories with this, ooooh, ravenous wolves and stuff, to see how you react. And they'll study you, you see. That's your tax money at work.)

The training also involved using a loudspeaker to generate wolf sounds, the Canadian Forces confirmed to this newspaper.

(A: I think what they're really doing is having a really intelligent wolf tell the rest of the wolves, when you hear these sounds ignore them, they're just playing on the dumb humans, you know.)

The fake letter was part of new skills being tested by the military as it hones its expertise (A: This is training the people, you know, the recruits and stuff, let's use the public, the idiots, the idiot public for, you know, to perfect our techniques of deception and manipulation, eh.) for launching propaganda missions at home and abroad. The letter was developed by information warfare specialists with the Halifax Rifles, a reserve unit.

They not only forged the logo of the Wildlife Division of Nova Scotia's Department of Lands and Forestry but they also attributed the letter to a real Nova Scotia government employee, even though they didn’t have permission to do so.

(A: You see how they could really get folk even attacking each other, or doing worse, eh? You understand? This is what they do abroad, you know. They can get tribal leaders so riled up against each other that they’ll, in order to have them knock each other off, you know, eliminate them. That’s how they do it.)

A phone number on the letter, which residents were to call if they had concerns about the wolves, was traced by this newspaper to the work number of an Environment Canada employee, who also appears to be a Canadian Forces reservist.

The Canadian Forces revealed its role behind the fake letter last week to the Nova Scotia government and then on the weekend to local news media. Media outlets reported military staff had written the letter but didn’t know why.

Emma Briant, a professor at Bard College in the U.S. who specializes in researching military propaganda, said what the Canadian Forces did was a major violation of ethics. “This is way over the top,” Briant said. “It’s a very dangerous path when you start targeting your own public with false information and trying to manipulate them.”

(A: Well, the government’s allowed them to do it now, according to the other articles.)

Briant said the deception has nothing to do with wolves; it was likely an exercise in the testing the military’s skills in trying to manipulate the population with false information. “You start a rumour about wolves on the loose and then you see how the public reacts,” she added.

(A: And they’ve got, you see they’ve got access too, to all your chitchat in real time. That’s how they do it. They can actually get access to Internet everything, literally bypass, they’ve got all the back doors into all your devices.)

Similar deception operations were tried by contractors (A: And this organization is now part of the US, contractor to the US military.) of SCL (A: …right…), a propaganda company which had worked for the U.S. and British militaries in Afghanistan and other locations in Asia. In those cases, false information was transmitted to villagers to convince them not to send their children to religious schools where they might be radicalized. But instead of being truthful, the contractors concocted an information campaign claiming pedophiles were operating in religious schools and parents shouldn’t send them there because their children would be in danger of being molested.

(A: The world is a very deceptive place. And that's what I'm saying, you have no idea of how many, I call it the manpower if you like, although it's men and women, there's just as many of them quite happy to do this kind of work too. The psychopathic personalities flourish in this kind of society, you know. M-hm. It's like The Lives of Others, you know, that movie.)

The Nova Scotia propaganda training comes as the Canadian Forces spools up its capabilities to conduct information warfare, influence operations and other deception missions aimed at populations overseas and, if necessary, the Canadian public.

(A: That part it says came from, um…)

Le Bouthillier said he didn't know why the loudspeaker was set up…

(A: …blah, blah, blah. So I guess, um, anyway it's been okayed by, it says, not okayed by senior leaders. So they're already passing the buck saying they can't find a senior leader that approved it.)

The training initiative did not follow the established approval process and was not okayed by senior leaders, he added.

(A: This is deception, you know. But anyway…)

The Nova Scotia propaganda training comes (A: As I said earlier…) as the Canadian Forces spools up its capabilities to conduct information warfare, influence operations and other deception missions aimed at populations overseas and, if necessary, the Canadian public.

Briant revealed on Monday the Canadian Forces spent more than $1 million in training its public affairs officers in skills to influence targeted populations.

(A: There's a lot more money going to be given to them just for domestic purposes actually.)

In July, this newspaper reported a team assigned to a Canadian military intelligence unit monitored and collected information from people's social media accounts in Ontario, claiming such data-mining was needed to help troops working in long-term care homes during the coronavirus pandemic. The collection involved comments made by the public about the provincial government's failure in taking care of the elderly in the province. That data was turned over to the Ontario government, with a warning from the team it represented a "negative" reaction from the public.

This newspaper reported at the same time that the Canadian Forces planned a propaganda campaign aimed at heading off civil disobedience by Canadians during the coronavirus pandemic. The plan used similar propaganda tactics to those employed against the Afghan population during the war in Afghanistan, including loudspeaker trucks to transmit government messages. The propaganda operation was never put into action.

(A: So they say.)

In addition, some Canadian military officers have suggested creating fake Facebook and other social media accounts for carrying out deception operations as well as harnessing social media accounts of Canadian Forces members, military-friendly academics and retired senior military staff to challenge opposition politicians and journalists who raise controversial issues regarding the Canadian Forces.

(A: I love how they always justify it when they've, when they're stepping forward in places where they shouldn't be moving.)

The Canadian Forces stresses that it follows ethical guidelines in its propaganda operations.

But others inside the military say that isn't the case, pointing to the Nova Scotia operation as a prime example as it violated Canadian privacy law and the Criminal Code when soldiers forged documents.

(A: What Canadian privacy law? Remember two articles ago I mentioned that they had already approached the privacy officer for Canada, this member of Parliament, that's all he does supposedly, he has no real power to do anything, just to seek approval to do more on the public. I mean, isn't it amazing?)

The fake wolf letter was dated Sept. 19, two days after Chief of the Defence Staff Gen. Jon Vance met with senior military leaders to explain "the value of ethical decision making and the importance of maintaining the credibility of the CAF (A: Canadian Armed Forces.) by being honest and transparent in everything we do."

[Alan laughing.] Ah, dear, dear, eh. You’ve got to understand though, you see, in the military in these kind of operations and these particular sections and areas they're given a complete freehand to do whatever they want on the public of different nations that are targeted. And they are completely callous about it. Youngsters see it just like wargaming everything, it's fun to them. Let's see who they can manipulate and get to kill each other, and how to destroy different sections that are standing up against whatever it is, and how to destroy and annihilate different movements that get up. Even movements, especially movements that rise up even peaceably and politically and try and get committees formed to get foreign troops out of their countries. They'll go to, they'll, it doesn't matter what they do to them, you'll do whatever you could to destroy them. And that's what happens here, folks. They'll threaten their families. They'll select maybe one of their wives and pull them aside sometimes, and give them a little warning, you know, about their children. This is the dirty, dirty trick squad of all kinds, you wouldn't believe it. And they should not be operating inside your own country. They should not be. No way.

Now, I'm going to touch on, hhhch, Justin Trudeau who carries on in his father's footsteps of being a global citizen, a citizen of the world, as Pierre used to talk about it too. This article says, it's from the Global Citizens organization.

Justin Trudeau Committed an Extra $400 Million in Global Aid to Tackle COVID-19

globalcitizen.org / 29 Sept 2020

Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau committed $400 million for global initiatives tackling COVID-19 at a United Nations event on Tuesday morning.

The High-Level Event on Financing the 2030 Agenda

(A: That's sustainable development, and the agenda for the 21st century, 2030 is part of it. It's segmented up into 15-year periods of things that have to be fulfilled within each 15 years. But I always suggested folk read the whole thing, Agenda 21. Anyway…)

for Sustainable Development

(A: Again, that was all down to the climate change thing, another excuse for it.)

in the Era of COVID-19 and Beyond was co-hosted by Trudeau, UN Secretary-General António Guterres, and Jamaican Prime Minister Andrew Holness.

The meeting sought to bring together heads of state, government officials, and representatives of international organizations,

(A: You know, the folk who just spend your money…)

the private sector, and civil society to discuss how to recover from the COVID-19 crisis and work towards achieving the UN's Global Goals.

(A: Well, I don't think they asked the general citizenry. It's always selected people that say yes to everything that they ask in these meetings.)

The new international development funding will be used for trusted partners (A: Again, trusted partners, you see.) working to address COVID-19 on the ground, helping with pandemic recovery in developing countries.

(A: It's a public relations exercise, even the article.)

"Canada believes that a strong, coordinated response across the world and across sectors is essential. This pandemic has provided an opportunity for a reset," Trudeau said

(A: That's the great reset for the World Economic Forum. So it's an opportunity, this Covid thing, and it's given us an opportunity for reset, and the whole agenda for a new way of living. [Alan chuckles.] Which is something you've got to read from the World Economic Forum's site itself.)

during the videoconference. "This is our chance to accelerate our pre-pandemic efforts to reimagine (A: You see, that's the term they're all using, reimagining this and reimagining economic systems, reimagining living, wellness, education, it's all reimagining.) economic systems that actually address global challenges like extreme poverty, inequality, and climate change."

(A: They really care about you all, you know.)

So anyway I'll put this article up from the Global Citizen's website and see what you think and so on. But again, it's what you expect, isn't it? They're all on board. We said this months and months ago, that this is really an excuse to push the whole agenda right through. To crash the world economy, completely crash it as you would have in a true world war. You see, we've never had crashed economies even in world wars, you know, it never got this far. And so quick and efficient, because they terrified the public with unified, again unification, a unified campaign of terror on the public. And here you go with the new way of living that was drafted up by the United Nations characters along with the World Economic Forum, the World Bank, and all the usual people who run your whole lives, the 1% at the very, very top naturally. Who really have sleepless nights worrying about you. They want to help you, you know, just something that they do. That's why they spend so much money in creating world government organizations that you don't elect, and uniting nations to get like the EU and things like that. They just want to take care of you, you know. Help you. Selfless people they are.

Of course at the very, very top you just simply have the eugenicists and megalomaniacs, psychopaths. They have acquired the world's wealth in their hands, the few 1%, everything you need to live on, and they've decided they really don't need so many of you anymore. They keep telling us that, as they want to help you, you know. M-hm. Hhhhh. What would you do without such selfless people? I don't know.

I'm also going to put up National Vital Statistics System. I'll put that up too.

CDC, National Center for Health Statistics - New ICD Code for Reporting Deaths COVID-19

cdc.gov / 24 Mar 2020

New ICD code introduced for COVID-19 deaths

(A: I'll put that one up as well maybe.)

Steven Schwartz, PhD

Director – Division of Vital Statistics

National Center for Health Statistics (A: …in Maryland it says here.)

And…

Firms will be banned from advertising junk foods

(A: So, you think this is, is this fake news, or what, or is it real, right, eh? But it's in The Sun newspaper, The Sun in Britain.)

Firms will be banned from advertising junk foods like sausages rolls

(A: I also saw that too in another paper.)

and fish fingers online, under new plans

thesun.co.uk / 10 Nov 2020

(A: You see, it isn't just austerity. You're going to be trained how to eat healthily and eat very little. So they can't advertise sausage rolls and fish fingers and so on. It says…)

It comes days after kids were effectively banned from playing sport during lockdown.

(A: [Alan chuckles.])

Campaigners warned that even spreads such as Marmite and mustard could be hit by the ban

(A: There ya go. And...)

“No more fish and chips, no more Cadbury's chocolate, no more pork pies and stilton. (A: …it says.)

“Far from new restrictions British retailers and consumers need new freedoms, and the government needs to reject the insanity of this suggestion that threatens to ruin the recovery after this pandemic ends.”

Well, good luck if you think it’s ending. This part is to be about 2 to 3 times more severe than the little warming up exercise they give you up into March, you know, March and April.

Elon Musk, of course, you probably read that too…

Elon Musk continues to cast doubt about ‘bogus’ COVID-19 test results

nypost.com / 13 Nov 2020

(A: ...it says here. That's his own words.)

(A: It says here that…)

Elon Musk sowed doubts about the accuracy of coronavirus tests on Friday — just hours after tweeting that he took four rapid tests with conflicting results.

(A: …all from the same, using the same nurse and the same test.)

The Tesla boss and fifth-richest man in the world (A: Again, a front.) had initially tweeted Thursday night that “Something extremely bogus is going on” regarding COVID-19 testing. “Two tests came back negative, two came back positive. Same machine, same test, same nurse.”

(A: There ya go. I guess on the same day.)

Media outlets quickly jumped on Musk’s tweets with stories highlighting his positive diagnosis — provoking the prickly tech entrepreneur to protest.

“Technically, I tested positive, then negative twice, then positive again, so ‘Elon Musk Tests Negative for Covid’ is an equally correct title,” he tweeted.

Anyway, he said apparently the only thing that he had was a slight sniffle, like a cold, a common cold. Mind you too, a common cold is also a Covid, part of the Covid family. But there you go, he's not happy at all. So he's got another test, a different kind of test sent off to see what that's going to come back as. [Alan chuckles.] But this is quite normal when you see these tests, eh.

I'm going to put a YouTube up too, I think it was put out by the World Economic Forum.

World Economic Forum: "You'll own nothing, and you'll be happy" - youtube.com / 28 Oct 2020

This article here is by Countercurrents and it says…

Own Nothing and Be Happy: Being Human in 2030

countercurrents.org / 9 Nov 2020

The World Economic Forum’s (WEF) annual meeting at the end of January in Davos, Switzerland, brings together international business and political leaders, economists and other high-profile individuals to discuss global issues.

(A: And Klaus Schwab, one of the founders, and it says, who's also in for the great reset, eh.)

The great reset entails a transformation of society resulting in permanent restrictions on fundamental liberties and mass surveillance as entire sectors are sacrificed to boost the monopoly and hegemony of pharmaceuticals corporations, high-tech/big data giants, Amazon, Google, major global chains, the digital payments sector, biotech concerns, etc.

(A: It talks about using the Covid 19 lockdowns and so on. But yeah, you'll see little, I'll put a YouTube up as well where they actually go through this little wonderful thing that you'll own nothing but you'll be happy. That's one of their slogans from the WEF, World Economic Forum. By 2030 you'll own nothing and be happy. They've decided how you’re going to live, and you're going to be, remember I talked about it too, I went through the whole terminology of the psychological warfare program called the wellness, wellness program. And folk say, what's wrong with wellness? Because you've already adapted to it. Well, we're wellness, you know. I used to give talks 20 years ago, I says, look, do you ever, do folk ever say to you, how's your wellness today? No. No. But what is it?, Oh, how's your health, you know? Yeah, yeah, they say that. Well now it's, how is your wellness, you know.)

(A: This wellness idea was to eventually get you trained step by little step, short step, short step, all the way into now, into, well you'll own nothing and you'll be happy by 2030. Because you see, and I even give the talks about it, how they'll even give you drugs and things to make you feel happy. You could be shoveling manure out of the bier; you might think you're on the surface of the moon watching the stars or something and feel all quite happy about things. In other words, you'll feel well, you see, as opposed to...)

(A: Remember what Aldous Huxley said in the Mike Wallace interview? He said, with the techniques that they had back then, you know, he says, they could persuade the public to do things that might not be in the best, their own best interests. Well, that's what your wellness program actually is. You might not have much, you might have less than other people even, but you're going to feel happy about everything. Well, perhaps you shouldn't be feeling happy about everything. And if you are feeling it, WHAT'S happened to you, what's been DONE to you? So anyway I'll put this article up. It's not too bad. You'll see…)

A happy smiling face is depicted (A: …on the video…) while a drone delivers a product to a household, no doubt ordered online and packaged by a robot in a giant Amazon warehouse: (A: …and it says…) 'no humans were involved in manufacturing, packaging or delivering this product'; rest assured, it is virus- and bacteria-free – because even in 2030, they will need to keep the fear narrative alive and well to maintain full-spectrum dominance over the population.

And that's a fact, folks. This is not to end. It's not to end. This is a whole retraining program for all of humanity, if you go along with it, you know. And look what you are up against too, when your own governments are using your own military forces to do psy-op operations on you. Hm? All of you. What kind of forces do you have that are quite willing and happy to do it on their own population? That tells you, that's another scary thing too, to realize that, yeah, they'll go along with it. Well, what's the next step, eh? All of those countries in the past you've been taught to hate and hate and hate, look what they did to the people... Hey, this is how it all comes along, folks. It's to keep you safe, you know. Yeah, I'm telling you, it's to keep you all safe. So I'll put up that little video on that too for those that want to see it.

Remember, once again, cuttingthroughthematrix.com. Send a few bucks my way. Don't postpone it, do it now. [Alan chuckles.] Because folk forget it, as soon as I stop saying it folk just forget it, you see. Because this is a, you know, I have no ax to grind. I have no personal benefit. I have no political party to push either in all of this either. I'm not backed by anybody else, any organization, or funded by them, you know. And I certainly don't front for anybody either. It's just me. So send a few bucks. Cuttingthroughthematrix.com. You can buy the books and discs if you want. Remember the payment methods, PayPal, send cash, check, you can send little international, a little money order even from the bank in fact. You can use Money Gram. There's different ways to get cash out there. So please do it and help me tick along.

Because as I say, I really, I know the groups are funded and who funds them. [Alan chuckles.] And I won't play the sour grapes thing, you know, at all. So you can't accuse me of that. But I know who they are, and it's not just speculation on my behalf. I'll just tell you to send a few bucks my way and help me tick along myself. Because I'm not selling you anything else, and I don't give you any products that make you live forever. And I have no instant cure for anything either. Unfortunately. So keep the money flowing and hopefully I can keep ticking along.

Now, into the rest of this talk here, hhhch, it's The Covid Pandemic. It’s from Global Research.

The Covid “Pandemic”: Destroying People’s Lives. Engineered Economic Depression.

(A: Well, that’s warfare, you see.) Global “Coup d’Etat”?

globalresearch.ca / 12 Nov 2020

(A: It goes into the different things that have been done to you.)

Red Zones, the facemask, social distancing, the closing down of schools, colleges and universities, no more family gatherings, no birthday celebrations, music, the arts: no more cultural events, sport events are suspended, no more weddings, “love and life” is banned outright.

(A: Isn’t that the truth, eh? This is total war, total war to get you into the new system, folks, that the elite like Klaus Schwab have designed for you. And all the media is on board with it. ALL of them. ALL of the big media is on board with this. You’re as well as having this one name for all the media and they're like one company name, because they're ALL the same. Without exception really. It says...)

And in several countries, Christmas is on hold …

It’s the destruction of people’s lives. It is the destabilization of civil society. And for What?

The Lies are sustained by a massive media disinformation campaign. 24/7, Incessant and repetitive “Covid alerts” for the last ten months. … It is a process of social engineering.

(A: It's actually a war of terror, isn't it, really?)

Manipulation of the Estimates. The RT-PCR Tests are Misleading.

(A: ...and so on. It goes into in more detail and in another link it goes into the PCR test and…)

According to Dr. Pascal Sacré in an article entitled: The COVID-19 RT-PCR Test: How to Mislead All Humanity. Using a “Test” To Lock Down Society: .

This misuse of RT-PCR technique is used as a relentless and intentional strategy by some governments, supported by scientific safety councils and by the dominant media, to justify excessive measures such as the violation of a large number of constitutional rights…

(A: …and so on, by the use of these false positives it says.)

… and not on a real number of patients.

(A: It gives you too a link to the CDC, government, right, hhhch, the government CDC, and it says…)

The criteria have been changed. The CDC instructions are crystal clear. (A: The link is here.)

COVID-19 will be the underlying cause of death “more often than not”

(A: That's the instructions they put out to all the guys on how to diagnose and put on the death certificates. But it's a big agenda. The whole agenda is here, folks, for those who haven't figured it out. Economic warfare, that's what you do in warfare, you see, you go for the economy, if you can stop it and disrupt the economy. Well here they've pretty well almost eliminated it, it's, there's nothing to guess at here at all.)

The Covid crisis is a sophisticated instrument of the power elites. It has all the features of a carefully planned intelligence op. using “deception and counter-deception”.

(A: That’s how it is, eh. This article also touches on about the Covid psy-op, you see, counter deception and so on, deception and counter deception.)

Leo Strauss: “viewed intelligence as a means for policymakers to attain and justify policy goals, not to describe the realities of the world.” And that is precisely what they are doing in relation to Covid-19.

(A: You see…)

“…not to describe the realities of the world.”

(A: You see, facts don’t matter. You see? M-hm. It’s…)

“…a means for policymakers to attain and justify policy goals…”

(A: …to push policy through, that’s all.)

(A: Also, the video of the Event 201...)

Video: The Event 201 Pandemic Exercise. October 18, 2019. Focusses on the extent of the pandemic. (A: This is the exercise before it all came out.) Also addresses within the simulation how do deal with online social media and so-called “misinformation”. (Listen carefully)

(A: And you get to listen carefully to it too, eh? I'll put a little video up on that too, I think, at least part of that exercise, it's quite a long one. But you'll hear them on how to deal with folk online and how to call it MISinformation, how they'd be unified, and how to attack them. They even had members of, again, they were admitted, Facebook and all the other platforms on board with this before, hhhch, this is before you had Covid 19, hhhch, this is last year, eh. Then he goes into different kinds of economic takedown.)

Macro-Economic Intervention. Evolution of the Global Economy

(A: How to devolve it as well. And give them shock treatment, you’re still to see a lot of that yet. It’s coming though, you know.)

History of Economic “Shock Treatment”. From The Structural Adjustment Programme (SAP) to “Global Adjustment (GA)”

I'll put that up as well for those that want to read it. Another one too is... It’s in Britain, you know, that GCHQ, so they have their spies...

GCHQ spies launch cyber counter-attack against anti-vaccine propaganda being spread by Russia

dailymail.co.uk / 9 Nov 2020

The government is determined to tackle anti-vaxxer propaganda spread online

GCHQ has launched a new campaign targeting hostile propaganda by Russia

Russian propagandists are targeting the Oxford vaccine with monkey memes

GCHQ has launched a cyber counter-attack against anti-vaccine propaganda spread by Russia, according to sources.

(A: Russia they claim here now. You see how they… And by the way, this is deliberate. They'll say by Russia because it gets, they have a way of getting around doing it on their own public, you see. They'll say it's to counter propaganda spread from Russia, they have to follow it from its source to Britain. This is how they're getting around all the little…)

(A: They really treat you like idiots, don't they!? Unfortunately they do, they're so cocksure of getting their own way all the time. And again too, the previous articles they'll say vaccine HESITANCY. This is now ANTI-VAXXERS, you know, if you don't want THIS vaccine because it's a novel experimental vaccine, right, and it alters your DNA eventually, as opposed to the old types of vaccinations. You're going to be an ANTI VAXXER, not just an anti-THIS vaccine, you see what I'm saying, how they play the games? Like Holocaust denier or something like that, or a climate change denier. Same thing. They always use the same techniques, that they've trained the public to recoil from, these terms, you see. A DENIER! HHHHH!!! So there ya go. You're anti-vaxxer! No, I just don't want this one because you know... Anyway it says…)

GCHQ has launched a cyber counter-attack against anti-vaccine propaganda spread by Russia, according to sources.

The spy agency has begun its cyber operation targeting hostile states and is using a toolkit developed to tackle disinformation and recruitment material shared by Islamic State.

(A: The Islamic State it says here, right. So it's been used before.)

The activity being targeted is linked to Moscow, who is thought to be attempting to exploit the chaos caused by the pandemic to undermine the West and strengthen its own interests.

(A: What a piece of propaganda that is, eh. I-yi-yi-yi-yi.)

It is the latest step in the government's bid to tackle a rising tide of fake information being spread about a vaccine.

(A: This is from the same media that's hyped terror and terror all the way from last February, regardless of facts, you know. And here they are wanting you to believe them now? [Alan laughing.])

The need to shutdown such information is growing increasingly more important as scientists close in on a reliable vaccine against Covid-19.

(A: So it's a war strategy, they're closing in on reliable vaccine, and they need to shut down such information, right. I've never seen anything that government's allowed to get passed that doesn't expand as soon as it is passed, any law or any regulation or whatever. It will just expand. Well, now you can't do this, now you can't say that, blah blah blah, you know. So they give you some probably fake things about cartoons put out about Boris Johnson that they claim is from Russia.)

A government source told the Times: 'GCHQ has been told to take out antivaxers online and on social media.

(A: Now, what do they mean TAKE OUT anti-vaxxers? You know where that terminology is used, eh?)

There are ways they have used to monitor and disrupt terrorist propaganda.'

(A: So, now you're a terrorist. You see? Are you starting to connect the terminology they're using here? Hm? This is the Times, this is not a little tabloid thing, this is the Times.)

A government source told the Times: 'GCHQ has been told to take out antivaxers online and on social media. There are ways they have used to monitor and disrupt terrorist propaganda.'

(A: So terrorist again, the same, you know, same line.)

Tactics thought to be considered are the take down of websites and content linked to hostile states and the disruption of the actors behind the fake news.

(A: So…)

thought to be considered are the take down of websites and content linked to hostile states

(A: So now I guess Russia is hostile, they are admitting it's hostile, or, are they hostile to Russia, hm? So they can put out information, claim it's from Russia and saying that you've got it on your website. You see? So that's why they're going to use the psyops against you and all the rest of it.)

GCHQ will attempt to do this by encrypting the state's own data so they cannot access it (A: Who's they?) and by blocking communication between hostile groups. (A: Right.)

Russia is behind a high proportion of false information about the coronavirus, one source (A …one, I love the, I love the, how they always do these anonymous sources, eh.) has claimed.

GCHQ will only target foreign states and is blocked from chasing false information produced by ordinary people.

(A: …it says now again, right.)

It comes after an investigation last month discovered a smear campaign launched in Russia to discredit the coronavirus vaccine developed by Oxford University scientists.

(A: Well, where’s the proof of that though?)

It aims to spread fear about the vaccine with ridiculous claims that it will turn people into apes because it uses a chimpanzee virus.

(A: It’s not that way at all. It’s just, it’s literally designed for bureaucrats, because they’re social climbers, you know, they like climbing. That’s what I, that’s my opinion, that’s my take on it. But anyway yeah, here they are trying to blame Russia for it, what a farce this is. I tell you. Ahhhh. So they show you a picture of the vaccine company’s tent, with apes and gorillas leaving the other side, and claiming that Russia put it up. Like the kind of book cartoons put out. This is standard stuff, putting out this kind of sarcasm out with cartoon format. That’s been, goes way back as long as I can remember, and long before I was born actually. Anyway it says…)

The campaign has the potential to damage the Oxford programme by appealing to anti-vaccine fanatics.

(A: So now, the terminology, I guess it's been drafted up by psyops themselves for the Times. Because it's so, the terminology is, this is warfare terminology they're using against people. So anti-vaxxers are now anti-vaccine fanatics, you know, who are in bed with Russians, Russian opponents or enemies. And yeah, they’ve got to take them out, you know take them out. The terminology, m-hm. Ftt.)

Now, GCHQ is expected to take action against hostile states spreading similar disinformation.

However, it is understood Britain cannot attack websites based in the United States (A: Listen to this… [Alan chuckles.]) or the other Five Eyes nations of Australia, Canada and New Zealand.

(A: They don’t have to because we are doing it ourselves in our own countries. You see?)

Instead, the UK must defer to partner agencies based in those nations, (A: You see/hear that, how they get around it?)

the UK must defer to partner agencies (A: So, well, we’ve got partner agencies in those countries, so we’re not doing it, our partner agency’s doing it.)

based in those nations, although free speech laws in countries like the US pose an issue.

(A: So listen, those in the US, free speech laws in the countries like the US, do you understand how important free speech is?, and they’re doing away with it, and you’re going along with it? You don’t see this, and don’t… okay. You’re losing it, eh? And yet it’s big enough for massive psy operatives, psy-op operations to want to get rid of free speech. This is the whole thing of taking down the whole Internet of those who are just using free speech. That’s the war, eh.)

although free speech laws in countries like the US pose an issue.

(A: It’s an issue, you see. Rather than say it’s a problem.)

As well as the new GCHQ drive, a secretive army unit specialising in information warfare is also thought to be involved in countering fake narratives about the coronavirus.

(A: You see, there's only one narrative and that's from the top, folks. All the doctors working in hospitals and that, and the thousands of them, it doesn't matter what they say. It's a big agenda, you see.)

General Sir Nick Carter, the chief of the defence staff, has confirmed that the 77 Brigade is 'helping to quash rumours about misinformation but also to counter disinformation'.

Defence secretary Ben Wallace has also previously highlighted Russia's role in fake news campaigns during the pandemic.

All the other articles didn't mention Russia doing this. You see, this is GCHQ's little baby that they've dreamed up. So I'll put this article up too for those that care. [Alan chuckles.] A lot of folk don't care. Again, most folk, the devil wouldn't bother you if you don't get involved, so you'll be quite safe. There you go. That's what the, that's a good term to use, actually, the devil won't bother you because he already owns you. Hhhch. That's what they used to say.

GCHQ in cyberwar on anti-vaccine propaganda - thetimes.co.uk / 9 Nov 2020

This is interesting too, it's from Greenwald. Remember, he started up a news media outlet to try to get free speech, and he ran it for a while. Then they outed him recently, because they were censoring his articles, and so that was it. So he says…

Greenwald: Deep State, Silicon Valley, Media In Full Union With The Democratic Party To Stop Trump

realclearpolitics.com / 29 Oct 2020

(A: It's a good enough article too, what he says here. He started, I think his newspaper was called The Intercept.)

Tucker Carlson interviewed 'The Intercept' co-founder Glenn Greenwald after he quit his job on Thursday, claiming editors censored story critical of Biden. Greenwald told Carlson, left is in bed with a CIA set on destroying Trump and complained that the left's "healthy skepticism" of what intelligence agencies say has "disappeared."

(A: M-hm.)

"The obvious foundational prohibition on having a national security state after World War II was it was never supposed to be turned domestically," Greenwald said. (A: The national security state" you know.) "They weren't supposed to be involved in our politics or disseminating propaganda. Go turn on any of those cable networks or pick up the op-ed page of any of the biggest newspapers and you will see are ex-members of the CIA, the DOJ, the FBI, the NSA telling Americans what they ought to believe. They have infiltrated the means of communication domestically. They do it through leaks, they do it through clandestine operations and through lies. They propagandize the American people in a way that is incredibly dangerous no matter what your ideology is."

It's quite a good article actually. He's stating what you should all know anyway, unfortunately most folk don't. They really don't know what's happening, right now, in real time, they don't know. That's the only… What it tells you is what's going to come down the pike too, eh? And they're all involved in it, and I really mean that, the CIA has plants everywhere, through all media of all kinds. Through medical facilities, organizations and so on. Yeah, they have doctors that are all tapped into it and so on. The World Health Organization as well...

WHO Taps ‘Anti-Conspiracy’ Crusader to Sway Public Opinion on COVID Vaccine

childrenshealthdefense.org / 23 Oct 2020

An outspoken proponent of government-led tactics to influence public opinion on policy and to undermine the credibility of “conspiracy theorists” will lead the World Health Organization’s (WHO) efforts to encourage public acceptance of a COVID-19 vaccine.

Last week, WHO’s general director, Dr. Tedros Ghebreyesus, tweeted that he was glad to speak with the organization’s Technical Advisory Group (A: That’s called… hhhch…) (TAG) on Behavioural Insights and Sciences for Health

(A: And of course naturally, I think I touched on it last week too, Cass Sunstein is involved in it too.)

Cass Sunstein, founder and director of the Program on Behavioral Economics and Public Policy at Harvard Law School

(A: Did you vote for him? No.)

This is the worst tyranny the world has seen. You haven't seen it really, really, even though they're doing it and deplatforming people, you haven't seen it start yet, the real purge. And it won't stop with the Internet, folks.

How SAGE and the UK media created fear in the British public

evidencenotfear.com / 27 June 2020

(A: This article is pretty good too. It goes through the timeline of when it started and so on.)

There seemed to be some doubt as to whether the public would comply with the upcoming measures so SAGE outlined a methodology based on known psychological behavioural modification techniques.

…and applied psychology

(A: They have subgroups involved by, remember I mentioned before, and that came out from the British media where some journalists did come out and show you the handouts that they were given by the SAGE group from the subgroups, subcontracting groups that they had. It advised the media to exaggerate the stories, to cause more anxiety in the public so they would comply and be obedient to the authority. One of them is…)

NERVTAG: New and Emerging Respiratory Virus Threats Advisory Group

(A: NERVTAG.)

SPI-M: Scientific Pandemic Influenza Group on Modelling

(A: So they use the computers and give you big numbers.)

SPI-B: Independent Scientific Pandemic Influenza Group on Behaviours

(A: There's another one too.)

(A: This goes on through ways of...)

SPI-B highlighted nine broad ways of achieving behavioural change in the public:

Education

Persuasion

Incentivisation (A: Little freebies and stuff if you just take whatever.)

Coercion

Enablement

Training

Restriction

Environmental restructuring

Modelling

In the document, SPI-B focused on the methods most relevant to their stated goals and set out ten options that were evaluated on six criteria.

The six criteria, under the acronym APEASE, were:

(A: [Alan chuckles.] You need a whole dictionary for each department, eh.)

Acceptability

Practicability

Effectiveness

Affordability

Spill-over effects

Equity

Government persuasion through fear

A key part of SPI-B’s behavioural change strategy that seems to have been adopted was to ‘persuade through fear.’ The Persuasion section of the document states:

A substantial number of people still do not feel sufficiently personally threatened.

Clearly, the psychologists felt that, as of late March, the public was still not afraid of COVID-19. It therefore suggested that the government increase the level of fear:

(A: That was the anxiety level that they actually said.)

Use media to increase sense of personal threat.

(A: There ya go. Have you seen any of the mainstream media, anybody come out and saying, I feel bad about terrorizing the public? N-n. I tell ya. And...)

SPI-B recommendations to increase personal threat and use hard-hitting emotional messaging are on display with eerie imagery coupled with taglines such as:

“Anyone can get it. Anyone can spread it.“

“Don’t put your friends and family in danger.“

“Stay home for your family. Don’t put their lives in danger.“

“If you go out, you can spread it. People will die.“

(A: So they come up with all these little slogans too, and that's why folk are turning on other people... Well, you don't have the mask on. Oh, sorry, I forgot, you know. You're killing us.)

During the first week of April 2020, the InProportion2 (A: That's what it's called. The links are here to these articles.) project noticed a change in the BBC headlines and posted the article, BBC: Informing or scaring?

The article compared hysterical BBC news headline from the first week of April 2020 with those from 2018, when mortality rates were peaking due to a bad flu season. It found no references to flu or excess mortality on the BBC home page during the 2018 peak. InProportion2 asked, “Do the headlines reflect the gravity of the situations in an equivalent way – or is additional fear being stirred up in 2020?“

(A: Well, it’s a big agenda, folks. The great global reset, only way of living, sustainability project, all rammed through at once, right. M-hm. Yep. Then the terms they come up with too, like…)

Heroes and Covidiots

(A: You see, you’re an idiot, so you’re BAD. That’s the terms they put out there for people to follow, and they’ll use them. They’ll start arguing with it, you are a Covidiot! There you are. And then social approval…)

Use and promote social approval for desired behaviours

(A: You create social approval. We're all good ones, that's why we're attacking you bad ones. These local heroes have been doing amazing things, that's what you say...)

Social approval: "These local heroes have been doing amazing things…"

Social disapproval: "Lake District closed…because covidiots won't stay away…"

Compulsion: "Matt Hancock threatens to close beaches…"

(A: You see?)

An incentivised media

These psychological techniques would have been impossible to deploy on the public without a compliant media. How did the government convince the media to go along with the plan?

(A: It was quite easy. [Alan laughing.] I don't think there was any hard battle at all. One article says...)

... the government is becoming UK news publishers' most important client.

(A: [Alan laughing.] That's a good one too. This article also has a link to the government website where you can download the article on how to create fear [Alan chuckles.] amongst the people, or at least increase the anxiety level. It says…)

Options for increasing adherence to social distancing measures - 22 March 2020.

The link is here as well from the government of the UK. You can put it up too, mind you they might say it's disinformation because YOU said it, even though it's on their site. I don't know. That's where we are now, eh.

So remember folks, send a few bucks my way. Cutting throughthematrix.com. Definitely don't forget, it's so important now with what's coming down the pike, list all my sites too because if you can't get me on one hopefully you'll get me another.

Because now they really mean business, now, to go on total censorship of the net. I can remember over, what, 25 years ago reading articles in the newspapers at the time, real papers of course, where they talked about, what were they going to do with the Internet? And this, it's just, people were not following politics the way that they wanted you to follow it and so on with the Internet, and they knew that already, they already had organizations, small ones started up, with rights for this, rights for that, or more rights for the people and all that kind of stuff. They really, the top politicians of the day were in the newspaper talking about ways to, down the road, that they'd have to somehow combat it, and they called it information warfare. That's what you got, information warfare. And they knew eventually they'd get to a stage, they didn't want to get the public turned off so quickly when they were just starting with the Internet really big time, so they gave you, again 20 years, I knew they would, and they would start pulling in the reigns. That's what's happening as you well see.

Don't get bogged down in the minutia of the arguments here to do with vaccine or not vaccine, and if it works better or doesn't work better, and all the facts to do with Covid. Because they really don't matter. You've already had lots of professionals, thousands of them really across the world come out and spoken out against what's happening and saying what they're telling you isn't quite true and not altogether true anyway. They're all being dismissed as well, as nuts. These are professional people with the highest qualifications.

So what you're going through is a political agenda to change the world planned by non-democratic forces such as the World Economic Forum and the United Nations, the Club of Rome, and you can go into their own sites and get their article when, where they boast about, this is fantastic to get the great sustainability agenda through that they couldn't get through with the climate change agreement. This is better and faster. They've crashed everything. They've crashed the economies. Crashed your way of living. They've got you locked down like prisoners for goodness’ sake. This is like martial law scenarios.

The next step is of course rationing because when fewer and fewer folk are making the food, and fewer and fewer stores are there to even sell the stuff, you've just got the big outlets and they're going to eventually run short too. They want you to be rationed. They want you to get used to this idea of a wartime scenario. That's exactly what the head of the Green Party said years ago, I remember reading it actually on a radio show while I was on and I said, she was lauding the whole idea of lockdowns for war, like World War II, and she says, the people were so obedient then and they put up with so much deprivation, and did it quite willingly, because it was for the good of the country to save all and all that stuff. And she said, they had rationing and they had their homes destroyed at times and they'd have to crowd into homes, more into the homes for capacity... And she thought, this was wonderful, they could bring it back under austerity. That kind of thing. But she said, you would need a wartime scenario to make it happen, you see, where you really believe you're doing everything to save the country, you know.

That's what you got going, isn't it? Sustainability was to save the planet. Well, you wouldn't listen to that because… No matter what excuse they give you it's for a new system of a dominant oligarchic to rule the way that they want to rule, post Democratic, they don't want democracy. In fact, they're letting you know how corrupt everything is right now in order to put you off politics. And they will come forward. And some of them have already tentatively come forward and promoted the idea, very lightly mind you to begin with, that, you know, this democracy is not working very well, it would be more efficient to handle the world more efficiently if we go into a new system, run by experts. Well, that's exactly where they're going to bring it all.

So they're letting you notice just how corrupt politics is obviously, you know, in the meantime, as you go through it all. And whether you like it or not, we're going through it. There is no burying your head in the sand here. You won't get a chance to deny it anymore. You can't switch it off. This is to be permanent, for at least for some years. Until you have the new system, and then even then it's going to be so regulated you won't recognize it.

So hhhhh, you've got to keep your heads together. Keep sane. Don't lose your head as I say. After 9/11 I said that would happen, the hardest thing would be to hold onto your sanity. It isn't just the massive changes, it's everything that you ever, ever, most folk would never have considered this part of a war strategy to do with all new kinds of everything, including people and things like that. This is all meant to completely make you almost have a nervous breakdown. Because you can't relate to anything anymore. That's how it's done. It's totally warfare. This is complete warfare, which is meant really to bring you into a state of breakdown, you understand.

It's Pavlovian. Pavlov was a hero to the elite. I mentioned it before that, how they rushed off during World War II and then afterwards to see Stalin, and from the US. Eleanor Roosevelt wrote about it too in a book and how she also wanted to go there. Because she wanted to see how the, and she admired the Soviet system of discipline and obedience. She said that the schoolchildren, my goodness, you would see them going to school. They were unlike American children that would cajole and play with each other on the way there. She said, but these children were so obedient and solemn and almost military in the way that they walked and so on together, completely unlike American children. And she thought, that was wonderful. N-n-n.

We live in amazing times, don't we? [Alan chuckles.] But most folk don't even know it. They can't imagine tyrants existing, and in your day and age. It's a strange thing that, that all tyrants must have happened before you were born, this is what you're taught. But in reality, this is what it is, they are always there. And unfortunately, they've been gathering momentum for quite a long time, and especially since World War II, with the big organizations that they set up themselves, until they have the big multibillionaire, multitrillionaire club really. And they run the world. And they planned it. And all they have, the biggest problem was convincing you to give up and to relinquish all of your own personal power and give it all over to them. That's their...

So war is here, you're all going to die, or the climate’s going to burn to a crisp, or it's going to turn into an ice block. It doesn't matter what excuses they use, or it's Covid. Never before in history has it been that you closed down the economy of the planet for something that hasn't had a significant death rate. It's never been done. And never before have you literally locked down all the healthy folk. [Alan chuckles.] And crashed the economy. This is a WAR scenario, folks. Completely a war scenario which they even rehearsed it before it all happened in their simulations. But facts don't matter. They've declared war on all the public. You're the terrorists if you speak out about it, or even quiz it, or even ask questions about it. How dare you ask a question from, when the experts have already decided everything for you, hm. And that's how bad it is.

It's totalitarian in scope because it's got a whole agenda to complete. And they really, really mean it, they were furious, absolutely furious at the World Economic Forum and the UN and all the other organizations that they own, and they have lots of them. Absolutely furious when Britain voted to pull out of the EU, because they wanted the Americas to be next for a European Union style amalgamation for the Americas. Of course that fell apart there. I guess it will be back on the table now that Biden is in.

They also wanted a continuation of the same wars that were on the list of the PNAC group by the way, you know, they want to get the wars all going again. We know the countries they want to attack. And the military-industrial complex will be quite happy about that too. But don't forget, the military-industrial complex too is now making massive fortunes off the technologies for total surveillance, manipulation and tracking under Covid. So they're quite happy, sure, of course they’re quite happy about it all.

Terrible times we live in. But if you have a few people you can keep sane with, that's very important. Because if you think you’re locked away from everybody, and you have no one to talk to, it might not be... Some folk can handle it, you know. I've often said, especially the more you learn, it's best to live inside your own head, then you won't offend anybody, hhhch, by speaking the truth, you know. Because the truth can get you attacked very easily nowadays. It's just too easy to convince the public that, of this thing conspiracy theory… Well, I hadn't heard that before, that's a conspiracy theory, right? No, no, here's the facts.

The facts don't matter, you see. You can show them all the facts that you want from the authors of this and the authors of that, it makes no difference. So you've got to learn to live inside your head to an extent. And keep yourself sane. And don't just give up. And don't be persuaded to just go along with everything, that you're a piece of little useless nothing.

You are all important, you understand that.

Psychological warfare is, the first thing it does is try to undermine your faith in yourself, so that you feel unimportant, until eventually you can't, you have no faith in your own decision-making abilities, that's what it also does too, and to wreck your ability to discern things and decide for yourself. So if you're aware of these things you can counter them to an extent.

But don't forget that you should have little groups of people, little groups that will help each other out in hard times. Because it's coming down, bad times are coming down big time. The whole of the agenda for the 21st century they hope to accomplish a good lot actually very quickly under Covid and the great reset idea.

So don't give up. And keep in touch too. Really glad that people are getting in touch with me, just to get an insight into their lives and what they are seeing and so on. It's interesting to compare different countries. But it's also interesting to see the same uniform implementation of the same agenda step-by-step. It truly is lockstep, isn't it? They're all on board with it. And the same problems in every country, that all the media are completely on board. All the media are creating fear and terror. All the media are hammering anybody who asked questions or speaks out against it. It's just amazing to see the totalitarian aspect of this massive agenda, isn't it.

But don't let it terrify you into immobility. As long as your mind is working you still have a lot of power, believe you me.

So hang in there and keep, let me know how it's all going. Even for the folk I can't get back to all the time, or right away sort of thing, I do read all the emails that come in. And it is important to see. It's real people. You're all real people. In this day and age, it's sad that more folk are, never meet each other anymore with the new types of... They don't even phone each other most of them, it's all texting, you know. So you've got sight, you've got gone hearing, you don't need your hearing anymore if you're texting, you just have to have the ability to read the text, that's all. But all the different parts that make it, make human contact possible, have been taken away. I mean, the phone, hhhch, is the greatest thing out there. I was not surprised when they tried to introduce texting and do away with actual, what, speaking to people, actual vocal messages and so on.

So you're living through amazing times. Don't lose hope. Really, don't lose hope at all. And remember, you still have a voice. It doesn't matter if you get hammered for even asking questions. What the hell we are in when even children can't ask questions? Think about it. Absolute hell, when it's taboo to ask certain questions, and have a list of things you can't ask. When a natural, any, any individual child has the right, hhhch, to use its own mind. That's how you learn for goodness' sake. So nothing can be taboo. But they want them to be brought up into a regimented kind of society where they're trained already before they're ten on what's good and what's bad, you see. Just like it's been done before. You had the Hitler Youth. But you had also the Communist Youth League, which predated Hitler. That's how it's done, eh. That's how it's done. Get the children first, you've got your little army that turns their parents in, and is a servant to the state.

As I say, don't despair. Keep in touch with me. Also you can hopefully get your small groups together to help each other out as times, when it really gets bad, you know. And the winter is a bad time anyway for most folk. Christmas especially they say people get depressed if they're... It isn't just Christmas, it's Christmas and New Year. New Year's signifies, as you all know, the midwinter, you know, and the moving into the spring idea of rebirth and regeneration. But it's also a time of reflection where you look, especially in Scotland for instance, where they really celebrated New Year more than they did Christmas. So it was friendship and friends today that you have and the ones who have died in the previous year and so on, all these things were brought up at New Year's time. Should old acquaintance be forgot and so on. So it can be depressing time for people, especially when they're locked in now with nobody to come and share their thoughts and have company with them. Because of the ridiculousness of what's going on. This is planned war on the public.

So yeah, it's important to keep in touch with people who can help… even just talking on the phone, it's very important to keep doing that kind of thing with each other. Because most folk when they get really depressed can't speak much about it. Especially men. Men will keep quiet to the bitter end, you know. It's good to try and look for signs and symptoms of it and do what you can. To let them know that they're not alone or going through things alone. Remember that. Very important. That's what makes us all human.

This system is an inhumane system we're living in today. It's getting worse all time through tyranny of course. This is tyranny when you have forces paid by your tax money that are using warfare techniques upon YOU, which means you are now the enemy. I hope you understand that. That's a very dangerous thing. We shouldn't, none of us should put up with that. None of us at all.

We're going through it anyway. As I say, there's never been a generation I can find that has had peace. Wars. Financial crashes. More wars. Big changes. Psychological operations to change children, into their thoughts, until they grow up and they have a new different way of looking at EVERYTHING, including even their genders now. All planned in advance and trained that way as well.

Unfortunately like Bertrand Russell said, you can train children to do anything with the proper techniques. Which were already perfected, he says, in his age, eh. He says, when we get the children we can literally train them to believe anything we want them to believe, so much so that he says, that if they go out into society they do have battles with society because just using different terminology they would never get around to the fact they're talking about the same thing. In other words, we can train them that snow is black, and those children would go out and complain to, you know, what are you talking about, white snow? It's black! And they'd have battles over it. Never realizing initially that it is simply changing the terminology, the name, for instance, is enough to cause a battle.

So for myself Alan Watt from Ontario, Canada – remember send a few bucks my way – it's good night and may your God or gods go with you.

"Cutting Through the Matrix" with Alan Watt

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on November 22, 2022. I've said many times that truth is, it's not so much elusive, it's not something that squirms out of your way. It takes help to squirm out of your way, and you help it because you don't want to look at it and believe it. [Alan chuckles.] And it's rather sad that, isn't it? But it's a human trait we have. We live in a form of hope that other people will fix our problems for us. That's why people too also blame everybody else for their problems. Individuals do it all the time. It's, again, a human trait. Young people are more prone to it, we've all been through there where it's much easier to blame everything else rather than blame yourself for certain things too.

But people who go through their whole lives being managed, and liking being managed, this is part of the problem too, become everybody else's problem. I said back in the 90s on a radio show that, after I told them the agenda, you know. At that time people said, oh no, that could never happen. [Alan chuckles.] Here we all are. It's been go… But back then people, oh no, surely not. They could understand what I was saying because even then I used the facts and articles and books put out by the players themselves, of the people who really run the world, you know. And because they don't come out, generally up until now, openly, to say, yeah, we run the world, just go back to sleep. You know?

Unless you read their books, they hint at it an awful lot. In fact, some of the quotes I've given out too by some of the big players, including Rockefeller himself, where they thank the press, the media for not exposing to the general public what they do in their big, big meetings, their international meetings and so on, and they actually said, where they could never have gotten this far without the help of the press in not telling the public. Now, these aren't conspiracy quotes either. These are factual quotes. You can find them out there yourself.

David Rockefeller addressed a Trilateral Commission meeting in 1991 with these words:

"We are grateful to The Washington Post, The New York Times, Time Magazine, and other great publications, whose directors have attended our meetings and respected their promises of discretion for almost forty years. It would have been impossible for us to develop our plan for the world if we had been subject to the bright lights of publicity during those years."

You're run by a system obviously. Most folk are, we're all born into it. We don't get a choice now, we're born into it. I've said before that you have to get early indoctrination, first of all it starts with your parents because they had indoctrination to believe the system is all real too. And don't blame them either for how they ended up because you'll be the same way, in a different generation, just as confused perhaps. But they went through wars, some of the people still have their parents alive today who went through World War II. Then the Korean War. Then the Vietnam War for the States, and for Australia too back, and they used British special forces in there as well to get them bloodied and tested, etc.

So it's war after war after war after war and since then you've had what they called low-key warfare where they don't put it on the books so much to the press, but there's wars on the go all the time, multiple wars, as countries are vying for resources basically. And by countries, I say the corporate nation state, hhhch, because it is, it's really a corporation. And everything under that, that you sign onto means that you're working for the corporation. Whatever you do. Including the military of course. When you join the military, you are not a member of the public anymore, you are private, you're a private soldier, you're owned privately by a private company, you see. Technically you give up your rights as a member of the public when you become a private, and you're owned for a time of service. You're bonded, you see.

So folk don't realize that you go along with, and you give your assent and consent to being ruled BY VOTING. The trick has always been to create parties. Oh, this is for the working people. That's how it used to be, until most folk don't have any work to go to, you know, but that's how it used to be. So you join that party thinking, well I'm a working person so that will speak for me, and you wouldn't think beyond that, really. Until you looked at the West, and Britain especially was awfully prominent in having communist leaders [Alan chuckles.] running the Labour Party, and many of them for years and years, you know. It came out later of course for, just to verify it, it came out later by authors who wrote books on it, and they mentioned that Cooke [?] and different ones were members of the Communist Party. And they had Lords in it too of course the House of Lords. Because many members of the Labour Party, they love to get knighted and get up there, they're awful snobs as well, you see.

Most folk can't figure even that out because they really think, you're trained, as I say, to see things in just basic shades of black-and-white, you know. In reality, it's beyond all of that. When you think that communism is really an idealistic thing for equality and yada, yada ya. No, no, no. It's nothing like that at all. Communism is the term to be used for technocratic rule, technocracy. True technocracy is really a form of managing a socialistic system efficiently. That's what the big boys want, you see, and that's where you're going. People get caught up in ideologies without realizing, wait a minute here… Don't fall for the ideologies. Don't fall for the excuses, for anything. Because that's part of this big game.

We're so well understood. It didn't all start in the 20th century that they were understanding human nature. We've been studied for thousands of years by rulers and their advisors, kings and queens and so on. Vast amounts of knowledge on how to manage populations, and every possible scenario, you know. Of course in the 20th century definitely they had more money, public money funded into universities and studies in psychology and behaviorism, which then added, added to the techniques which they now employ upon the people. And then with the Internet, that's it basically, everyone's observed and you're transparent. As I say, you're the true nu-clear (new clear) family, you know. N-e-w clear family, they see right through you and they know all about you. M-hm. And you help them because you, again, you know, if you want to use this program or that app you've got to accept their rules, and you sign everything away, you know. Your firstborn and all. It's so convenient, isn't it?

So back in the 90s, as I say, I mentioned at the end of a long talk on the system, and what was coming, and how we got to where we were then too. Where after World War II you had a little bit of a break because you had all the industry built up, with taxpayers' money by the way. The public-private partnership is not a new thing at all. They went into actually producing things which you need and can sell. So from about 1945, the end of 1945 to 1946, and then into maybe 1970 there was a bust of prosperity for working people and the middle classes too. From the 1970s it started to wane because now you had multiple factories being cloned across the planet producing the same items, and once you go into Third World countries you can't compete with the cost of labor.

That's why eventually your politicians, who are all crooks anyway, and they are, they all belong to fraternities, and they're crooks, and they're all sworn to stand by each other. They signed off through the GATT treaty and the free-trade negotiations with China to bring them in and as the most favored nation partner. And it still stands today. And we paid, our tax money paid companies to move, uproot their factories and move wholesale to China and to be set up there. We paid for it all. Thank you very much politicians. And people still vote, eh?!

And they really truly, they did sail through it, most folk didn't realize what was going on. If you mentioned to them, don't you see everything you buy in the stores now is made in China? And it's like, uh…   There's no question about it. There's no inquiry. There's no puzzling about it. It's just, yeah, yeah, and people floated through it. So in that talk, as I say, in the 90s I said, when I was asked to give the people some cheer basically and hope. I said, look, I'm not here to be a cheerleader for the people. Because that's part of your problem, you've had too much cheerleading your whole lives long. And you have to make decisions, personally, you see, and stop leaving everything to other people to do for you. That's why you're in the mess you're in. You're always waiting for the ONE. The movie, you know, oh, you're the ONE, here's the hero coming to save you all. You've got to stop doing that. Because the world is coming for you whether you like it or not. At least those that run it. You've got to understand this.

So I said, no, I won't be a cheerleader for the people. I says, I have two problems in the system. I says, one are the elite who run it all, you know. They are the dominant minority, as Huxley called them. Then you have the academic and scientific community that implements it all, including psychologists and behaviorists, on us, and social services and civil servants and all that, they push it on us, you see. So you have one group, the elite and their helpers. Then you have, really, the general population. And the elite use the general population to go after you, in the middle, that doesn't want any part of anything, you see. Well, you know, they've accepted all this, it doesn't matter what it is, why aren't you? And they will turn them on you. It's easy to rile up the public, the mob, you know.

You've seen the Frankenstein movies. Easy to get them riled up. Yeah, yeah, he, he, he's not going along with what we’re putting up with or paying extra taxes or dut-dut-dut and dut, and wearing masks or whatever it happens to be. Or walking on their hands perhaps maybe. Maybe walking on your hands, I haven’t seen that yet. Because it’s an airborne thing now, you know, Covid, maybe if you walk on you hands you’re lower to the ground, you see, then it will go over where your face would’ve been, you know, so that would be you knees or somewhere, or maybe your ankles, if you’re walking on your hands. I’m surprised they haven’t pushed that yet. But anything’s possible, right?

But anyway, what I’m saying is, they use the mob, the general bulk of the population, who are always afraid, of everything, all through time, they are afraid, you know. That’s why they want to be secure, and that’s why they obey everything, that leads to imprisonment for everybody, and many forms and many levels of imprisonment. I think Jefferson’s said it too that when a people fear their government, it’s tyranny basically. And the way you can get a balance is when the government fears the people. That’s the only way where you have any kind of freedom is when the government is kept in check. The trick to it of course, to overcome that is to get mass persuasion by mass communications on a daily basis. Especially under, we’re here to save you. If you don’t tune in tomorrow to get your daily dose of terror on the television, on the news, then you might die because we might, might say something tomorrow that you’ll miss, you see, that’s going to save your life. Just simple psychological terror warfare.

So yeah, the general public are your problem too. And they always have been. And you can’t help, you know, and it’s not a matter of despising the general public because you’ve come from them yourself. I’ve often been asked the question, and many people ask each other the question, and ask me the question, and I’ve asked myself many times too, what is it that makes some people want to know? What’s really going on? And what’s behind it? And a bit of the history of it and so on? What IS that thing that drives you to do it? Because you’re driven to do it. Compared to other people who just don’t care, they’ll go along with… They get angry, they’ll be emotional and angry when things are cut off, when they can’t get what they want or whatever it happens to be. But they don’t really want to know.

And I did, I was, back in the late 90s around 2000 someone offered me $40,000, a big businessman, you know, to give me a, I call it a drive-through answer, it’s like you’re driving through for a doughnut or coffee or something. To just tell him, sum it up for him, he believed what I was saying but sum it up for him in 15 minutes. And I says, I’m not going to do that for you, you know. I could have done it, or done something like it, or conned the man. But I wouldn’t do that. But it shows you that people don’t want to take the time to just collect, not just data, but understanding information. A big difference. Anybody can parrot. Everyone’s been through school, they know what they want at school. People would cram before examinations and then they would forget all the stuff they had learned when they were cramming, they would forget it over the next few months, you know. What’s the point of it though?

When something is so vital, not just for your whole life but for future generations, things to know, where if you are aware of things that are coming down the pike through laws and regulations and that, and organizations can head it off at the pass so to speak, then you’re doing a tremendous job. Against really dark forces. Including the general public. The public are dark, they are dark. They are entertained to death. They can talk endlessly about sports and all the guys, and who did what, when, you know, what year and blah blah blah. And they'll talk about movies galore, women love the movies, and they can reel off actors and actresses in their personal lives, all the gossip stuff, you know. That's what their reality consists of. Everything that really matters frightens them so they close themselves off from it. And they'll close you off too.

I used to ponder that. If you look into different religions, you do get examples of the same thing happening in generations thousands of years ago. Even from Buddha, you know. And even pre-, I would say, I still called them the more recent religions in a sense, but even from Buddha, you know, and Siddhartha. Because most of what you get from Buddhism was written by his disciples, his followers. Once he had died they wrote about what they had learned. But some of them wrote commentary of the talks that they had, because they didn't get enough. You see, people don't get enough from you, knowledge isn't enough, they want something extra.

I used to say that if you have something, this spark inside of you, that hit you, it might hit, it might have always been there just waiting to get turned on, this thing that put you on a roller coaster of knowledge. And it is a roller coaster, you know. And you can't switch it off once it starts. And it comes on like waves of, and I mentioned too back then that it's like Gestalt, [undecipherable] Gestalt, where everything that surrounds you, it isn't just you coming into it, it's all there already and it's also in you, and it comes together inside your mind, if you want to call that your mind. And you understand that, that, that ah-ha moment as, hhhch, the occultists would say, you know.

That's what Crowley was referring to, the ah-ha, you know. It's a term. But long before him, and many other religions actually, you'll find the same kind of thing. It hits you. It's always been examined by those who get hit by it. Because in ancient times, even outside Hebrew faith, because a lot of, that whole area was steeped in lore, very old, old ancient lore. I think partly because of the warmer climates and their ability of course to have big rivers, and that's where they camped along, big rivers for irrigation and crops and so on. Whereas the northern climates had these repeating ice ages [Alan chuckles.] over time, and many ice ages too, where even Britain and part of Scotland was covered in ice a few times, and the folk who had moved in, moved back out again. They can tell that the same people kept moving in and out, even by the DNA from bones and things, from the marrow parts of it.

But anyway, in the equatorial areas they were much, much older of course. Those who were into philosophy or questioning, and started to write about it, gave us a vast knowledge of it. But many things began in religions as they try to explain why, what things were, why are we here, what is this all about? And, is there something else beyond this managing things? I mean, because you could learn, and they knew this too, you can learn as much as you try to learn, learn, just fill yourself full of knowledge. But you still have that little thing, occasionally it will hit you, like tap-tap-tap, there's something else beyond all this. You know?

Children have a much better understanding because they sense it. And they don't deny it. They don't throw it off as silly. I've mentioned different examples of just natural telepathy, for instance, where your best friends, or your family members might start whistling or singing a song at the same line at the same time, things like that. And you laugh about it. You take it for granted as normal. Things like that.

But getting back to this need to know, and the questioning of it. It's always been... It comes down to something, there are people who have something, and it's alive, and maybe there's people who either don't have it, or, it's dormant and hasn't been awoken, you see. And it might take a necessary act of will open that little door, eh? Because as I say, the followers of Buddha for instance, Siddhartha, some of them complained. They said during his teaching they kept asking him to go further into the realm… Don't forget too, they were in India, eh, in India, ancient, ancient subcontinent, ancient peoples, I mean peoples plural, eh. And many languages. And many, many, millions really of Gods. But through all the gods, that many of them are aspects of human nature, if you want to call it that too. So they wanted to try to put, ascribe certain facets of human nature to a God and use it as an external example, you know, a pictorial drawing or something. So some of the disciples said, we kept asking Siddhartha to go deeper into the spiritual side of things and he wouldn't do it. So, many of the students, who were already soaked in the old traditions of reincarnations and so on, added to Buddhism over the next couple of hundred years, 200-300 years, until you have the present form today.

They weren't happy just to get the teachings of Siddhartha himself. Who left it that way. He told them about life, and he told them about the present life, and many other things I'm sure that went over their heads at the time. Because people who have itching ears, even if you turn over to the Christian version, the term itching ears, people who are, they're desperate to know secrets as opposed to knowing wisdom, and the wisdom how to apply things and use secrets, you see. Most folk are after power. And folk who seek power can never be trusted. We should learn that in our lives. Look around you today, what's happening.

Power has been, ehhhh… the hell that's been created, every generation we get our chance at hell, you know. And world wars or whatever it happens to be, you know. Power, power, power. And we can say it's such an easy word, power, but we don't want to go into what power is. Power is a very, VERY dangerous thing. It has to generally steal its power from you actually, you must participate in its power, to be ruled by it, whatever it happens to be. The trick for running millions of people and controlling them is, again, as old as the hills as they say. Keep them in fear. Establish a system that will benefit you, and you'll be a ruling class you might say. You create divisions of things that the people then need, mainly because you've cut them off from doing it all themselves. Because power must eventually take all, ALL necessities for human life into its hands to have that and control power over the people. And it's never been so evident as it is today. Especially under Covid and the coming famines, etc.

Because it's all a cover for the great resets which is just the whole, the whole 100 years of Agenda 21 crammed into 100 years. Covid 19 is being used as the excuse to get you back on track with sustainability, the climate change, depopulation, austerity, sustainability, millennial project which morphed into agenda for the 21st century, the United Nations agenda for the 21st century, or simply Agenda 21. Where a whole bunch of new changes for living and lifestyles will be rammed through, and have been so far but you've got a bunch of years to go yet. They plan to literally reduce the population into a postindustrial, post consumerist society and step by step by step. That's only part of it of course, you can read it for yourself.

But that’s what is being used for, using emergency war powers to save us all from Covid really. They’ve been rather blatant about it at the World Economic Forum and the Club of Rome and all the other big institutions that work with them, the CFR, Trilateral Commission, etc. That’s where you have to go very quickly actually. The whole global warming agenda, sustainability, it's all the same thing, that they couldn't ram it through quickly enough and they have simply gone into phase 2 and just call it, you know Covid, lockdowns, global reset.

It's permanent, folks.

Unless you do something about it.

And Clint Eastwood isn't riding in on a pony to do it all for you. And no politician's going to get in that's going to do it all for you either. That's the most scary part of all for most folk. Oh, I might have to take responsibility myself. Yep. That would be the only way, actually. Hhhch, outside of divine intervention.

Once again getting back to the old idea of what's in people, things that occultists have scoffed at for so long, with the owl, you know, the owl symbol, that an owl can see in the darkness, you see, the darkness meaning society. The darkness that Carl Jung talked about naturally too because he was a Rosicrucian, and he was steeped in it. A lot of his insight was certainly interesting, no doubt about it. His mother was an occultists too and that's where he got it from, he learned from his mum. And tried to dissect the mind, coupled with the connection to spirits. That's why he and Freud split up by the way, you know.

Freud literally, um, was part of a political agenda. Which were, it's the same agenda over and over and over, of experts dominating and running the world, and the greatest way to do it is to tell you that you're not in control your own mind, you're rather stupid and dumb, so let a professional genius do it all for you. So they get the star making machinery and they call them a genius, which he wasn't, and you start to quote him and parrot him, and, he must be a genius, he's so famous. That's the criteria for being a genius today, you know.

So you've got to go back further and further to get answers to it all. But Carl Jung, regardless of what they say about him, and he did do a lot of, make a lot of blunders too. But he did split with Freud because Carl Jung knew, he says, there's something beyond just this, this humanistic agenda. Freud split up with that too. Freud said, we MUST make sex the sole criteria for the motivation of the masses, the libido, you see, and that's what they would use as a tool of destruction, and then rebuild again. We've been through all that, haven't we, sexual revolutions and things.

But Carl Jung did know from experience there was more to all this than just basically an atheistic humanistic agenda where man is the supreme being. No, he's not. He said that there's something else here, there's spirits, something spirits and the connection to spirit. So he had his dreams, his own dreams to do with something outside of himself, something much bigger. That's why he eventually said too, in his last interview in fact I think it was, he said that, when he was asked did he believe in a god of any kind? He says, oh I don't believe, I KNOW there is a God. You see, belief is a faith-based thing. KNOWing is beyond just that. Big difference.

But you couple that with the same, again, these eternal questions. When you have Paul in the Bible, hm, in the New Testament, who refers to people who won't follow, who dismissed things just offhandedly. You can relate it to the general population, where he talks about, when you could give them little gems, that you may have really in, again, philosophy, you know, um, it's like the love of the conversation you might say. But he says, there are creatures of instinct, and he meant base creatures that they couldn't, like ants or mice, they're programmed, they are literally programs. They don't have to be taught what to do to survive, they're just programmed and they go through their life like the ones before them, the generations before them, just never changing, you see. Why that is, we don't know. I think most folk could be the same way. Unless again that something spark gets lit in them for some reason.

So these are very old questions. Eternal questions. I don't think there's been a country that could write and leave records of things that didn't go through this, that didn't question the same eternal things over and over and over. As I've said before, you can, there's way more, way, way more to basic religion. Don't just toss it out the window. And don't judge them by the works of even modern-day people, hhhch, who go off the rails at times too, in a society that is already sick in so many cultural ways. So where do you think they get ministers and priests from? Then you blame the religion, you see.

Would you rather have humanistic society, where they are deciding now, right now, it's in the open, who's going to live and who's going to die? That's what sustainability was all about too by the way. With no divine intervention. Even in the form of a person who represents a religion, eh, that if it still had enough power could definitely tell the bulk of their followers, which is a part of the masses as they like to call it, to stand up and say no, and the government has generally backed off. That's why they hated religion. That is why they hated it, folks. Then they trained the modern crew, that have decided to demolish the people, they trained them in advance to hate religion, you see. So there's no one going to help you. That's how it works.

This is massive warfare. Well understood by military departments in unconventional warfare, as an example. You're all victims of it and you don't even know it, and you have been your whole lives. This whole, everyone that's alive today is really, has gone through wars they didn't even know were going on. But it affected all of them in many ways. Especially their thinking. Their opinions were all given to them. Even their arguments to fight over were given to them, they don't know that either. That's what they mean by the preparation for the century of change. Well, you're in the century of change now. That's what they called it in the last century, the one coming up is now, is here.

In the Old Testament you could find that profits were picked, and being a prophet wasn't something that people wanted. Because it meant you would never have a normal life ever again. Or even time or leisure. And maybe even the peace that, say, family people would have and so on. So they give you lots of examples of people being picked as profits. Again, it wasn't something you would seek generally. Some people did, but a lot of them didn't. So they give you these comical little pictures of someone under their fig tree or in their vineyard or something, just enjoying a nice day. Then God would speak to them, and he'd say, and by name, eh, and they'd give you the profit. Well, who's that? He says, I'm God, eh. Oh really?, why are you speaking to me then? And God would tell him, you see, what he had to do for him, what he wanted him to do for him basically. And it wasn't like you were getting a choice. You were being told. And you would see the reaction of the prophets, of, whoah, and the whole thing, and the gnashing of teeth, and anxiety. Because it literally meant that his life would never be his own anymore.

It's a good example of what can hit people. It doesn't mean you're a prophet. But it means that something's happened in you if you really go on a search, a quest, a big quest for answers. Again, most folk get lost, just like the Internet too, the same as the Internet, in overwhelming data. Data is useless as data. It's selected pieces here and there where you can get something from because it literally comes alive to you. If it doesn't come alive to you, then it's just, put it back in the category of data. And don't fall for the, to be used by someone else, it's not that at all. You'll come to opinions for the first time for yourself. You'll get your own opinions by analyzing facts and experiencing things perhaps that you didn't even imagine you could experience.

Again most folk go after the quest to get power. That's the wrong thing to do. I've mentioned it before, in Buddhism there's levels in Buddhism where you'll start to see, they'll see things move around them. They'll see into realms that you couldn't, didn't know existed sort of thing, but there's names for them all. Most folk will get caught in this illusionary phase, which seems amazing, it's like an LSD trip to a lot of people, and powers and forces, etc. are there. Folk get trapped in it because they like it. They want the power that they see, and they want that ability to capture power and then use it for, and it's always for nefarious purposes. I don't care how you want that kind of power, you'll always use it for the wrong purposes. Because you're seeking it in the first place, you see. They say that the ones who go higher ignore that whole thing, don't get trapped by it. You ignore it completely and then you pass on to the next phase at the much, much higher wisdom or learning. That's one example from one people's culture, one religion's culture and experience of getting to where they want to go.

Then of course you get the other ones who are like Aldous Huxley who was a dead-end, for a good part of his life he was a dead-end. He and his brother Julian Huxley initially thought they were born, and rightfully so, into a scientific strata that were the helpers of the elite, they worked for the elite. After you had the dominant minority, then you have the group beneath them, the scientific type elite that would manage the affairs of humanity for the elite, including managing the masses of people. So they took it for granted because of their background and their family histories and so on, and the Darwin connection and all that kind of thing.

If you go into straight Darwinism eventually, once again, it's never enough for most people. You would think, eh? Oh yeah, we just came out of some amoeba and electric currents and so on, and before you know it, he says, you've got all these little amoebas that says, what are you going to be? I think I'll be a dinosaur to start with, how about you, you know? No, I'm going to be a whale or something. I mean, this is, this is just… wash! It's a religion, it's a lot of faith to believe in it, you know?

I'm not saying different things didn't exist before all of us. What I'm saying is, the theory of why, is generally the explanations of why that are made up by powerful groups, even today, same thing in different sciences, eh. Ftt. Not just in evolution. Evolution became the key that provided the ammunition for the dominant minority to do with the general population as they wished, by saying that the general population were inferior types that didn't evolve properly. Under eugenics and the Darwinian clubs galore they had across the world, still have them today, that they believed that anybody with, through selective breeding that became wealthy and important and in the higher classes had achieved it all by the 20th century, actually the 19th but definitely the early 20th century, and that the rest of them were just the junk left behind, like junk genes, you know. That's what they call it today in a sense, eh, both in genetics, it's like junk genes, you're never going to get anywhere, it doesn't matter who you breed with, you see.

That's what you've got today, you've got that strata there. But Aldous Huxley had his own crisis naturally. He had different, and he was human too, he had problems. I won't give you a whole talk on that but he, in looking for answers, and he couldn't submit to anything, you see, bigger than himself, easily, put it that way, easily, and being of a scientific bent. Don't forget that he wrote Brave New World. I've mentioned last week I think about even movies that were putting the same thing across in kind of comedies a few years before Brave New World came out in fact.

Eugenics was a big topic for many years before Aldous Huxley did Brave New World. It was all the rage in fact it. They were training the public that you were either, if you were in the lower classes, it's because you're junk genes, but you can't, you can't, no matter who you breed with now you can't get any higher than you already are, it was fixed in your genes, you see. That was getting promoted. That's why of course Adolf Hitler incorporated that into his teachings, and he thanked Britain and the US because they, most of the information he used he said it was all done through experimentation and writings from Britain and in the States, hhhch, literally the Rockefeller foundation, as an example, and Cold Spring Harbor New York. So don't blame Hitler for parroting what was being promoted in the West beforehand. Don't forget the West also was sterilizing what they called the unfit before Adolph got to power in Germany.

It's amazing the lies we have been fed all the time on who to hate at any particular time, so that you could scapegoat this one person for the ills of the West is astonishing, hm? And including some people who became victims of all of that themselves, who were promoting it initially. [Alan chuckles.]

So Aldous Huxley had gone through that whole massive phase of what to talk about and write about.

He was well aware because of the high-level meetings that he participated in. He also knew about the Tavistock Institute, he was a regular member of it for visiting Tavistock. He was fascinated by the attempts of manipulating human behavior through, as he said himself, putting wires into folks, parts of people's brains and stimulating parts of the brain. He said it was a fascinating thing to see folk being controlled electronically. The stuff that Delgado of course eventually came out with, and they've got videos up there somewhere, they used to have, on Delgado. It wasn't just bulls he was experimenting with remotely. It was obviously human beings. They were doing that in Tavistock way back when Aldous Huxley used to visit there.

But Aldous Huxley himself eventually pushed drugs. Again, being of a person who couldn't have much faith in something bigger than himself or the human intellect, he started using drugs, LSD. Many folks did by the way, you know. It was even used as a treatment by some quack psychiatrists. They were giving it to Carry Grant as an example. He had, whoah, about 100 odd doses of the thing at one point, to try to rectify what they claim is a defect in his personality. [Alan chuckles.] But anyway, [Alan clears his throat.]

And apart from using your own troops for experimentation too. But Aldous Huxley used it, and he came out with Doors of Perception. Because under LSD you'll see all kinds of different things. There's different parts of the brain stimulated. That's where the whole 1960s thing came from really, with LSD, the wonderfulness of everything, without telling them it was all artificially induced. And in a world that can lose its glamour, eh, rather quickly with financial depressions, poverty, illnesses, wars that they always give us, then it's an easy escape, a little pill. Rather than go and study or go off and meditate or whatever it happens to be, or at least people did in the past, you just take little pills, and you get instant karma as they call it, eh. They would escape into different realms of reality, they thought. They would see all kinds of distorted figures and beings, or giants and things, or monsters. But massive distortion of the perceptions, which would stick with them, because it didn't happen normally, eh. So such things, and tremendous hallucinogenic experiences of light and colors, they said they could never ever find those colors again in real life, you know, as your brain basically is all firing all over the place.

So a lot of people got turned on, as they say, by that and dropped out, dropped out of society. It was all done from the very top, again. I used to give the talks on how the drugs were distributed to universities by the CIA, hhhch, in the States. They had MI5 doing it, different forces within MI5 throwing it over walls of universities, by the bagfuls, eh, to get them started, eh, free, you know. And again, a massive propaganda campaign, coupled with the culture industry, and the Beatles especially, to get youngsters turned on. Oh well, if the Beatles are doing it, now that we've followed the Beatles from clean-cut guys into long bearded characters playing the sitar, well now we should all jump on the bandwagon and go full tilt into, into hallucinogenic drugs. Hallucinogenic drugs, wow, isn't that wonderful, and we'll have all these experiences. A lot of folk had bad trips and never recovered. Some folk on their first attempt had bad trips and never recovered. It was drug induced psychosis they call it still today, you know. They had no idea that it was all arranged.

I said this, I can't run out of times I've said this and should always say, as far back as Plato's writings he tells you, nothing comes from the grassroots and takes off and becomes a success unless it's created, number one, created and authorized by the elite that owns it all. Nothing. Because you go into this realm which they, today, today the intelligence community, oh, it's known knowns, and known unknowns, and unknown unknows, etc, etc, they go into all these different avenues. But they knew all that back in Plato's day. If you let one thing start off, oh it's innocent enough, where it might topple something down the road and have a domino effect that you didn't anticipate. So they knew that by experience in ancient Greece I should say, and Rome too eventually, that you couldn't allow it and so you had to nip it in the bud. As I say, most things are started by the top and allowed by the top.

Right down to plays being shown to only elite members, like censor departments in ancient Greece, before they were shown to the public. And if they were, something is to be added or detracted from it, they would do that, you see. The same thing happens today, only today they generally put more indoctrination in for change, planned change, than taking things out now, that they're saving the public from bad habits and traits, is gone, eh. In fact bad habits and traits today now is the individual thinking for themselves, is also a bad guy and a loner or something like that, you know. That's how you're fed your indoctrinations. The people have no idea there's an ancient system in.

So, Aldous Huxley as I say, went and did Doors of Perception and eventually he went into a penoshads[?]50, and then eventually he went into the Tibetan book of the dead, which actually like the Egyptian one is not the book of the dead, it's really the book of life, you know, and reality of how you get through into the eternal life, eh, that's what it's supposed to be. He died with that, he died with an LSD dose his wife gave him, or his woman, and with that being read to him, she was reading that to him at the time. Which shows you different aspects of someone that obviously just basic hard-line humanist facts weren't enough for him either, you know. There had to be something else. Or he wouldn't be having his sendoff to the Tibetan book of the dead. But that's just one example.

It all points again back to what we're talking about, I think I'm talking about it, is really the fact that what you're going through today and questions you ask today have been asked for thousands of years. Again a lot of folk decide not to know things. It's a conscious decision. I've lost count of people who said, well, I prefer, and I really, you know, nice person telling me this, it was a bank manager and managers, and I just casually mentioned, have you read about the, Canada's involvement, like the World Bank and their memos and their big meetings, and every country had signed on to not bailouts for the next one but bail ins where they can literally, the way it's all worded they can actually take your savings. Regardless of what you thought were their insured levels, etc.

She never heard of it. I did the talks on it from the government sources and from the IMF and the World Bank who put all this stuff out at the time. I said, I could bring some in for you if you, for your own interests’ sake, since you're a bank manager. And she said, I prefer not to know. I choose not to know. It was too horrific a thought of getting wiped out of your savings, and other folk too. It would mean collapse. I said, well it will collapse anyway because regardless of what you think you’re insured up to in the bank, as an example, which they generally say is $100,000 I think per account, if the crash came at the same time, that's all finished, forget that. Who's left to pay off that kind of insurance?

IF it was all real, eh? Because we know that money is a farce. In fact I'll touch on it tonight too where they actually admit they're making it out of nothing. [Alan chuckles.] Of course, before all of that you're a conspiracy theorists for just mentioning their own writings, eh. But that's what the world is, again, you've got the people who, again, like Paul said, creatures of instinct, they don't want to know. There are ones that are just fearful and don't want to know. It's definitely a choice, for sure. And most, I think, creature of instinct for most folk. They want to know all the things that they enjoy, as I say, who played baseball back in whatever year it was, and won or whatever and what was the score. Or the soap operas and dramas and the lives of the rich and famous, etc. All that rubbish. That's what it is, is rubbish. That's what they choose to know.

And as long as their masters are dishing out enough cash for them to have their little bits of fun, you know, and they can go off and by little presents for themselves every so often to have fun, it's all about having fun, then they will laugh at you for saying, for telling them what's coming down the pike. But the same people, now remember this, when hell breaks loose are the ones that will turn on you, hhhch, for mentioning it in the first place.

I had on, again on one of the early shows someone who voiced something a lot of new agers had voted, they don’t realize the New Age movement is controlled from the top as well. They don't know that. Suddenly books flooded the market, and all the bookstores suddenly had shelves of all New Age books. Just like magic, there's magic for you, boom, suddenly all there. Within about a year it was all there. Replacing all other kinds of books and so on. Just BOOMF. And they just take that for granted like everything else is taken for granted. But yeah, this person said to me, don't you think that you can make things happen just by thinking about it? You know? And this is what was pushed on the public at the time too, you know, don't be negative. You know, being aware of things is called negative, you see. Because that will make it happen. It won't happen if you don't think about it. [Alan laughing.] Okay. Yeah. Okay. Yep. M-hm.

Which is a simple childish way of expressing it, was taught to the public. To make them think that nothing was real. And that's a good feat in itself, convincing the public that nothing is real. And I understand on different levels certain things aren't real, mainly your propaganda. But other things are definitely real. You're existing. If you knock your head against the wall you're going to have pain. You know? That's real. Or if you wake up with a chronic medical condition you've had for years, that's real too. It's not there because you thought about it. You see? You thought about it because it's there. And that's a different thing altogether. But some folk, they were getting trained into, this is at the same time they were going into the different dimensions, that was a big promotion from the top down, sci-fi authors and all that. So yeah, there could be different dimensions because more folks are thinking negative things about this particular area and that's why it's happening. You see?

Whereas the elite themselves will be quite happy if right now, and you actually see them using the techniques through psychological warfare, to turn on the people who are telling you the FACTS. They are enemies of the people, enemies of the state. I mentioned this before, that's what all tyrants do when they take over in a tyrannical move, they immediately brand people who won't go along as enemies of the state. And they get the rest you all falling into it to back them up and turn on you. It's being done again. N-n. Old technique, eh.

And the folk have no idea. The unreal part is, how much do you really have come to believe, in your reality that really was made for you? Really? Hm. You see, everything depends on you. And most folk just wait for somebody else to do everything for them. They'll do what everybody else is doing. What have you done about that? Well, okay, I'll do that too then, you know. Then the government says, well, you know, 50% or 49% have accepted this mandate that we're putting across, and therefore they're going to make it kind of voluntary, they always do voluntary to start, whatever it is it's voluntary to start with, to a certain percentage they claim will be hit, it doesn't mean it's true that they hit that percentage, then they'll say, well we're going to make it mandatory now. That's how it's always done. Driving licenses were the same, you know, it was all voluntary. Driving insurance was the same, all voluntary. And now it's going to come down to vaccinations, eh. [Alan chuckles.] M-hm. That's how it's going to, that's how they'll start it, you know. M-hm. Or maybe not, because they really, they're not putting out the big, big, big fear psyop one that this is going to be mandatory and NO exceptions, NO exceptions. And that's meant to terrify everyone. It's intention is to terrify you. Total psychological warfare.

The same military teams that the US and Britain and other countries, and their alliances in NATO, have been using across the world and the Middle East for years, and Asia, has come back down to haunt you. I always said the eating machine would come back, with its color revolutions and it's internal color revolutions, and its mandates. The military too were the ones who put out, in different countries, vaccinations. With the same techniques, NO exceptions. Terrify the public. They know how to handle, they've done it all, it's all been practiced already for years and years in other countries.

Especially the countries where they were testing out vaccines. Look at the different ones around India and other places, where they were using populations, you know, for experimental vaccines. Look it all up yourself and don't take my word for anything. You'll find that Bill Gates has many lawsuits against him for damage that was done for various vaccines, including a polio type that now created a wild virus, they call it, that didn't exist before. Don't take my word, look it up yourself. In other countries too, in Afghanistan and elsewhere they were forcing vaccinations on people. It got so bad at some places, even parts of Africa too, that folk were actually eliminating the so-called health workers coming into vaccinate them. After seeing the effects it had on some of the population, especially children, eh. Anyway, these are things which you're told that it makes no difference what you think, or you believe, what you can prove, makes no difference, because you're all going to get it. Even though in their own writings they admit that one in every so many will have severe reactions, and maybe even death, and that's acceptable to them. Well, it's not acceptable to the person who's going to get killed with it. You see?

Terror is a great weapon. It's the most basic one of all of any tyrants, terror, terrorize the public. And the public never really catch on until it's too late and they've been terrorized and accepted whatever it is to be, and then, well, in previous regimes they've been eliminated. The communist one was amazing how many people they eliminated in one generation, eh. In the early years they talk about 40,000,000 people. But somehow communism apparently doesn't get the schtick that the Nazi party got for what they did. That's always been a bit of a point of confusion for some people. Solzhenitsyn talked about it, others talked about it, and wrote about it, using official guidelines and policies, statistics and so on. Also, you had anything from 60,000,000 to 80,000,000 eventually up until it's fall in the Soviet bloc countries.

You would think that would get more highlight about, we must never go back to that. Well, no. You see, communism was the experimental phase for this phase, folks. It's technocracy, a society to be run by experts. That's why it was introduced. That's why it was intensely studied. Now you go into this super improved form of collectivism/communism/equality. You know? Where we will all be equally poor in the level below the elite, you know, and the elites' helpers.

They always say you can't stop progress. I've heard, again, mainly scientists tell me that, you can't stop progress. But they get confused, I think, or a bit arrogant in their statements. Because who defines what progress is? Have you, any of you been asked your opinion or given a vote on what you decide you want or not for progress? It's all done for you. And scientists will often say, well you know, we, if the invention is there, we’ve got to use it. Well, the atomic bomb is there but are you making a habit of using it, you know? No.

Terror is the technique being used now, utter terror. On the whole world, remember. This isn't, when I came out in the 90s, I was the first person to tell you, the Americans, who had lots of radio stations at the time that at least looked at what's happening inside America. I said, this isn't just the US, this is international. It's an international body deciding everything, where the same things are implemented across the world at the same time, step by step by step. But by global organizations, funded mainly by the taxpayers in the US, since it had already exhausted the taxpayers in Britain through endless wars, the US took over.

I used to be amazed too, I mean, I said, what do you think, where's the World Bank situated, in the world?, where is the Federal Reserve? It's in the US. The Federal Reserve by the way, it's really become the disher-out of cash for the rest of the world's central banks. Where's the United Nations? It's in the US, you know. And yet the US has been looking outside its borders to fight enemies outside of it since the end of World War II. But everything that's bringing the world into this system is based in the US.

So then you have to reevaluate, what IS this strange system you now have in the US? Because it's nothing like the government that you had, I'd say, even in World War I. Although they had already taken over in preparation for World War I, a system of the banking system based on the British system with the central bank set up. You know, the Creature from Jekyll Island idea. In preparation, because then they could, then they got private consortiums of banks that can lend to the government, on the condition that they can set up an internal revenue system, you see, and start taxing labor off the public to pay off the debts which the government borrowed from these bankers. That's what it's for.

Before I forget here, I ask the people to send me donations or buy the books and discs @cuttingthroughthematrix.com. How to do it you'll find @cuttingthroughthematrix.com website. List all my sites. These are my official sites, they are all on that site there. List them in case, because now, I'm telling you, one day you will go on the .com site, I won't be there. They're turning the military loose on the populace. That's the next part of the phases of the agendas of the lockdown.

They said they would go after people who spoke out, and who are not authorized to speak out. You see, you've got to be authorized by the mainstream, the people who were being ignored for the last 15 years because of the Internet, all the mainstream characters are all living, they were living on handouts by governments up until now, you see. Now they'll come back into their own since they're the only ones authorized to toe the party line. They're mouthpieces of the state, which will tolerate no other gods before it. In other words, no other opinions. That's tyranny, folks.

So yeah, make a list of the sites there I have, for rainy days to come, bad days to come. Hopefully if I go down there will be more sites I have to get going, possibly, if I'm allowed to even keep going. You can support me by buying the books and discs, as I say. You can use PayPal. You can send cash and personal checks. You can even use a bank order which you can get cheap enough for small amounts if you ask them. And Money Gram too I think is still in use. That will help me tick along here because as I say it's, you can't do anything else when you do what I do. It literally takes a toll on you, it really does. Unless you've got massive teams behind you. That's what I've said before, be very careful with the massive preparation for today with all of the people who have been, who've been set up in advance for all the Covid idea. Because you see, you're given your leaders. You’re ALWAYS given your leaders, folks. ALWAYS.

And if I do get around to touching on warfare techniques tonight, then I'll touch on some of that too. You wouldn't believe what your governments and the military have been doing for years and years and years in certain types of warfare across the world. Including literally flooding their own countries and training the talking heads for their countries, all flavors of them for different kinds of people. And you'll pick your leader, yeah, I like that person, they speak for me, they say the same thing. Then they lead you up the garden path and around in circles until you're totally inactivated waiting for them to do it all for you, whatever the change is. And things like that.

Believe you me, as I've said before, you don't want to do what I do. Because it will, you can't have a normal life of any way or any kind at all. You can't just receive visitors either because you're burned out half the time, and you're still working as you're burned out. That's what happens. Unless you're a front and you've got teams of folks behind you churning out videos and articles galore, etc. etc. And if you've got all that, then I'm suspicious, you know, that's a sign of something else funding you. And I'm not wrong [Alan chuckles.] by having these suspicions most of the time.

Believe you me, if you were scouring the world every day for pertinent information that can be tied together to show a picture of something, it will, it's morning till night, morning till night every day. You won't have time to entertain people that pop in, you really don't. And the place I live is like a workshop. Everything's in like the one floor, because that's all that's usable. And it's crammed, absolutely crammed, it's a complete workshop, you know, hhhch, of all kinds.

I'll tell you another thing too, before I just get off this little part. You wouldn't believe the trains, the trains. I've mentioned before the trains since all this started are like every 20 minutes, day and night. And they are the heavy, they're like 5-mile long, some of them. And they're going past my place at a clip of I'd say 30 to 40 mph. Doubled up too, two rows, these big containers on them, every one of them. Miles and miles and miles. They’re hammering along, and it's got so bad...

I'm telling you, they're moving foods and supplies into some bases, obviously, that's going to survive for years. This is to last for years. And I really mean that, just by my own observations. I can see it. I really, really, this is to change the whole way of living when you come out of this. It's not really to end, actually, until you're in the new system. Or, who ever survives it goes into the new system. That's what it's meant to do. Because the supplies I can see flying by here are like never before. I've never had that. Even in the good old days before the 2007/8 crash. Nothing like this. I'd maybe get six a day, and nowhere near as long. This is day and night. So bad my house shakes. And the windows are actually, the framing are loosening up, there are bits falling off the tops. I'm not kidding you, it's been happening this last little while.

Massive. This tells me this is meant to last for years. And since it's meant to be the total destruction of what was the economy, in order for sustainability and depopulation, then it's meant to last for years. It really is. This is the big one, where the rich men of the earth truly have declared war upon all of the peoples of the planet.

So send a few bucks my way and hopefully I can get through, as long as I can get through, for who knows when or whenever, I'll tick along. Because I'm in touch with so many folk across the world, and it's been a long, long journey indeed of watching and observing and analyzing and being in touch with soo many people as we go through all of this. And physically it takes, really it burns you out. It takes years off you, no doubt about it. So you don't want to be under that little fig tree or in the vineyard, believe you me, when you're given the push. It's not healthy, in any generation. It doesn't mean you're a prophet either. It just means that whatever it is sparks you off, whatever it is, and you get no rest, you see.

I have no doubt at all you're in the battle of the world. It used to be said when people used to talk in religion, more openly about religion, without fear of dogma. Because in religion too you have factions that want power, and then total power, until they will exclude all talk or inquiry. Anything that stops inquiry is not from God or a deity. Unless it's an evil one, you know. People did ask all the pertinent questions about living, you know. It's a natural thing to do. You can all agree on something, that there's something bigger than all of you, within religion. And you can also agree that there's, definitely looking around you in your own world experience, there's an awful lot of evil here too, little evil.

Psychiatry as I've said before can always come down and say, well, you know, it's just psychopaths and sociopaths. So that explains it all, eh? It doesn't explain anything at all. It's a way of describing things, I've said before, like describing the signs and symptoms of someone that's perfectly possessed at times, you know, or partially, or by minor entities or beings, or major ones. And that's a puzzle for people as to what camp to fall into. People want to fall into camps, you see.

But I've said before, inquiry shouldn't make enemies of your fellows, just inquiring into things. And unfortunately Protestantism did jump on the bandwagon, early, of science. Oh, it must be scientific, it must be rational, it scientific and... Of course they also, so many Freemasons, the old brotherhood idea, eh, were Protestant as well. I think some years ago I remember reading an article where it said a good portion of preachers in the Baptist Church organization in the States were Freemasons, they were largest number actually. So their pastors were Freemasons too. Freemasons, under all the different guises that just, it's a happy little club for guys. It might be happy and all that, but the fact is too, its an international brotherhood. What part of international, with international goals, you know, preaching things like the brotherhood of man. These are all flavors and shades of international communism.

Then you go into Albert Pike's books and articles. They changed it to A Bridge To Light eventually for modern Freemasonry because literally it's too intellectual they said, Pike's book Morals and Dogma, that people today can't follow it. They want short simple sentences and things, you know, not deep concepts of philosophies and religions. So they give them A Bridge To Light instead, eh. But regardless they were set up to be an international force of revolutionaries. And you can be a revolutionary on a minor scale too within your own society. Look around you today. And then at a higher scale and a national level, when you bring a country into revolution. Same kind of thing too.

So anyway, you're living through an amazing system that most folk don't even understand as they live through it. All they do is react to events and circumstances of the time you’re living through. That's the general bulk of the population, just reacting. The path of least resistance is what they always choose. They don't even know they're being coerced into making these little decisions. It's all done so slickly, you see, they just adapt and adapt and adapt. Again it's this theory again, adapt or die, the Darwinian theory, you see. So they adapt and they, well I shouldn't have done that, but I had no choice really and it was just much easier to go this way and ftt. You know?

You're living in a system that they don't even understand. They don't even know, understand what the nation-state is. They really don't. If you live in your little bubble in your little area you think the whole of the nation-state is the same as you and the same as where you are, and they'll have the same ideas and opinions and likes and dislikes. There's nothing further from the truth. Everything's micromanaged by experts depending on where you live. All the experiments were done already across continents, especially in the States, we’ll make this little block here conservative, we’ll make this little block here liberal, and you know, they study them and experiment on them. That's how it's done. But most folk literally will take the path of least resistance, and they'll keep doing that until they're in the slaughterhouse, you know. That's where it generally leads.

We're getting the same, I always think of the term that was used for German Nazi work camps. Which they copied from the communist ones. Because you see the old communist ones with the same slogan, in the translation the Gulags, that work makes free. So you just, if you just keep working and do what you're told and behave and that, eventually you might get free. You’re seeing the same techniques with the lockdowns with Covid, from the start of this whole thing. Oh, we'll just have a little locked down in the spring, that might save us. In the summer you may be able to get out for a week or two in the summer for yourselves, maybe. I can't guarantee it, maybe. Then it comes back in. But Fauci told you, you know.

You see, this is the psychological warfare of work makes free. Do what you're told, just behave, and we'll see, eh. Fauci said at the beginning of this thing back in the spring, after he said it wouldn't affect America at all... Eventually he said, it's never going to, life will never go back to the same again, with the lockdown, never. What part of NEVER don't you get here, folks? You've got tyrants talking to you, that are really, they've all closed ranks. They've all sworn allegiance to each other and to the agenda. That's what I said, they are resolute, that term resolute., to the bitter end they're going to stick, stick by all the guff and the lies that fly against all the evidence, that's self-evident to most folk if they want to look at it.

That means whatever they've chosen, this path that they've chosen, regardless of the hell it will bring down and the death or destruction of the economies and all the rest of it, they're going to stick by it because it's a bigger agenda than anything to do with Covid. It's the whole sustainability project. There's no doubt about it. You have to read Agenda 21. You have to read sustainability projects, and what they mean by sustainability. Hm? What do they mean by it?

Years ago I came out with the quotes that different leaders of the nongovernmental organizations, which are part, by the way, of unconventional warfare, that's what their purpose is. The leaders talked about the global warming and sustainability, and oh, the threat to the planet and all that. They came out with all their scary stories in these different parts of their speeches to their own crews, you know, where they said that, you know, we have to give the people scary scenarios to get them motivated into doing what we want them to do. Scare them, frighten them, right? Quote after quote after quote. I might touch on some of them later, I might not because I did so much of that years ago as we were fighting all this.

Now you're getting the same thing again with the group, then subgroup that comes out of the SAGE group in Britain where they tell the media to basically exaggerate the scary stories to, to create more anxiety in the people to get them to comply. It's the same stuff that's going on, terrify the public, eh, terrify the public.

And then you get, you know, HL Menkin, he was a columnist, not a communist, but a columnist that came out with little ditties. He was well known for it. He says,

“The whole aim of practical politics is to keep the populace alarmed (and hence clamorous to be led to safety) by an endless series of hobgoblins, all of them imaginary and the urge to save humanity is almost always only a false face for the urge to rule it.”

I'll say that again for the hard of thinking…

"...the urge to save humanity is almost always only a false face for the urge to rule it.”

You see? And that's never changed. Terror and fear, oh come to us, we'll save you. Hm? And you've got to understand that tyrants, when they have closed ranks and swore an oath to each other and to this agenda, for the greater good using what they call the noble lie, because they will never admit they are awful evil people, you see, they're just giving you a noble lie to get you to conform to lower the population and, you know. So they never come out and say, yeah, we're really evil. No, no, no. Psychopaths always rationalize to themselves why they're doing something, in order to rationalize it to the public. That's where you are today with at all.

So you're living through the agenda, a massive agenda. Last year you had, leading up and into last year you had, oh it's coming to the end, there's no time that's left to save humanity, we must act NOW, for sustainability. All the biggies, the World Economic Forum, was crisis. You even had Soros came out and gave a speech at the WEF, and I'll put that one up again too. It's worth watching. But this guy has never been voted into anything by any public anywhere and has so much power across the world and what's... Because he's a part of the world intelligence, the real intelligence agency that runs the world. Of course he is. Otherwise nations would have to stop him meddling in their affairs. But they don't. Which tells you all you need to know.

He talked at the WEF too and they all complained about the fact that Trump had pulled them out, temporarily at least, from the climate accord, you see, where the whole sustainability agenda, right down to preindustrial levels, not just of CO2, but levels of existence, you see, that's what they mean by it. You start reducing the population. That also meant, I gave the talks years ago that it was coming, about 2007/8 or so or 2006, of the coming rationing of power and energy. Because energy makes you healthy. Hhhch.

And with, it isn't just to give you electricity to have machines to make things and produce things. It's that too of course. That's going to go out the window because it's already mainly in China now anyway. But it also gives you your heating and so on in a lot of countries, eh. So you end up freezing to death in your own homes in the winter, like they do in Britain now. They're such good, the British people are awfully good at doing that, you know. I think it was Thomas Moore in Britain, Thomas Moore that said that in his writings, he talked about Utopia too in one of his books, you know. He did mention that the British people probably would never rebel, they were very obedient. We've all been so studied, even so long ago, haven't we, eh?

It's an art today, believe you me, they actually teach at universities how to manipulate populations using anthropologists, in their studies too, to go over the weaknesses in the systems of peoples and how to manipulate them. Tragic really, we've never had peace, you know. We just don't get peace. They don't allow you to have peace. Because with, again, if you get peace you might start to think, well, you don't want to budge from being fairly content. No matter what level of society you're at, you might be fairly content, you know, and yet you don't want to budge. So when they want to cut back, or you can't get that, or you've got to cut off your money, or lower your money, or make it worthless, you might get ticked off, you see. So the idea is to keep you always in suspense and in fear, and in rapid change. In rapid change they can increase rapid changes, you adapt to rapid change. It's a trick, you see.

But if the cow is in the field, he's been there for a few months and he's enjoying himself, it's a nice sunny day, he doesn't want to move. Well, that's how they, that's an analogy for the humans of course. That's how we're managed. Such vast quantities of your tax monies go to professionals who manipulate you. Teams and teams of them. And they've got all the different foundations with their huge think tanks of professionals, and staff, each think tank can have thousands, like a civil service bureaucracy working for them, different aspects of managing all of us.

But the person at the bottom you think, you think you've got your little, you know, when you had work to go to you can leave your home and go to work and come back and have a few beers and sit and watch TV and just watch silly, inane nonsense, very immature nonsense generally. Which is what you wanted after a rotten day. Hhhch. You don't want anything that serious, you know, just silly and stupid. And hopefully not packed with PC updates, you know. That's what folk would do, but they thought that was reality, you see. It didn't dawn on them that they were being trained to do that, and encouraged to do that, which kept them out of participating in anything else that was going on.

So as I say, the Protestant churches adapted the idea that science was supreme, step by step until they became for most of them anyway, and again, they don't have that central command, centralization of command I should say like the Catholic Church has, even though that's getting hammered too. They had already fragmented off into literally hundreds and hundreds of splinter groups in Protestantism, which is, again it's a fantastic study to look into it.

Studies have been done on them by behaviorists and sociologists and so on. Quite fascinating to see, it's the same patterning you'll find in Protestantism over and over, where fractions at the bottom, generally, or will emerge within the group, who are dissatisfied at the way of the world is affecting their group and seeing that their own leaders and congregation are falling into the trap of being more liberal with your interpretation of what it meant. So they go off and create their own splinter, their own group, you see, a variation of the first one, the previous one. They would go the same way, until their children would start to say wait a minute here, our parents are getting more worldly here and doing the things they're not supposed to be doing, in the ways of the world, and they will splinter off. And that's how it happens. It happens in all groups including the Mennonites too. Well, they've all been studied by our masters. All of them. Tremendous in-depth studies of it, how it's done. Because what you study with one group you can use on society in general and in fact, the different techniques to control them or manipulate them, or even forced splinters to occur if you want to fragmente society, divide and conquer, you know.

So again Protestantism has that weak link in it. In the States Protestantism turned a lot of people off because of the wealth, it was mainly middle-class eventually. It kind of became more materialistic. In fact, it copied more of the Old Testament until it was becoming more and more materialistic in a sense. This battle between Christianity and the Old Testament to do with wealth has never been, can never really be reconciled I think, excessive wealth. It can't be, I think anyway. It doesn't mean that people who become wealthy become nasty or evil. But a lot of people do. They forget what they are there for. And comfort takes over. And they can't relate eventually, in fact, to people who are not from the same class eventually. That's a fact.

I mean, you'll see that, that's what helped fragment it in Britain too, much quicker in fact when religion became a tool of the state long ago, as it generally does, you know. The Church of England is a good example. Don't forget, the Church of England was born out of revolution against the Catholic Church. Although it kept all the rights and so on of the Catholic Church. And they made the monarch of England the head of the church, as opposed to the Pope. So naturally for centuries afterwards a lot of the writing and the praises and the Psalms were dedicated to praising the king and protecting the king or queen or whatever, etc. So it became a tool of the state. That's why it really, really perished to an extent. So many folk have fallen away from the Anglican church, the English church, and joined the Catholic Church again hoping it would get some traditional values taught, retaught. Because the Anglican church went the way of the world.

But the Protestant groups in the States are something to behold. I'm talking about the TV type evangelist that used to come on and they would do their big Hollywood type extravaganzas, with literally Hollywood light shows and everything and sound sets, all the professionals to put on a great extravaganza of entertainment in a sense. They go up there and cure everybody with just touching them on the forehead. And then pass around 5 gallons bins to put all the money in, around these massive audiences. They couldn't fail because you had a generation that was trained, they were brought up with this kind of thing thinking it was all real.

They've done some very good exposés of Benny Hinn as an example and his shows. It's worth watching how the professional performances that are put on, with professional lighting, stage production, audio that would suit AC/DC, fantastic audio, and how it's all produced, you know. And the money that's raked in is just... But then they did a follow-up from I think that one with Benny Hinn, and they went and talked to people before the show, then afterwards, over the next few weeks to see if anyone had... And some of the folk had mortgaged their homes to give as a gift in order to have their son healed and things like that. Just horrible things that were happening. Just a travesty, travesty, travesty. And a mockery of something that's supposed to be so pure, you know. Horrible. There's a lot more of that in the States too, at least massive TV ones, that also don't work for the people inside the country. And get paid not to. [Alan chuckles.] Anyway, there's many stories to all this.

But the thing is, religion, at one time at least the people could talk about, and the Catholic Church as well, they did, they were allowed to talk about things to do with that of the spirit. Without being soppy about it. Because that's what turned Protestants off. Don't talk like that, it's not scientific. But the Catholic Church didn't discourage people who would talk about their experiences of sensations of other-, and otherworldliness around them. That perhaps interacts with us, and through people too. The Catholic Church too didn't disapproved of having a visit by a real ghost, you know. Because they said by tradition if something came to you it was for a purpose, and you would know when it came to you. So that was okay, that type of ghost, you see. As opposed to demonic entities and beings like that.

You find same thing in Zoroastrianism where they have a different idea, again, the good, the bad, everything is dualistic. And where they, from again even earlier traditions than Islam, had incorporated into it the idea of these demonic kind of characters that could take human form. Again, you might even say possession. And they could never be dismissed, you see. And they would give examples in history too, as we used to do, of tyrants that crop up that can lead nations and continents to wars and things, you know. And also those who behind-the-scenes can help promote it from outside designations for other purposes too.

What does run it all? What kind of people, real-life human beings, as you would call them human beings, could sit back and plan agendas that would get worlds fighting each other?... Millions of people slaughtered in the fight?... Profit off of it?... And even write the history books and to give different reasons why it all happened? I mean, that's, this is how it's done, you know. This is how it's done.

In the States they used to be a bit more open about it, when they called them the war hawks that would be fronting for big international corporations, eh, the military-industrial complex. Who would plan wars, they would plan the companies and corporations that would make fortunes off these wars. In the Vietnam era I can remember when officers in the US military were given options to invest in the companies that were selling the napalm and different things and Agent Orange in Vietnam. It was going to be good for everybody, you know, look on the bright side, you can benefit. You've got to really stop and say, wait a minute here, you know, what are we? What are we? Are we what? What are we, as we define humans here, what are we?

Because all these decisions were made before the war starts. Even before there's a rumor of having one, to the general public, most of its planned out. Tony Blair, the one-man cheering band to get Britain into the war in Iraq and Afghanistan and so on, Iraq, and a couple of his cronies beside him of course, part of this cabal that the neo-libs of Britain, you know, as opposed to the neocons in the States at the time. It came out a few years afterwards, I had already said it, I knew it had happened but sure enough someone printed in the papers and confirmed it. Tony Blair and a few of his cronies had invited in the heads of all the oil companies that Britain had shares in. They divided up, before the war started in Iraq, before they even declared war, you know, or if they ever did, hhhch, they divvied up the oil fields, who was going to get shares in what and how much for you and how much for me and all that kind of stuff. Quite coolly and matter-of-factly.

It's astonishing that we, and again afterwards we put up with the pride thing, this strange pride thing. The same thing that Rome did, you know. Rome used to be a puzzle until you see it happening in your own lifetime. Where ancient Rome had a tradition during its ascendancy of being the military power, conquest, and it took resources in countries, and even introduced taxation into countries so they could take money away and resources away back into Rome. Nothing has changed. And they would give metals and so on to the military, and the people in Rome would feel proud of them. It's the same as it happens today.

Until you stop and say wait a minute here. Why are, these countries were not Stone Age countries before we bombed them into the Stone Age. Who's benefiting here? And why are we part of it? How do you define just bad people? I mean, personally how do you all define them? Well, they're just bad people. M-hm. I'd say it's a bit more than just bad people, who have no consciences whatsoever! N-n-n. And what ever they do they'll rationalize it, no matter how absurd it seems. That's why it ties in completely with the Covid exercise, where you're told not to think for yourselves according to Fauci and others. Leave it to the experts. Don't think for yourselves. Just obey. You're seeing the same psychopaths at work here, folks. Because normal folk wouldn't say that. And expect to get away with it! [Alan chuckles.]

Yeah. Believe all the experts, just obey. Fauci said that recently in a little talk he was in when he was asked, don't you think it's getting a bit kind of more authoritarianism? This is, well you know, he says, the Europeans and Americans, the States, he says, they have a tradition of rights and freedoms, but, he says, that can delay progress in dealing with this problem and he says, right now is the time just to stay at home and do what you're told. That's what he said, eh, do what you're told. You're listening to a psychopath here, folks. That's a psychopath talking. And that is a psychopath. [Alan chuckles.] Do as you're told. That same voice will tell you the next thing to do, as you're told, and you won't like that either. And you'll see it, and you will see it, and the other cronies like him, and the Gates and all the rest of them. I'll put the links up to that one, I think I've got it here somewhere.

So yeah, you're definitely in a spiritual battle. And in the world, the more people are living in a world that's atheistic, and trained to be followers, and trained to be passive, trained to do as they're told, then a bigger, there's always a bigger hell than the previous hell in history comes along. That's what happens. A bigger hell. The more scientific it becomes the more hell it will get.

The more you toss out the one safeguard you had which was basically, no matter how much you've been trained to hate it, and all the things involved in it, and all the, hhhch, EVIL that has been done sexually to children, and in the 20th century into this century, which exacerbated it, no doubt about it. But regardless, don't blame the whole society for that. Because they drew these priests out of society that was already being contaminated by a war on them which they didn't even know themselves. So the safeguard that you used to have that would step in and say, no, the church demands that you back off and you don't do this... That's pretty well gone now. It was already weakening for World War II. It was kicked out of the picture almost with the Bolshevik revolution, where they put in their own priests basically into the Orthodox Church in Russia, who had to swear oaths to turn people in, hhhch, for confessions and things, eh, turn them in.

But it would stand up down through history for the people when it came to evil done by rulers. That's pretty well gone now. So now it's down to the core, isn't it? It's down to you and what you'll stand up for and what's right and what's wrong. And the more of the wrong that you've swallowed, and have accepted, it's oh well, you know, oh well, oh well, the less safeguard you have of wrong being done to you. Oh well, oh well. Hhhch.

They used to have a thing called righteous indignation where even passive people within the churches would stand up and take the consequences when something was overtly evil, you know, and you would have righteous indignation. We've been so bombarded and manipulated and managed and brainwashed that most folk can't even feel it today. They just react to fear and do what they're told. But they're not indignant. And they hope that, oh just another reset, oh just another, lets reset the electric trips, you know, the fuses [Alan laughing.] and lock you down for months.

No, this is to go on forever, on and off forever. Until the old system is completely gone... of deciding what you're going to do in life, what you're going to work at, will you get married, will you have children? All these, this is to be ALL managed by professionals from now on, folks. That's what it's about. The whole of the 100 years of the agenda for the 21st century is to be crammed into this century. Not just 2015 and 2030, it's every 15-year part, the whole hundred years is to be rammed through, until they get what they want at the end of the century.

Which, you'll never recognize it. If you're even alive. Right down to permits to have children. Sterilization mandatory. All these things are discussed, folks. I did the talks years ago on it from their own writings. It came out of last year's climate summit, too, that they were going to go further and harder now, that's what they said, maybe even have to introduce a more drastic agenda and part of the agenda to do with breeding. They are meaning licensing and monitoring abortion. That's what they meant. This is from their own writings, eh. So with Covid and the great reset this is all being done. You are in it. This is it.

The last few years they kept saying, we're running out of time, we're running out of time. They all said it in unison. Same slogans over and over from all the different NGOs, to do with climate change, sustainability. Prince Charles, that fool that he is. And his dad as well, the eugenicist, Prince Philip. Useless eaters, eh? Culling the herd. Yep. As Prince Philip used to call it.

I've mentioned before that John Pilger I think interviewed Lenny Riefenstahl who was the photographer and producer and director for the Nazi propaganda, massive propaganda movie that was being, or documentary type movie using very advanced cinematography techniques at the time. She was asked by John Pilger, how did the middle classes, and she was from a wealthy family, how did it happen that socialism took over, this national socialism? And it was very simplistic omission of a lot of other things that caused it obviously. Part of the reason being of course, they're trying to fight communism at the time. Which was taking over, they were trying to take over Germany with communism. They had been from 1917. But they don't go into that of course. Riefenstahl says, well, how did we get in it? We kind of floated into it. What she was going on about was that you go into it little by little. It's almost like it doesn't concern you. It's like something outside of you. It doesn't really concern you. Or you don't take it seriously. And then bingo, you're in it. It's there.

You take that with all the planned color revolution riots in the States, that's what they were. This is standard stuff for color revolutions. And you get different divi.. ones to make you think, well there's different ones, that's got BLM, and there's the Antifa and maybe other ones. No, this is all planned, and financed by same forces that have been going around the world, with your tax money, and agencies' money and the CIA doing it to other countries for the last 40 to 50 years. That's what you get. That's what they do. They do go into neighborhoods, and they start yelling, whatever factions they've created start yelling at you to terrify you, etc. And to shatter your, your perception of reality. It's intentional. Then you get the mayors that are put in, and also the Attorney General's in some of the US States, who have been financed in by again people in the CIA as you well know and who they are, and funded by it to get in there, who tell everybody to stand down and let it all happen. That's the terror campaign upon the American people. And nothing at the top has stopped it or attempted to stop it.

The leaders of these groups are all well-paid, well-financed and well trained. But the followers are out for the looting and that. They get picked up after it's all over one by one. They know who they all are. All of them. The ones who really believe it is a cause, they're picked up. But the leaders are all like trained mercenaries, you know.

But that's exactly what the US has used in Afghanistan and Iraq. They have tried it in Iran, you know. Color revolutions. They did it in Czechoslovakia. I remember it was in Czechoslovakia. And the Ukraine. Remember they also had the orange revolution? They will generally assign a color to it, you see. All the same techniques. Same financing. Same sources. To terrify a domestic population in unconventional warfare. Psyops.

You couldn't have a Covid outbreak, lockdowns, like marshall law, and these riots, and demonstrations, whatever they want to call them, all going at the same time, same year. Doesn't happen. With financial collapses and rationing. It doesn't happen, folks. It's all planned that way. Again if it wasn't allowed and planned it wouldn't be allowed to even start. [Alan chuckles.] Plato again, eh.

So when it comes to religion, yeah, there are still people who really believe and have a faith, you see, who are decent people. And who aren't in a group just because it's a social club basically. Who actually believe in it, and that's important too. And it's important to realize that you don't even have to be in a club or a group to have the religion either, you know. It might be the only thing you have at the end, that the state will try and destroy this within you, you know. And that shouldn't surprise you. If you're really following your religion like Christianity for instance, where you’re following someone who IS persecuted to the end, didn't you, I mean, that's what you're doing.

But what's so fascinating for those who want to just pooh-pooh the whole idea of external influences in society, apart from just TV, radio and propaganda. But in the realms of spirit you might say, is that you can't just put off forever the fact you're witnessing incredible evil, planned evil. That's part of it, planned evil, coordinated evil being put across and everyone at the same, everywhere in the world, by, from the same sources, repeating the same things exactly. Knowing what it's going to do. Which is supposedly to save the planet. Which has too many people because YOU are to blame for existing, you understand. That's the whole idea behind sustainability. If there's fewer people, they said at climate change, then there would be less consumption of goods, there would be less CO2, less less less wastage, yada, ya of resources. The Club of Rome, the enemy then is the people, we'll blame them for global warming and this, that and the other.

It hasn't changed. The war is on you. And when you get into real austerity and rationing, what gets me is the food is going to these big underground bases. We have them all over the place, you know. And I'm not speculating on that, I know it [Alan chuckles.] from people who worked on some of them, even building them. I remember years ago they did some in England, some documentaries of them that were, and of course there's ones under the Denver airport too as we all know. But in London they had ones that were like small cities, hm, for the wealthy elite, the very elite, the important folk, yeah, and their families to live comfortably even a century or two some of them. When I see the foodstuffs... And it's been going on all year. It's not going to stores that have got hardly any customers anymore. This is supplies for years and years and years of plenty for those who will be living in these facilities in continuity of government. That's what it is.

It reminds me right back to 1984, George Orwell where Julia, the girl that he meets and so on and manages to sneak some real food into him. That was great, he had never had any real food in his life. Everything he got was synthetic, this synthetic cheese and synthetic meat, and synthetic... Real coffee they got too, he says, my goodness real coffee, and real this and real that. She says, there's nothing those, you know, the bar-stewards don't have. That's always the way of it, isn't it? It's like the Politburo and the elite staff of the Soviet Union were all well fed on the best of everything. When the folk had to queue up sometimes in the nation for basic goods for hours and hours and hours for rationing. It never changes, does it?

Evil always has the same signs and symptoms.

But it's always a liar. Always.

And I really think when you have a system where they've been preaching at you for years and years that you're the problem, you're the problem, you're the... They've taken more time building this up than they did for a Bolshevik revolution, or a Nazi party, for instance. They've taken more and more years to do all this to get you ready for it, prepare you to be the lambs to the slaughter. And even train the real young folk now, really train them to be a revolutionary force to help carry it out if need be. They never start a premature revolution. Before, they make sure everything is in place, everybody is trained, and brainwashed.

Hm-hm-hm. Now, this isn't just a somber little prattling talk here. It's the facts. I'm telling the facts. This is what's going on. This is not meant to just pass over. This is meant to be a world war type change, a bigger planned change than the last world war. I think therefore you should always realize the many levels of this reality. From basic conology, which is the science of conning people the experts use, now they drag in sciences and pseudo sciences behind them. Any science as long as you appoint the proper leadership over the sciences can become propagandists. Which they have become. Science loses credibility as soon as it's used for political purposes, you see, and can't be trusted at all when it’s used for political purposes.

You can quite so easily turn it from racial hygiene purposes, into overpopulation purposes, eh, and let's start to reduce the population. You're hearing the same things coming from the mouth of people like Bill Gates, whose up there still talking about his vaccines going to make folk healthier, and at the same time it will reduce population. Well, how do you reconcile that? Hm? From a man whose dad was also up there in Planned Parenthood promoting population reduction.

You understand, there's nothing really hidden here as you go through evil times. This is the, this is maybe a little bit different from previous world wars, or war on the world, hhhch. Because there's nothing really hidden. The quotes are out there by the people who made the quotes, you know, of what they want to do and what they are doing. They also have again panels of experts, they've got complete, complete dominance, full-spectrum dominance over all media and all social media to make sure they all parrot the same slogans and the same buzzwords and so on, at the same time, and they all denounce anybody who's not authorized to say things.

So even though all the information is out there, and all the books are out there and the quotes by the people involved on depopulation and why they must do it and so on, countless, countless, I mean there's just vast volumes of information really by the eugenicists and those sustainability groups, etc. and greening groups, all paid and funded by foundations and the taxpayer. It's all your fault and you've got to be brought down, your whole population, the size of you has to be brought down.

And the days of consumerism is over. I said that years ago, eventually... First it's postindustrial, and then eventually you're in a consumer free market economy. Which, it's not a free market, it's free trade economy, which is the service economy. Then eventually they'll bring you into a postconsumer system by cutting off the trade and the items and the goods. They can only do that again through a wartime scenario. Well, bingo, here you've got it, and they call it Covid, you see. The great reset, eh.

They’re all out there, all the usual suspects that then spent their whole careers in politics, these characters. These strange looking, some of them too, you know, strange looking characters some of them. Strange features on some of them, really weird, you can't really place them in any group. And they're telling you what they're going to do and what they are doing to you. You know? Openly. But if you say it then you're hammered by the authorities, which they own, to get the same media to attack you for saying what they said. [Alan chuckles.] This is amazing. This has never been done before, you know. The old type of propaganda and you'd have the counterintelligence and counter propaganda, and they tried to excuse it and say, no, we didn't really do that. No, they don't even bother with that. They just say, they just tell the people, the person who is quoting us saying it is a liar. [Alan laughing.] That's all they have to say, that they're not giving you true information.

Isn't that amazing, eh, amazing times where the truth, as they used to say, would be, was to be shouted from the rooftops, everything that was hidden would be shouted. And it IS. But folk don't recognize what's going on because of the techniques that are being used against them. They might be shouting that, but for goodness’ sake, and it might all be true, but you're not allowed to say that, you're obviously disinformation and our agencies have said that that's not true, that's false news. Even if we said it first. [Alan laughing.] Amazing times, eh? A time when literally everything would be so fast, they said. And here it is, it's all fast. And people would be coming to and fro, and you know, you kind of imagine a fast pace of life, eh. They would always be learning but never knowing. Well, look at the folk today, they learn all this rubbish nonsense and piles of data, but they never really know what's going on. They really don't, do they? Np.

It is an amazing time to be alive with this happening. But you're witnessing utter tyranny and folk don't recognize it. The tyranny that's used incredible lies, and made incredible statements, like Gates and Fauci, and others, eh. And even more statements coming out from the military now stating they should arrest folk and lock them up for putting out disinformation about Covid. And who is deciding what's true and what's not? Now you've got arbiters of truth now, eh, who are completely politicized and appointed.

Do you know that unconventional warfare that you've been using across on all the world in their different countries that you've been attacking for years, this is again part of full-spectrum dominance too. But you flood it with your own doctors, and translators that they have in other countries, and you use them in their own countries. You do this kind of stuff in their countries that you have invaded. The CIA has thousands of people on its staff and thousands more as assets, they're like part-timers, eh, who are used occasionally, you pull them up when you want them. Whatever kind of scientist you want, they'll supply them, by the thousands for you. They've done it.

Why do you think when you have just as well-qualified virologists and epidemiologists as the Fauci type, Birx type combo. But you've got all these other ones who are saying completely the opposite things from Fauci and Birx, that they're shut down as well from, because, by the same media that's just the mouthpiece, the media is now a mouthpiece of propaganda. Always has been really. But blatantly so now when they're, oh shut them down, don't, just deny that they're telling the truth. How would the media know you're telling the truth? Who tells the media?

You are in a war and it's a complete, intolerant war, full-spectrum dominance of information. So the first thing you do in battlefield scenarios in conventional and unconventional warfare, YOU must dominate the narrative. Even in your own country if you're going outside the country, you must give as much propaganda to your own people to keep them on board with you. In an unconventional war it's also a war for dominance to have the confidence backing you, of the people, and that you wean confidence away from other competitors. That's part of it too. It's all been applied since the beginning of this whole Covid thing. M-hm.

You can see the preparations for it when they admit it in the exercises like Event 201, you know? And you go back to the Dark Winter exercises too. And other exercises, some more I will put up tonight. They had other exercises from Johns Hopkins University group that seems to be the prime one for, hhhch, doing all these different exercises. Hm. They go through it all and how eventually they'd have to have total spectrum dominance over the information and the narrative, and they would have to basically smear using every technique possible stop people from giving you any contrary information. It doesn't matter, it doesn't make, it didn't say even if it's true. No, they don't care. You see, they've got their agenda, their war agenda here and nothing must interfere. Truth mustn't come anywhere near it. Because it's to get a mission accomplished, that's what warfare is about. Nothing to do with the truth. It's about winning whatever it is you set out to win and do.

So here we are with it all and it's not going to be pleasant. Once again, as they terrify the public by these leaked, it's that they're not leaked, they're dished out to the press, announcements from the military now getting you ready and you've got to be very afraid to do what you're told. You've got to realize that you're not supposed to be putting up with this kind of nonsense from your own militaries. Or anybody else's military for that matter. Do you understand that?

So having said that, you, I mean, here is a little paragraph from the US Code of Federal Regulations. They talk about terror and force, right. It says...

Terrorism

fbi.gov

Terrorism is defined in the Code of Federal Regulations as

“the unlawful use of force or threat of force against persons or property to intimidate or coerce a government, the civilian population, or any segment thereof, in furtherance of political or social objectives”

M-hm. That's one of the definitions of terrorism, folks. I say it again...

“the unlawful use of force or threat of force against persons or property to intimidate or coerce a government, the civilian population, or any segment thereof, in furtherance of political or social objectives”

Well, the whole of the Agenda 21, the great reset, all the rest of it, that, this covers that all. That's what it's about, eh. It's a war of terror on the public, the civilian population.

Look at the lengths they've gone to. Do you understand they took years to prepare all this. Years of doing their different exercises for their "biowarfare to come", you know. And dummy exercises over and over and over again, eh. And how to silence, how to silence people talking about, even if they come out with the facts, how to silence them. And how they already had all the media platforms on board with them before Covid broke out. That was in the Event 201 exercise. And it's a lot worse now, isn't it? Quite amazing isn't it.

Of course they're going to bring the military in eventually, not just for the jab. [Alan laughing.] It's just astonishing. I stand back from politics. I think the only thing that people got in the States with Trump in was a stalling for time before the real main force came back in, that's authorized by the supposed deep state/CIA international government group, you know. It gave you about four years of a reprieve. But again, people expected one man to change everything for them and it wasn't going to happen. And things that people, that he should have done for the people, were not done either, you know.

It's amazing, once the Covid outbreak came out you have this, again, this dualistic thing coming from Trump, where he makes statements like he knows that it's mainly... You don't kill the whole herd and then starve to death, you don't kill off your meat supply and then starve to death. You know what I'm saying? So let's just shut down the whole economy. And he made some good statements there. But by the same token, he praises the pharmacological companies for their fast tracking of the drugs and so on and the vaccines. That were preordained anyway who was going to get all these, before Covid broke out, folks. Hhhch. Moderna was sitting in the wings waiting for this to happen, as Fauci darn well knows.

You have a cheering Trump that says the military will help deliver the vaccines. Again, blanket immunity for everybody who gives you vaccines, pharmacies, whoever, nursing staff, doctors... So you’re left, if you get side effects or you die or you’re crippled for life, you have, there's nothing you can do about it. Well, that's no choice at all, is it? Really? Unless folk really want to do it and just go along with it. Sure, it's their... Folk will rush to get it actually because they’re so terrified. That happened with the swine flu that petered out by itself, again, back in 2009 or so. Another great test that the public turned its back on. And they lost that one so they came back in force with this one, eh.

So yeah, Trump was all for the military. Trump, remember, when he ran the previous time, the very first time for politics, he did say in his speeches that he was all for the pharmaceutical companies to rush things through – again, to help the people, right – and bypass lots of years of testing, he says, and get right to the people. This is when he ran the first time before Covid or anything else. So now the guy has authorized the military... He wouldn't use the military when Washington DC was, hhhch, getting set on fire at one point! [Alan laughing.] And other places too, you know. Which can be done under certain, according to the U.S. Constitution and so on under certain circumstances. But anyway he was willing to put them out there to bring the private corporations’ products and inject them into your bloodstream.

...that's going to alter your DNA, eh! That's really wonderful that. Even though you have to really wait a few years to see the real outcomes of anything. And apart from that, even Fauci said that these things won't give you full protection against it, it might only give you a little protection, so you won't see the sniffles or something. I mean, come on here! So something that may have really dangerous effects on you and could alter your DNA, that's what it's meant to do, right, is going to be injected, it might not do anything for Covid.

There's a massive agenda here, and some of it is just pure greed and it's old cronyism. So I mean, they decided before who was going to get all the money here. They all had their hands out too. They knew exactly what they were going to get. They even made the deals as to who would do the contact tracing the year before in 2019 before Covid broke out. I gave the story out months ago on that.

So you're living through an amazing agenda and the public don't know. And you can't blame them, eh, because they watch TV every day and get terrified. They're right back to the same numbers game, the same, they had to admit in late summer that they went way over, there was about 94% of the people, they had to cut the numbers of people who died by about 94%! ...that didn't die of the Covid itself at all.

Now, back to statistics. Statistics, what a fiddle that one is, eh? M-hm. Right down to even hospital admissions. It's not necessarily admission. Most of them don't stay the day. These are really visits. And lots of them are visits to get the nasal test done, or to go back for a second test even because they're terrified of getting it. But it's put down in the hospital as it, you see. Every trick in the book is on the go. Because there's a world of an agenda, there's a whole new world waiting at the end of this, eh, that you are not going to like. Because you wouldn't listen, they said, you just wouldn't listen to the sustainability agenda, and you wouldn't stop consuming. Hm? You wouldn't stop doing it. So they're going to do it all for you. It's as simple as that. So much for democracy, hm.

Now, I could go over many of the articles I did years ago. I could. Where I go through the quotes by the leaders of the big foundations and the NGOs, these armies of climatologists, or climate change advocates and so on, for sustainability. I could do one after the other because there's countless of them, where they were open about it, we have to offer up scary scenarios to get the people to listen. So, terrify the public, you know. And it doesn't matter again if the climate science is all wrong. It's for a good cause, a good change for producing equity on the planet, things like that. Coming from politicians, like they did in Canada. I could go through stacks of these quotes by well-known people but I won't because I've done it all before years ago and it bores me.

And it doesn't really matter, I think, how many times you tell people this anyway. It's an interesting thing, if they're not ready for something, you could teach them all day long with the evidence, including videos from the people giving these talks, where they admit lots of it could be down to opinion instead of real science. But it doesn't matter anyway. And it wouldn't matter to them. Because the next day when they hear the next bit of fear, they're back to square one again. That's a fact. That's how it works, you know.

So what I'll do, I will mention one thing that ties in with the code, right. The great reset. Just as an example. I mentioned this before, recently again, this one. It says…

To The Global Elite The Math Is Simple:

Human Overpopulation Is Causing Climate Change

So The Solution To Climate Change Is Population Control

thetruthwins.com / 21 May 2010

(Alan: Well, no. Climate change is the excuse for population control, you see. Because they want to reduce it, they don't need you anymore, hm.)

Today there is headline after headline in the mainstream media about how dangerous "climate change" is and about how the world as we know it is going to end if we don't take dramatic steps to fight global warming. But what they don't tell you in the mainstream media is what the "final solution" for the problem of "climate change" that the global elite have come up with actually is. You see, for the global elite the math is simple. They believe that human overpopulation is causing climate change, (A: No, that's what they say, I don't think they really believe it.) and so the solution to climate change is population control. As bizarre as that sounds, that is what they actually believe. The truth is that they are convinced that climate change is going to literally destroy the earth …

(A: I really don’t believe that, personally; this is the article I’m reading here. I think we’ve always known, I mean, they had climate change before there were humans on the planet, folks. Including, you know, very hot burning phases too. Hhhch.)

In fact, it is the official policy of the United Nations to fight climate change by promoting population control measures. They don’t even try to camouflage it anymore. Last year the UNFPA (the United Nations Population Fund)

(A: By the way, that was set up at the United Nations by the Rockefeller foundation, for those who don’t know that. The UN is the big front for the big agenda. They used to call it the Department of Population, now they call it Population Fund…)

released its annual State of the World Population Report entitled “Facing a Changing World: Women, Population and Climate”, and in that document it was made clear that the official position of the UN is that the only way to avoid a major climate disaster is to dramatically increase “family planning” services around the globe and to do whatever is necessary to reduce worldwide fertility rates.

(A: …which you can download, the link is there.)

(A: Okay…)

to dramatically increase “family planning” services around the globe and to do whatever is necessary (A: … do you understand that?) to reduce worldwide fertility rates.

(A: Hm? But yeah, I mean, it's always been their agenda, even before they came up with the idea, remember, of climate change. The climate change idea was picked by the Club of Rome that was given the task to find a way to unite the planet, to fight something, some common enemy, in order to bring this agenda in and population reduction. So there you go. But yeah, that's...)

“family planning” (A: …is abortion and so on…)

…and to do whatever is necessary to reduce worldwide fertility rates.

The West, they tried all this stuff out in the West first, that's why the fertility rate has been plummeting in the males for years in the West. It's not by chance. That's why they're not worried about it. As I say, if the farmer has his animals suddenly going awry in some way or another health wise, they've got to find out why. Well, they know why, and they're not worried about it, so it means it's intentional. That's why you're going sterile. Hhhch. But yeah, that's how it works, folks.

As I say, I'll tie it in once again just before I get onto the next piece of information. That's what they said at the last climate change meeting last year. We weren't listening to them for sustainability. Time is running out. Time is running out. They always said this, they had countless articles where all the leaders kept saying, oh, time is running out. You know? So we'd have to go into a drastic measure to save the planet and so on. So BINGO, Covid happens. BINGO, and immediately your economy is brought to a grinding halt. Remember we've got to stop consumerism? Well, you can't buy if there's nothing getting supplied, hm?

They've already tested out in the stores, eh, the few big ones that are left to stay open, that was all planned in advance too of course. Where they cordoned off areas for nonessential supplies, getting you trained already, you see. Postconsumer. Just basics only. Austerity programs, like I did years and years ago, all these talks on it too, from the right sources too. And here you are. That's... the war is upon you. The war is upon you.

I'll go back to that one article that I saved to do with, again, the Code of Federal Regulations for the US, right, to do with terrorism.

"the unlawful use of force and threat of force against persons or property to intimidate or coerce a government, or civilian population, or any segment thereof, in furtherance of political or social objectives"

The war is upon you. Remember in martial law they have complete control of media, so all media is uniform, saying the same things. No dissenting opinions are allowed, hm, or you can be arrested. I'm talking about martial law. This is standard stuff, going way back. Gatherings, even before, regardless of the disease even, gatherings are always limited to so many people outside and even so at certain times of the day or night as well. That's another part of it too. This is martial law you're under. Rationing is introduced. ID is introduced. Of course you've got it all on your cell phones and your apps, which you're happily all getting to be very obedient.

And you'll never satisfy them. Each time you submit to, oh, I'll try that, they might leave me alone, they've said they'll leave me alone, I've done the right things, I've got the latest app and I'm tracked and traced and blah blah blah. It's not, it's never going to be good enough, folks. They don't care about you. [Alan chuckles.] They really don't, you know. You don't get a little gold star like school, you know, a little mark for being goody-goody to the teacher. In this game here it doesn't happen. You're in a wartime agenda. This is a war on the people. And they really mean business. Completely. You've got this article here...

Acting defense secretary orders top special ops civilian to report directly to him stripes.com / 18 Nov 2020

WASHINGTON — Acting Defense Secretary Christopher Miller on Wednesday ordered the Pentagon's top civilian overseeing the military's special operations community to report directly to him, effectively elevating U.S. Special Operations Command to the same level of the Pentagon's military departments.

The change makes the assistant secretary of defense for special operations and low intensity conflict (A: This is unconventional warfare.) a service secretary-like position responsible for the oversight and advocacy of the military's special operations forces, said Miller, who is expected to serve in the Defense Department's top job only about two months.

(A: Or is he going to continue regardless of the changeover? If it comes.)

Miller announced the move during a visit to the Army's special operations home at Fort Bragg, N.C., his first official visit as defense secretary since he took the job Nov. 9 as former Defense Secretary Mark Esper was fired by President Donald Trump via Twitter.

(A: So they're talking about…)

…enable us to streamline the information flow,

(A: Right?   It's interesting that.)

“This reform will immediately improve agility to the department (A: Right…) and the command and will enable us to streamline the information flow, enhance decision-making and more adaptively and adeptly support our commanders and their superb soldiers, sailors, airmen and Marines,” Miller said in brief, prepared comments.

(A: Now, is he talking about internally or externally? It doesn't say here. You see?)

Miller said he would prefer to raise the top special operations civilian post to an undersecretary of defense title, but he also said he lacked the authority to do so.

Ezra Cohen-Watnick, a former aide to Trump’s first national security adviser Michael Flynn, is now filling the assistant secretary of defense for special operations and low intensity conflict role on an acting basis. Miller briefly served in that position on a temporary basis earlier this year, as well.

Now, these are post, really, they've used again to win over the people in conflicts overseas. You win them over using different techniques, psychological, massive psychological warfare, multileveled warfare too. It makes me wonder if that’s what they’re going to use internally here. They actually, they are already using it of course by using the media, and teams of people who will just tell you if you're telling the truth or not. They've got these unseen judges that simply will ban you if they claim that you're putting out false information. On certain topics, eh.

But this article goes on and on. It makes you wonder if it's going to be used right off the bat? Why would it happen when you're ready to leave office, if that's what Trump's doing? Or is it going to continue into Biden's watch as they call it? And is it all agreed upon in advance? Are we watching a good stage play here in politics as well? M-hm. But I know they want, they were supposed to, remember, bring back stacks of the troops from overseas, and it really hasn't happened. They simply move them around to different bases. And the US remember has got thousands of troops all over the world, you know? They've got hundreds and hundreds and hundreds of bases. [Alan chuckles.]

So it will be interesting to see what they're, how they're going to use unconventional warfare. It's already been used internally; we do know that. They're using the military in Canada and the States for psychological operations and attacking websites by the way. The same in Britain. It isn't just the 77th Brigade. They've got other ones as well in Britain. And yeah, they use them. And they hassle you.

Canadian military wants to establish new organization to use propaganda, other techniques to influence Canadians - ottawacitizen.com / 2 Nov 2020

You don't realize too, I read an article last week where, it wasn't a TED talk, it was something similar. But a fella gives you a talk about when you Google something, if you use Google, or there are other search engines too, I'm sure they're much the same. You don't realize that what topic you're punching up, you're going to get different replies as to what sites to look at than people that you might know if they punch up the same question, you know, with the same search engine. Because they're tailor making it all, information, to suit you, or to suit their version of you, how they want you to look and think about things, what they want you to look at. Because they have decided you might need a nudge in this direction or a nudge in that direction, not a nudge that your neighbor is going to get, you see, a different kind of nudge. They're literally tailor making the information results to prompt you to change. This is how far ahead all the stuff is, you know. N-n-n. I tell ya. So much for the democracy of the Internet, eh? Oh, it's going to free up everybody, you would all have your say and so on, eh? [Alan chuckles.] The folk don't know.

Remember again, cuttingthroughthematrix.com. Send a few bucks to me hopefully. You'll see how to do it on the website. List all my sites, my official sites. Remember too, you can find me I think on YouTube and also on Bitchute and different places and so on, that other folk take and upload because they're allowed to do that with my talks, as long as it isn't changed, you see. I don't mind folk using my talks, just don't add or detract from it, or... Because then they can fudge you to say anything of course, it's all been done in the past by other people to other people. That's the tricks that they play.

My official sites are all @cuttingthroughthematrix.com. You can use PayPal, send cash is fine, personal check is fine. Some countries can still use international postal money orders, and you've got to say international postal order to Canada. The States cannot send to Canada apparently now, international postal money orders, that is, from the post office but outside the country I think some countries still do that. Money Gram can be used. You could even, you can find innovative ways to get cash to me, I'm sure. Because we're going through a war. And I'm not backed by any covert institution behind me, or agency. And I don't have a team of staff here to churn out documentaries to make you go oooo and aaaa, wow, and stuff like that, and churn out 100 articles a day, that all, that ends up immediately across the Internet to different sites, you know. Little clues like that. [Alan laughing.]

So you've got to be very careful, as I say, and I am. I know that they have been following me for years and years and years would like me to continue through it all. I mean, it's coming almost to an end, you know. I've had calls from other people saying it's going to be time now, you see. Because I've been at this for a long time. As I say, I did come out, I was the first to really come out with what was the big agenda back in the 90s. And I only came out because it was time, I had to come out. I couldn't sit back and watch the only country that was allowing information out, in some circles, because of the rights they had at the time, at the time, hhhch, in the US, to just be navel gazing. I says, no, there's a big agenda and here's the facts behind it, and it's a worldwide agenda, and this is where it's going to take you.

That's what I had to do. I had all this information and knowledge just bottled up and it was time to unleash it and that was it. And as soon as you do that kind of thing you immediately, and I guarantee you, if you're genuine, you'll get people coming out like clones of you immediately and using your stuff, and using it and then spinning it off into absurdities too, to ridicule your material. That's counterintelligence, you see.

I used to talk to people sometimes for hours when I first came out on the radio, privately, you know. After about a year and half one person who contacted me quite often mentioned, he phoned me one night and says I hate to tell you this, he says I gotta tell you this. He says, and he mentioned this other guy that would phone me, I didn't know they were connected, you see. But he says, yeah, we're both employed by, and I won't say the name, [Alan chuckles.], by another guy you would know awfully well, but not in the Americas, who was paying them to pump me for information on the occult and so on like that, and he was using it all for his books. It's astonishing stuff that goes on. The same character got me off the air of another show that I helped to promote initially. That's another story again. Then the person, one of the guys in the show actually phoned me up red-faced and said, I'm sorry, we made a deal to do all these videos and, that was part of the deal that they wouldn't bring me back on again.

You wouldn't believe the dirty tricks that go on. You really don't know what's going on. You really don't know. There's not a happy field out there of what they used to call the patriot community. Because it's completely infiltrated, folks. And it always was. But worse now. [Alan chuckles.] But yeah, it's up to yourselves what you want to follow or listen to. But as I say, you've got to think for yourselves. You've got to do it.

Whether you want to accept it as a purely humdrum society and an atheistic society in a humanistic world, it's up to you, you know. Or you believe that there's a spirit side to it too, it's up to you as well. I can only go by my own experiences. I think it's a very pessimistic way to look at the world is through purely atheistic eyes. Because then hell can be brought to your door and you'll accept it, because you have nothing else to compare it to. Oh, well, you know, it's... it's a pretty hellish world, and that's just the way humanity is, and you'll go along with it to the bitter end, you know.

And yet you watch all these movies about the heroes fighting oppressors in all the Sci-Fi’s and things like that, but you can't bring it into your own life. That's pretty sad. I've said for years and years, stop following people. Because YOU, and I meant this, and especially now, this is the time for it, you see. YOU ARE YOUR OWN CHAMPION. Stop looking for the one to ride into town and do it for you. You are, you ARE your own champion. In more ways than you perhaps realize. Because the act of not conforming to the demands of evil will have its rewards in other ways altogether. Never mind helping you feel better you've done the right thing for once. [Alan chuckles.] Eh?

But that's what we're living through, is a time of decision, you see. You are now IN, all the books that you've read and all the documentaries you've watched about evil empires, you are now IN it, now. You are IN it. And evil never comes out and says, yeah, we're evil, we're the bad guys. It never says that. They always come out as the saviors, you see, we're here to save you from yourself. You see? Psychopaths will never say they are evil. In fact, they will rationalize what they do, all, to the bitter end they will rationalize it, no matter how absurd the rationale appears to outsiders.

But it is approaching so fast, isn't it. It's here, really. You know? And these circles within circles, in circles that interconnect with circles of acquaintances, and CEOs, and heads of this and heads of that, and specialists, all collaborating together on this. It's just, it's not astonishing in a world of mass communication. They don't even need to meet physically, and they haven't for a long time in meeting places, you know, to have world government and to bring us all down. Quite astonishing, eh? Electricity is not our friend, unfortunately, when it comes to this at least. As I say, they couldn't do any of this without the computer and mass communication, mass surveillance of all kinds. They couldn't do anything. That's why it's all happening now too.

I can remember reading about, you had the Luddites and you had saboteurs, all these different things that happened, fights against technologies of the past. I have looked at Mennonites too, and other groups, similar groups and thought well, I've got nothing I can say bad about them. Because if we all go down into austerity, I thought this for years, then if they had hung onto the old ways, I don't know how many of them still have their own blacksmiths and things like that, but they used to be self-sufficient, that was the whole point of it initially, then they will survive. And if they keep horses and so on, they will survive. As long as they can plant, grow and feed themselves and make their own things, they can survive.

And they’re an enemy and they’re being attacked now. They're getting attacked by the authorities, even in Canada here. In fact, all religious groups, especially Christian groups are really being hammered. Across the world now of course. Because they're the easy targets, they don't fight back, and they are more compliant and obedient. They won't DARE do this on Islam to the same extent. And they don't dare do it on other groups too. But Christianity especially is an easy target of obedient people.

So they'll be going after the Mennonites in Ontario because they claim that there was an, oh, an outbreak of Covid after, I don't know, a wedding or something, or maybe a church meeting. But don't forget, outbreaks are not outbreaks, it's not outbreaks of sick dying folk. It's just that somebody got tested, [Alan chuckles.] and with this wonderful Covid test where the inventor said it shouldn't be used for diagnosis. But what does he know, eh? The fragments of the DNA, or virus I should say, are literally multiplied many, many times in cycles, way over what they should be too, even then. They say once it's over about 32 it becomes very, very unreliable, and they're up to 45 cycles now so they are guaranteed to get lots of false positives, I think. In their own writings this stuff comes out, you know.

But anyway, they're going after the Mennonites now and trying to lock them down and trying to get them tested and compliant and go along with that all. To stop the social gatherings. Any sort of human thing to do, like social gatherings and things, have got to be stopped, eh. You can't have humans being human anymore when you want to change society into a completely fabricated war gamed planned future. That's what it is.

So I'll put some links up on the stories about Ontario and the old order Mennonites as they like to call them. Because again, they would be self-sufficient if they were left alone, you see. You can't have that. And again, they've got another dangerous thing, they're pretty well, because of their whole nature of being in a community they've kind of sworn, in a sense, to help each other out, you see. Oh, what a horrible thing to think about, to help each other out in times of massive crisis, like feeding each other... Oh, how horrible for totalitarians to watch that going on, eh. When they want you coming to them with their rationing card or your rationing app, you know. [Alan chuckles.] Can't have the Mennonites feeding themselves and other people for goodness' sake.

This is war. This is a war going on that most folk will never comprehend. Even as it's happening. They used to say that, in these old movies when they were glorifying surgeons and things and, they would work hard, they would stay up all night long just working on the patient trying to save their life. And oh goodness me, there's a nurse, you know, taking the beads of sweat from the surgeon's forehead and, ftt, ahhh, 10 hours at the operation but the patient dies, eh? Ftt. And that's what they used to say, the operation was a success but the patient died.

Well, it's the same with Covid, eh. Let's just absolutely stop the economy. Put millions literally, there's millions and millions of people unemployed in the Americas, folks. Oh yeah. Hhhch. And watched everything plummet. Watched rationing come in. Watched scarcities come in. And eventually scarcities of food. Let's watch, and never mind the folk dying because they can't get into hospital to get the basic treatments done for lifesaving operations and so on. Forget all that. They're written off already, hm, as a cost of war obviously, because they're not allowing them in. They've already killed lots like that. So again, the operation is a success but the whole patient, this whole body politic, the patients of the body, the people, the social order, ARE DYING. Hhhch, to stop Covid, that hasn't killed a fraction of what it will kill through rationing, etc. etc. etc. etc.

The whole premise of what they're doing to save the nation is completely false. It doesn't pan out. It doesn't equate. You don't kill, it's like killing the herd of cattle, you know, because you thought the cattle were eating too much grass or something. Let's kill them all off, then once you've done it you say, wait a minute, what are you going to eat, where are you going to get milk? Oh, I never thought of that. Come on here! They knew exactly what they're doing here. First time in history you lock up the healthy, who can work. You stop the economy because of it all, first time in history. Because it's planned to take you into sustainable austerity, the big agenda that's been planned for years and years under the guise of global warming and sustainability. The same thing. Agenda for the 21st century. M-hm. Right down to allowing yourself to get managed properly, properly by experts. Right down to everything in your own life, your own personal life, eh. You see, sustainability has more to it than that.

We've already been treated to the little tentative releases into, everything you see in the mainstream media is a release, a planned release, on time. Each is planned on time as a presentation that builds a picture inside of you of the big agenda. You're being programmed. The articles I've mentioned before in the previous months, and right back to the spring, oh, Canada was one of the first ones to say, well you know, we may have to start rationing healthcare, and rationing medication if it gets really bad. It's the ethics and bioethics, and that was all done under sustainability before, when the authorized professors came out and says, you know, people should just die at a prescribed time of life, you've had so many years, just die. That was in Brave New World, you would live a very healthy life, to the end, and at the last you would be very ill, and you'd die. Because they programmed it into you, you see. That's no coincidence.

Why don't you die when you're 65? Leave your pension to the authorities, and they could make the world more equal by using your money, by giving themselves bigger paychecks and things, you know, at the top. Hhhhhh. That's what you're living through right now. You're getting trained and programmed for a whole permanent existence from now on. And of course there will be exceptions for, I read these articles years and years ago, they'd have exceptions for those who are more important people who served the system well, who would be given life extension, you see, meaning for the elite and other prostitutes that they hired to manage us, and they'd also get permission for certain ones to actually breed, to have children. The better type. Selective breeding, you see, they would be chosen for them, just, you know... And for the rest of you, you know, come on, for goodness' sake, you've got lots of sex as long as it's completely, you know, sterile. No offspring.

Now, those in the Club of Rome remember, who were tasked with, by the elite, to find a reason that they could give to the public to give up their rights, to save something in the world or whatever, hit on the idea of global warming and famine and drought that would come out of it, and the like, would fit the bill, therefore man would be the enemy. You see. That's what they said themselves. And there was King as well, I think it was Professor Maurice King, King was one of the members, the high members of, the head of the Club of Rome at one point too. Again, they're all, all humanists, eh, this religion of humanists. You should read it sometime, The Humanist Manifesto. This is what Maurice King said, Professor, eh.

Maurice King: On Global Sustainability

thetrackerseries.com

Global sustainability requires the deliberate quest of poverty,

(A: Are you getting the point here? I'll say that again, most folk really, because it goes over their heads, that couldn't have been what I heard there...)

Global sustainability

(A: Remember, this is very important to remember...)

Global sustainability requires the deliberate quest of poverty, reduced resource consumption, and set levels of mortality control. — Maurice King, professor Set levels of mortality control. Okay? What do you think that means, mortality control? Length of lifespan, folks. Eh? This is all coming out again with the different ethics committees for the Rockefeller foundation, now working with all those in the Johns Hopkins groups for the whole, and the great reset as well. They've churned out all their stuff they've been working at. They're lawyers and they've decided what bioethics and what ethics will be for living and dying, you know. I've already put the articles out to you from their own websites.

It's all there now. These are your new ethicists. This is the new religious priests, you see. We've decided what's right and wrong and what's allowable, it is allowable we can euthanize you, etc. If you were just a useless eater for goodness' sake, then you shouldn't be eating, you're eating our resources, and we're important people, we're intellectual people, we have the right, you see, to have more than you. You're eating our resources, because it's like Karl Marx said, each according to their needs, and their means. Well, important folk need more than you commoners down there, you see, so stop eating our resources! There you go. That sums it up.

Or, you see, again, this is true, this is the real socialism. You don't realize it. The elite technocrats like socialism where they can manage you all in a collectivist type society, where you don't have individual freedoms, you have collective freedoms, and they define what the freedoms are. Remember what the United Nations said too years ago? The individual is the enemy of world peace. Their definition remember of world peace is the Marxist definition, which is, the end of all opposition. That's what they define as peace, under communism.

So you're living through the agenda here and they've got all these different ethics boards set up, you see. They're already introducing, under we're here to help folk, and it sounds kind of you know, kind of reasonable initially, and you say, well, yeah euthanasia started in Holland and Sweden and in Switzerland initially where you could pay money for it, big money. Then the government of Holland allowed it, and now it's rampant. Now you can get killed for just getting a bit depressed as a teenager, they'll happily put you out of your misery, you know. And then they start to decide who should get put out, even if you don't consent to it. You see?

Then Canada joined them and did the same thing. Now you can't trust the hospitals in Canada, folks. Medicine has lost – it's the saddest thing, you know – all credibility, ALL credibility and trust when they start deciding who's going to live and die. That's, phew, out the window, that's it, gone. Gone. If a whole profession signs and accepts that, they should be ashamed of themselves and quit and leave their professions. Because it's not a profession anymore, it's just total sellout to politics and an agenda. A horrible agenda, that, you know, we're here to help you, eh. Ronald Reagan, the most terrifying thing an American citizens can hear is, we're from the government and we're here to help you. Ahhh, we should put up in the nights, I think.

So yeah, back to King here, Professor Maurice King.

Global sustainability requires the deliberate quest of poverty,

(A: What part of that do you not understand? This is for you, you see.)

reduced resource consumption, and set levels of mortality control.

Hm. Okay. Right-o. I guess he was just daydreaming when he said it, eh? Maybe. And this is what you're putting up with and don't even realize it. That has been repeated by other professors since then, more so in the last few years as they get you, you see, you're constantly getting programmed with little bits and bytes of information. Repetition. So when it gets introduced, oh well you know I guess it's quite natural. No, they've programmed you to accept it as natural, hhhch, and you don't even realize it. You don't know. It's just astonishing, it really is, eh. I tell ya.

This article here is again reducing the world population through vaccines. Bill Gates, eh, remember what he said, and he is, they're saying, you can see him saying it and hear him saying it, if we do a really great job on new vaccines, we can lower the world population by 10 to 15%. What?! What?! What?!

These are mind jobs being played here. These are mind jobs on you. They truly are psyop jobs when they say things like that, this kind of doublespeak where your mind can't comprehend... hey, wait a minute, what's he, he wants to help you by giving vaccines, to reduce, help reduce population? Doesn't compute, eh? It's, there's also lots of, used to talk about “the revelation of the method” years and years and years ago, where they generally come out and tell you what they've done after the fact, you know. But sometimes, but during this occultic time, you're getting it, again, and shouted from the rooftops, and at the same time denied if you repeat it, hhhch, what they're saying by their mainstream media. This is a psyop operation when it's done like that. Quite something, eh?

Also this one here is... well I’ve got…

The Solution To Climate Change Is Population Control - thetruthwins.com / 21 May 2010

This is a 2010 article. It goes on and on. It's one after the other in the same kind of vein basically. Another one too is this article to do with, let's see, acchhhh, countless articles actually, I don't want to bombard you with article after article. Here's something to think about, eh...

Fresno bishop tells Catholics not to get COVID-19 vaccine, citing use of stem cells in its development

ktla.com / 19 Nov 2020

Bishop Joseph Brennan of the Diocese of Fresno is urging Catholics not to “jump on the COVID-19 vaccine bandwagon.”

(A: The reason for it…)

Citing ethical concerns about the use of fetal cells in vaccine development, Bishop Joseph Brennan of the Diocese of Fresno is urging Catholics not to “jump on the COVID-19 vaccine bandwagon.”

In a video (A: The link to the video is here.) shared by the diocese this week, Brennan said that some of the researchers racing to produce a coronavirus vaccine have made use of cells derived from an aborted fetus, and perhaps other “morally objectionable” materials.

And as soon as you say that, you know, a good chunk of the population, well so what, they're trying to save us, you know, and so what, they were dead anyway, you know, these babies, you know, at least when they took the cells up. Maybe they were, and maybe they weren't. [Alan chuckles.] And it wouldn't really matter to some people either, they wouldn’t care. But it isn't that that really stands out. Because I gave talks a long time ago from some of the people, big world leaders at the time where they talked about destroying society right down to necrophilia, you know. But what they're getting at is that they'd even make you eat the dead, eat you're dead, you know. That was a saying too that Dzerzhinsky used, who was one of the big early Cheka and NKVD group leaders in the Soviet Union, or the Bolshevik era, when he, a mass slaughter too. Because they were tremendous slaughterers, these people. They enjoyed slaughtering millions of people. They really enjoyed it.

If you want to see demons in physical form, hhhch, do what they do, you just go back and look at what these characters did. You can't ima... it's unbelievable to most folk, you know, that they existed, they did it, and they had powerful positions. But this mass slaughterer, he talked about, he had a complete contempt for the public. Once again, who would obey and obey, and just like, obey Fauci, obey Fauci, you know. Just stop thinking for yourselves and listen to the experts and stop this individualism and rights stuff and do what you're told!

So Dzerzhinsky, you see, did all that stuff to the people. And they, and of course they try to obey him and please him. There's no pleasing him. You're already slated for extinction. They didn't believe in wasting time in re-schooling and reeducation facilities for guys like you. No, they just brought you and your families and children in and slaughtered you all. Whole towns. Villages. One after the other. Dzerzhinsky said that, he says, what does he think of the people. He says, I think they're scum, he says. What do you expect from a psychopathic manslaughterer, with power, eh. But he says, he had no regard for them at all, because why, because they wouldn't stand up for themselves. He says, you can beat them, he says, you can kick them, you can starve them, he says, will they stand up and fight you? Because you are the oppressor, right, he says, no, they just turn over and eat their dead, he says.

These are the characters that you're seeing manifested again. Very openly. In the Bolshevik/communist era you were an enemy of the state and the people, and the papers would denounce you when they were told to denounce you, they would denounce you as such. Just like you're getting today with the, oh, the anti-vaxxers and the misinformation agents out there amongst the public, they're enemies of the people. Dangerous times, folks.

And they're using the military to go after people, you know. Do you understand what's going on here? This is the elites’ revolution. It's not the grassroots. This is not a different system. This is the elites' revolution for the next phase of their system. And they don't need you that's left over from their last system. Are you getting the picture? You are obsolete.

It's kind of like factories, when factories really blossomed, and the big car factories and different kinds of manufacturing plants. They would tool up, as they called it, get all the right tooling in for mass production of items. Then when technologies came along, they were creating new models of whatever they were going to do, they would retool, and they would get rid of their old tooling's, maybe even sell it to other countries. But you would retool. Well, you see, the elites are retooling their world, they're getting rid of all of us, we are obsolete. They've been rather blatant about it, by the way. [Alan chuckles.]

This mind job, this is amazing psyop technique that they're using, where they will tell you that, admit it. And then denying it. From the same sources. It's just astonishing. But that is psychological warfare.

Years ago I gave a talk about the techniques, the basic, you know, examples like little... I says, you're walking down the street, eh, and then you see someone that you're suspicious of. Oh, it looks like a government official to me, you know. Or some, if you were in like a totalitarian system, eh, and you see there's an official there, and he stops you, and before you can blink an eye, he punches you in the face. And you say, whoah, what are you doing!? He says, what are you going on about? He says, you just punched me in the face. No, I didn't. And he looks so convincing, you see, so because he really does, he's trained to be awfully convincing, with his facial expressions. Well, maybe I, well did I imagine that? But my jaw is hurting. And after he tells you that he didn't do it, he hits you again. This can go on and on and on, and you keep saying, accusing him of it, who keeps denying it AS he does it. That's the techniques that's being used now. It throws you into a never-never land there, you're never sure where you are. You'll start to doubt your own judgments on everything. That's intentional. That's intentional.

Unfortunately as I've said, you've had like four years of a bit of a reprieve, a stalling technique with Trump in. If nothing else that's what you got. But now of course you've already seen the other camp, and all the articles, oh, the climate change agenda, we're right back at the meeting this year, or next year, with the same agenda, and we'll put it on steroids basically now to catch up on lost time. The same agenda, sustainability, yada, yada ya, depopulation. The great reset. To bring equality. Yeah, that's equal poverty for most folk. That's what they mean by that. [Alan laughing.] Equality. N-n-n.

All by groups that were never elected, eh? The World Economic Forum. The Council on Foreign Relations. Trilateral Commission. Club of Rome. Countless other ones. All the big foundations on board with it too. The United Nations. None of them Democratic. Who all work together as one unit. Which really they are when you really look at it that way. None of them, they don't believe in democracy. They use democracy for their wars. We're there to force democracy on the people and give them freedoms. As they're taking all you're rights away at home. [Alan chuckles.] And folk never figure it out, you know.

The truth and the telling point is when they actually expect the military to do what they're told and go after you. They're whole population. That's going to be interesting to see if they've prepared them enough. I'm sure they've done all the tests and so on to see how many on their computer models will defect and actually join the public. If the public really get persecuted to a slaughter level, will they join the public in sympathy or what? And they'll have all that worked out too. This is amazing wargaming going on as it actually happens in real time.

So there's the bishop giving you a little warning, you know. Because it's all symbolic of cannibalism, isn't it? Putting someone else's body cells into yours. It is symbolic of cannibalism. You don't have to eat it to be a cannibal. It's the ingesting of it, and whichever way it's brought in, right, vaccination is another way to do it. It's still some living something that was another human being, you understand. It's very symbolic of so, so much, hm. And you tie it in with guess what?...

Human Flesh Looks Like Beef, But the Taste Is More Elusive

smithsonianmag.com / 3 Feb 2014

It’s like pork. Or maybe veal

(A: Hm? Yeah. This is the Smithsonian Magazine it says here, as they get you used to the idea.

Remember Bill Gates has a patent on artificial meat. I read that a few months ago and put up the article for that one too. Just a coincidence he's got fingers in all these pies, you know. I remember doing the articles years ago when I think it was, was it Holland, they had the first project to try to grow human meat in, or meat in tanks, artificial, or, it was really real meat but created artificially through other sources' genes. So here's the human stuff, right. It says here…)

Even if you have no desire to eat the flesh of fellow humans (A: Hm.), it's not so uncommon to wonder from time to time what human flesh looks and tastes like.

Muscle's red color can be traced to the presence of a richly pigmented protein called myoglobin and, more specifically, hemes, the chemical compounds that myoglobin uses to bind and store oxygen as a fuel source for active muscles.

(A: So there ya go. M-hm. For heme, which is the hemoglobin part of it I suppose. Anyway it says…)

So, there you go, isn't that fascinating to see what your future, and very shortly your future meat, if you get any and all by the way, is going to be like, isn't it. It's little bits that just happen to get into the paper, you think, they just happened to get in there, eh. This one just happens to get in about the same time…

Scientists Create 'Grow-Your-Own' Human Steak You Can Actually Eat

unilad.com / 18 Nov 2020

Scientists in the US have created a human steak which can be grown using your own cells and blood.

The bizarre creation is known as the Ouroboros Steak, named after the ancient Egyptian snake that eats itself, though creators have insisted that eating meat grown from human cells isn't cannibalism.

(A: I'm glad they've got experts saying that, that it's not cannibalism, eating human meat, it doesn't matter where it was grown, isn't cannibalism. That's pleasant. I guess they can convince you of anything, eh. M-hm. And interesting they called it after the Oroboros. I remember giving talks on that way back in the 90s. Because Oroboros is a symbol in the society is not just eternal life, but eternal dominance by the way, for those you don't know that. And beginnings and endings, and all endings and new beginnings, run by the same serpent they call it, or system.

Indeed, eh. N-n-n. So that's interesting. Yeah, it says that it's grown from human cells, but eating it isn't cannibalism.)

While it is a real piece of meat, the steak is currently just a prototype, with little chunks currently on display at the Beazley Designs of the Year exhibition at the Design Museum in London.

The steak was grown using cells harvested from the inside of the cheek (A: I wonder if they’re talking about the facial cheek!), which were fed serum derived from expired blood donations.

(A: Expired, oh, it’s okay then. It expired blood donations. So you’re a vampire now [Alan laughing.] as well, eh? [Alan laughing.] But that’s okay too. [Alan laughing.] Hhhhhoo…)

Scientists came up with the idea in the hopes of pointing out the flaws of the lab-grown meat industry, which claims to offer a cruelty-free alternative to factory farming.

Growing meat in a lab relies on the use of fetal bovine serum (FBS) as a protein-rich growth supplement for animal cell cultures. It costs around £300 to £700 per litre (A: Phew.) and is derived from the blood of calf fetuses, taken after pregnant cows are slaughtered in the meat or dairy industry.

(A: N-n-n. It must make you wonder who's going to be able to afford it, even if that was going to be viable, you know, this kind of stuff, eh? And who's paying for all this? But yet, I know Gates had one on a burger, you know, maybe it was a meat-like burger he had, not quite meat but meat-like burger. Artificial. Because you understand, if you eat, if you get high-protein you get healthier. If you're healthy you might breed. You know? And they don't want, they've actually said that in previous writings that healthy, I mean HG Wells said it. We can help people, give them better hygiene, better food for health and nutrition, and what do people do, he says, they breed! He's so disappointed. T-t-t. So there you go. It's never changed, that whole agenda. So all energy remember is to be reduced, and food is an energy, which gives you energy, don't ever forget that, and what's coming down the pike with rationing. So they say the point of this here...)

We are not promoting ‘eating ourselves’ as a realistic solution that will fix humans’ protein needs. We rather ask a question: what would be the sacrifices we need to make to be able to keep consuming meat at the pace that we are? In the future, who will be able to afford animal meat and

So in other words, it's really to show you the flaws in the problem, hm.

Scientists Create ‘Grow-Your-Own’ Human Steak You Can Actually Eat - unilad.co.uk / 18 Nov 2020

And you've got to admit too, I've seen some videos of horrible things done to animals, in the big, big agrifood business, and it's a business, you know. Which always happens when big, big business takes over anything. Greed, greed, greed. Shareholders galore to satisfy. So faster production, and faster this... And even, you'll see animals like cows that are, that are, they can't produce anymore, or else they're getting older, or they've got arthritis setting in, and those BIG, big cattle, that they're kind of hybrid cattle for getting vast quantities of milk, that the strain on their body is phenomenal. So you'll see the occasional ones trying to get off the ramps out of these huge trucks that bring them to the slaughterhouses. And if they fall over, they don't waste time and try to help the animal or anything like that. No, they literally get bulldozers, and you'll see them bulldozing them into the yard. It's just horrible. And they're alive. And that's horrible. Horrible. There's no justification for that kind of thing. None at all. Big business, eh. Big, big business.

But the elite themselves want to stop you getting any meat at all. That's the other side of the coin here, to bring down the population. When you don't have nourishment the old diseases come back very quickly. Very quickly. And health goes down very quickly. And then child mortality goes up and so on.

COVID-19: Labour spokesman calls anti-vax content 'garbage' after demand for emergency social media law

news.sky.com/ 15 Nov 2020

Labour says the 'spread of disinformation online presents a real and present danger'

(A: This is the next step to ban ALL dissenting voices, or any alternative opinions on anything. On the net, you see. You’re an enemy of the state. You’re an enemy of the people. And you’re a danger to the people, you see, you’re a danger. This is standard totalitarian verbiage that they put out there.)

(A: It says so the Labour Party in Britain, I guess it wants to bring this forward.)

The party wants the government to bring forward laws that would include financial and criminal penalties for companies that fail to act against such content.

(A: So there you go.)

Shadow health secretary Jonathan Ashworth told Sky News' Sophy Ridge on Sunday that "dangerous nonsense" is being spread on social media by people who are against inoculations and it "erodes trust" in vaccines.

(A: Vaccines are tested because folk can't trust them until they ARE tested. And even then it's always fallout from vaccines. A lot of folk don't, it doesn't work with them very well. They have terrible side effects in some people. This is totalitarian rhetoric here.)

Once again, @cuttingthroughthematrix.com. Send a few bucks. I have to keep saying it because folk, hhhch, by the end of the talk have forgotten about it. Send a few bucks my way and I'll keep going as long as I can to put out the information. You'll see how to do it @cuttingthroughthematrix.com. Very important to do, to keep me going. Because really, when it falls off, it really falls off. I gave the talk years ago, I says, you know, one day you're going to expect me to be on every day and you'll just tune in one day and there's nothing there. Gone. That's what happens, you see. Things you take for granted just go. Then you're left with the authorized alternate media. [Alan chuckles.] And there is a lot of it out there, not all of it, but there's a lot of it out there.
So send a few bucks my way, eh, and we'll see what I can do.

So yeah, they're going after any dissenting, again, they had that in the Event 201, the different phases of what they would do, right down to imprisoning people who would speak out. First, they would try and stop the money coming in, your finances, and close you down that way and so on. It's all preplanned, you see. You’re living through an agenda. A wartime agenda. Planned in advance.

Another one too is, let me see now, South Australian, eh. They really go to town there.

One of the nation's toughest coronavirus lockdowns comes into place in South Australia

abc.net.au / 18 Nov 2020

Some of the toughest restrictions faced anywhere in Australia since the start of the coronavirus pandemic are now in place in South Australia.

(A: And well, the amount of tyranny you'll put up with is exactly that, what you'll put up with. It's up to you, folks. It says…)

Key points:

A six-day lockdown has begun in South Australia

Non-essential businesses will be closed

(A: That means if you work in those businesses you are nonessential too, you see. Total warfare, isn't it.)

(A: And it’s got…)

SA's lockdown explained

(A: …because no one understands these lockdowns, in any country, by the way.)

It's the same really across the world, isn't it. The biggest stores for food and that are allowed to keep going and everybody else is going out of business. All planned in advance. And...

Rishi Sunak refuses to say if he will profit from Moderna Covid vaccine

uk.news.yahoo.com / 17 Nov 2020

The chancellor (A: I guess of Britain I suppose. I think I mentioned him last week from the Chancellor from the Exchequer as they call it.), Rishi Sunak, has refused to disclose whether he will profit from a surge in the share price of the Covid-19 vaccine manufacturer Moderna, one of the biggest investments held by the hedge fund he co-founded before entering parliament.

Nothing’s ever been so obvious as the crooks that run us all, isn’t it. Come on here, folks. Yyy… [Alan laughing.] They see the country and parliaments and governments as a private enterprise. That’s how they see it, as the whole country is a private enterprise for themselves. How can I get really stinking rich? Well, let’s have an infection and I’ll have massive shares in a corporation that will get the vaccine contracts and… mmm, ftt, ftt. Anyway, I won't even waste my time on this article. But there you go.

And…

UK just ‘weeks away’ from mass Covid vaccine programme, Matt Hancock says - anything thesun.co.uk / 20 Nov 2020

(A: Weeks away.)

As soon as the jabs are revealed to be safe,

(A: No, they can't even say that, because there's always a certain amount of folk who have massive bad reactions, and some death, from aaany vaccine. So you can't say that they're all... Do you see how it's misleading you?)

the NHS will gear up for a huge vaccine push across the nation to keep people safe from coronavirus.

I'll also put up Peter Hitchens one where he says that, what's the whole thing about for a virus that most folk don’t even have the symptoms of? It really doesn’t matter, does it? I mean, truth doesn’t matter that much at all now, does it? Not really. And that’s pretty sad.

Fauci's New 'COVID-Crushing' Guidance To Americans: "Do What You're Told!"

(A: That's what he says on a talk show he was on. I'll put that up too and you can see it for yourself if you don't believe it. It says…)

As NYPost reports, the longtime director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases has repeatedly clashed with President Trump and his administration, who have dismissed him as "a bit of an alarmist"

Hhhch, at the very least, eh. That's being polite. [Alan chuckles.] No, he's on board totally with this agenda. Sadly.

The areas of Scotland going into lockdown level four and when the restrictions start - scotsman.com / 29 Oct 2020

No one understands. I think even the police chief of Scotland said the same thing, and in England as well, they don't understand these systems themselves, so it's ridiculous. Absolutely ridiculous.

And you already probably know that Berlin, Germany that's had, hhhch, a history of getting rid of totalitarian systems in the past, it says…

dw.com / 18 Nov 2020

Yeah, they're really pushing it in Germany again on the public as they try to suppress the public into compliance, again, by using more, well, vicious technologies to do it all of course. They've had demonstrations I think in Denmark and other countries too, where they come out banging pots and pans and blowing whistles and all that, to protest their push to enforce coronavirus restrictions on lockdowns on the public. So now the governments are fighting them now, you see. This is an agenda that's really way beyond Covid, eh. Yeah. For the whole reset agenda. That's what it is, folks. So I'll put this one up too. And then...

Covid stats revealed: 95% of deaths had underlying health conditions and ICU hospital beds LOWER than 5-year average

thesun.co.uk / 21 Nov 2020

(A: This article here is from the Sun newspaper in Britain.)

How do critical hospital admissions or beds compare with the last five years?

Hospital bed occupancy for the beginning of this month (A: This is November.) was actually lower than the five-year average for November.

(A: [Alan chuckles.] So don’t let facts get in the way, for goodness’ sake, and cover that sun for goodness sake you know, it’s putting too much light out on the world, eh.)

Earlier this year it emerged the government's stark 'Protect the NHS' warning may have actually cost lives, as many with life-threatening conditions and cancers didn't seek help (A: …or couldn’t get the help that…) they needed.

(A: I've read these articles already, what happened there, they couldn't get in. So it really is pretty awful what's going on here. And don't forget the terminology that's used too. It says...)

Data from the Department of Health said 14,479 people were in hospital on November 17, (A: …right…) a drop from the previous day which had 16,271 Covid inpatients. (A: Right.)

(A: Don't forget that going in to get tested they put you down as being in hospital, although you're only there for maybe 20 minutes, half an hour or something, you know. So this fudging of statistics that they use is all to mislead the public. It's just horrible what they're doing. But it says…)

Out of the tragic 37,796 deaths in NHS England hospitals (A: Right.) up to November 20, (A: Okay.) 35,806 had underlying conditions.

There have been only 42 deaths of people under the age of 40 who didn't have underlying health problems.

And more than half of those who died in England were over the age of 80.

(A: They were dying anyway, you see. It doesn’t mean that Covid killed them either.)

I-yi-yi. M-hm. I'll also put up again…

All Roads Lead To Dark Winter - thelastamericanvagabond.com / 1 April 2020

Excellent article about biowarfare and domestic policy, and engineering contagion and so on, and some history of previous things that happened in the States after 9/11 actually. They go back into the 1990s and the things that were going on at Fort Dietrich, a lot of weird things were happening at the time with contagious and deadly pathogens, including Ebola, you know, and anthrax. It disappeared from the lab; that was, well, admitted to at the time by the way. So I'll put up this article. Because it all leads up to the present. It's all part of the same system we're living through right now actually.

globalcitizen.org / 29 Sept 2020

This funding will go towards development and humanitarian efforts that respond to COVID-19.

(A: Who knows whoever tracks this kind of cash, eh, where it goes across the world. But anyway he's, I won't go any further with the agenda. But yeah, he's all on board with a global reset, and all the rest of it too. M-hm. Yep. So there you go, as you shut down the economy, that's just Canadian money, that you’re borrowing obviously, to throw across the planet. Hm. It says…)

This new commitment (A: …of $400,000,000…) comes just days after Trudeau announced a commitment of $220 million to the COVAX Advance Market Commitment, which will go towards the purchase of vaccine doses for low- and middle-income countries.

(A: …which is just as false-positive as the rest of them [Alan chuckles.].)

which has a higher degree of accuracy –

(A: …doesn’t say much at all.)

and will be asked to return home to self-isolate.

It doesn't mean you're ill, you know. By the way, I mean, Sweden has already said that their, in the articles that they, from these scientists that are around the country, or their version of Covid, they mentioned that it's better to get herd immunity occurring naturally basically, that's what they're trying for. And you can only do it by mixing together, and you will get, again, you won't know you've had it, probably, but you definitely will get antibodies, which is herd immunity. You are now immune to it, folks.

That's why they're having you locked down. Have you locked down and not mixing stops it from passing on to herd immunity. So they’re deliberately stopping you from getting it, because they want to sell vaccines, and getting you addicted to actually getting vaccines. You can actually cause addiction to it. Oh yeah, huh, well, what have you got today? We've got this newfangled so-and-so for you today. Oh, I'll try that too then. Yep. What about the new one for this one? Oh, throw that in as well. Delingpole: Sesame Street Sells Its Soul to the Great Reset breitbart.com / 21 Nov 2020

(A: I've mentioned before how they use even children's programs to propagandize everything, you know, you don't realize it, and always have done.)

It has teamed up with the World Economic Forum (WEF) to make a series of videos brainwashing (A: [Alan chuckles.] They had…) educating, (A: … and scored it out.) children about the vital importance of learning to live with the 'New Normal': wearing masks, maintaining six feet social distancing, gratefully accepting their vaccine shots, getting used to not playing with friends in person but just meeting them virtually on a screen…

On a World Economic Forum podcast called 'The Great Reset: Resetting education with Sesame Street', the blue Sesame Street puppet Grover tells his impressionable young listeners:

"At first it was hard when nobody could go to school and I could not visit my friends like Elmo or, well, even Oscar the Grouch. But then we learned to have video play time. It was a lot of fun and made me feel better."

You see. So there ya go. Isn't that nice, eh? Isn't that nice? Isn't that good for you? And for the adults of course they tell you to stay home, they'll give you more entertainment and, I think even the porno, some porno stations apparently, or sites, and up to the spring and they said that they were giving them, I don't know if it was free admission or something, or, I don't know how they run it. So yeah, for the children they've got the children catered to, and for you they've got other things to do as well.

Two top Oxford academics accuse Facebook of censorship for branding their article on whether masks work ‘false information’

(A: So they put out information on masks and they were branded as well as false information, right. So two Oxford scientists have attacked Facebook for branding them, right.)

Professor Carl Heneghan, director of the university’s Centre for Evidence-Based Medicine, posted a link on his Facebook page to the article he wrote with colleague Dr Tom Jefferson, titled: ‘Landmark Danish study shows face masks have no significant effect.’

The piece reviewed the recently published ‘Danmask-19’ trial, which looked at the effectiveness of masks in preventing wearers becoming infected with Covid-19.

(A: To see how effective they were, right. So they posted a link and…)

After following some 6,000 volunteers for a month, half of whom were asked to wear face masks outside the home and half of whom were asked not to wear them, researchers concluded that the difference in infection rates (1.8 versus 2.1 per cent) was so small it was not ‘statistically significant’ – meaning it could have happened by chance. The Danish researchers described their results as ‘inconclusive’.

But Facebook put a warning on the link taking viewers to the 694-word article, which appears on The Spectator’s website (A …that newspaper.), claiming it had been ‘checked by independent fact-checkers’ who found it amounted to ‘false information’.

A furious Prof Heneghan, who wrote for the MoS earlier this month, drew attention to his run-in with Facebook on Twitter, telling his 70,000 followers: ‘I’m aware of this happening to others – what has happened to academic freedom and freedom of speech? There is nothing in this article that is false.’

(A: Well, that doesn’t matter. Facts don’t matter, man, haven’t you heard.)

And Peter Hitchens too…

PETER HITCHENS: Our panicking Prime Minister is bankrupting Britain

hitchensblog.mailonsunday.co.uk / 14 Nov 2020

How extraordinary that the Johnson Government, while in serious money trouble, chooses to spend billions on a vaccine against a disease which in many cases has no symptoms at all.

(A: Yep, bankrupt the countries again, kill off the herd and then say, what are we going to eat? So destroy the country, close down the economy, spend billions of dollars that's all borrowed, on a vaccine and so on, and to pay people to stay at home. For a disease which in many cases has no symptoms at all. Hm.)

Yet this peculiar decision is a mere ripple on the surface of a much deeper problem. Britain in 2020 has many economic difficulties, but good credit. The lenders and investors of the world believe the UK is run by responsible people and will repay its debts.

But my astute colleague Dan Atkinson recently discovered

https://www.msn.com/en-gb/money/other/free-money-how-the-bank-of-england-used-quantitative-easing-to-make-150bn-uk-debt-disappear/ar-BB19FZkH?li=BBoPWjQ&%3Bocid=UP97DHP that the Treasury and the Bank of England are creating money out of nothing on a huge scale. It is like the old fairy tale of Rumpelstiltskin, who could spin gold out of straw – but at a terrible price.

(A: He just recently found out, eh?)

Put at its simplest, more than £150 billion of Britain's Himalaya-sized national debt has effectively been paid off – at no cost – using money created by, and passed between, the Treasury and the Bank of England.

Then they go into the scam and how it works. That's in the Daily Mail on Sunday, it's called the Mail on Sunday. But there you go. Yeah, there you go, billions are getting spent on a vaccine for a, I guess a disease which in many cases has no symptoms at all. [Alan chuckles.] There ya go. It's for an agenda. I wish they'd start saying what it's really for, most of them, eh.

Coronavirus Christmas: Fears thousands could spend holiday season alone if wrongly diagnosed under ‘Moonshot’ testing plan standard.co.uk / 17 Nov 2020

(A: If you're not sick, you’re not sick, hm. Hm? This is such a scam, really, incredible scam. And they have their blown money...)

...the Prime Minister’s £100bn Operation Moonshot plans (A: Right, £100 billion, pounds. For testing and mass testing.)

You understand, you never get, with particles of viruses that will come up as positive, they've been around since the world was created, and they always will be around. They're always present. You can't fail with these tests for getting what you want, that's why they picked it. You always pick up particles, it doesn't mean you've got the disease, it doesn't mean you're ill with it either. That's why they're getting more cases, because the more tests they do, if they stop doing the testing there would be no cases, right? [Alan chuckles.] A case doesn't mean you're sick. Well, I didn't know about it, you know. And then when you get over it, they don't mention when you're over it by yourself, you've got herd, you get immunity now, you see. They don't like to tell you that. They want you to think you're helpless until there's a vaccine comes along, you see. This is the technique, you see.

So I'll put these articles up that I've mentioned here. What's happening with South Australia and, yada, yada ya. It's just, it's just never ending, isn't it, this whole horror show. Because it is a war, a war upon society, of the world actually, the whole world society, by the richest folk on the planet who decided long ago there's just too many of you. And they really don't need you. They don't like you either. Hhhch, they really don't. N-n-n.

So much of what we saw in science fiction movies years ago, many, many years ago, even the stuff going way back, you can look it up, in the 1940s and 50s, old Sci-Fi’s, the early ones, showed you so much of the technology that you now have today, that works. You have the microwave technology, you've probably seen the articles of China using it on, and I think it was in India, troops in India on the border there, they had the clash. Remember? They incapacitated so many of the Indian troops by using, really... The article's in the Daily Mail I think...

China 'used secret microwave pulse weapon to cook Indian soldiers alive' and force them into retreat in Himalayan border battle

dailymail.co.uk / 17 Nov 2020

Electromagnetic weapons were allegedly used on disputed Himalayan border

They cleared out Indian troops without violating ban on gunfire

(A: They didn’t use guns, you see. N-n-n.)

So it's increasing with higher tech equipment and technologies being used, more openly, this time, so the first time kind of openly.

Has Moscow been secretly microwaving our spies for years? CIA investigates after the world was shocked by claims Indian troops had been 'cooked alive' by Chinese electromagnetic pulse weapon - dailymail.co.uk / 21 Nov 2020

I guess we'll get used to this idea too. This is the kind of stuff too that they use for people who, they used to laugh at people that were called targeted people, who certain things were happening to technological wise, and feel sick and ill, or warm, suddenly warm and sweaty. Of course that can be a symptom of other things too. But they often would claim that there was some kind of targeting going on.

It has come out gradually over years and years and years that weaponry is often tested upon their own people, first of all, unwitting subjects that don't know that they're being targeted, or chosen to be targeted. Because then they can be really studied properly. If you tell the subject they're going to be targeted, they're ready for it, their reactions are different and so on. So you always test these things on the population, generally your own population actually. That's what you had for years and now they come out and admit to it, they've got all this weaponry, they've got it on a big scale too, it can knock out whole armies with the stuff. But you also have the personal arms type equipment too that one soldier can carry to knock out a single or a group of people fairly quickly. High-tech stuff.

Another one too of course is the one from, let me see now, I think it's... Yeah...

Futuristic device from Israeli firm puts music in your head, without headphones timesofisrael.com / 13 Nov 2020

‘Sound beaming’ 3-D technology from Noveto Systems tracks ear and sends it audio using ultrasonic waves, creating personal listening pockets.

So you’re in a bubble of sound basically and as you move around it will move around with you. This again is like voice-to-skull technology that people complained about before and have tested it out on people. Different countries have tested it out on their own populations too. A few years ago there was an article in the papers where they tried it in New York for advertising. They were beaming it into passersby for a particular store. You could hear the voice in your head saying, go in and buy so-and-so, go in to look at so-and-so, and it would do that, but you would hear it, and you look around you and no one else heard it, it was hitting you. So they were already testing that out for advertising quite a few years back. So now they’ve got the same kind of device personalized to just track you. Hhhch. I don’t know if that’s a good or a bad thing. Again, technology will be grabbed very quickly, people will jump on the bandwagon and use it. I have no doubt at all it will be a success.

But yeah, it's like chips and brain chips and things like this. We see the articles too about the particular fibers now that can go into your brain. The big boys are using them. One of the big players as we well know had that article a few months ago about that and how they could go in and enhance your brain, as they call it, with an external chip by using these fibers that would penetrate into the brain from the outside.

Then you had the articles too about DARPA using chips, implants in, again, paraplegics as an example so they could use thought basically to make a mouse cursor move on a computer screen, things like that. And you say, well that's wonderful, that's wonderful. But do you think that's really why... DARPA is the military organization, doesn’t really care much about paraplegics, folks. It's testing out things for other purposes. Obviously.

There are people to who have possibly been experimented on with chips over many, many, many years. I wouldn't be surprised at all if that is really, really true. Your governments generally use things on your own people first. When you look at the experimentation in the US, which is a bit more open… In Canada you had, they'll admit to World War II using troops volunteers and so on for testing chemicals for gas and weaponry, chemical warfare and so on. We had articles back in the 90s about the last of them dying off, and most of them had died off with cancer, all these ones that were tested in World War II in Canada, these troops, all kinds of cancers and things. But the state has gone further with the same kind of thing plus more where they actually injected different people for experimentation with cancers. Including prisoners. They use prisoners too to see if they could actually inject cancer cells into people and it would take off in a different person's body. And the syphilis experiments too which they did in the States. That's horrible.

So they generally test these things on their own populations. Because we're not really worth much, we're just scum, you see, we're peasants. And what you don't know won't hurt you, that's their attitude, you know. So they go to great lengths to make sure you generally never know. And when it does come out it's true, they'll deny it at first, until about 25, 30 years passes, and they says, oh yeah we did back then, that's a long time ago, so what? And then no one cares then, you see. It's rather sad.

You've got to understand you're living through an agenda. Every step of the agenda has to be carefully tested. Every step has to be tried out in smaller areas perhaps, but over and over again in different areas to get the same results. Then they know something really works. I don't think they'll ever, ever stop this kind of testing, and on the public.

False information has generally always been put out by your own governments. Especially during wartime. The first casualty of war is truth, as they say. And you're in a war. This is all war scenario you're seeing with total lockdowns, only two or three people allowed to gather together in one place outside. This is straight from the manuals of martial law type scenarios. Emergency laws. So you're living in it and it's to get a lot worse as time goes on.

Then comes, they come down for you individually for what they want you to do or take and all the rest of it. It's all planned that way. They hope to use massive psychological techniques on you beforehand, you’re all going through it, through fear. And for others, they've catered for the promise of freedom, like work makes free. In other words, if you just comply and take your vaccination you might get back to normal. Even though, again, you have to listen to Fauci who said from February onwards and March, life will never go back to normal.

It's a great reset, you see. That's the real purpose of all this that's going on. A different way of existing. A very low quality of materialistic life, you know. Austerity they call it. Which is a nice way of saying, you know, bordering on poverty. It might even be poverty. And rationing of goods. And your decisions are made for you by your betters, you know, experts will make all your decisions for you. What you do, if you should work at something, if you shouldn't work at all. Right down to, should you maybe just kill yourself, or they'll help you eliminate yourself.

In a world where you're being taught that life is cheap now. There's too many of you, so it's not really like you're a valuable creature, you're not an endangered species, and so they'll have to bring down the population. So you stop using all of the resources, you see. Keeping yourself alive, what an awful thing to do. Who gave you that kind of right to do that kind of thing, just wanting to keep yourself alive, for goodness’ sake.

And it's a world, it's Agenda 21 where eventually there are to be no private vehicles at all. That's what your Uber thing is all about and so on. So, no privately owned vehicles. It will be essential vehicles only. No private property. Eventually. I went through this stuff years ago from Agenda 21 publication from the governments themselves and the sustainability crew with Maurice Strong. And yeah, it's all coming down the pike. No private property eventually. Rental only. You'll be basically allotted a living space which is rented.

Again too it will be all right in with the great reset idea and the Fourth Industrial Revolution. Everything's electronic, including cash. Credits will be issued to you just like your income to say at home right now basically, if you go into the universal basic income they talk about. But you have to behave and do what you're told, or you won't get the cash put into your account every month, you see. Eventually you can't save it up either, it would just disappear by the end of the month as the new, same number comes in again. That's how, that was set back in the 1940s and 50s, Bertrand Russell talked about it.

You're living through a script. You've always been the problem, you see. From the days of Thomas Malthus and even before him, you know, to the present time, you are the problem. Not them, but you. Hhhch. And they plan to really do something about it now. They really are, this is a war, this is an organized conscious planned war on all of the people. They're ruthless. And they really mean business, folks.

The only way you can stop it is enough people to stand up and all say no, that's it, that's it. They can't put everybody in prison obviously. They're already using the Army and psychological warfare against people who are dissidents already. They're using the standard techniques of psychological warfare looking at social influencers and trying to attack them online and so on, making it harder for them to get their material out there. Then right from the psyops manuals they use all media to put out unified messages of what's going to be the truth and what's not the truth and so on. It's straight out of the manuals.

We're living through it right now. And it's going to get worse unfortunately. If they stop now, you'd have to eventually, um, retake your own governmental system, hhhch, somehow and also regain your own liberty, and your right to do what you, to speak and so on. Then you have to look and see what they've done, the damage, the incredible damage that's been done already, and massive deaths, and never mind the deaths that have been caused by folk who can't get in the hospitals and told to stay home, with heart attacks and cancers and no pain medications. It's just UTTER PSYCHOPATHIC INSANITY. That's how ruthless they are. So you'd have to take them to court and deal with them, wouldn't you? And they know it. And that's when they're really dangerous. They won't back down. They'll destroy the world before they'll admit they're wrong and back down.

So as I say it's not a message, as I say, of cheerleading for the people. It's a message for an individual. Because eventually you'll all get your turn to have your say. Ha, ha. And that's all you'll probably get is a bit of a say perhaps. That's about it. But you've got to decide what you are doing on this planet here and what your function is. And if we are just animals then you've got to have animal husbandry, so you've got bosses.

However, if you are a real human being with a spirit then, then your maker has the right over you as opposed to governments. And I think the maker has got a different purpose for you than being a blind obedience sterilized and eventually sick and weak and malnourished, um, human being. I think he's got better plans for you than that. But it's up to you what you want to, where you want to go in life. This life or anything to come is up to you, isn't it?

Humanity has been so hammered for such a long time with a war which they did not know was even placed upon them, and this goes back generations. The point is not to just give up, for the, and that of the past that have died for nothing, all those that went before you, and you can look at all those that have still got the right to come in the future and participate in living, you know, and give them their chances. Each person has an individual chance to experience everything that's wonderful in this life, too, in this world.

How dare those that have decided they’re masters of the universe, decided it all for us. We didn't vote anybody in to do this to us. And I think you all know that too. They certainly know it. And they're very conscious of it.

We fought for centuries and centuries to get rights, and to get up off our knees. Not to get back on our knees, and feel guilty, but GET UP OFF YOUR KNEES, and stand up tall, and then you can be counted, you know.

And don't cower to the, this repetitive evil of authoritarian tyranny, you know, you've got to see it for what it is and point it out and call it out. That's what you have to do.

The evil that's been done already is horrendous.

And it's up to you to say no.

So take care of yourselves all over the world and, we're all going through it, absolutely we are all going through it. You need each other, as I say, you always need each other for help. A few words here and there to all your friends or even the few friends that you have, which is generally what most folk have is only a few, real friends, you know, maybe only one or two. But you've got to keep in touch with them, so you've got to, and help each other out when times get worse. Because they are going to get bad. And find ways to get things for anybody who is locked down that can't get them themselves, where they can't get out or they’re commanded not to go out. Hhhch, you've got to find ways around.

Like a resistance that operates through occupation.

And you can't use electronic means to communicate for that kind of thing, obviously, that part of it. Because then they can, [Alan chuckles.] then they've got the Army already monitoring you now. They have the psyops, that's what they do, special forces, eh. They are right into the Internet sussing out who the social influencers are and so on. Like they do in any campaign, same kind of techniques. Then they find the terrified public and they put out the memes for them to follow. And get them to turn on the ones who won't comply and go along with the agenda. It's all happening. And it's, yeah, the military, they admit the military is now involved, eh. But it was obvious before the military admitted it. [Alan chuckles.]

Amazing times though, isn't it. So take care of yourselves. Let's hope we'll get through this winter, in the West. I think Australia is going through their summer now, going into it, and yet they're locked in as well. So again, the climate doesn't matter with this brand, very novel, again novel coronavirus, eh. It's very new indeed that they can do amazing things that generally it doesn't do. But that doesn't matter, does it? They've got every sign and symptom on the books for colds flus or just feeling off color, or bronchitis, or pneumonia, it could be any of those things. It might just be that you're a bit tired. But it makes no difference at all, a sniffle, no sniffle, diarrhea, constipation, they've covered every base with this thing. Of course that's what they're doing in hospitals, any symptoms at all, the symptoms, they'll just put it down as Covid. That's all come out.

We have enough evidence to last years and years, just reel it all off of the scam up until now. We know that. Where they've had to admit and lower numbers until true figures, or truer figures than before. But it won't stop them. They're back to square one again.

So there you go, a terror campaign upon the people. They'll have to be held accountable for what they're doing. Absolutely.

For myself, take care, Alan Watt from Ontario, Canada, it's good night and may your God or gods go with you.

"Cutting Through the Matrix" with Alan Watt

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through The Matrix on November 29, 2020. What a year, eh? What a year. And it's not over yet. I can't believe it. It's rushing in, and yet it's stretching out at the same time… because of all the, probably our cognitive dissonance as they call it, as we get so confused with our mind bombed news and with all the contradictory reports from specialists. The same specialists often too, which give you really opposing viewpoints on all of their statements. Hhhch, and depending on how they feel that day I guess, they'll hammer you into the ground if you read one of them and you interpret it the wrong way. Because you see, there's only one way to interpret it and that's just believing everything they say. And saying that, I suppose, you'll probably get a lot of applause from them and acclaim for just repeating what they've printed for you to read basically and to speak about. But don't say anything negative, even when you get reports in from their own sources [Alan chuckles.] that blow your mind on some of their findings because it's not what they want to push across.

You're living through a big agenda. Massive agenda. A very old one too. I'll put up tonight one good discussion by James Delingpole and Patrick Wood of Technocracy. Patrick Wood worked with Anthony Sutton at one point, they worked together on studying the Trilateral Commission and putting out their findings on them. But of course it didn't start there. Anthony Sutton was way ahead of the game too, even long before that when he stumbled upon the big organizations with very old ties to Britain as an example. He tied that in with findings from other investigators that lived in the late 19th century, early 20th century, who had already realized there was a power in the world which ran things, really ran things, you know, above voting and above politics.

Which makes sense actually. Do you really think when you read even the books put out by the aristocracy, who were also members of the House of Lords in Britain, and the British Empire, they're all based on the same system, lots of books, and committees that they belong to and organizations they all belong to, when they talked about the coming system, which they already controlled in their own time, but the system that was to come, they didn't ever think that they would give anything away to people who wanted democracy. Power never gives itself up.

These people were not browbeaten or just weary through wars and so on. They were at the height of their power at the time and so they had no intentions of ever giving up their power. They knew that they could do an awful lot if they got more of the public on their side through false claims like, we're here to serve you and let's use democracy. All you have to do then is just stop basically the Soviet system taking over, the Bolsheviks, with a revolution. They decided to give you spokesmen and labor unions in the West, and they'd supply you with the leaders, who would talk with all the communistic propaganda terminology and certainly emulate it to an extent too. But they had no intention of giving up their real personal private power. Not at all.

So they brought, you came into the 20 century with two world wars. You've got World War I, you already had the Boer War that really was a continuation and they went straight into World War I pretty well as Britain was taking over good part of Africa before that. I hate to say Britain. It's not the British people. So don't blame the British people. They could have used other countries too and use their troops and finance them and train them just the same way.

It's really interesting when you really think about it, how you're given people to like and hate, or even feel ambivalent about too. Because you see, and we use these, I hate this, I've said this for years and years, they'll say, well the British did this, you know. But what does the British mean, eh? Or the Scottish, you know? Or the Welsh or the Irish? What does it really mean? It's a handy tool for propagandists and the media when they want to blame people for something, oh the British did this, the British did that. It wouldn't matter what part of the plantation of the planet you lived on, if the Masters wanted you to go and conquer somebody else and made it a prideful thing to put on a uniform and go and fight, and give you really simple propaganda you're going off to bring civilization to the world and so on, but in reality too, they're telling the poorer folk, you'll get some pride in yourself if you wear that uniform, and get little pluses when you come out of the military and you can get a higher status in society then you would ever get on your own basically, you see. Every country would do the same thing. That's the history of the world.

So those with the understanding of that always run countries. It's like Rothschild, Rothschild was awfully good at saying [Alan chuckles.] what he thought at times. He said, give me power over the money of the nation and I care not who rules it's government, basically. Because obviously the government would have to come to him to borrow money. That's what governments had already done long before he came along when they created the central banking system. All governments went cap-in-hand every, maybe four times a year to ask for more cash, etc., and to decide how much to increase taxation which pays for the money the government is borrowing. That's what it's all about, you know.

It is quite interesting to me to see all that kind of happening and to see that most folk really don't understand it even yet today how it really works. They forget too, they had a massive long-term war with the Spartans. That changed Sparta. It's like Quigley said and others have said too, that wars do more than just create winners and losers. They alter both sides, or all sides of a conflict. Your culture gets changed, and often very similarly so in long term drawn-out wars.

As I say, Britain came out, went into World War II to fight national socialism in Germany, and came out as a national socialist country for a while. The irony seems to allude most people, you know. But that's really how it is. Because it's planned that way. Again, you've got these unseen characters with big organizations behind them, these quiet clubs, very powerful clubs indeed that really run the show. The media are all part of it because they are employed, they are employed by the folk who belong to these big clubs, you see, all the journalists are.

But as I say you've got to remember too, that World War I eventually they got the slogan makers in on the act including HG Wells, you know, who came out with the idea of calling them the Hun, you know, like a throwback, you see. Because you must always dehumanize your enemy. It's much easier to kill them when you don't see them as humans, so you put them out with these derogatory terms and so on. So you have the Hun, and then for the war in the air, it was Hun in the sun, beware the Hun in the sun coming out of the sun with these aircraft. All that kind of stuff, you see. You can see all, it's like massive books full of the propaganda cartoons they used in the newspapers at the time, just incredible. And World War II was the same. But regardless, yeah, dehumanize the enemy and use propagandists like HG Wells to dehumanize them. Again too, Wells was awfully good for his masters, he did, he served them awfully well. At least he got the credit for it, but I'm sure there was a team behind him.

He also came out with the idea of the white feather, you know. Because in World War I initially you just didn't draft people up right back then. Not initially anyway. They did want to get national conscription in, you see, it was a goal of theirs. It was kind of hard to do when you're pushing this new idea of democracy. It was new, you understand, this idea of democracy. Most of the men couldn't vote any more than the women in Britain at the time for World War I. They says, well, we'll give more of you the vote afterwards and that kind of thing, and better housing. In other words, something back from all your taxes, we might give you something back. That was the promise.

But again, they came up with the idea, the war to end all wars. That was a good one for the youth, you know, all young folk would go for that. Who wouldn't want to stop wars, eh? And the idea of utopia, you would have cash in your pockets for a change because it wouldn't be getting spent on wars. It was a nice fallacy. And pleasant. And you were used. Of course you were used, incredibly much so by the military-industrial complex that reaped in the harvest from all of its weaponry, and guaranteed payment by the government who was borrowing it all from the bankers.

So yeah, you're run by quiet systems, very quiet systems, that have the big meetings, mind you. When real communication, radio and so on became prolific then they became even quieter behind the scenes. Because at one time, you see, there was no problem communicating to each other in their special magazines or books. And books, they had their own publishing companies not just for magazines, for themselves, but their own private publishing companies would publish their world meetings. Like the Royal Institute of International Affairs before it was even called that, you know. They had their own publishing companies. Strangely enough too, it's a small world because they go way back even to the Rockefellers who often paid for their international meetings, even long before World War II.

So these private clubs have always been around. One of the first things they came up with, the ideas they came up with, was that human resources should not be given for the rest of the general public to just lay claim to… or members of the general public to lay claim. It should be held by the responsible people, and old Rockefeller thought that he was the one to do it, you know. And then his son David was more open about it too because he was more of a figurehead for the speeches, world speeches on sustainability and all that kind of stuff. But they all told the truth from their point of view when they said that competition is a sin. That's where, again, this video I'll put up with Delingpole and Woods goes into.

Technocracy And The Great Reset - Patrick Wood and James Delingpole - bitchute.com / 28 Nov 2020

It takes off really in about 1930s when the term Technocracy took over. You see, that was only part of it, Technocracy. You have to remember that the group existed as this, it was often called pan-American or Anglo-American establishment that preexisted the Technocracy group being formed inside Canada and the States in the 1930s. You've got to realize what Technocracy was. It was about the taking over of resources not just by responsible people as they call it, the right kind of people, who would limit access to other people coming in to own different parts of it, they would be very, very selective. In other words, when you've got a gang together it's much better if your own gang owns it all, eh, and you don't let anybody else come along, and you limit the number in the gang so you can be wealthier and you'll be more powerful and so on. That's sustainable development, you see. That's where it comes from. Of course it does.

In the old Anglo-American establishment it was well understood at the time by many people when they were forming a Federal Reserve system in the US who was behind it. Colonel Mandel House wrote a book about it, his own memoirs. He admitted it, that he, well he said himself, he wanted to take the credit for really being behind it because he was kind of managing President Wilson, which he had a kind of contempt for, for being so manageable, hhhch, so easily manageable I guess, they created the Federal Reserve.

So you're living through a script basically, a script do with again a very big establishment, but secretive at the same time. Big in the sense that it runs the affairs of nations. You'll find Carol Quigley, I've mentioned it so many times, he was a member of it, and he was an historian for the American branch, although he worked with the British branch as well. He was so enthused by it and its goals and aims that he published the book , Tragedy and Hope, really believing at the time he said that it was time the public got to know what it was about. Because he says, these people have, these members, which he was all for, had been responsible for world wars, and they were behind almost all the big changes in history of their day and back into the 19th century at least and probably before. But he thought their goals were good and he said the only complaint he had was the occasional misuse or the techniques they use to achieve some of the goals, that's the only place he ever differed with them.

However, he let so much out of the bag that the publishers confiscated the plates, they had the plates for printing at the time and they broke them and told him that, no more, after the first publication. I don't think he had that many sold initially, but luckily enough it got out there that under, because they had basically written it all off, that many other publishers could grab the original one and republished them. You can get copies anywhere. And I've checked some of them, and with the original, and as far as I can see they're the same. So you can get them really cheap if you want to go through it.

He let a lot out of the bag of the fact that they had been behind the movements to take over South Africa and different places. He went into some of the history of Cecil Rhodes in other books he did. Cecil Rhodes and Lord Rothschild by the way, that formed the Rhodes Society and Rhodes foundation. And took over the gold mines in Africa. And diamond mines as well. Because again, getting back to what they do, monopoly men, it isn't monopoly money that they use, they are monopolizers. They take over resources. The first thing you do for resources, is you just take over the wealth of a nation. What gives them the wealth? Raw resources, what is it? Take it over, snuff out the competition by everywhere you can because it's war, they see it as a war, you see. It's quite easy to do that when you've trained yourself to believe you're doing it for the better, for the good of all, the greater good, by taking the power out of other people's hands and putting it into your own pockets, you see, that's how they rationalize it.

They cause world wars. They thought that world wars could achieve change, the planned changes that they had in mind for taking over the world's resources. That's where you are today basically. You've been here for a long time. Sure enough, they created the Council on Foreign Relations in America, the Harold Pratt group put the money up for it, high member of it. They based it on Chatham House rules in England for the Royal Institute of International Affairs, which used to be called simply the Lord Alfred Milner group and The Kindergarten group, different names for the same organization. It was so secretive at one point, and it ran the British Empire. It placed its members across the globe in all the high positions as Lieutenant Governor generals and all that kind of thing. They would administer businesses and resources and taxation over conquered peoples that they were enlightening, you know, by conquering them and taking the resources. And using the British taxpayer to fund it all, railroads and troops and things like that.

It's pretty good when you've got a nation like Britain, this corporation – that's what it is, it's a corporation – which you could always tax the people for its upkeep. A kind of public/private partnership, only the public don't know they're in it as a partnership, you see, except that you're signed on to pay all the debts for the conquest and things and the cost of it all. Nothing's changed. Nothing has really changed. They're very simple cons really. It's a form of perception con, that's really what it is. It's all down to perception management and training the public to see it in the way that you want them to see the system.

Now, the big organization, the big one at the top, that we know of, I don't think it really is the highest, I'm sure there's one above it, at least one, maybe two or three in fact. But we know about the Royal Institute of International Affairs. We know about the Council on Foreign Relations. We know that they spawned off in Jimmy Carter's term in office the Trilateral Commission, and they were drawn again from members of the Council on Foreign Relations and again, the Royal Institute of International Affairs. They truly, as Patrick Wood mentions, they truly were modeled after Technocracy, you see. In that, technocrats run the world, people bypassing politicians. They would eventually phase out the politicians, that was the idea of Technocracy Inc. in the 1930s.

After the shambles of World War I, then the Great Depression, obviously they had to follow it, and World War I didn't end with 1918. It was still on the go and went right into the Great Depression. Because now all those who, hhhch, held all the bonds and everything and the bankers were looting the country, that's what it was for, now it was time to take over the wealth of the nation, in the States too, you know. And the land and everything else too in the process. It was quite an enterprise.

Most folk don't realize, they always think of conventional warfare, the first type, the first class A is troop against troop basically. You don't realize that economic warfare is a big part of it regardless of using troops or not. It was very successful with the Great Depression. It consolidated the power of the monopolists, you see, who again bought over bankrupted stock and space and property for pennies on the dollar. That's how you acquire more and more wealth and become more and more powerful. Your institute, if you're an institution, it's part of it, like a club with members and you have your rules that you must follow. You've all sworn, you've sworn to all the different rules, just like any secret society which of course in a sense it is. You work together. You've got a command system so you're coordinated in whatever you're doing. You can't just jump the gun and do your own thing. You must go along and take orders from above and obey them whether you understand them or not. That's imperative in these organizations. It's faith-based. Faith that they looked after you. That's it.

But again, you find getting back, this thread that you can catch onto, this thread is, that Quigley talked about, the Rhodes Foundation, and Cecil Rhodes' great dream, which really wasn't his. He got it from another guy, a professor, the idea of this just world, when the right folk ruled the world, you see, the justness of it all. But to do that you'd have to take the world over, you understand, you know, so it's a little problem there, and to make it just. It isn't until you really understand it that they realized that Technocracy didn't really start in the 1930s at all. It was much older, at least the idea of, again, the right folk running the show, efficiently. And again, efficiency is very important with Technocracy, hm, awfully important.

So as far as I'm concerned, through the 19th century into the 20th century you had this idea of democracy. Because you've got to get the people going along with you, eh, thinking they've got rights maybe, or maybe they're going to get rights, or get more rights or something, as time goes on if you just fight for democracy and do what you're told and help the system. As opposed to telling them, no, behind the whole thing we've got Technocracy, or more of a scientifically run system which is efficient, and we're only using democracy in the meantime to achieve our goals. That's what it is.

Things To Come, HG Wells, he wrote the book. He was a member of the club too naturally as a propagandist with a team of writers with him, of course there were. He even gives you clues of that in some of his books with the beginnings of them, how he comes in the morning and all this information has just been laid on his desk by professors and things like that. And it wasn't far off the mark. But Things To Come showed you a system of, it was meant for the people, again, remember when it was written, eh, it was to make people think, oh no, this is going to go on forever, more wars and more wars and more wars, and we don't know when to stop.

When you really look at World War I and there's many ways you can look upon it. You can look upon it traditionally, meaning the authorized version, which still can't give you real answers as to why it started, to be honest with you, you know. But they used the same techniques as they always do, the boys will be home by Christmas. That's the first lie. Things like that. Because the first casualty of war is truth naturally. And since those who rule the world are at war with you all the time, [Alan laughing.] they're always telling you lies anyway regardless of the time period, eh. So says Machiavelli I suppose.

But anyway World War I, and the incredible loss of life. We can't really fathom it at the moment today. Again, the newspapers that would just daily, daily print out the propaganda, our boys at the front. All that kind of lead up to the ideas for 1948 and George Orwell, you know, World War I and World War II propaganda, our boys at the Malabar front have fought off the enemy with an extra so many airplanes, so many extra, so many thousand tanks and yada, yada ya, just reeling off all the munitions in a materialistic fashion, eh, of weaponry.

So, science is very important to Technocracy and the idea of it. Right down to how to reshape the world. Again HG Wells was all for this utopia. He called it A Modern Utopia at one point in one of his writings. And A New World Order too, he wrote a book on that as well. He also said a lot of people will die fighting against the New World order, they'll die in vain, he said. The reason why it would be that you would die in vain is because you see, hhhhh, this is the hard part folk can't really fathom. Because people are dual minded, your conditioning will always fight with what you perceive in realism, eh. And I see it in people, that should know better, falling right back into, oh, where is the one person that's going to save us, who can we vote for? I see them, people who should know better, hm, after being conned for centuries, you think one person is going to just turn up out of the blue and be allowed to stand up for you? Even if he was real? [Alan chuckles.] Which is doubtful.

But no. People fight against their own conditioning, that's really what it is, and what they've been taught, that they're still free. No, you're not really free. HG Wells as I say, shows you or tries to get it through your head in Things To Come and A Modern Utopia and The New World Order basically, as he termed it as well. As he said, thousands will fight against it, or many will die in vain basically. Why did they know that? Is this the first kind of struggle for freedom that you couldn't win, you see? What's he telling you here? They'll die in vain…? What he's trying to tell you is, you've all been conditioned to believe reality by the people who already own you, they've conquered you.

I gave this talk in the late 90s on a radio show. I said, you grow up thinking you've got, that you're free simply because you don't walk into bars, that don't suddenly appear there, you know, normally wherever you're going. Until they end up in some kind of martial law situation and suddenly, you're walking along the same roads and the same country lanes or whatever it happens to be, and bang, the bar has just come up in front of your face, just like that, boom, that's it! You've never seen them before, because you see, you're allowed a certain amount of freedom to get the perception that you're free. A certain amount. But when the big boys and gals wants to let you know, they press the button, up comes the bars very quickly.

But also, HG Wells knew that your conditioning, because they make you think you're free, will be your worst enemy when you're trying to be free. So in the 90s I said, you know, you're taught and trained from childhood that your country, because again Britain was socialistic, eh, to win the people over they give you socialism at times, and also to train you to be obedient to government agencies as they proliferate, you see. And you say, well there are departments of this if I ever need welfare, I can just get it, if I hit hard times. There’s unemployment I can use that will give me cash if I get laid off. And you’ve got all these complaints departments, official complaints departments, they can go and put an order, a complaint to basically, and they’ll jump into action and deal with it on my behalf. That’s what you think, you see. Even today, if I get sick, I can go to hospital. But you’re forgetting that you may be, if you’re a certain age or whatever, they’ve already demoted you before you walk in the doors by your age and everything else [Alan chuckles.] and if they’re even going to spend money, waste money, your money, mind you, are they going to waste it on you in treating you or just let you die, you know? Or even help you die now as they do in Canada.

Still you take a lot for granted until you need it. As I say, eventually it's like when things happen and you need those tools that are out there to help you, that you're paying for all your life, right, it's like okay, I'll take a pick, you know, like a pickax, you know, or spade or something. Then you go to dig with it. You find all these tools that they've given you are made of rubber, so that pickax bounces off the road when you whack it, and so on. I'm showing you that the tools are fake, they're not there for you at all, and they're not meant to work for you. That's how it really is. That's just the start of it, isn't it.

So you see, the New World order that HG Wells was talking about, who are you going to complain to? When you see those who rule, they ARE your order that you have, they run your whole system, the whole system, they run the complaints department, everything, they run it all. You've been deceived, brainwashed to believe that you're free. You don't realize, no, you're conquered. Technically conquered. It's the best form of being conquered because who do you fight when you're conquered? It's like everybody has been appointed by somebody into a position of power over you, but you’re taught that it's just natural and that they just appeared out of nowhere and you know, little committees in your towns appoint them.

Really? Who owns them? And who owns your town? That's it. That's what you're living in. You're living in Fantasia in a sense inside your own head. So if you're fighting this, that's what HG Wells was doing, he's talking about this way at the beginning of the 20th century, eh, if you're fighting the New World Order, he says, many will die in vain. But he's not telling you the rest of it. The rest of the story is, you see, the whole system is theirs. They're not taking over, you see, they took over a long time ago. Your politicians are all preselected to be front men and women, and they know that. Quigley said that too in his book Tragedy and Hope he mentions, yeah, there is a group and has been a group that blah blah blah, and he goes into it. He said that it has existed for, that the heads of parties, political parties, all parties, eh, are members of the same organization. He says, they have been for at least the last, I think it was 60 years, maybe further back. No, he wrote his book in the 1960s. We know from the British side that it preexisted that by at least, well probably going back into the 1880s maybe.

Still we're living through a system that is clever enough to give you a fake version of reality, so that you just don't collapse mentally and think, oh that's okay and things will get better, because we're optimists. And media, their media will tell you, things will get better, don't worry. Or, the war will end soon, eh. Or, the economy will take an upturn, you know, it will be good again. All that stuff that they play with you with.

But you've had the greatest example in the States this last while with Trump getting in, you know. Regardless of who he is, really, but there's no doubt about it, certain forces were not happy with it at all, from the beginning obviously. He couldn't get any cooperation, regardless if the guy is right or wrong with what he's doing, he couldn't get any cooperation on anything he was doing pretty well. Almost anything he was doing. He couldn't get it.

Then we, for the 2020 we've had this coordinated effort, and I said that months and months and months ago that I thought that China and the States and the rest of the world had all agreed to come on board with this Covid thing before we even heard of it. They would do the drama, I even mentioned that, how they would fall down in the streets and stuff. Why would they, why would China, if they don't want you to see anything, you will NOT see it, it won't get published and put on the net somewhere for you to see. But we saw the terrifying images of these big dump trucks spraying stuff out into the, down through the streets, hundreds of feet into the air. Horrifying stuff, eh? Hmmmmmmmmmmmm. Yeah. To terrify the West. To get us ready for it. To get us ready for terror, you see. So it had to be a collusion with them. Of course it was. Yes, it was. All the countries are working together.

Don't forget, I used to give the talks about the CFR and the bigwigs themselves who always said in their speeches that China was the model state for the world to emulate. What part of that don't you understand? And people say, well we're not Chinese, you know, they're communist and... They get tied up with terminology. China is a technocratic state. It was set up by outsiders [Alan chuckles.] who were in China. The first thing they needed was massive cash and those who could understand and manage cash and debt and credit and the conology of money, you know. The West provided them with that and funded them into existence with the free trade agreements and the GATT treaty and so on.

It's just astonishing, people don't even know, even folks who live through it all don't even know. That suddenly everything was made in China. Suddenly their factories were going over, and it was in the papers, shipped overseas. Wholesale, the factories dismantled and put over there somehow, all the tooling, everything. They were getting paid to do it by your tax money. Your own government, what you think are your governments are not yours, did it all and made it happen. Made it so, as they say. And you're still paying for it. And millions of folk lost their jobs.

I can remember a place in Ontario alone, one of the towns there, there was a factory town, one factory after another, within a span of two or three years went under. Bom-bom, like dominoes. And folk applying for jobs, and being there for two or three weeks, and then that would close. One after the other. They were terrified, these people, families and home mortgages, the whole thing. All planned that way, by the politicians that signed us all onto it under the guise of free trade.

The group that drafted up all the agreements for free trade came out on television eventually in 2005 in Canada as the Council on Foreign Relations and quite happily told us all that they had drafted up the free-trade for the Americas. Nobody votes for these characters. But they've got their members all through politics and civil service positions, media, you know, the whole thing. They also proudly boasted that they'd done a similar thing for the European Union. And they had. [Alan chuckles.] Small world, eh, isn't it? The same thing for China, the China deal. And more to come, the TransPacific Partnerships and so on. I've got books that they wrote from the 1920s and 30s where they go through a European Union long before the public heard about anything like that, or free-trade deal, or economic meeting group or whatever as they were initially called in Europe by the same groups, by their own publications. You're living through a script.

Now it's time to go into real efficiency and do away with, they've used democracy. In fact, they've used your tax money to force this totalitarian system across the planet, by helping people, we're here to help you. Hhhch. Now, set up a system just like ours, we'll appoint the people in charge, and we can't let folk just come in and start their own businesses, we'll take over the resources and manage it responsibly. Oh by the way, there's too many of you, etc. We'll supply the education for that and the facilities to reduce the population and keep it to a lower figure. I mean, this is how it's done.

And the hardest folk to get through to are the more brainwashed folk in the West because they really think that they had, that they lived in a free society. They still do. As I say, in 2020 you had get-rid-of-Trump on the go, the mantra, you had riots in streets, color revolutions that were run by the military by the way, military agencies, or agencies attached to the military, often special forces by the way in some of them. And I really mean that, you know. And they put in the leaders, etc., who are well-funded. The followers are all expendable. They're useful, that's all.

So they're burning down streets and so on, instances, and homes across the US, all in the one year, along with Covid, this Covid, oh suddenly it just came out of China they said you know, now they're trying to deny it even came out of there and yada, yada ya. Now the whole world has to change because of Covid. And that's happening, folks are getting locked down, but rioters and protesters are allowed to riot and protest. And the cops stand back and do nothing. And so does government. That doesn't happen by itself all in the same year, folks.

Then you have an election. And you know that with Antifa and Black Lives Matter, and the riots and protests and all the rest of it and the burnings, and lootings, hhhch, that more folk swung that would never have swung even, to Trump, way more, because they didn't want a communist, what they thought, what they saw or perceived as a communist uprising, that's what they thought it was taking over. So they weren't going to vote for the liberal or left wing. No way.

So it doesn't matter that everything is fudged, all the voting things were fudged. It didn't matter at all. And it never will. Because the establishment at the top want it this way. The same establishment that was there before want it this way. Of course it is. It's managed. The deep state, the CIA, alternate parallel government say, come up with what you want. Again, the CFR group who called themselves the establishment by the way because they're put into all prominent positions. But folk want to believe that suddenly, no, it's just a little hiccup in time, that's what we’re noticing on the graph here, that's our present time space, this little hiccup, we’ll go back to...

Even though there is no, nothing going to point to, they've all said the opposite, you're not going into any kind of normalicy, the old normalicy again, things will never be the same again. Fauci said back in, what, about March? [Alan chuckles.] How would he know? Because he belongs to the same CIA club in his position that manages bacterial and viral warfare and so on. Of course it is. He knows the big club wants to use this across the world for the great reset, the technocratic system that Mr. Patrick Wood and Delingpole were talking about in the video.

It's the same system as I say that was on the go long before the Trilaterals came along in Jimmy Carter's time. And how technocrats can be put into any position in advance. They've all sworn allegiance to the club that selected them to even go into politics in the first place. Guaranteed to get put in, by the way, as Prime Ministers, and then Deputy Prime Ministers and Governors, etc. Across the world. The British Empire is a good example. Again, this corporation, eh?

It's a good example because New Zealand and Australia and a part of India too, where they’re also having riots in India. They're trying to keep that out of the media too. But folk are fighting back for sure. But Australia and New Zealand, you can see all their leaders suddenly, these Democratic leaders suddenly are all complete stern technocrats. We can’t have freedom and democracy during this period so that’s it, it's gone, it’s vanished, and it’s emergency powers. Which is martial law, you know, and do what you're told and so on. But they're all members of the club, that's how they were selected long ago.

If you ever look at how people, look at the resumes of folk who end up in politics. They generally are of the same ilk. Men and women in them. They don't want to work for a living. I mean, work, really work. They might have jobs but they're not, I don't call it work, you know. They go into charitable agencies and committees, on the boards and committees, not to work inside them and do the actual work but they join all these different things on the boards, you see. You'll find that if there's anything, for instance a good example is drugs. In any organization in your community is to do with drugs, to fight the war on drugs or something, and is a charitable institution, and it will be registered as a charitable institution, that's where folk can go to become politicians. You start off there.

And get a few other ones on the go too. You come in with your little briefcase and so on and you all wear little business suits, men and women. There's always an older guy at the end of the table who everyone knows, he just reeks of authority. The congenial authority, he'll make you feel at home, but you know that he's the boss. Even though this is a panel supposedly to decide on dispensing money and aide or whatever it happens to be to do with drugs or any other private charitable institution, you see. It's always to help people.

But he is the selector, he selects people to go up. He's the one who will write their resumes, you know, like a good report card, and steer them off into the right direction. If they're the right stuff, you see. He'll give them, well you should join this club now, you know, this other group. That's how you get up the ladder, one step, step-by-step. You're being initiated and tested the whole way to see if you've got the right stuff, of keeping your mouth shut. They'll even give you little setups to see if you will keep your mouth shut. You're tested.

These are the people who are put forward for politics, you see. In fact, you don't, you didn't have any political ambitions at all, or convictions I should say, left or right. They'll create a role for you. You'll be a left-wing or a right-wing or a moderate or whatever it is, they'll create it for you. You're pretty well an actor. But you'll always know that you've got bosses above prime ministers and presidents. And when the word's given, you'll all swing in and say exactly the same things, at the right time, and at the same time. Like total lockdown, etc. That's how it's done.

They've all sworn to obey. All of them. You can look at the media for goodness sake with the same phrases. Why have 500 different TV channels across the States, or more, I don't know how many they've got, where they all say the same things, the same statements, same line for line everything, verbatim, on the same topics? Which proves there is no independence in any of them.

So yeah, I've got some old books too, fascinating ones from the 19th century as well when they talk, you know, the aristocracy talk about their meetings, in the clubs, and they are actually meetings in their clubs, and who they meet. I saw Randolph today, and things like that, and Winston, young Winston, you know, and all that kind of stuff, at the club. They're sitting having their little drinks and cigars, as zeppelin bombers, the old zeppelins of World War I were dropping the occasional bomb and chatting about it. Things like that. It's quite fascinating to get into the mind, and the fact that Winston in one of the books commented on this ridiculous, hhhch, phantasm of a thing called democracy that they kept pushing in Britain at the time. During world war, and it's true, they were pushing it. We'll get rights for, if you go off and fight and die for the corporation, we'll give you, you know, which is really handy getting rights once you're dead, eh, then yeah, you'll get rights afterwards and so on. That's the reality of it. That's how things really were. And still are to a good extent too.

But again getting back to the point of it, this is not a new thing, it's just the later phase as they call it, Technocracy. Technocracy, with Jimmy Carter promoting them all, mainly, most of them actually in his cabinet or in his office were technocrats for the first time. We see it now. They appoint them to run countries now when a Prime Minister or something collapses like Italy or France or somewhere or Spain. They'll occasionally appoint a technocrat, they actually say it in the papers, a technocrat from their central bank and put them in as prime minister. They mean, unelected, you see. That's Technocracy at work. That happened a few years ago.

But most folk again, they still go back to falling in for the voting. This is our man or woman, this is, this person speaks for me. [Alan laughing.] There you go. As I say, all you had really in the last four years in the States, and the world has had, was a bit of a breather, a temporary respite. Which was abused and missed use because most folk couldn't see what was coming. In fact, they missed the point in it. The one thing that perhaps Trump did, at least one thing, I don't know if he, hhhch, did an awful lot. But he pulled the US out of the Paris Accord with the climate change stuff. Which was the whole agenda for sustainability under the guise of using the climate. You see? Now they're using Covid for the great reset. Hm.

But sustainability was always the idea. Too many folk causing problems and there's too many people, we've got to start culling the population and bringing it down, etc., you see. And totally coupled of course with Technocracy, which was energy units. And you are a human being, you are an energy unit, you consume energy too. You've seen the publications, if you bothered to look at them from the Paris treaty accord and so on, the climate accord, and the Conference of Parties, where they talk about this quite openly. That yeah, each person born will, that little baby will consume X amount of energy units, meaning money and resources, etc., they had us all put down to energy units, in the first six months of its life just keeping it alive.

They're quite blatant about it all but folk don't like to hear unpleasant things, so they turn their head away. They've been taught not to look at the unpleasant. That's what a good part of the New Age was about. All you saw in the New Age movement, avoid anybody that's negative. Well, what do you mean by negative? Well, makes you feel unpleasant. Okay, so topics that are unpleasant should be avoided. Absolutely, think of the good things. Think of the things you want, and they'll just come your way if you think properly in the magical formula about it, and you get what you want. What YOU want, you see, it's all about what you want and personal power for yourself. But yeah, don't look at anything that's negative.

So you saw the coming free trade with China and the money that was your money, tax money that was going to fund all the movements for businesses and corporations and factories over to China, from the West. The whole West, it was like an armada of goodbye factories and everything. Literally. And we paid for it with our tax money. Through the free trade agreement, that wonderful free-trade agreement. And they gave China the most favored nation trading status. Meaning, they didn't have to pay any taxes for 15 years, it could pollute like crazy. But it could still apply taxes to any imported goods coming into China. But your stuff, you'd have to buy it from China and don't penalize them at all for taxes as import duties. Wonderful. And at the end of 15 years if any of the corporations that were over there making things in China said that they hadn't made the proper profits that they expected to make in that time, because of the move, then they could extend the free taxes and that for another 15 years. There's 30 years of free taxes and so on. Not bad, eh?

And we're still giving out free-trade. Because you see, it was planned a long time ago by the same club who boasted about it, as I said, in 2005. But they were also behind it in the 1930s. Talking about the same deal that's now the TransPacific Partnership. And they had the TransAsia Partnership and so on. From their books in the 20s and 30s.

But facts don't matter to most folk, do they? They still prefer to believe that we're fighting a battle by voting, day by day and year by year, and they're eventually, the person in the white hat will come along and say vote for me, I going to fix it, and you'll all go and fall into the same trap again. But as I say, you had four years at least of a bit of a reprieve. Trump knew that, and I read the articles even before Trump got in, that Canada and the States, state by state to the provinces have done combined agreements on implementing all the free-trade measures regardless of national interest and national policy. We've been doing it all along, you see, implementing all the climate change agreements, whether he went to the meetings or not. [Alan laughing.]

Because they're appointing the same people. That's what I'm saying, this monster, this monster of an organization already has placed all of its people in the right positions of power. Always has, you see. They are selected, preselected as Quigley said. Just like all the Ministers for Health in all the Western countries, and Australia, they're all members of the same club with the WHO, etc. Some of them even have, have been, are still board members of the WHO, kind of dual interest, eh. Well, I don't vote for the WHO either. Do you? Np.

Technocracy again was to be efficient. Margaret Thatcher joined it eventually. When she retired, she talked about it. She says I now belong to a group where we get things done. We’re not responsible to the public for votes. We don't have to persuade the public to go along with that, we just do it quietly behind the scenes. And she says, I as a former prime minister know other prime ministers and former prime minister's, current and retired, and top civil servants across the world and presidents and so on, and ex-presidents, and we get the job done. She's talking about the Trilateral Commission. Not responsible to the people, you see.

The things that HG Wells showed you in Things To Come, in the movie version they put a bit of it in there too, where the descendants of the technocrats who took over the system, in fact there was the same actors they used for generations later, but the descendants, hhhch, they showed you were still going on into the future regardless of the little people they left behind down at the bottom. But still the same descendants of all the leaders, which shows you eugenics there too, obviously. Superior groups, you see, who would go off into space and conquer the stars and leave all the useless folk down below to do paintings, you see, and sculptures because they have nothing else to do except play because everything is made by machines, you see.

Technocracy shows up in the great reset, same thing. It’s all there isn't it? Old, old plan, you see, very old plan. Before, as I say, they used to believe that world wars were necessary to get the countries to their knees, as HG Wells said, and give up their national sovereignty and allow themselves to be governed and ruled by the proper people who would manage the resources and all that. M-hm. Old agenda. It's monotonous to me. It's maybe monotonous to you too. But there we are with it. It's a never-ending agenda. The never-ending story I used to call it. It's like chapters in a book, but the book goes on forever because it's the same controllers for centuries really.

Remember too, cuttingthroughthematrix.com. Send bucks my way, hopefully, and I can keep ticking along here, and maybe even expand in some small way perhaps. Because we're on a real roller coaster now, we're really going into it now. It's on steroids obviously. You can smell it coming down the pike, this long sought after stage of their dream, you know. It's not the whole dream, it's a big stage towards it though. The whole stage of this part of the dream won't be finished until the end of this century. Again, Agenda 21, the agenda for the whole of the 21st century is split up into sections, like 2030 and so on. Each goalpost like 2030 is what they want to have achieved by that date, then it's on to the next 15 years and the next 15. And they want to have the whole of Agenda 21 finished at the end of the century.

By that time they're talking about a whole different society, a whole different, a much reduced population too, worldwide, eh, going towards their goal of sustainability. Meaning massive reduction of population. They don't want people around that have no real purpose, or, they have no purpose for you. Hhhch.

So again send a few bucks my way @cuttingthroughthematrix.com. PayPal is fine. Cash is fine. A personal check is fine. Some people can even send international postal money orders from their countries to Canada, but not from the States now, they stopped that from the States. Even small bank checks you can get done at the bank. Or Money Gram. We'll see how well that goes as time goes on. Because big changes are happening so fast now. Free speech is really out the window. Really out the window. It truly is. You know. When they bring in the military cyber war agencies and attack the people, like I mentioned last week and the week before, they've declared war on their own peoples. In the newspaper, it's published articles.

So cuttingthroughthematrix.com. Make a list of the sites I have because if one goes down hopefully the other ones, there's always one up there. If you don't hear me on the Sunday night / Monday morning, then try the other sites. Make a list of them for your own benefit.

Because we're truly going through momentous times in history. It's bad enough having world war and watching mass slaughter across countries, and monuments getting put up in towns and cities and hamlets across the world to all the folk who got slaughtered, you know. All for the greater good, you know. It was for the war to end all wars, another HG Wells big lie. And his white feather as I said before, I'll just finish that, I should have finished that. He said how to get the guys to go off and fight in this war, world war. You'd think HG Wells would be a pacifist. No, he was all for the agenda. He was selected. He says, if we get the women to shame their fiancés or their husbands by wearing a white feather in their hat in public in the streets, that would make people point, it could make the guilt complex, so shame, shame, shame them, and the men would go fight.

The dirty tricks that they played, eh! Never ending. Never ending. It doesn't stop, does it? The same characters that used World War I for Things to Come, hhhch, oh, we can't go on like this, look at the chaos and slaughter, and perpetual war, though it would continue after it, eh, so we need a really ruling caste, a ruling elite to rule the world properly. The Freemasonry of the Air, he called it in his book, a secret society all sworn to be a brotherhood of the air, eh, hm. I tell ya. That's what he said, yeah, many will fight in the world order, and they'll fight and die in vain. Because you see it's the whole system. It's the whole system. It never was for the people. Hhhch. It never was at all. Np.

Our indoctrinated version of history, the authorized versions, they make you think the world is always fighting itself through different factions, just fighting and wanting to dominate and so on, and that there are clear lines between different kind of groups and parties and associations and nations. But it's nothing like that at all when it comes to the big organizations that run the world. Just pondering through their own books with their international meetings, just for the Royal Institute of International Affairs itself, and all of its affiliates too that attend, you know, they have international affairs groups for India and all the Commonwealth countries, still today, and other countries now as well. They brought the US in with the Council on Foreign Relations long ago too. Now they have one as well that was set up for the politicians and the higher elite, the commission areas in the European Union. The same groups, all the same across the whole planet. And the Asia-Pacific group for the Far East as well including Australia.

So it's a vastly different world than the way you're trained to believe. That it's always a, we need world government because we're always fighting each other. But when you look at the attendees of the meetings, the world meetings that they have for the Royal Institute of International Affairs in the 1930s, as an example, they have all kinds of people as members. Communists. Revolutionaries. They had members in southern Ireland who were revolutionaries too. Full members in those meetings in the 1930s. They already had chapters on free trade with “most favored nation trading status" categories in them. The same organization that all the way down through 1960s, 70s and 80s brought you the European Union. And brought you the free-trade agreements for the Americas. And for NAFTA, the USMCA I think they call it now, same agreement really. The same group behind it all.

Some of them you know their names of, the people who attend the meetings because some of them are your presidents and prime ministers, other ones are high civil servants. Other ones are members of your central banking system. It's one big club, you see. They have specialists in all different areas. They actually say that too. And all the other international organizations that they own, and Institutes of International Affairs. Lots of them. They couldn't use the ‘Royal’ title in some of the countries naturally because they were not members of the British Commonwealth.

So it's an ongoing process with again the idea of wars which we can find out by Quigley's other books on South Africa, the Boer War, who was behind it to make it all happen to grab the resources. And how the group that he belonged to also studied intensely the Russian or Bolshevik revolution. Studied it. That's why, you see, they have all members, all kinds of members in their organization. Quigley said the same thing, we have, we don't care if they're communists or dictators or whatever, they'll take anybody on board, if they're useful, you see.

But for the people that they rule over, they train you to believe that everybody's definitely, we all think this way in this nation, and we all think of these are our enemies over there in that nation. That's the historical version that’s drummed into you. But in reality, it's vastly, as Quigley says, we don't care what they are, hhhch, they bring them in, eh. And they all have their drinkie-poos together after these big meetings and lunches, and very congenial and jovial, you see. That's how it's done.

From an organization that, it says pragmatic, it's very, it does things out of necessity, to get things done. All the eggs you break, like Rockefeller said, you know, you can't make an omelette without breaking the eggs. Well, all the fallout and chaos and unemployment that's caused, or even wars and so on, it's just unfortunate, that's the shells that are all broken from the eggs. And you can't make the omelette any other way, you see. So they can always rationalize anything that's done.

For the greater good, that's all through their books, the greater good, yeah. And, the good life. They had all these code terms and buzzwords and phrases. The good life, the one that Bertrand Russell always used because he was a member of it too of course. But yeah, it's to bring the good life to the people. But really study Bertrand Russell's ideas, he didn't believe that it was a matter of distributing more goods to the poorer folk. Or even to the folk in the working class in Britain either, who were still poor. It was more of a careful, again, is Technocracy is what it’s called today.

Technocracy is the system to be brought in on behalf of the Royal Institute of International Affairs / Council on Foreign Relations and the Asian-Pacific group of course and so on as well. It's all the same bunch bringing in the same agenda. And of course the proper people will decide how you distribute the goods and redistribute the wealth of the general public. [Alan chuckles.] We’re doing that already through the whole exercise of Covid. Because obviously with all this fake money being flakily created by the fake bankers, but how can you be a real banker if there's no real tangible thing to point to? You're not transferring gold or silver across bank to bank and so on. It’s all blips on computer screens, it’s created on the spot basically. So you don't really need a banker who really carefully meticulously looks at debt and profit and so on, if it's not backed by anything.

But it's a matter of control, that's, there's no doubt about that. It's a better form of control management of the general populace. Because it decides, even in population control, if you make it almost impossible to afford children then fewer folk will have children. Or if the ones that do have them, they haven’t got the cash, and they’re not getting subsidized to have the child and take care of the child, then the child is probably going to get sick and die, and maybe their parents will die as well, because they can’t afford the proper nutrition, etc, or heat in the winter and all these things. This is stuff that Malthus talked about and other ones after him too talked about, and all the top economists that belong to the group I’m talking about now have often brought up that there’s many ways to control population, economic factors being one of them.

So we’re going through a long-term agenda and of course it’s now married with Technocracy, which is technocrats basically, a technocrat system using technology to manage the general population on a global scale. You’ll find it written in a lot of nonfiction books, and fiction as well. It’s through a lot of the movies that you watch in the sci-fi movies, all these little predictive programming type implants that get put into your mind through watching them. Well yeah… It starts off as a possibility. Then you start to see it becomes a reality. Then eventually it’s pushed as a necessity, for your own good and for safety and for antiterrorism reasons you’ve all got to get chipped or at the very least monitored on every move that you make using your cell phone or whatever it happens to be at the time. But the fact is you’re always programed for what’s to come.

And a lot of folk like it, you know. Especially if you're brought up with watching the Sci-Fi's and believing it, and say, oh that's fantastic, that's a great thing, I wouldn't mind living in a world like that. Of course you don't realize you're getting programed to do something similar, but not quite the same. It won't be a wonderful utopia, that's for sure. But you certainly will be monitored and managed with your social credit score. The same as China. You know, China is, it's the model state we've all to copy. I've got articles going back to the 1970s before they really buildup China by using our money, hhhch, and creating the modern China, talking about this could be a model state. Because the people are so obedient in China, you see. They're more used to dictatorial feudal systems of management. Feudalism and socialism too. Ancient China tried all kinds of government systems to manage the people and meticulously studied it all of course, and its efficacy, etc. to compare them all. Today you have the outcome of it all.

Again, you've got the leaders of the world today, the communist leaders, again, all members of the same international club, they don't discriminate on your point of view. If you're handy and you believe in totalitarianism, then they'll bring you in. For democratic countries they'll give you kind faces that say things in a much more pleasant way, but want the same thing, you see. They want international duty, you have an international duty to your fellow man and woman, and you'll be trained to have that. It's like China, that's what China's based on, you see. So that's why, you're going to copy China, and you'll all be happy doing it, and you'll live with a lot less, like Klaus Schwab said.

Mr. Schwab. And who appointed him? The same club basically, a different branch you see, specialized branch, that's what it is. He speaks for the monied interests that manage the world. Because it's a big part of the Royal Institute of International Affairs. Don't forget, the Royal Institute of International Affairs came out of the Rhodes Foundation with Cecil Rhodes and Lord Rothschild, hm, then merged with the Lord Alfred Milner group, that also was getting funded by the same financiers in the British Empire, to create the Royal Institute of International Affairs. Long-term planning, eh?

And when you really have these massive committees with massive think tanks, that work 24 hours a day at times, and literally have used generations of people, hiring and retiring and hiring and retiring, they always achieve their goals. Why can't they? Because you see, no ordinary middle-class businessmen can imagine, oh, I'll still be working down the way through my work, this company here will be going full steam ahead in two hundred years time. You couldn't imagine that. But with private foundations, you see, with all that money, and their incredible vested interests, and all the monopoly, the monopolization of the world's wealth and resources that they do, and then they sink it in, and they call themselves charitable foundations, and reinvest it for themselves. And pay themselves incredible salaries off it too, mind you, which they, since they've written up all the laws on it, it's all quite legal. So yeah, they can give their workers at the top billions of dollars a year, just like the bankers do too.

Many of the top ones get paid awfully well. And the big think tanks that they have, they're really like private civil servants, like whole corporate, whole battalions of them sitting there doing their work, each working on precise planning of the future in their own specialized areas. That's how it's done. Too much for the average person to imagine because you don't hear that coming out of the mouths of politicians. Because you see, their job is not to bring you into the big secret. That you're meant to just fall in line… Well this guy in Toronto there, that Ford guy, he's annoyed that folk are protesting his lockdowns, that's how folk see things, you know. You're trained to see the person and the Punch and Judy show that you throw tomatoes at. That's what their job is. They don't plan on this stuff. They don't plan.

Look at the organization that turned, from the start, on Trump, President Trump when he got in. It was like, we're not going to work for this guy. Like, [Alan chuckles.] the whole government, we're not going to work for this guy. You're, what on earth is this? what is this real thing of government? Because after all, if the people really voted him in, they're supposed to jump to it and do what they're told and get on with it. But nope. Fought, fought, fought the whole time in office. As I say, there's no doubt, there is no doubt overwhelmingly that, never mind the fraud voters, fraud that they're claiming and so on. But the fact is, the whole antics of Black Lives Matter and the Antifa burnings and so on, and all the lootings that we saw as well, well-paid, as I say, these were all paid and funded by the so-called deep state, the big boys. Which is the real system that runs the world. That's your evidence.

But there's no doubt about it, it made more and more folk vote for Trump regardless. Because who would vote in a communist government? to sit there and watch communists go to work? That's the impression that was put over to the people at least. Even though, as I say, the leaders of these groups were all professionals. Many of them had worked across the world in other color revolutions on behalf of the CIA. But yeah, and all the fake voting and so on.

I don't know if you noticed that one, some, more of the 1%, I'll call it 1% in Egypt, of another dynasty they found, over 100 mummies they found, they have them on display some of them, and there's more and more to come. Have you read that recently? It was about two weeks ago in the papers, eh. At the time I thought, you know, and it sure is funny, if you look up the names of these mummies, they all voted for Biden, I guarantee they'll be on the list. But that's how farcical it all is. It's so farcical.

We all know it. We all know that the real rulers wanted Biden in this time, you see. And sure enough, they're even making statements like, we're back on course now with the climate agenda and Paris accord and this, that and the other, you see. And the same old, let's bash Russia, let's get the war going with Russia, the same kind of stuff. And again, we've got the war drums going for parts of the Middle East and so on. So they mean it, they're back on course. That's why they were really upset with Trump. If Trump had just gone to war with the rest of the list that was mentioned by the PNAC group that General Wesley Clark talked about, if he had just gone to war with them, you wouldn't have had any of these problems on the go, I think. Would you?

Because this agenda run by the big organization I'm mentioning here gets upset when its plans and timetables get upset too. Trump was supposed to finish off Syria, you know. We had the whole thing from Bush Junior and the PNAC group and all the wars that they brought the States into. The whole list was made public, as I said, what was on the list to be taken out of countries? Then when they couldn't just go all the way and get rid of Syria, then they had all these proxy armies that they funded, by the West. We paid for it all, our tax money paid for it all. Rather than get American boots on the ground and other European countries, they got their proxy armies.

I remember doing the talks on them, it was in the newspapers at the time, the general newspapers. The money was coming into Qatar and different places, and weaponry, and etc. They were all getting funded and trained and all the rest of it. We know who the coterie of groups that were doing it all were about. It really upset them, you see. They continued with Obama, and Obama had more wars. He expanded the wars and got approval from the PNAC group. Rumsfeld, remember, Donald Rumsfeld congratulated him for continuing the same wars and expanding them against the same countries.

Then you get Donald Trump, you see, who didn't even really retaliate big-time against the fake chemical attack in Syria. Because they put out that little thing, well, we can't go to war with them unless they use chemicals on their own people. So, that fake one, of course. And it's all being expounded by Craig Murray and others as to what really happened there, who followed up all the real details on it. Then you have Trump just, you know, a kind of a half, not even halfhearted, it wasn't even that much of a retaliatory against, he was, something in him said no. We'll never really figure it out. But the press initially gave him kudos for it and gave him good points, for the first time that he got in he got good points. He had like, continue Donald, get rid of Assad, you see.

Because that's what the US does. Through the CIA. And the CIA really runs it all, that part of it, right. They wanted Assad out. Of course their, the deep state, the PNAC group and yada, ya, it's all the same group, but they wanted Assad out and they had wanted him out for years. To democratize, you know, at the very least what they say is, to put in more a representative type governments, more secular, they call it, a more secular type government. Remember when they had the big one in Egypt, the revolution? Again, funded by the West. The one that got in wasn't secular enough, so they got rid of him too with a color revolution. This is what they… This is all admitted to now.

That's what you just had in the US, was a complete color revolution. Following the psyop warfare groups, that are special forces by the way, and the taking over of all, the whole Internet, using it against Canadians and Americans now, and Britain, by their own psyop forces. I read the articles which they've published themselves. Then you have the ones in the streets of course that they're all psyops groups. They always look for favorable groups that they can actually buy off and help lead, to get the numbers up for their riots or so-called demonstrations and so on. This is standard, standard color revolution, out of the manuals of warfare put out by the Department of Defense. Yeah, your own governments are behind it. That's why you didn't get the certain generals who were going to stop it, by the way. I'll probably touch on unconventional warfare before the night's out.

But it's just astonishing to me listening to people, that should know better, falling right back into the idea of voting. As I've said before, if voting did you any good it would be made illegal. Obviously. I've heard people recently again say something I've said for months and months and months, and years actually, is that the whole system is so corrupt anyway, you could never get justice even if it was real, you see, it's so corrupt. Because we are corrupt people, you see, today. The culture is corrupt. Wealth was elevated above all, everything else. You're taught to worship the richest people, and those that made it good, become stars, you know, either music or entertainment, acting. That's what you've been fed, a steady diet of the lives of the rich and famous.

The rest of the people, the ordinary folk, are just cast aside as somehow irrelevant. Because that's a class system, isn't it, let's just talk about the rich and famous. And everybody wants to become that with their American Idol and British idol and all that, it's across the whole planet at the same time. Just coincidental, you know. We used to say that the rich just get access to the big honeypots, which is the cash that all comes from you through taxation. Corporations got lumps of money long before Covid came along, long before the crash of 2007/8. They're always getting big cash grants to tide them over, you know, who don't pay them back because they're just little gifts from the public. Because they're essential businesses, some of these big businesses, you see. You don't get it, the little guy, but the big ones do. Just like Covid, I mean, just the big corporations are allowed to stay open, their big outlets, eh?

Quite coincidental too because we find that in the communist writings from 70 or 80 years ago, they'd have become you know, just big shops that specialize in their own areas across the world. One for wood products. One for leather products or shoes and things. And maybe one for food. Isn't that coincidental? Just, that's all this is, coincidence, isn't it? The big companies.

It's coincidence too you see, because this is the most intelligent virus you've ever, ever heard of. It's got so many human aspects to it, doesn't it, this virus? Have you noticed it? Not only does it not attack people when they're demonstrating or rioting or looting, or burning cities down, it doesn't attack them... And they don't bother either wearing masks, or social distancing, or staying indoors like everybody else has to stay indoors. And your governments know too, they're obviously working with the virus because your government tells the cops to leave these rioters and looters and that alone, you see. If you went on the streets for lockdowns you'd be arrested, or 12 of them would pounce on you. I saw that happening in a little clip in the video. Some guy was in the street in a curfew place in the States, I think I mentioned it last week, and about 12 of them pounced on him and battered him into the dust. The same cops that would not touch, hhhch, the Antifa.

So how come? Have they all got pacts with this Covid virus or something? When they can… The virus too, knows that if you go into a restaurant and as long as you sit in the right place and you take the mask off, just to eat the food, and put it back on, it will not attack you. That's a very congenial human trait, that, you know. It's got some sympathy for the starving people. You've never seen a virus like this, obviously. And as soon as the riots and that are over, eh, there's the governments parroting the same mantras. Because they're all getting it from the same source worldwide, including the phrases and sentences to use and that. Total lockdown again, oh, it's just rampaging through. But if you get tested every day you might get a little pass so that you could be out in curfew maybe, if you have the apps on the phone and all that, and you're a good, good, good citizen, you see, you're doing what you're…

We are becoming more and more like the Chinese all the time with their social credit system. Which is part of it, folks. It was all tested out in China. Including the apps for the color coding on your app for your virus, you know, and if you've been near someone it will flash red. You'd better turn yourself in or the cops will pick you up, eh. Ftt. I tell ya. Technocracy. Technical. Hm. Technocracy. So here it all is. And the folk can't really recognize it. But at least we've got a congenial virus that's got some sympathy once in a while, eh, for the human condition. Obviously. Yep. [Alan chuckles.]

There was some article the other day in the paper, it was about some fellow, a father who went into one of the big stores. The father had a mask on, but his son has a problem with the mask, I think he had asthma or something. So the, I think the, I don't know what happened but anyway they said the manager asked them to leave because the son didn't have the mask on, even though he was told he had a problem with his breathing. Which tells you that humans definitely don't have the same sympathy as the Covid does, eh?! But anyway, the father, you see the father getting arrested by the two cops behind him, neither of the cops is wearing a mask! So again, this virus knows who's an authority and is working for the greater good, as opposed to that nasty man who had the son who couldn't wear it because of asthma or something. There ya go. What kind of…

I have no faith in humanity that won't stand up against… what would you call these characters, who sell out their own people for a paycheck, with the cops there doing unspeakable things to quite innocent people?! These are the same characters that Solzhenitsyn warned you about when the NKVD and the Cheka would come in the middle night and grab your neighbors and turn out streets, to make sure you're terrified as you saw them bundled in and beaten up into the vans and taken away. A terror campaign on the people. He says, that's when you stop it. That's when you stop it. He says, the neighbors could have stopped it and grabbed anything for weapons and just went for them right at the very first. That would have stopped it. Instead of having 70 years of horror. Hhhch.

But when I saw those guys working for a paycheck, arresting the guy, you know… Never mind the stores that should be completely boycotted by the general public! But it won't happen because you'll never, and this is what the elite know, you'll never get the general public collectively standing up against anything. That's what they've always known. In fact, with unconventional warfare and psyops they know they can create divisions amongst the people. And they know the types that can actually turn upon you, in the general population, the ones who want to please and have brownie points, they'll turn on you. They create these groups by the way.

The system you live in is completely alien to what you've been brainwashed with. You've been trained to be good little citizens. Just play yourselves, don't cause waves. And for a long time you were taught just consume, consume, consume. Until they had the global system in place, now it's time to go into post consumer society [Alan chuckles.] as you're taught basic necessities and austerity, that's the rule. That's what Technocracy is about now. That's what Mr. Schwab is about. You'll owe nothing, he says, but you'll be happy. There you are, there's your new masters. Why bother voting when you've got these characters making the rules for you already, and your politicians bowing to them and doing it all. Why are you voting?

Another thing to mention here is all the laws now about speech and what you can say and what you can't say, right down to what you can think now, eh. And this isn't new in Canada. Canada especially is, we're progressive, you see, and we're all for everything that comes down the pike. All to save, to be nice citizens, like China, you see, social credit systems and scores and go along, be nice and pleasant. Once again, don't talk about negative things, talk about nice pleasant things. And be good, and they will tell you what good is, and if you can get little tick marks for all the good points, then, you'll be a good citizen, you see.

Canada has had these speech laws and hate laws since about the 90s, I think, late 90s. And they enforce them all here in Canada, you know. It starts off as something most folk, oh well, maybe that's okay, you know. But then, as I say, every law that goes on the books is meant, is MEANT and designed to be expanded to get to its real goals, and now you're seeing them all today. You can't even, well, Fauci said it and others have said it too, don't question the science, you know, like little peasant you, don't question the science. Just obey. Just obey. Yep. Leave it to the experts. Again, Technocracy, you see.

It doesn't matter if, and again, years in the future they'll say, well you see, here's what happened, and they'll give you their version about how we all came into this global society, a post consumerist society, austerity society. They'll say then that, yeah, the leaders had to use noble lies, noble lies to get the public to comply and go along with it because they would've never done it otherwise, you see. That's how they do it, you know. They actually admit that once in a while, with their noble lies. After the fact though.

In the meantime, yet they will lie away and tell you that you're wrong for noticing it. Oh, you're bad, you're bad for speaking about it, did you notice that awful lie they said there… Even when you're reading their own articles from the authorities, eh, the scientific, the authorized scientific authorities. And so many of their own ones have been pulled now because they say we've been misinterpreting what they're saying. Even though it's quite plain [Alan chuckles.] what they've been saying. [Alan chuckles.] What they've been saying, that's the reason they pulled it, because it doesn't go along with the flow of the agenda. Facts don't matter, eh, when there's big agendas at work.

But as I say, there's a war on the go and so many countries have got all these laws in place. And starting with hate laws. That's how they start them off. And then gender laws. And all kinds of laws. But it's meant to be expanded and expanded, all the way into a whole new type of human being, eh, where you will be compliant and happy and have little gold stars on your social credit system. And just like China, you'll have access to public libraries and things, and maybe even better schools, maybe, because that's how bad it is in China. The parents, if they've spoken out or question it, black mark and the children can't go to the better schools and so on. This is your real class system, you see, based on compliance. And definitely anti free thought. [Alan chuckles.] And we are to emulate all that.

Because it's not efficient. D'you realize how long it would take with propaganda to persuade you to give up all your rights and freedoms for the greater good? Quigley said it, he says it would take, you can get more done and five years of wartime, war, right, where/who take away all the rights and freedoms of the people, you can get more done, he’s talking about on a social system basis, in five years of war than 50 years of peace and propaganda. So there you go. So this a handy virus, this congenial pro authority virus here, you know, is helping them put through, and Mr. Schwab himself has said it at the World Economic Forum, he says, this will help us get the whole agenda through, the climate agenda. So did the Club of Rome say that. So did Justin Trudeau jump on the wagon to get his face in the paper. But many others have said the same.

This is an old agenda and this is the way to get it through. Much faster. Much, much faster. It was instant, wasn’t it really, instant war. And never in wartime before have they actually collapsed the economy by order. [Alan chuckles.] It’s all happened with an order, they've ordered it all collapsed. Let's collapse the economy, shut everybody in their homes. Boom. Nothing moves. That's amazing planning, eh. Amazing. So this handy, one day there'll be a big museum set up for this virus, you know. You'll walk through it, at the beginning of it, all through it to the end and the exit door of how they brought a whole new system in. This is the most congenial virus they've ever had for the big boys agenda. Step-by-step, all the way through it. Yep.

At the other end you'll have, you won't have health anymore. I remember giving these talks again 20 years ago, wellness, wellness. Where'd you get this term wellness? This is all part of the agenda, you see, wellness. You say, how is your health doing, you know? How is your wellness now. Now, wellness also according to Schwab and people long before him by the way have said, well wellness is your complete self, that’s the holistic you, you see, it's all one, your mind, body, soul, everything, all brought together, how is...

I remember giving the talks again 20 years ago, I says, one day the techniques they're going to use on you electronic and otherwise, hm, the Technotronic type warfare, I says, it was like the movie, that movie that Schwarzenegger was in when he goes to Mars, you know. He goes to a place for, you get a virtual holiday. He's strapped in a chair and they inject something in you to get the whole process, and then they put this thing on your head, a kind of Corbin type helmet idea. They could literally give you, you could actually pick your adventure, to be a spy or an agent or something, an adventure.

It all goes wrong because he's already been programmed, you see, the folk who are doing this entertainment thing on him didn't know he'd been programmed already. It was a good story, quite entertaining. But from that I remember giving a talk saying, you know what you're going to get is a system, in a post consumer society... So you're postindustrial... They were given consumerism for a while as they expanded the agenda worldwide, to keep you brave, munching happily in their fields, you see, and now they're taking it away from you step-by-step across the planet now for the global system. And you need global governance to manage this pandemic. Again, a very congenial virus. Accolades to this virus and this big museum in the future, eh, for what it accomplished.

You see, you didn't need governments. You didn't need all these organizations. All you needed was the right kind of virus that was congenial to all your agendas, you see, and it will accomplish it all. So you go into a wellness society. And wellness as I say 20 years ago said, they said, I said you could be literally standing with a pitchfork mucking out a bier, as they call it, in Britain, mucking it out, you know, the animal bier, but in your head you could be on Mars or the moon or somewhere or having an adventure in space. In a virtual world. And you're quite happy, you know, quite happy doing awful work that somebody has to do. And paid pittances, because you really won't even need money when you're happy, will you? You could, in your own mind you think you've got everything at my fingertips, everything, you know, and you'll be a happy compliant citizen.

And you'll have a little stamp on your head saying, socially approved by the authorities. Bang. Quality control. Bung. A little tattoo on your forehead, eh. I used to joke about that, but not really jokes, I knew it would come. And it is coming, and folk still think it must be a joke. No, it's not. [Alan laughing.] It's coming all right. Faster than you think.

I remember reading about the earth armies, they were creating these massive earth armies they called them. They had different, when folk started to catch on a little, a few folk catching on to what they really meant, then they put fake earth armies out to just pull you off and sidetrack you. But really these were the environmental armies, eh, and the sustainability armies. For human sustainability. Which meant the population. Post consumer society. Austerity. Yep. Austerity measures. That's where you're all going, you see, austerity.

And don't think for a moment that China is going to get preferential treatment out of it all. Because the same people that created modern China, I mean, the elite of China are part of the big global society that runs the world. The big club. They and their children and their grandchildren will go on for centuries. This is how it's planned; they're going to go on for centuries. They are in the same thing. They're not going to keep millions of Chinese around in a society where they don't need them. And eventually they won't need even the human labor.

We truly are managed like animals. You don't frighten animals, you be nice to animals, and you pat their heads once in a while, you know. But you always maneuver them up to the next step and the next step and the next step. That's where we're going with it all.

There are those who on the higher social credit system, who've served the system, and serve the masters on higher levels of the system, the pyramid… The pyramid symbolizes that, the pyramid they use in the occult circles of course with its multilevel systems of building. The dollar bill in the States is the famous one, everybody knows that one. Although it was used long before that too by the way, thousands of years ago. But on the dollar bill they used it, and it was, that there is a new secular order, novus ordo seclorum.

Also it shows you all the grass in the bottom of it, it's like brush. That symbolizes the general population, the unwashed masses, the raw, the raw, raw resources you might call them. So untamed, you know, basically the primitives of Huxley's Brave New World in a sense too. Then there is all the shaped bricks, you see, for the building, the pyramid, and the tiers of management going up to the top. And you go up towards the top, it actually gets narrower and narrower, and there's fewer and fewer in each section that keep the secrets of management of the populace down below. That's what are running, that's what runs us of course, are these occult organizations that the public never ever, they laugh them off as, great how you can actually be taught to laugh it off and think, oh, it's just conspiracy nonsense, isn't it, eh. Isn't it?

It's quite amazing too, I mean, I was asked to go on TV shows quite some years back when it was becoming popular to go into conspiracy shows and so on, television shows. And they quizzed me, you know, by phone in advance. It was an awfully well-known one. I went through some of the agendas that was planned, but I was giving them facts, you see. And they pretty well said, can you kind of bend the facts a little, you know, go around them? I says, well these are the facts though. They says, we know that. I wouldn't bend, you see, so that was the last I heard of them. But they quizzed me. Nothing spontaneous. Anything you see on TV, that means it's watered-down, diluted or subverted, and it's off on a different tangent. That's how you defuse something. That's counterintelligence, you see.

If you play the game and go along in the world, and you've got the abilities and the knowledge, yeah, you'll get well rewarded. And doors will open for you. And most folk go along. It's the same as the cops I'm talking about that arrested that guy. And other cops too from all the countless clips you see now, what cops are up to in different countries. These folks should be fired immediately. But again, you need the public to all stand and demand it. Because they're supposed to be the public servants aren't they. Not the masters.

Even this very talk I gave 20 years ago I said, the public could stop anything if they wanted to. But they never, again, you cannot GET them to go along with it all. Can't do it. That's why the psyops, if you study again Department of Defense psyops, they go into how to divide and conquer the population. And the specific propaganda aimed at the women, in different nations. They already have anthropologists and sociologists working with them, and psychologists and behaviorists all working with them. I remember giving the talks when they went into Iraq, they had about five or six top anthropologists working with them to give them the culture of the people, so you'd know what kind of propaganda, they'd work with the psyops teams for propaganda and how to manipulate and get them on board with you, or create more divisions, and then you would use some of the divisions on your side to fight the other ones. This was in the manuals by the way, official government manuals, Department of Defense. That's what you had during the whole time with the riots and the demonstrations and burnings in the States. Perfect Department of Defense psyop.

So I'll get back on to what I was saying in the beginning was I'll put up that link to the video with Patrick Wood and James Delingpole.

Technocracy And The Great Reset - Patrick Wood and James Delingpole - bitchute.com / 28 Nov 2020

I haven't seen it all myself because I can’t, I, again, hhhch. I know that psyops is working, I know the big agencies are working too, military types too. It's in the papers, they're attacking people who are speaking out. I've been attacked for years for speaking out about the agenda, long before Covid.

But you can actually, I've sat on the phone with my satellite company so many times when the speed winnows off into dial up speed. When there's no cloud in the sky by the way, you know. And going through the farces of, well try this and try that, switch it off, switch it back on, dut-dut-dut, as they play with you rather than tell you you're on a lock, you know. [Alan chuckles.] You've been choked as they call it. And it's happening all the time. So the only time I can see anything for any length of time, even 5, 10 minutes, is the middle of the night, literally. Then of course that's the only time they will give you speed then. It's to train you to stay up all night long. As Bernays said, you know, don't make a better product to suit the people, train the people to suit your product.

But yeah, you definitely get attacked, there's no doubt about it. The authorities are showing more and more, um, it's like a school fight. This is how they get the fight started in school. So you get someone who complains about something. Somebody's going to either punch somebody, I remember they used to do that at school, they'd punch you at the top of the arm, in passing, you know. Which is a nerve point, and you get, aaaa, oooou, or they get something like a scarf and they just flick it, you know, on your skin, booooof. And that would start a fight off. Then of course the person goes, well stop doing that. Just like Fight Club the movie, hm. Then you'd see it escalating, as the chins go out and head goes up, and the eyes stare at each other. There's a system they go through before they really go for each other.

That's exactly the same system that governments use with psyop warfare and technical warfare upon its own people, you know, and you've got Internet warfare, etc. This is what they do, a little bit at a time. But governments now are showing they are more resolute, a little bit more resolute, as the chin goes out, as they try to train you to simply obey and stop bitching about it, you know, yep, stop complaining about it. A lot of folk buckle under right off the bat, in any fight, you know. That's how they do it, expecting, they know pretty well how much of a percentage of the public will just back off, okay, okay, we'll back off, you know.

But the people, you could change anything if they wanted to. IF they wanted to do. But you cannot get them to stay together long enough. Unfortunately all the things that glued them together have been purposely destroyed. Again, I gave these talks, to me it's like repetition. It's not just seeing things as they are going to happen, which times you can get a darn good whiff, no doubt about it. But also, it's repetition, hell is repetition, isn't it? And it might give you an idea of who's running the show. [Alan chuckles.]

But again, years ago I remember giving a talk about how you'll be trained and trained and trained into obedience, step by step, and how it would be done to you as well, and the things they would tell you, you'd have to do in order to get your compliance. It's all here. It's all being done. NOW. Obviously it's been, these are well understood techniques that are very, very old. And knowledge is never lost because knowledge is power. That's why the historians keep track of how to manage populations in all kinds of situations. These are wealths of information for those that rule. It's never lost.

But we're going through today, step by step by step for compliance, techniques and behavior compliance for behavior modification. The United Nations of course is naturally on board with it. They talked about how they were training the people to self-police. Well, this was before you heard the term hate law or hate speech or anything to do with that. Because hate now is expanded to cover a whole variety of things. In fact, it's hateful, you see, to talk against Covid. Unless you are one of the authorities that are authorized to speak about it, it's hateful, you're an enemy of society, you know, you're dangerous to society and you're an enemy of the people. This is straight out of the Bolshevik revolution, that's what they did when they took over initially. Enemy of the state. What are you thinking about? Oh, you're an enemy of the state. Are you authorized to say that? To think that? Nope. To the wall. Yep, that's how it's done.

You're seeing terrible symptoms of the same kind of attitude. Because it's always the same steps to go through as they push and they up the ante a little bit more. Up the ante, up the ante, to see if the kickback is going to come. Or they'll back off a little bit if they sense through all their studies, instantaneous and real-time studies through all their algorithms what the public are chatting about, what they're arguing about. They might back off a little bit here and give it a few days more or a week more, then push it again, you see. This is like, this is a schoolyard fight for dominance by the bully. That's what you're going through right now.

All of these things, and your self-policing, maybe I shouldn't say that I think that, maybe they're right, maybe I'm bad for society if I say these things. You see how they make you unsure of yourself? That’s psychological warfare, you see, self-policing. Things you would normally do or say in normal everyday life that had no harm in it at all, is now forbidden, you see. As you self, oh, maybe I'll shut up and not say that. Maybe somebody will get offended. Maybe, maybe if I say I cannot breathe with this mask on somebody will get offended, if I mention it, maybe they'll come down and clamp it down even, maybe they'll tape it on my face. Because I'll be an enemy of the people, I'll be dangerous to them if I took it off to try to breathe. Or maybe I should just suffocate quietly, then I might be a good citizen with a good social score or on my social credit system.

Massive psychological warfare. I get lots and lots and lots of emails from folks that are really suffering, have lost businesses, family split ups, all that kind of stuff, but again, through finances all going to pot because it all. Folk locked in, they're terrified to go out of their homes in case they catch something. Other ones terrified to go out of their homes in case they get pounced on by authorities. Because they’ve seen all these little clips of the cops beating up people. It's just horrible, you know. Folk who at night now in the lockdowns in parts of Britain and elsewhere, or in the States, are terrified if they get sick. Should they try and go out or take the person in their home to the hospital? after curfew? And get caught with the cops and might get beaten up or killed? Hm?

Think about it. These are dangerous times. Folk are sensing it. But then again, they didn't care previously with all the folk, and we've had plenty of the top professionals come out, doctors and surgeons and specialists in all kinds of medical fields, talking about the countless people who have died because they couldn't get into the hospital, with the previous ones in the spring, as they shut the hospitals pretty well down and stopped all elective surgery and emergency surgeries and things. Folk were dying in agony in their homes. That's horrible. That tells you the system, we're all expendable to get this agenda through. That's what it's telling you, folks. We're written off, you know.

I used to wonder years and years ago, I think it was back in the 90s when so many of the big changes were, that's when all the bad smells were coming out, bad smells. Folk were saying, what's going on, you know. You had the police changing the uniforms into the combat black gear, you know. The color of the executioner, hm, that's what they use that color for. You had the antiterrorist bill put through which was a combined omnibus bill put out by Allan Rock in Canada in the late 90s before 9/11 happened, which would suspend your rights and lock people up indefinitely without trial, all that stuff, you know.

At that time at least the journalists were saying, what on earth is this, this is an antiterrorism bill, you know, martial law type thing, what was coming down the pike? You had all these different smells and whiffs of things to come. And whiffs of the fact, again, they were testing the waters I think as well, never mind getting the people acclimated to the combat gear and the cops and the changes and all the rest of it and all that kind of stuff, all in advance of what was to come. But training the public, constantly training the public into compliance was part of it too, what to think, what to say, and so on, you know.

Again, even with the laws, I says, where are they going to take these hate laws, you know? And a judge was trying someone, a couple of guys had mugged somebody for a wallet. For the first time I'd read it, and the newspaper said, they said to them, what were you thinking when you, we know why you robbed the person, and what were you thinking when you were robbing them? He was trying to find out if it was a racial crime? Well, most people who are junkies, hhhch, don't care, they don't care who they robbed. They really don't, you know, they're desperate. But this is where it ends up going into, what were you thinking when you did that? Now it's, what's were you thinking when you said that, and then it's, what were you thinking when you thought it? [Alan laughing.] That's what's coming down to. And it's all kinds of things they've added onto it as well.

That's when they first brought out the term in the 90s as well, antigovernment. That's a term they used to use in the Soviet Union, antigovernment. It was during the Bush reign they started bringing it out more and more in the States and Canada, antigovernment. So if you questioned anything about government, what they were up to, or the undue use of military force inside the US in a few instances, you're anti-, anybody who protested what they government was doing was antigovernment. No, you weren't protesting the event, no, obviously you were anti-government. Hhhch. You see how they change it?

It's like saying if someone doesn't want a vaccination, A vaccination, they're now called anti-vaxxers, like smeared with all vaccinations. You see, that's how they do it. This is psychological warfare. That's what it is. Pure psychological warfare. And they smeared everybody that does it go along with it. That's again, psychological warfare.

It isn't just the 77th Brigade in Britain, but they've got brigades in the States and Canada doing it, Canada is working with the States and the CIA all the time. In the 90s too, I mentioned before, that they expanded it in 2001. They opened up bases, like offices, and throughout Canada, for the FBI. And I says, what's coming along the pike here with these bad smells, eh? What's going on here? People would be antigovernment, not just anti-something that government had done, no. Suddenly you're going to be antigovernment for complaining about anything the government had done. That's how it, that's what's going on here.

Massive psychological warfare against its own people. I've always said we pay for our chains, we pay for it all. We pay the salaries of these, you know, cyber warfare organizations that are being used against us. We pay for it all. And psychological war and all the incredible mayhem that that it creates too, we pay for all that as well. And you want to vote for these governments?

We are all Pavlov's dogs. Do you understand that? We are all Pavlov's dogs. That evil character Pavlov that Eleanor Roosevelt loved, she went over to see him, she thought he was the greatest thing to humanity, the greatest thing since sliced bread as they say. He was a genius of a man who could modify the behavior of people. Do you think he just wanted to train the dogs in a different way, you know? Of course he didn't. He was trying to find out if humans would react the same, and they didn't just use dogs by the way, oh, ho, in the Soviet Union.

But I mean, you see, you're all dogs. You've been trained to be fearful, you know. Before, just take your little bubble of a world, eh, you, personally, and you're Pavlov's dog. So yeah, I can go to the pub and I can have a drink and I can go here and I can do that, I can go to the store and I can dut-dut-dut, I can meet friends and... eh, in a little bubble. But then Pavlov says, okay, let's watch what he does now. You go off to do your usual routine, I'll go and see so-and-so tonight. Bingo, as you just about near this particular person's home or whatever it is where you meet your buddies, you get an electric shock. Bzz-zzz-zzz-zzz-zzz-zzz-zzz, you know, and down you go. Then you get up, well what on earth happened there? And you're still confused and the whole thing and you stagger back across that line, bzz-zzz-zzz-zzz-zzz, down you go again, eh. Then you get back up and you're really still confused, and you say, well what's going on here? Then as you get up off your feet, from staggering, the cops jump on you and start beating you up and beating you up and beating you. So you associate getting beaten up, and shocked, with not to be where you are, you see, at that person's house, that's it. So you go home, and you say, I'm not going to go back there again.

So few weeks go by, and I'll go to... Richards house, right. So you go to Richard's house and it's fine and you can go back-and-forth, back-and-forth. And you go to other pals houses, except that one house where you got zapped, eh. Then when you go to Richard’s house, and you get near the door and bzz-zzz-zzz, down you go again, eh. Then the cops jump on you, and they beat you and beat you and beat you, you see. Then you go back home, well I'm not going to Richard's house either, eh. So Joe is out, and Richard is out, so...

Step-by-step, then for a while it's fine. All the rest of them are fine for a while, right. Until you get a zap at every one of them and beaten up. Until, and then the cops say, we won't beat you up if you go there, and they point you to where to go. It's one of the old dingy bars somewhere. You say, okay I'll go there then, eh. So you go there and you're complying with the cops, and it's fine for a year or so. Then one night you go into the bar and bzz-zzz-zzz, you get zapped there as well. Then you have a complete nervous collapse and a nervous breakdown like the dogs did. Because now you're doing everything that they want you to do, and even then it's not satisfied, you still get punished. So your mind collapses.

That's all happening to you, folks. Intense never ending psychological warfare. Including the use of the media to terrify you. Not just with the Covid stories but with the reaction of the police in different countries to the general public. It's meant to terrify you into compliance. And you can't please them. Because they've just started with their demands. You're supposed to come out of this like a remade, you know, person, a person who has been through MK ultra with a mind wipe, ha, a memory wipe, the whole lot, boof, remade in your master’s image, Mr. Schwab, you know. Obedient. Post consumerist. Living in utter austerity. And as he says, you'll own nothing, but you'll be happy. Woof-woof.

Now, I'll just mention here again cuttingthroughthematrix.com. You can buy the books and discs at cuttingthroughthematrix.com. You can donate to me. You can use PayPal. Send personal checks. Send cash. In some countries you can still get international postal money orders from your post office to Canada. Not from the States though, they stopped that. Money Gram and you've got other ways to get the cash to me. So let me know and keep in touch with me. Keep me ticking along here because we're going through incredible times. I have to admit, there's very few legitimate groups out there now. You know? In psychological warfare and in psyop, psyops are combined with information technologies and unconventional warfare, that's what they do. They literally give you lots of people that would speak for you, [Alan chuckles.] they make sure that they can eventually give you your leaders. It's not new.

An example used to be given with the Communists, and they gave examples many years ago about the Communists. It would be often a lady who would come in, a woman who would come in and volunteered to help the local group of whatever the organization was. It didn't have to even be political or seem to be political, but something that had lots of members. They would come in on their off time, and eventually they would volunteer more than anybody. Oh, don't worry, I'll stay all night and fix all these books and everything for you and so on and get everything shipshape, etc. And before you know it, when it came time to elect a leader, they'd all elect that person. So now you've got a Communists leading the group.

It happened in labor unions. It happened across the board. Standard techniques. Well now of course your own governments use it all quite naturally and they use it with psychological warfare and unconventional warfare techniques. Against their own people. I've always said it, one of the biggest parts of the intelligence operation is counterintelligence. It's as old as the hills. It's as old as Plato talking about it in ancient Greece, you know, in Athens and, you don't allow grassroots operations just to come out of nowhere and do their own thing, unless you create them. If you create them, it's because the elite authorized them to be created because it's going to serve the purpose of the elite.

You know if you are going to bring them, for instance, austerity upon the people, as an example, you would want to make sure that, because you know darn well it's going to be a lot of little groups that will start off with a few pennies here and there and get websites going. And they might get angry and vent frustration about what governments are doing and pushing you into austerity. So what you do is you create organizations that first come out speaking against it all, you see, and you give them fantastic credentials, sometimes, great things to get people on board. Well, the person must be genuine because they arrested him once or twice, you know, stuff like that. This is how, this is standard stuff by the way, from textbooks. They get people to accept them, and the next thing you know they become the leaders, and they are well-funded, and then they go along with the agendas, and they'll just swerve you off into a different direction. You think you're all heading towards the same goal, the road you're on starts to go off on a different tangent, and that's counterintelligence. That's how it's done.

And LOTS of them came out in the 90s. Folk have no idea of the intense warfare that was really going on in the social spheres. Because they were getting, preparing for all the big changes they'd bring in, in the 21st century. Preparing for it, and testing some of it out, and then studying the reactions of the people and so on. Yeah, a lot of them were invented back then, their personalities and their personas and their roles. They even have them churning out books sometimes. Ghostwritten. But collecting all the other so-called patriot or alternative movement books, they would take chapters out of them and put them straight into their own books. No one could take them to court for it because nobody would go along with the court case. Nobody. Nobody. Absolutely none. Which tells you it was intelligence agencies behind it.

But they would just take whole chapters of people's books, on the Federal Reserve, or scams like that, you know the money system, and straight into it. They would add little bits, little sentences here and there, that's all they would have to do. Then they became the local hero. So they became the ones that you would hear about. They were elevated into prominence and their books get published across the world. That takes a lot of management and money. [Alan chuckles.] But you get little clues here and there of what's going on.

Other ones that were struggling and genuine were even getting the advertisers threatened to get out, or else, you know. The advertisers would, the advertisers were told not to work with them anymore – I know this for a fact – or something bad would happen to the advertiser. So, they would go straight to the advertisers and stop their income to their little groups or radio stations or whatever and they would go under. This literally happened. You have no idea the intense warfare that was going on behind the scenes. Some of them definitely got bought off too. Other ones got bought off, no doubt about it, absolutely. And financial aid from government agencies to get rid of certain peoples as well. Intense warfare was going on. There’s no point really bitching about it, because I don't complain about these things because people would say, oh sour grapes. No, it's not. This is just what happened. It doesn't bother me. That's what warfare was all about.

What do you think warfare is all about? Do you think it's Democratic warfare? with some kind of gentlemen's agreement somewhere? [Alan chuckles.] Fools. You have no idea that cyber war and psychological war is just as intense and ruthless as physical battlefield war. It is a battlefield. And this, as it said before, when government, it was in the papers last week and the week before, governments in the States and Britain and Canada are using these teams against their own citizens. This is a dangerous, dangerous thing, stage to get to. You've brought the military, your own military on board to attack your own people. DANGEROUS! Dangerous. Dangerous. These folk are ruthless. They are meant to be ruthless. That's what military is about. You don't use them on your own people.

So as I say, you know, help me tick along hopefully and I can maybe keep on going as we go through these, probably in your lifetime it would be about the greatest change, meaning, I mean the biggest change, it's the greatest change in your life's history. Because what's happening now is going to dictate how it's going to be for the rest of your life. Absolutely.

A lot of folk already are, can you believe it, they're already saying, well you know, well Trump might try with the next election. In other words, let's wait four years or so and... Every four years that passes is gone forever. Because the changes they bring in in those four years are here to stay. And the folk literally, well, you know, are going to go along with the farce of a front man called Biden. And Kamala Harris. And I think the intention really is to put her in. He is just like the launching pad I think really. Because the big characters at the top want this to happen this way. They planned it this way.

Anyway, again, send a few bucks my way, etc. and we'll see what we can do and keep on going. I'm going to go into a few articles here, and I might as I say touch on some of the cyber warfare that's going on and the psychological warfare that goes along with it, in unconventional war. And how we know they're going to get their way one way or another because again they're resolute, that word resolute. They've all sworn to the agenda. They might not understand it themselves, all the different officials in different capacities, but they'll swear to the agenda. Because that's how they got on board with everything and got their positions in the first place, is working their way up, and it's a faith-based system, they do what they're told and that's why they're good little lackeys for those who rule the world.

They're going to get their vaccines through regardless. I've said that from the very beginning, nothing is going to change, it's chiseled in stone. Facts don't matter about the whole fiasco. It's for a new type of system, a new kind of, a monitored, again, China type system. Everyone's monitored, numbered and so on. And uniform, uniformity is very important of course. That's why the governments have been studying you for your whole life. Since the 19..., well, the last 20 years especially more intensely in real time by all your different social programs, that are part of the intelligent systems. Of course they are. Hhhch, they create the systems that they own and they put different people in charge of them. Again, it's just like politicians and you can throw the tomatoes at them. That's their job is to be splattered with tomatoes as you get angry.

But no doubt about it, the vaccines that come, and all the different ways to get you, coerce you into it are being tried…

Ankle bracelets, testing on-board sewage for coronavirus and NO boarding without a vaccine: Qantas CEO Alan Joyce reveals the very strict rules Aussies will have to follow just to fly overseas

dailymail.co.uk / 23 Nov 2020

(Alan: Well, they should find other ways of traveling perhaps, you know. That's the only way you can head off anything at all, just don't use their systems if you can. It's a pity that they've demolished all the stores, all the competition they said they would do, get rid of all small businesses. Even for food and now you've got just the big ones only, the big standard names, the big club, the big clubs only, these big food agencies and so on, corporations. The same with airlines too.)

(A: But here you go, I'd find another way to travel if possible. Even personally, even if you see all the rest of them will comply, well so what? You've got to be true to yourself before you can be true to anything else. It isn't just, oh, all or nothing if we all do it. No, this war is individualistic, folks. Hhhch. And if there's enough individuals were doing it then, yeah, then you could say we've got a bit of power now. But it's all individualistic, you know.)

(A: Again, don't forget too, under a quarantine system, it's just the same as the agenda for the 21st century where they're trying to stop nonessential flying. That was on it too. They came out with all the different articles, oh you know, flying is causing pollution in the sky too, you know. Any excuse using the climate of course to stop you from traveling. It's the first thing they do, is the agenda for the 21st century, they want you to live in your own community, and it was called communitarianism.)

(A: I gave these talks years ago, communitarianism, from their own articles. It's all here. And it certainly will be here very shortly. You'll all be part of your community, and you'd better turn up at all the different parades for the right kind of things and celebrations of the right kind of things and so on. Or they will want to know WHY you didn't turn up. That's what you had an Orwell's 1984 as well, you know, you had to attend these different parades that they'd have where they'd parade captured prisoners and so on, and you'd have to boo and scream at them to show that you were part of your system, you see, on board with it all. That's what it says…)

Aussies will have to comply with strict new rules when international flights finally return to the skies post-coronavirus, Qantas boss Alan Joyce has warned.

(A: Well, tell Joyce just go and take his company to you know where, hm.)

From anklet bracelets to DNA tests, (A: They want your DNA test? What do you think the swabbing is about, folks? You think it’s just a test for little bits and pieces of viruses so’s they can multiply them so many cycles then say well it could be a virus there. Do you think is just about that? These are the same swab tests they do for your DNA, eh, inside the cheeks, back of the throat, whatever, inside the... It’s all your DNA, folks. M-hm.)

Sewage testing on planes and mandatory vaccinations, overseas travel will never be the same again.

(A: Well, stuff it then. Stuff it. There ya go.)

Mr Joyce revealed his airline will overhaul its terms and conditions for travel where a coronavirus vaccination will be a compulsory requirement for passengers heading abroad, which could be as early as next year.

(A: Yep. There ya go.)

There you go, so that's it there. It's permanent, folks. It's just astonishing that this virus has meant so many things to so many globalists, you know. It's a very compliant virus. It's on board. It must be a high member, this virus, of the world dominant globalist society. Don't you think so? But they want to even test sewage for it, there you go, eh. Great money. I guess that's the only work there will ever be now, is money in you know what, eh.

Tighter tier restrictions could 'spell the end of the traditional British pub'

Again, to me it's like Groundhog Day, you know. When I gave talks about the pubs in Britain, were the places where everybody met to talk. For centuries that's how it had been. A public house they were called, you know, that's where pub comes from. They go there and chat. Again in Britain you see, the publican, you see, are licensed to sell the booze. Because booze is a big, big taxable thing for the government and they make a lot of money at it. And their pals who own the brewery companies and the distilleries, very selective, you know, high fees to get the license, and not everybody gets them, so's only the right kind of people traditionally make booze, can make the booze, and can make the money off it.

But the pub was awfully important because that's where all the chatting took place, you would meet people, townsfolk or village people, and city people, but towns especially you'd find about, did you know the Council was thinking about doing this and doing that. And they would say, oh no, I wouldn't like that. And you could protest it and say no way. So you could head off nasty things at the pass, you know, things like that. Even school changes in curriculums, that's where the guys would meet in the pubs, you know, a teacher, my wife is a teacher, some guy would say, and you wouldn't believe what they're going to start teaching the children. Oh really? And the people would get angry.

Because at one time you had families and they kind of, that's one thing they did, where they did stand together. Families had a lot in common with other families, you see. So it was a natural focus for power to be played out with, on behalf of the public was through the family units that would be combined together against certain things. The very thing that HG Wells said would have to be destroyed, [Alan chuckles.] he wanted to destroy the family unit, like they all do of course. Because if you all, if most families back then and you had children right, so you had a man and a woman and children. Therefore you had the same interests pretty well, income, work, schooling, that kind of stuff. So they would stand together, very powerful institution was the family. So it had to be destroyed.

Communism said the destruction of the family unit, Marxism, and so did the British socialism. So did Freemasonry by the way, Albert Pike. End of the family unit, and private property. Agenda 21. The same thing. Just coincidence that though isn't it.

So anyway... So the British pub, they've got it in for it now. Well, that's the place where the people met. I remember giving the talks, I says, you know it wasn't until maybe about the 80s, late 70s and 80s that suddenly they started to put television sets in all the bars in Britain. Now, you went to a bar to get away from TV and radio, you see, and to hear what other guys had to say. That's generally what you want for, was a place, that was the meeting place for people. You would hear all kinds of points of view. That's the wonder thing about it too, when people used to think for themselves, you get lots of points of view on the same topics, a variety of them and that was a great thing to have.

But once the TV came in suddenly everybody, and people tried to shout over the TV sets, it was mainly sports for goodness sake, promoted from the top, right. By that time so many of the pubs in Britain belonged to like chains, chains, big corporate chains. So the government, again, wanted to end the people talking. It was a nuisance for folk talk about things, finding out what government’s up to and then interfere. It's a nuisance, that, for those that rule you. So they’d pay these big chains or give them tax breaks if they would start putting TV sets in all their, until literally you couldn't find a pub pretty well where you'd walk in and there is this racket going on of screaming and yelling and people playing, you couldn't tell who... Who CARED what team was playing who? Really. I had no interest at all. I knew what it was all about, you see. But it was to stop people talking. Eventually you would get fed up yelling at people, you just gave up, because you had to yell to be heard or in order to hear them. It was just too frustrating. It worked wonders for stopping chat, you see.

At one time too it was so important by the way, you know, that governments also used the publicans in rural areas in towns and villages almost like spies, because they'd get all the gossip [Alan chuckles.] of what the people were up to and what they were thinking about and so on. So they could use them against the people again, eh. Nothing is there for what you think it is, that's what I'm saying to you. Even if some of them start off there for you, they get bought over rather quickly and brought on board to work for the authorities. Then they get little breaks as well, you see. That's how it works. Nothing is ever as it really, really seems. So you just tighten your tier restrictions as they say. It says...

Tighter tier restrictions could 'spell the end of the traditional British pub'

manchestereveningnews.co.uk / 23 Nov 2020

Hospitality is facing another huge blow if the leaks about the new tier restrictions are correct - and industry experts (A: Again, experts, eh.) and local politicians have said it could spell the end of traditional pubs.

(A: Of course. That’s what it’s meant to do.)

England is due to leave national lockdown on December 2, (A: Nonsense, they’ll keep it locked down.) and will enter back into a three tier system of coronavirus rules and measures.

(A: It’s just prison, isn’t it, it’s like lockdowns in prison. This is what it is, eh, that’s what you use. It’s all lockdowns in prison where you’re allowed to move to and whether you can go along this corridor, not along that corridor and so on. Maybe in the exercise yard. You can’t even do that now unless you have a reason for being there apart from exercise.)

But compared to the system introduced in October, the new tiers are expected to be much tougher - particularly for pubs and restaurants.

It could mean that areas placed into Tier 3 restrictions - and with infection rates still above the national average here, that could very well include Greater Manchester - will have to keep all hospitality venues closed.

(A: Well, just stop testing, then they’ll plummet.)

Maybe if you got the right kind of variety or strain of this coronavirus it will allow you to drink, you know, as long as you just pull the facemask down for each sip, and then back up again. Or maybe someday, I was thinking of, how come no one has invented a straw yet that will fix on to your facemask, eh? And we could all learn sign language to talk to each other. Because you know, and you've seen it in stores, the people that are serving you sometimes pull the mask down, because they know you can't hear them, and they can't hear you, it's all muffled. [Alan laughing.] You can't read the lips, you see, so maybe we should all learn sign language as well. And have little straws there. I guess you can still blare the television in the background there and, yeah, he shoots, he scores and rah-rah-rah, yeah. And you're sitting there in dead quiet and sign language the other person there with your hands and stuff, and sipping your beer through a straw, through the facemask. There you go. There you go. How is that?

I'm sure somebody will come along with that eventually. As long as authorities and experts, you know, the experts approve it and say well that's okay that will stop it, you know. M-hm. Maybe you could even have a little ultraviolet, here's a, I'm really getting carried away here. All of my ideas get picked up over the years, I gotta tell ya. [Alan chuckles.] So get a little facemask one, as I say, with that straw through it, right. And a one-way valve, so when you pull it out it closes, you see, it closes the valve and it's perfectly safe. And at the other end of your beer, you put it in the beer, of course you could have a bottle, and you could have a little filter from the bottle so's the air comes in as you're sucking out the booze, then the air can come in through a filter and it would filter out the viruses.

OR, if you really get the deluxe model, you could get one where it, it will have an ultraviolet bulb in there, battery driven. Because you don't want to get electrocuted maybe, so you get a battery one. It will kill off any viruses that come through. So you could go really high-tech with that. And you could have a classier type of food place to get drunk in. Because in the better bar you would have the electronic devices there you see, the electronic filters and everything else for your booze, and you will all be sitting signing each other, you know. How about that then? Good citizens, eh? Good compliant citizens. The governments would love that. They really would. And the behaviorists would, oh, my, it's working, it's wonderful. They love that too. So there you go.

Scotland, Iiiiii really, it's like, Scotland and Ireland, it's just astonishing. I mean, with the histories the countries have had, you know. And so socialistic, you know. People don't know the histories of it. But really, they were always problems, they were always problems to the English crown, you know. Mainly because they didn't like getting dominated. That might've had something to do with it, eh. But once they got their, they think they got their freedom, eh. That was another big joke too, they had their national movements and end up being communistic. That was part of the communist tragedy by the way, you start off in a country and you give it wars of national liberation, that's what they called it. It was programed to have/get them fighting against existing authorities or rulers, and then they'd say okay we've got independence now. Then you introduce the socialistic communistic ideas until it's communist. That was, that's from the handbook of communism, eh, how to do it all.

So Scotland really thought it had become free, and they have no idea that all the leaders they supplied you with were pretty well working for the big global system. So as soon as you end up being free, as they think, they've got mass migration. In tiny countries, really. Mass migration. Lots of them got into Parliament that are wealthy, you see. Or they're brought in, because they're not from Scotland. They're brought into Parliament and circles and civil service. They immediately want to demand that, basically unlimited immigration. Well, how can you have a country anymore if it's not yours? It's got nothing in common eventually, in one generation you could have nothing in common with what it stood for. [Alan chuckles.] Nothing at all. So it's a complete bogus freedom obviously.

Ireland too, even in its initial rebellion, well in the 20th century rebellion, was run by the official IRA. And it was a menagerie of different groups, a kind of collage system you might call it. But they all had this idea of freedom and independence. But also the official IRA were communistic, a lot of them were communist leaders. So that had a lot to do with what happened, the way that they ended up bringing in the system. A lot of them didn't realize, no, you don't have to use the term communism, you know, to be communist. You just need to see all the signs and symptoms of it, and you are. If it walks like a duck and quacks like a duck...

So unfortunately, they've been ruled for a long time now by a system that brought them under the yoke of the EU, a bigger dominant factor, hhhch, as opposed to London. And they think that they're free. Then they end up getting, Ireland especially got soaked, mind you, in the 2007/8 collapse. Because before that they had been encouraged by the World Bank to borrow, borrow, borrow, borrow. And they did. When they collapsed it all then they said, basically in comes the IMF and says this is how you're going to pay us back. And they pretty well own them now. They own all their policies. When the IMF comes in, they decide how much you're going to spend on the people, you know, your own tax money, how much is going to be spent on your own people, or healthcare or anything else. Folk don't realize it, when Margaret Thatcher was in, in Britain, England, the IMF ran the show for a while. She was taking a lot of stick for the austerity measures, but basically the IMF was deciding a lot of the policies. It's repayment terms, you understand. That's what runs everything, eh.

So anyway, yeah, it's a sad thing that…

Scotland becomes first country in the world to make sanitary products free for women - zeenews.india.com / 25 Nov 2020

And it is awfully good at noticing what's happening across the world. And sometimes more open about it. Because they don't have the same guilt about saying things. They haven't been trained yet to, hhhch, not say different things, so they're quite open about it. So it's interesting, you read different articles from India, you know. In fact, you'll find some of the journalists in India have the old type of journalism approach to journalism as being true and get to the bottom of things. And they don't have to be so politicized and be awfully nice about everything, they can be straightforward. That's how journalism really should have been, used to be actually. Now it's completely bought and paid for in the West by those that own it all.

Scotland becomes the first country in the world to pass landmark legislation offering free period products to anyone who needs them

dailymail.co.uk / 24 Nov 2020

(A: So yeah, I mean, Scotland, this is them vying for the vote again for re-voting for independence for Scotland, eh. So they aim for the women first, I think Ireland has already got daycare and stuff like that for free. It's the first thing generally they all get. Then you go for, step by step, you buy people off, eh. So it's going to…)

... make sanitary available to everyone

(A: What do you mean everyone? [Alan laughing.] Do you see how it's worded here? I mean, who wants them all?)

The Bill was brought forward by Labour health spokeswoman Monica Lennon

(A: I don't know if she changed her name or what, but she goes by Monica Lennon. That might be telling in itself, I don't know.)

Labour Member of Scottish Parliament working to tackle period poverty (A: ...period poverty, eh...) since she was elected in 2016

...make things free, eh? So there you go. Rather than say, why are women so poor? Rather than tackle the real problems, eh? And why are the rest of the people poor in Scotland? Why not deal for people as people, not genders and so on. Poverty is not just a gender thing, you know. It affects, you know, men, women and children. But this is how they waylay you with this kind of publicity kind of thing, you see. There you go.

But remember, the socialist governments, even Canada did it too, through the conservative government that was in at the time, was pushing this on... When you see the same agendas through different parties, you know that's what it is, it's an agenda, you're under tyranny, as Jefferson said, you're under somebody's agenda. Hhhch. Because nothing halts, Trump is the first time I've seen them skipping a beat. It generally makes no difference what party is in, the same preplanned agendas go forth, you see. So there you go. But yeah, let's not try, let's not tackle the poverty, etc., etc. Nothing is free when the taxpayers have to pay for it. What are you talking about, free? Yep. There you go. Ftt, there you go. N-n-n.

Another article here is to do with, hhhch… hhhch...

Can I stay overnight with family in Tier 2 or Tier 3 this Christmas? (A: Right.)

express.co.uk / 27 Nov 2020

CHRISTMAS is just around the corner, and anxious Britons have been waiting for information on how they can see loved ones

(A: You’re waiting for information to see if you can see your loved ones? Do you understand what’s going on here?)

during the ongoing pandemic.

(A: [Alan chuckles.])

But can I stay overnight with family in Tier 2 or Tier 3 this Christmas?

(A: Can you believe this stuff? Are they going to start publishing manuals, like prison manuals, for their prisoners, you know? Hm? It says…)

Areas across the UK will be placed into either Tier 1, Tier 2 or Tier 3 depending on the coronavirus cases and other criteria.

Middlesbrough, Newcastle and Yorkshire and Humber are among those back under Tier 3 status. You can check which tier your area is in using the Government's postcode checker here. (A: They give you a link to it as well. Hhhch.)

However, Britons will have a break from the stringent rules over the festive period in a so-called Christmas bubble it has been revealed.

(A: Isn’t that wonderful! Your wardens are giving you Christmas bubble. Ftt, ohh.)

From December 23 to December 27 three households will be able to meet indoors, with Mr Johnson calling on families to make a "personal judgment” about the risks of coronavirus to vulnerable loved ones when forming a Christmas bubble.

(A: Hhhhh! Wow. What drama, eh?)

Can I hug my grandparents at Christmas? (A: …it says. Mmm, ftt.)

(A: So anyway, it goes on about...)

… winter plan

(A: …and they give you into 2 and 3s and all the rest of it.)

I think one of them, you have to roll up your trouser leg and bear your breast, you know, just like Freemasonry. Hop on one leg maybe. And only on a Thursday, but not on a Wednesday and stuff. It's awfully important you follow these very important rules, you know. You know? As you get trained and trained into further absurdities. Really.

You understand the countries that are not doing the lockdowns are better off than anybody else. Their economies have not collapsed. The death rates are not higher, for winter deaths. Hhhch. I say winter deaths because flu is everything, you know, pneumonias, happens every winter, etc. etc. They are not up anyway.

But that doesn't matter. You see, it's your countries that have been deemed excess consumerists. Remember all those years, the worst country in the world for consumption is America. The US and Britain and so on, yeah. Well, now you're getting taught by this very handy virus that, just forget those countries that don't have these lockdowns and they're doing fine like Sweden and so on, Switzerland too apparently didn't have the severe lockdowns either. It doesn't matter though. You must because you're BAD! There ya go.

Level 3 of the 'Plan for Living with Covid-19' explained - independent.ie / 24 Nov 2020

…LIVING with Covid 19… This article here is from an Irish paper. I'll put this one up as well for those that want to look it up and see what to do, and how you can learn to live with Covid 19. Isn't that nice, eh? It's like trying to live with the bombs in the blitz, this is the, [Alan sings...] keep the home fires burning, and all that stuff and all that nonsense. You know, learn to live with it, and make the, put the best face on and step forward, there you go, hm.

Also in The Sun newspaper, but there’s more articles on…

Fury as 20million Brits are forced into Tier 3 despite R rate below 0

thesun.co.uk / 26 Nov 2020

(A: Hhhhh! The R rate, we're learning a whole vocabulary here now, eh? They're going to give a dictionary for Covid shortly, you know, because it will be a lifelong dictionary, you see, a rulebook, very... You've got to get trained here, for goodness sake.)

MORE than 20million Brits are being forced into the harshest Tier 3 lockdown measures despite falling Covid rates in their areas.

(A: Well, don’t let facts get in the way of agendas for goodness sake here.)

A staggering 20 million Brits are being forced into… (A: …blah, blah, blah.)

Sixty one percent of the population are now worse off after being shifted into a higher tier.

(A: Well, who saw that coming, eh?!?! Hhhhh!)

Fifty five million Brits are now in tiers two and three - with tougher restrictions than last time.

(A: Well, they said that’s what they’d give you. The spring was just a training exercise, people, complete training exercise.)

It comes after PM Boris Johnson ramped up restrictions despite data suggesting the R rate is now below 1 — meaning the bug has been kicked into reverse.

Hhhhh! Well, again, these facts become an awful nuisance. They interfere with planning and things, you know. Terrible. And this Boris Johnson, what a joke he is, eh? You know darn well he’s been given his marching orders. He’s got the whole Brexit thing on stall as well, eh. Because you see, the real deep state didn’t want any, hhhch, Britain pulling out of that one either. No way. N-n-n.

Ahhhhh, you know, you could speak volumes on just the free-trade agreements. The creating of centralized control systems like the EU parliament, and one for the Americas, one for the Pacific Rim reason, and so on and so on. You can do volumes of that kind of material. All from the same organizations running this. The same organization. And they don't like Brexit. Goodness me. N-n-n. I was going to just say, read their next part, and I thought about Karl Marx. Why do you think he was put up at London? They put him up in London. A revolutionary, supposedly going to overthrow all governments and royalty and all the rest of it. D'you really believe that? They allowed him to get into the national library there in London, access to all the very expensive reference books and so on. Of course they loved him, because the same organization that said we don't mind if they're communists are fascists or dictators, like Carol Quigley said, they're all welcome. Is this starting to make sense to you?

And what was Karl Marx's main thing? Who congratulated Lincoln for the Civil War and for defeating the South. Karl Marx in his telegram, for keeping the union together. Centralization of government. Communist Manifesto. EU parliament, Communist Manifesto. And the one for the Americas, they wanted, they discussed the parliament by the way up into 2005 with the three amigos meetings, a centralized parliament for the Americas, initially they said they might have it in Montréal. It was in the newspapers. Communist manifesto. Centralized government, centralize the power. Centralize. Just a coincidence.

Anyway, back to all these articles here.

Fury as 20million Brits are forced into Tier 3 despite R rate below 0

thesun.co.uk / 26 Nov 2020

Sixty one percent of the population

(A: Not 60% but 61%...)

are now worse off after being shifted into a higher tier.

(A: Well, they stop you from working and so on, eh. This is worse than any world war, you understand. And it's planned that way. What a great trick, though, what a great, you must admit, that's a brilliant trick. I said this years ago, I wasn't afraid of the atomic bomb at all. I was more afraid of some real rogue letting loose with something that been designed in a laboratory. Oh, what a great trick. But even Schwab's posting about it, a wonderful thing this bug has been to a lot of people down for this agenda. Hmmmmmmmm. This article also goes on about the pubs...)

...could kill off four out of five boozers and rip the heart out of local communities.

(A: Well, that's what they want to do, folks. Total war, you see.)

As I say, Boris Johnson is not your, not for you. Never was. He was always a levelier [?] by the way, Boris Johnson. So they remake him as a new type of conservative? [Alan chuckles.] Who's kidding who? Mayor of the City of London. Hm. So this, you can't, eventually the people are going to have to, they either stand up or they don't. It's very simple, isn't it. As they say, the power is all in the people. But they will be so divided, and they've got all these psyops working against them to divide and conquer them, I doubt if they'll get enough people together to stand up. They might. They could with some miracle. But it would take literally a miracle to make it happen, I think. Because then government would have to back off. And try something else. Maybe even something more lethal you might say. You never know.

This is a BIG agenda that they've been planning for a long, long time, long before you heard the term Covid, and how they'd get it through, hm? Well, climate change, no, try this Covid thing, eh. Hm, ftt. This other one too…

Moderna vaccine ‘may not stop people spreading Covid’

metro.co.uk / 25 Nov 2020

Moderna’s vaccine may not stop people who catch coronavirus from spreading it to others, him

(A: [Alan chuckles.] I love how they say it now, is just like Bertrand Russell said, we’ll train the people to just parrot experts, until they can’t think for themselves or decide anything for themselves without the help of an expert. You don’t even need names now, eh? Generally. So, scientists have warned, eh?)

scientists have warned.

Although promising trial results have shown the US-developed vaccine is 94.5% effective (A: …right…) at stopping people from getting ill, trials haven’t yet tested whether the jab actually prevents transmission.

(A: So I won’t even bother reading it all because it's contradictory in itself. There's quite a few articles like that, that's full of contradictions. So anyway it says, the spokesperson says…)

He urged people not to ‘overinterpret’ the promise of the vaccine,

(A: In other words, don’t have any faith in it.)

though he said he ‘believes’ it should prevent viral spread.

(A: That’s science at work, it’s a belief system. Never mind the facts, but this person…)

… ‘believes’ it should prevent viral spread.

Moderna’s jab does not kill the virus, (A: …and this is the important part…) unlike most vaccines…

(A: You know how they take a weakened form of the virus and they put it into you. The idea is to trick the body, right, in attacking it as a live virus and creating antibodies so you have immunity. This is different, Moderna’s one.)

Instead, it is designed with the intent of preventing the virus from latching onto receptors on human cells that let the virus enter cells. (A: Okay?)

Unlike more complex human cells, viruses can’t make their own energy. Instead, they have to hijack the machinery of human or animal cells, absorbing that energy and allowing the virus to make copies of itself.

(A: You see. So that’s the Moderna one.)

How the different Covid-19 vaccine candidates work

(A: …and they give you some more information.)

And without getting into our cells and taking them over for its own purposes, the virus can’t replicate.

(A: This is the idea behind this Moderna one. It changes, it reprograms your DNA basically. Permanently. They think. M-hm. This is how it works. This is a trial. This is a very experimental vaccine. So it's amazing the two don't know, and this other one, right...)

…suggests its vaccine it developed with Oxford University should prevent viral spread.

(A: …even though it’s early data, and it’s trials are still ongoing. So it hasn’t finished yet, so why would they even be saying that, it should prevent viral spread?)
